No civil government having been provided by Congress for California, the people of that Territory, impelled by the necessities of their political condition, recently met in convention, for the purpose of forming a constitution and State government, which, the latest advices gave me reason to suppose, has been accomplished; and it is believed they will shortly apply for the admission of California into the Union, as a sovereign State. Should such be the case, and should their constitution be conformable to the Constitution of the United States. I recommend their application to the favorable consideration of Congress.

The people of New Mexico will also, it is believed, at no very distant period, present themselves for admission into the Union. Preparatory to the admission of California and New Mexico, the people of each will have instituted for themselves a Republican form of Government, "laying its foundation in such principles, and organizing its powers in such form as to them shall seem most likely to effect their safety and happiness."

By awaiting their action, all causes of uneasiness may be avoided, and confidence and kind feeling preserved. With a view of maintaining the harmony and tranquility so dear to all, we should abstain from the introduction of those exciting topics of a sectional character which have hitherto produced painful apprehensions in the public mind; and I repeat the solemn warning of the first and most illustrous of my predecessors against furnishing "any ground for characterizing parties by geographical discriminations."

A Collector has been appointed at San Francisco, under the act of Congress extending the revenue laws over California, and measures have been taken to organize the Custom Houses at that and the other ports mentioned in that act, at the earliest period practicable. The Collector proceeded overland, and advices have not yet been received of his arrival at San Francisco. Meanwhile, it is understood that the customs have continued to be collected there by officers acting under the military authority, as they were during the administration of my predecessor. It will, I think, be expedient to conform the collections thus made, and direct the avails, (after such allowance as Congress may think fit to authorize,) to be expended within the Territory, or to be paid into the Treasury, for the purpose of meeting appropriations for the improvement of its rivers and harbors.

A party engaged on the coast survey was dispatched to Oregon in January last. According to the latest advices, they had not left California; and directions have been given to them, as soon as they shall have fixed on the sights of the two light-houses, and the buoys authorised to be constructed and placed in Oregon, to proceed without delay to make reconnoissances of the most important points on the coast of California, and especially to examine and determine on sites for light-houses on that coast, the speedy erection of which is urgently demanded by rapidly increasing commerce.

I have transferred the Indian Agencies from Upper Missouri and Council Bluffs to Santa Fe and Salt Lake; and have caused to be appointed sub-agents in the vallies of the Gilla, the Sacramento, and San Joaquin rivers. Still further legal provisions will be necessary for the effective and successful extension of our system of Indian intercourse over the new Territories.

I recommend the establishment of a branch mint in California, as it will, in my opinion, afford important facilities to those engaged in mining, as well as to the Government in the disposition of the mineral lands.

I also recommend that commissions be organized by Congress, to examine and decide upon the validity of the present subsisting land titles in California and New Mexico; and that provision be made for the establishment of officers of Surveyor General in New Mexico, California, and Oregon, and for the surveying and bringing into the market the public lands in those Territories. Those lands, remote in position and difficult of access, ought to be disposed of on terms liberal to all, but especially favorable to the early emigrants.

In order that the situation and character of the principal mineral deposites in California may be ascertained, I recommend that a geological and mineralogical exploration be connected with the linear surveys, and that the mineral lands be divided into small lots suitable for mining, and be disposed of, by sale or lease, so as to give our citizens an opportunity of procuring a permanent right of property in the soil. This would seem to be as important to the success of mining as of agricultural pursuits.

The great mineral wealth of California, and the advantages which its ports and harbors, and those of Oregon, afford to commerce, especially with the islands of the Pacific and Indian Oceans, and the populous regions of Eastern Asia, make it certain that there will arise, in a few years, large and prosperous communities on our Western Coast. It, therefore, becomes important that a line of communication, the best and most expeditious which the nature of the country will admit, should be opened, within the territory of the United States, from the navigable waters of the Atlantic or the Gulf of Mexico to the Pacific. Opinion, as elicited and expressed by two large and respectable Conventions, lately assembled at St. Louis and Memphis, points to a railroad as that which, if practicable, will best meet the wishes and wants of the country. But while this, if in successful operation, would be a work of great national importance, and of a value to the country which it would be difficult to estimate, it ought also to be regarded as an undertaking of vast magnitude and expense, and one which must, if it be, indeed, practicable, encounter many difficulties in its construction and use. Therefore, to avoid failure and disappointment; to enable Congress to judge whether, in the condition of the country through which it must pass, the work be feasible, and if it be found so, whether it should be undertaken as a national improvement or left to individual enterprise; and in the latter alternative, what aid, if any, ought to be extended to it by the Government, I recommend as a preliminary measure a careful reconnoissance of the several proposed routes by a scientific corps, and a report as to the practicability of making such a road, with an estimate of the cost of its construction and support.

For further views on these and other matters connected with the duties of the Home Department, I refer you to the Report of the Secretary of the Interior.

I recommened early appropriations for continuing the river and harbor improvements that have been already begun, and also for the construction of those for which estimates have been made, as well as for examinations and estimates preparatory to the commencement of such others as the wants of the country, and especially the advance of our population over new districts, and the extension of commerce, may render necessary. An estimate of the amount which can be advantageously expended within the next fiscal year, under the direction of the Bureau of Topographical Engineers, accompanies the Report of the Secretary of War, to which I respectfully invite the attention of Congress.

The cession of territory made by the late treaty with Mexico has greatly extended our exposed frontier, and rendered its defense more difficult. The treaty has also brought us under obligations to Mexico, to comply with which a military force is requisite. But our military establishment is not materially changed, as to its efficiency, from the condition in which it stood before the commencement of the Mexican war. Some addition to it will therefore be necessary; and I recommend to the favorable consideration of Congress an increase in the several corps of the army at our distant Western posts, as proposed in the accompanying Report of the Secretary of War.

Great embarrassment has resulted from the effect, in the army, heretofore given to brevert and staff commissions. The views of the Secretary of War, on this subject, are deemed important, and if carried into effect will, it is believed, promote the harmony of the service. The plan proposed for retiring disabled officers, and providing an asylum for such of the rank and file as from age, wounds, and other infirmities occasioned by service, have become unfit to perform their respective duties, is recommended as a means of increasing the efficiency of the army, and as an act of justice, due from a grateful country to the faithful soldier.

The accompanying Report of the Secretary of the Navy presents a full and satisfactory account of the condition and operations of the Naval service during the past year. Our citizens engaged in the legitimate pursuits of commerce have enjoyed its benefits. Wherever our national vessels have gone they have been received with respect, our officers have been treated with kindness and courtesy, and they have, on all occasions, pursued a course of strict neutrality, in accordance with the policy of our Government. The naval force at present in commission is as large as is admissible, with the number of men authorized by Congress to be employed.

I invite your attention to the recommendation of the Secretary of the Navy, on the subject of a re-organization of the Navy in its various grades of officers, and the establishing of a retired list for such of the officers as are disqualified for active and effective service. Should Congress adopt some such measure as is recommended, it will greatly increase the efficiency of the Navy, and reduce its expenditures.

I also ask your attention to the views expressed by him in reference to the employment of war steamers, and in regard to the contracts for the transportation of the United States' mails, and the operation of the system upon the prosperity of the Navy.

By an act of Congress, passed August 14, 1848, provision was made for extending post-office and mail accommodations to California and Oregon. Exertions have been made to execute that law; but the limited provisions of the act, the inadequacy of the means it authorizes, the ill adaptation of our post-office laws to the situation of that country, and the measure of compensation for services allowed by those laws, compared with the prices of labor and rents in California, render those exertions, in a great degree, ineffectual. More particular and efficient provision by law is required on this subject.

The act of 1845, reducing postage, has now, by its operations during four years, produced results fully showing that the income from such reduced postage is sufficient to sustain the whole expense of the service of the Post-Office Department, not including the cost of transportation in mail steamers on the lines from New York to Chagres and from Panama to Astoria, which have not been considered by Congress as properly belonging to the mail service.

It is submitted to the wisdom of Congress, whether a further reduction of postage should not now be made, more particularly on the letter correspondence. This should be relieved from the unjust burthen of transporting and delivering the franked matter of Congress, for which public service provision should be made from the Treasury. I confidently believe that a change may safely be made, reducing all single-letter postage to the uniform rate of five cents, regardless of distance, without thereby imposing any greater tax on the Treasury than would constitute a very moderate compensation for this public service; and I therefore respectfully recommend such a reduction. Should Congress prefer to abolish the franking privilege entirely, it seems probable that no demand on the Treasury would result from the proposed reduction of postage. Whether any further diminution should now be made, or the result of the reduction of five cents, which I have recommended, should be first tested, is submitted to your decision.

Since the commencement of the last session of Congress, a Postal Treaty with Great Britain has been received and ratified, and such regulations have been formed by the Post Office Departments of the two countries in pursuance of that treaty, as to carry its provisions into full operation. The attemt to extend this same arrangement, through England, to France, has not been equally successful; but the purpose has not been abandoned.

For a particular statement of the condition of the Post Office Department, and other matters connected with that branch of the public service, I refer you to the Report of the Postmaster-General.

By the act of the 3d of March, 1849, a Board was constituted to make arrangements for taking the 7th census; composed of the Secretary of State, the Att'y General, and the Postmaster General; and it was made the duty of this Board "to prepare and cause to be printed such forms and schedules as might be neeessary for the full enumeration of the inhabitants of the United States; and also proper forms and schedules for collecting in statistidal tables, under proper heads, such information as to mines, agriculture, commerce, manufactures, education, and other topics, as would exhibit a full view of the pursuits, industry, education, and resources of the country." The duties enjoined upon the Census Board, thus established, having been performed, it now rests with Congress to enact a law for carrying into effect the provision of the Constitution which requires an actual enumeration of the people of the United States within the ensuing year.

Among the duties assigned by the Constitution to the General Government is one of local one limited application, but not, on that account the less obligatory; I allude to the trust committed to Congress as the exclusive legistor and the sole guardian of the District of Columbia. I beg to commend these interests to your dind attention. As the National Metropolis, the City of Washington must be an object of general interest; and, founded as it was under the auspices of him whose immortal name it bears, its claims to the fostering care of Congress present themselves with additional strength. Whatever can contribute to its prosperity must enlist the feelings of its Constitutional guardians, and command their favorable consideration.

Our Government is one of limited powers and its successful administration eminently depends on the confinement of each of its co-ordinate branches within its own appropriate sphere. The first section of the Constitution ordains that "All legislative powers therein granted shall be vested in a Congress of the United States, which shall consist of a Senate and House of Representatives." The Executive has authority to recommend (not to dictate) measures to Congress. Having performed that duty, the Executive Department of the Government cannot rightfully control the decision of Congress on any subject of legislation, until that decision shall have been officially submitted to the President for approval. The check provided by the Constitition in the clause conferring the qualified veto, will never be exercised by me, except in the cases contemplated by the fathers of the Republic. I view it as an extreme measure, to be resorted to only in extraordinary cases—as where it may become necessary to defend the executive against the encroachments of the legislative power, or to prevent hasty and inconsiderate and unconstitutional legislation. By cautiously confining this remedy within the sphere prescribed to it in the cotemporaneous expositions of the framers of the Constitution, the will of the people, legitimately expressed on all subjects of legislation, through their constitutional organs, the Senators and Representatives of the United States, will have its full effect. An indispensible to the preservation of our system of self-government, the independence of the Representatives of the States and the people, is guaranteed by the Constitution; and they owe no responsibility to any human power but their constituents. By holding the Representative responsible only to the people, and exempting him from all other influences, we elevate the character of the constituent and quicken his sense of responsibility to his country. It is under these circumstances only that the elector can feel that, in the choice of the law-maker, he is himself truly, a component part of the sovereign power of the nation. With equal care we should study to defend the rights of Executive and Judicial Departments. Our Government can only be preserved in its purity by the suppression and entire elimination of every claim or tendency of one co-ordinate branch to encroachment upon another. With the strict observanee of this rule and the other injunctions of the Constitution—with a sedulous inculcation of that respect and love for the Union of the States, which our fathers cherished and enjoined upon their children, and with the aid of that overruling Providence which has so long and so kindly guarded our liberties and institutions, we may reasonably expect to transmit them with their inumerable blessings to the remotest posterity.

But attachment to the union of the States should be habitually fostered in every American heart. For more than half a century, during which kingdoms and empires have fallen, this Union has stood unshaken. The patriots who formed it have long since descended to the grave; yet still it remains, the proudest monument to their memory, and the object of affection and admiration with every one worthy to bear the American name. In my judgment its dissolution would be the greatest of calamities, and to avert that should be the study of every American. Upon its preservation must depend our own happiness and that of countless generations to come. Whatever dangers may threaten it, I shall stand by it and maintain it in its integrity, to the full extent of the obligations imposed, and the power conferred upon me by the Constitution.

WASHINGTON, December 4th, 1849.

MARRIED.

In Plainfield, Otsego Co., N. Y., Dec. 12th, by A. B. Spaulding, Esq, Mr. JOSHUA G. SISSON, of Plainfield, and Miss LOUISA CLARK, of Brookfield.

In Truxton, N. Y., on the 18th inst, by Eld. J. R. Irish, Mr. EDWARD BURDICK, of Lincklaen, to Miss F. ELIZABETH RICHMOND, daughter of Roswell Richmond, of Truxton.

DIED.

At Adams Center, N. Y, on the 11th inst., of a chronic pulmonary affection, Rev. GILES M. LANGWORTHY, in the 35th year of his age His funeral was attended on the 13th inst., by a large concourse of people. Brother Langworthy embraced religion in early life, and united with the 2d Seventh-day Baptist Church in Brookfield, Madison Co., N. Y. He soon became eminent for his devoted piety; and, possessing high intellectual and literary qualifications, he was subsequently employed as teacher in the DeRuyter Institute, in which capacity he did himself credit. His ardent love to God and to his fellow men, together with his intellectual and literary endowments, seemed to point him out as a fit subject for the ministry. He was accordingly ordained to the work of the ministry, when about 27 years of age. His first pastoral charge was of the 3d Church in Brookfield, where he labored devotedly till the winter of 1845, at which time he received a call from the Church at Adams, and has since had the pastoral charge of the Adams Church until the past year, when his health had so much declined as to render constant preaching impossible. During this time he made a tour to Ohio, Rhode Island, and New Jersey, for his health, and to use what little streagth he had in the great work to which he was called. For the last six months he was able to preach but little, though he seemed anxious to do what he could. His health had long been on the decline, though able to be about until the last week of his life. In Adams his labor has been crowned with success, and he was universally esteemed. By his death, his widow feels severely the loss of a tender and loving companion; the Church has lost an able and beloved minister; and community is deprived of the society of one in whom they all confided. COMM.

In Hounsfield, Jefferson Co., N. Y., on the 16th inst., of a paralytic affection, caused by bronchocele of long standing, Mrs. JUDITH M., relict of the late Stephen Clarke, aged 66 years. Mrs. C. embraced religion while young, and became a member of the Seventh-day Baptist Church in Scott, at the time of its organization. Subsequent to the death of her first husband, (the late Deacon Holly Maxson,) she remained a widow for several years, after which she married and removed to Jefferson County. When the Church in Hounsfield was organized, she became a member of it, and continued such till her death. Her end was characterized by resignation to the divine will, and by a sure and certain hope of a blissful immortality. Mrs. C. lived to see all her children, five in number, converted, and active in the cause of religion. In the late revival in Hounsfield, several of her grand-children were brought into the church; indeed, all but one of them, who have attained sufficient age, are now impaled in its bosom. For the last few years Mrs. C. has suffered much affliction; but the dispensation which her surviving friends mourn, has brought her acquainted with unending felicity. J. G.

In Pawcatuck, R. I., Dec. 16, MARTHA G. BARNES, aged 23 years, wife of Mathew Barnes, who sailed from Stonington for California, about six weeks previous to her death. Sister Barnes was a member of one of the Seventh-day Baptist Churches in Brookfield, N. Y. Although for a number of days previous to her death she labored under a slight mental derangement, yet previously she gave good evidence that her heart had felt the power of renewing grace, and that death to her would be gain.

At Sutter's Fort, Upper California, in April last, of scurvy, ISAAC ROGERS, formerly of Waterford, Ct., aged 45 years, 6 months. He leaves a wife and three young children at Salt Lake, an aged mother, and an older son, Bro. Lester T. Rogers 2d, at Waterford, Ct.

In Christiana, Dane Co., Wis., November 4th, NANCY BABCOCK, wife of Elkanah Babcock, in the 39th year of her age. HELEN, daughter of Elkanah and Nancy Babcock, died October 8th, in the 17th year of her age

Miscellaneous.

A ROMANCE OF THE OCEAN.

From the Polynesian of August 25.

The following facts relating to a young American girl, I think cannot but interest your readers, especially as they are too well authenticated to admit of a doubt of their having taken place, in the manner to be mentioned.

The American whale-ship Washington, which arrived here on the 13th inst., reports the whale-ship Christopher Mitchell at Paita, under the following circumstances: The M. had touched in at Paita, for the purpose of putting ashore letters for home, and again left for the cruising ground; but on the second or third night out, when the watch was called, one of the crew was discovered to be a young girl, instead of a fair-haired boy, which created no little excitement on board, and caused the Captain to put back again to Paita to land his female sailor, to seek some more congenial way of earning a livelihood, than using a tar bucket and marling spike.

Her story before the American Consul was as follows:—

She is a native of Rochester, New York; was seduced, like thousands of others, from her home, by a villain who promised to make her his lawful wife, but who abandoned her in a short time and absconded to parts unknown. Returning to her parental roof, she was met by her parents with bitter scorn, and driven from her home. Too proud to ask assistance from strangers, and not so far lost to virtue as to think of subsisting by the only means which might now seem left to her, she put on male attire, and for two months earned her living by driving a horse on the canal. Tired of this, she determined to go to sea—first engaged as a cabin boy at $4 per month—but was told by the shipping master, that she could make more by a whaling voyage, and consequently proceeded to Nantucket to look for a ship. It was with some difficulty that she obtained a berth, her youth and delicate appearance being much against her. One of the shipowners, at a place where she applied, (an old Quaker,) at last became so much pleased with, as he expressed it, "the good face of the boy," that he persuaded the Captain of the M. to take her on board. She performed her duty faithfully for the seven months previous to her discovery—never shrinking from going aloft, even in the worst weather, or the darkest night. She also pulled her oar twice in pursuit of whales, but the boat in which she belonged had never been fast to one of the monsters, or perhaps her courage might have failed her. She was a general favorite on board, never mixing with the crew any more than was absolutely necessary. Her quiet, inoffensive behavior, had also very much prepossessed the Captain and his officers in her favor. When summoned into the Captain's presence, immediately after the discovery, she made a full and voluntary confession, whereupon she was taken into the cabin, a state-room set apart for her use, and every attention shown her that could be extended to a female on board ship. When landed at Paita, the excitement and fatigue had somewhat overpowered her, but in one or two days she was quite well, and much elated with the prospect of soon reaching home in a vessel about to sail. Only once previously to her final discovery, did she run any risk of being exposed; but on the occasion alluded to, by suddenly working in a more bungling manner, she escaped detection. The cause of attention being drawn toward her on the above occasion, was the quickness with which she plied her needle—being more than a match for the other sailors, in that respect. The fact of her being on board and doing her duty well, cannot be doubted.

Her name is Miss Ann Johnson, and her age 19 years.

A WHITE GIRL NEARLY SOLD INTO SLAVERY.

From the New Orleans True Delta.

One of the most revolting, and at the same time touching scenes, it has ever been our lot to witness, occurred yesterday in the auction store of Mr. Vignie, on Conti street. The estate of Benvenuto Duran, lately deceased, consisting chiefly in slaves, was to be sold, for the benefit of a creditor. The negroes were brought up, as is usually the case, one by one, and exhibited to the bystanders, before being put to the hammer. On the presentation of the third, advertised as "Madeline, an orphan quadroon, aged about nine years," every one present was horrified to behold before them, a lovely girl, delicately formed, white as the purest of the Circassian race, her face buried in her hands, and her slender frame convulsed with sobs. There was a pause for some minutes. The crowd could not realize that one of their own race could thus be led up among negroes to be passed into a long bondage. Amazement was succeeded by indignation, as several gentlemen sat inquiring as to the manner in which the child had been thrust into such degrading associations.

Mr. Duran, it appears, was a Spaniard by birth; was some years since in affluence in this city; but latterly, his circumstances declining, he moved from the First to the Third Municipality, where he kept a small grocery store, and struggled through comparative poverty. None of the negroes knew anything of the early history of the girl, except one old man, who, dying when the child was yet but an infant, Mr. Duran took the orphan in charge to rear as an adopted child. This was when he was in prosperity. For some years after the death of the mother, a lady was in the habit of visiting Mr. Duran's house regularly, to see the child, and continued her visits until about the time he moved into the Third Municipality, since when, four or five years ago, she has never been seen. Whether this lady was a relative or friend to the mother, interested in the fate of her offspring, the old man knew not; nor did he know who the lady was, or whence she came.

Upon this information, the sale was stopped, and Madeline was taken possession of by Mr. Charles Lovenskiold, to whose humane exertions in her behalf, she is perhaps indebted for her liberty. Mr. L. has kindly installed her in his own family, and will bring her up as a member of it if the law does not defeat his benevolent intentions. The girl, though of late years mingling exclusively with the negroes of Mr. Duran's household, is intelligent beyond her years, speaks both French and Spanish fluently, and understand English.

The affair speedily obtained public notoriety in the lower part of the city, and created an intense excitement. Several free persons of color interested themselves in the case, and in a few hours collected among their own class nearly $200, to buy the girl out of the estate and bestow upon her her freedom. This has not been permitted, however, and from present appearances there is little probability of her subjection to the degradation of being included in the chattels of the succession. Mr. Duran has left no heirs, and dying intestate, his property escheats to the State, after satisfaction of the creditors. There is but one creditor, and his feelings were as deeply affected yesterday as those of any person present. Mr. Lovenkiold and others, who have taken the girl's cause in hand, however, have determined upon an entire purification of the girl, and, if it be practicable, will bring the case before the Courts in such a manner that a Jury shall pass upon her blood.

LOOK AT BOTH SIDES.

We publish on the outside of our paper to-day, says the Boston Traveler, an interesting letter from a Boston gentleman, dated at the mines, which gives a favorable impression of things, though he does not advise others to follow his example. We have conversed with Mr. Alvin Loker, an intelligent and wealthy farmer, of Jamaica Plain, who has been to California and returned; and he gives a very gloomy picture of things. He remained three months in the country, about six weeks of which he spent at San Francisco, and nearly the same time at Sacramento City. He visited the mines at McCullamer's River, but was taken sick on his arrival, and immediately returned. He states that sickness prevailed very generally. The diseases were typhus, typhoid, billious and intermittent fevers, ague, dysentery, scurvy, &c. Hundreds were dying at the time he left; and he was of the opinion that thousands would die, when the rainy season had set in, as they had no shelter but tents covered with their cotton cloth. He represents the whole country as being very unhealthy—says the living is very bad, the best that could be made of it. There were no vegetables to be had, and this, he supposed, occasioned the scurvy. It is his opinion, that half that go there will fall sick and die. As a general thing, he says those that go there to work in the mines, will not make more than half their expenses; but that the speculators will get the gold, and that they are interested in preventing the publication of the whole truth. He says about 20 whom he met at Chagres, on hearing the accounts given by those who had been to the mines, turned about and came back with them. It was estimated, by those returning, that there were about 60,000 people at the mines, and not more than 20,000 able to work, and they did not average more than five dollars per day; which would make $100,000 a day for 60,000 men. Mr. Loker went round the Cape, and returned over the Isthmus. The former route he speaks of as being very tedious and uncomfortable, and the latter intolerable. He spent about $700, besides his outfit, and returned minus the whole. He wishes to warn others against an enterprise, which he thinks will prove disastrous in at least 99 cases out of 100. We advise those who contemplate gold hunting, to converse with him before they fully make up their minds.

FUNERALS IN CALIFORNIA.

A San Francisco correspondent of the Courier and Enquirer writes as follows:—

I will not pretend to deny our having sickness here. Bowel complaints have carried off quite a number, and without skillful anp early attendance, attacks prove fatal in a larger percentage of cases by far than in the United States. As for post mortem examinations for the purpose of learning generally the nature of these diseases here, it is quite out of the question. There is no time for science—but little for humanity. I met a clergyman the other morning, and in conversation learned that a young man, highly respectable at home (New England,) had died the day before, without attentions during the few days he was ill, and when dead, his funeral was made up by the Rev. Mr. W., the impatient cartman, who led the horse drawing the body, aad the money-making and speculating grave-digger. They together marched over the lonesome hill, in their sad official capacity.

A few days ago a man died at one of the hotels, and there was no one to bury him—no one knew him. It came to the knowledge of Mr. F.; he raised a subscription quietly among the printers, (for he was one,) bought pick and shovel, and sent a man out with instructions to have a grave ready at 5 P. M., next day; at that hour the funeral moved, and, on arriving, found neither grave, grave-digger, nor even the tools he had been supplied with, and were obliged, it then being dusky, to leave the coffin in a carel near at hand, and the next morning employ another grave-digger.

Another time a funeral moved out to inter the remains of a friend; but on coming to the grave found it too shallow to call civilized; and having no tools, another digger who had a "well-dug grave," offered to "sell out if they would pay him the difference," which terms were readily acceded to.

These are a few of the many proofs, shocking and cold as they may strike an Eastern ear, of the utter disregard of humanity and good faith, which California expeditions are daily developing among us.

Researches in Africa.—The English Government has determined to afford effectual assistance to Mr. Richardson, the African traveler, in prosecuting his travels and researches in the Great Desert of Sibria Soudan, and regions of Bornou and the Lake Tshad. It will be part of the duties of Mr. Richardson to endeavor to bring the chiefs and princes of the interior of Africa into relations of commerce and amity with England. Mr. Richardson is enjoined to embrace every opportunity of impressing upon the minds of the people and princes of Africa, that legitimate traffic is preferable to that of the traffic of men. Mr. Richardson will be accompanied by Drs. Barth and Overweg, Prussian savans, who are charged by Government to draw up a scientific report. This will render the mission complete, and the interests of science will be equally consulted with those of commerce and philanthropy.

THE HOMICIDES AT ST. LOUIS.

The deplorable and almost incomprehensible event which produced so much sensation in the public mind at St. Louis a few weeks ago, and so much grief in several families, seems to have excited equal sensation and grief in France. The last steamer brings out from Mr. Rives, our Minister at Paris, a letter of his own to Senator Benton, with many letters and official documents to himself, and others to Senator Benton, Senator Cass, and Hon. Mr. Winthrop, on the subject of this most melancholy occurrence. These letters make known the fact, that the father of these young gentlemen (the late Count Montesquieu) labored under insanity, and destroyed his own life two years ago, and that their elder brother is now insane in Paris; and hence raise the irresistible inference, that inherited insanity must have broken out in the two brothers at St. Louis. All the letters speak of them in the same terms, as being remarkable for the amiability of their characters, and their "mild and inoffensive manners;" that they came to the United States for information and recreation, and especially to see the Western country, and with ample means and credit. They descend from a family in France not only of great historic name, but distinguished for private virtues. The celebrated Duke de Rochefaucauld Lyancourt, author of the "Maxims," is their grandfather on the mother's side; the present Duke De Lu Rochefaucauld writes in their behalf as his nephews. The General Oudinot, (Duke) of Reggio, and General Arright, (Duke) of Padua, also write in their behalf as relations. The Count Montesquieu himself belonged to the distinguished and able family of that name. Many Americans in Paris, among them Mr. Wm. H. Aspinwall, of New York, also write, and with all the deep feeling which the view of the agonized condition of the unhappy mother and relations so naturally inspires. These letters and official attestations are all forwarded to St Louis, to have their effect in explaining a transaction which seemed to be incomprehensible.

The Manufacture of Stockings.—A London journal, in an article upon foreign manufactures, has the following item in relation to the making of stockings:—It is not generally known, that the Chinese knit a considerable quantity of silk stockings by the hand, many of them as fine as twenty guage, the quality which was generally made in Europe previous to the year 1720. A large quantity of cotton stockings are also hand-knitted in Hindostan, it being a general manufacture at Musilapatam, and in those vicinities where the Dutch and Tweed factories were established, though they are now under the dominion of the British. The received opinion is, that the Portuguse taught the Hindoos as well as the Chinese this art. Cotton stockings as fine as 34 guage are knit in India; they are beautiful articles, being made of hand-spun cotton, which is much leveler in the thread than mill-spun yarn. It is in general considered in the East that spinning machinery is in its infancy; and in this opinion a few of the ablest operative spinners of Manchester fully coincide, they being of opinion that the method first pursued by the colleague of Arkwright will finally supersede the draw frame and mule spring.

The Industrial Exhibition in 1851.—The preliminary arrangements for the great trial of the industrial strength of Nations which stands for 1851, are progressing successfully. The sum of £20,000, to be given away as prizes, has been deposited, and stands now in the hands of trustees for the objects intended. Mr. Lea, of Astley, Worcestershire, formerly a large manufacturer, has put the workingmen of Kidderminster into training for the contest. He has issued an address to them, in which he calls their attention to the projected exhibition as a means by which the trade of Kidderminster may be promoted—requests them to form Committees of the men at the principal firms, and endeavor to make some improvements in their staple manufacture which may call the attention of foreigners to them—and offers the munificent prize of 100 guineas for the man, or set of men, who may invent a new article of any description, provided it is done in Kidderminster, and adapted for general use.

Refuges for the Shipwrecked.—The Humane Society of New York, (says the Tribune,) assisted by others, are about to cause to be erected, ten buildings on the shores of Long Island, as places for the reception of shipwrecked persons. They are to be located as follows: at Eaton's Neck and Fisher's Island on the North side, and at Amaganset, Bridgehampton, Qouge, Bellport, Moriches, Fire Island, near Rockaway, and Barree Island, on the South side. Each building is to be provided with one of Francis' Life Boats; a mortar for throwing rockets with lines attached, from the shore to the wreck; also one of Sheperd's box stoves, fuel, provisions, cooking utensils, &c.

Incombustible Cloth.—At the recent meeting of the British Association, at Birmingham, England, Sir David Brewster exhibited a specimen of incombustible cloth for the dresses of ladies and children, manufactured at Dundee. Although this cloth burns when it is inflamed by a candle, yet the flame speedily dies away, and its incombustibility is such that the person who wears it can receive no injury, even when it is burnt by a candle or the flame of a fire. As the material which renders the cloth incombustible is removed by washing, the inventor was desirous that some of the eminent chemists of the Association should direct their attention to the subject, with the view of making the incombustibility of the cloth permanent.

Planting Chestnuts.—At a late farmers' meeting in New York, Mr. Rice, speaking of planting chestnut timber, remarked that he plowed up a tract of unproductive hillside, several years ago, and planted it with the chestnut, in rows four feet apart every way. The sprouts coming up rather crooked and scrubby, he went over the field and cut them down close to the ground, which caused new sprouts to shoot up, straight and vigorous. The trees were very thrifty, completely shading the ground, and grow more and more rapidly as the soil becomes strengthened by the annual deposit of leaves. So well satisfied is he with the experiment, that he is now placing other worthless lands in a similar course of improvement.

THE LOVER TO HIS DEPARTING LOVED ONE.

Thou art leaving us all, love, and much may befal, love,
To warp and to wean thee from infancy's ties;
Thou wilt tread fairer places, and see brighter faces,
And freshness and beauty will dazzle thine eyes.
Thou hast promised thine heart, love, but now, ere we part, love,
They were made in our joy, love, as girl and as boy love,
When moonlight was gilding the old hawthorn tree.

We have grown up together like green moss and heather,
Our hands were entwined ere our footsteps were sure;
But the dreams of our youth, love, too often, forsooth, love,
Are painted in colours that will not endure.
And now thou art going where life will be glowing
With all the enchantment thou longest to see;
And a rarer Elysian may shut from thy vision
Our fairy romance and the old hawthorn tree.

If thou findest another whose presence can smother
Our earliest words and our latest adieu;
Thou hadst better be breaking thy word than be taking
An altar to serve where thou couldst not be true.
I'd have thee forget, love, if aught of regret, love,
Should come with the thought that thy will is not free;
Oh! I'd have thee forget, love, that ever we met, love,
With the promise and pledge 'neath the old hawthorn tree.

Think not I would gain thee if duty but chain thee,
Think not that I deem thee unchangeably mine;
Shouldst thou love one more dearly, oh! tell me sincerely,
And my hopes and my claims I will sadly resign.
For my heart, while possessing its coveted blessing,
Would bitterly bleed, if Affection could see
That thy young love had vanished, and feelings were banished,
That gladdened my soul 'neath the old hawthorn tree.

I see by thy smile, love, thou'rt thinking the while, love,
That thou wilt return with thy spirit the same;
And perchance I am wrong, love, in breathing a song love,
That shadows one moment thy well cherished name.
So I'll tell thee no more, love, but that I adore, love,
With passion as fervent as passion can be;
And that if thou wilt come, love, unchanged to thy home, love,
We'll have orange bloom twined with the old hawthorn tree.

PUBLIC LIBRARIES.

It appears that Continental nations, as well as the people of the American States, enjoy great advantages as regards Public Libraries freely accessible to all classes.—Thus France has 107 Public Libraries containing 4,000,000 volumes; Belgium 14, containing 538,000 volumes; the Prussian States 44, containing 2,400,000 volumes; Austria (with Lombardy and Venice) 48, containing 2,400,000 volumes; and so on with the other Continental states. The United States have already above 180 similar institution, containing about 1,290,000 volumes, for the most part entirely free and open to the public. Almost every State has its Public Library, supported by a vote of the State Legislature. Contrast these with England, where almost the only libraries, freely accessible to the people, are the British Museum, in London, and Cheetham's Library in Manchester; but neither of which are open in the evenings,—and it will be confessed that we have little reason to congratulate ourselves on our privileges in this respect.

Many of the Continental and American libraries are also lending libraries; another great public advantage which need scarcely be insisted on. The libraries of Paris are greatly resorted to by the working classes; that of Ste. Genevieve is open in the evenings, and is often crowded by artisans reading their books. "As soon as the doors are opened," says M. Libri, "all the doors are besieged, all the rooms are occupied, by not very select readers; they find there a temperature which pleases them, and agreeable reading. At Ste. Genevieve they find even light gratis, and they instal themselves by hundreds in these libraries, sometimes with bread and cheese in their pockets, to avoid being disturbed and exposing themselves to the cold by going to breakfast at the wine shop."

M. Guizot, who was also examined, says that "the libraries in France are accessible in every way; they are accessible for the purpose of reading, and also for the purpose of borrowing books. In a great many of them the library is accessible to every one who comes to read, and the books are lent to every one who is a known person in the town, who has some public recommendation, or whose name and mode of living are known to the librarian." Only the very precious books are not lent out of the library.

M. Guizot attributes the best results to this system. He says: "There are two good results. The first is, a general regard in the mind of the public for learning, for literature, and for books. The complete accessibility to the libraries gives to every one, learned or unlearned, a general feeling of good will for learning and for knowledge, and then the second result is, that the means for acquiring knowledge are given to those persons who are able to employ them. It is, of course, quite impossible for a private man to have in his own possession all the books he wants. He finds them, however, in the Public Libraries with the greatest facility. That has been of the greatest use to France, and of very good results to the general literature of the country."

M. Van de Weyer, the Minister of Legation from the Belgian Government, also speaks to the highly beneficial effects of the Public Libraries of that country on the mind and character of the population. He says, "Good results will proceed from good tools being put in the hands of the people who want to make use of them; the better the tools, the better the character of the work. We have experienced that the Public Libraries, having been put under the care of literary men, have increased in the number of good books, and those good books have been instrumental in giving a much higher character to the publications. I should positively say, on principle, that the first-rate books ought to be put in the hands of the people, instead of the inferior publications prepared for them. They generally object to books being manufactured for them, and they enjoy and feel the beauties of the higher class of literature, I should say, as deeply as any literary men."

The Public Libraries of the United States are exceedingly numerous, and are increasing more rapidly in value and in the number of volumes added to them, than those of any other country. The respective States Governments support them liberally by annual grants, and private individuals of wealth also contribute both books and funds. These libraries are nearly all of them open to the public, some as reading, others also as lending libraries. The interest in these institutions increases yearly. Not only do the States Governments support the Public Libraries, but they also vote money for the formation of Academy Libraries, and Common School Libraries, for the use of the people at large, for whom also a thoroughly efficient system of elementary education is provided. The grants of the State to these libraries is generally in proportion to the amounts raised by individual contributions.

The States Libraries, as for instance, that of New York, are open during the day and in the evening, and are frequented by large numbers of readers. The College Libraries are equally open to the public for the purpose of reading and consulting books. The Academy and Common School Libraries are free and open to the whole public, and the books are lent out to be read at home: and nearly all classes in America read,—first, because they are thoroughly educated at the public schools when children, and next, because books are cheap, and libraries easily accessible to all classes of the people; also, doubtless, because the peculiar institutions of the Free States stimulate to the cultivation of all the intellectual powers. Mr. Stevens, formerly Librarian of Yale College, U. S., states in his evidence, that the working classes, and persons who are engaged in active business through the day, are the chief readers in Public Lending Libraries. Much of their leisure time is spent in reading. Works on physical science, history, biography, and of a superior class, are those chiefly read by them; and when he came to England he stated that he could not help being struck by the "little reading that there is among the labouring and business classes" of this country compared with the United States. This is succinctly explained in the evidence given by Mr. George Dawson, wherein he says: "The quantity of people who cannot read and write in this country is a very great hindrance to the demand for books. We have eight millions who cannot write yet." Mr. Edwards, one of the officers of the British Museum, also points to the same defect of elementary education. "In addition," he says, "to the positive want of schooling on the part of large numbers of the population who are now growing up, those who do get some partial education, habitually neglect to improve what they get from the want of cultivating a taste for reading. Unless good books are made accessible to the people, this is very likely to continue to be a cause—even where education, by Sunday schools, and other efforts of that kind, have been brought within the reach of a considerable number of the population—why the good effects of education have not been continued in after life."

The establishment of public Lending Libraries throughout England, would in our opinion, be a measure of great public utility, next in value to the establishment of an efficient system of popular elementary instrnction. It would afford facilities to the rising generation for carrying on that education which may have been commenced in their youth; but which, for want of sufficient opportunities of reading good books, they run so much risk of forgetting. It would enable them to carry on their own instruction in adult years. We like the idea too, of a working man being enabled to carry home to his fire-side, and reading it there for his own instruction, as well as for that, it may be, of his wife and family. Reading rooms as in the United States, might also form part of such institutions, where young men might profitably spend their spare time in the evenings,—how much more delightfully and advantageously than in the public house we need not say.

To any one studying some special branch of study—say mathematics, mechanics, or any department of science—such libraries would be of great value. The generality of men cannot afford to buy the best books on such subjects; they are altogether beyond their reach. Works on design, which are generally expensive, might well form part of such public libraries in those disd. tricts where the art of design is required in manufactures. Who knows but that the superiority of the French artizan in all the arts connected with design, may be in a great measure owing to the superior opportunities he has of cultivating his taste in the Public Libraries of France? And England, as a manufacturing country, cannot now afford to be behind the world in this respect.

In the more rural districts, where more light is certainly needed, good libraries of agricultural works, such as the farmers of Scotland have provided for themselves in most districts, might be established with immense advantage. The most recent works on emigration would also be found highly valuable, as giving the best information on a subject at present of so much interest to the industrious classes of all ranks. Sound, healthy books on all subjects might have a place in such depositories, displacing those frivolous and unprincipled books which have now by far too extensive a circulation, but which cease to be read so soon as literature of a higher class is placed within reach of the people. Men might thus be taught many lessons which concern their material, as well as their moral and religious welfare. The cleanliness and ventilation of their dwellings, habits of providence, of temperance, a taste for something better than mere animal enjoyment, might be gradually instilled into the mass through the instrumentality of well-chosen books.

We need scarcely say of how great advantage Public Libraries would be to men of letters, to the writers of books, to the editors of newspapers. At present writers have to exhaust their means in buying books before they can sit down to compose any great work. We find Gibbon complaining that, in his time, the greatest city in the world was destitute of that useful institution, a Public Library; and that "the writer who had undertaken to treat any large historical subject, was reduced to the necessity of purchasing for his private use, a numerous and valuable collection of the books which must form the basis of his work." Even within the last half century, Graham the historian of North America, removed from London to Gottingen, for the sole purpose of availing himself of a well-stored and freely accessible Public Library.

DeRuyter Institute.

The Academic Year of this Institution for 1849-50 will commence the last Wednesday in August, and continue forty-three consecutive weeks, ending the last Wednesday of June, including a recess of ten days for Christmas and New Year holidays. The Year will be divided into three Terms:

The First, commencing August 29, of 14 weeks.
The Second, " December 5, of 15 "
The Third, " March 20, of 14 "

Encouraged by the success of the School under its present Instructors, the friends of the Institute have made liberal additions to its library, cabinet, and apparatus, thus furnishing ample facilities for illustrating branches taught in the various departments.

The Literary Department is as heretofore under the supervision of Rev. JAMES R. IRISH, A. M., President, assisted by other able instructors. In this Department, especial attention is given to the lower English Branches. Students are also fitted in the Classics to enter the advanced classes in College.

The Department of Natural Science is conducted by Professor GURDON EVANS. In this, Natural Philosophy, Astronomy, Geology, Natural History, and Chemistry, are taught in a manner of unsurpassed interest With it is connected the Department of Agriculture Science.

The Farmer's Course is thoroughly scientific; embracing the study of the best authors, with daily recitations. During the Winter Term two hours each day will be spent in the Analytical Laboratory, where students will be instructed in the constitution of soils and ashes of plants, with a minute examination of their constituent elements, and the various modes of testing for their presence.

A course of lectures is given during the Term on Practical Farming, explaining the relation of Geology to Agriculture, the Soil, the Plant, and the Animal, and their various relations, the Rotation of Crops, Feeding Animals, Manures, Draining Lands, &c., &c. For further information see Catalogue.

Besides Globes, Maps, &c., for the illustration of Astronomy, a Newtonian Telescope of high magnifying power has recently been added to the apparatus.

During the Summer Term, Botany and Geology receive special attention, illustrated by excursions to localities where these sciences may be studied as seen in nature. A Geological and Mineralogical Cabinet is accessible to the students.

The Mathematical Department is under the instruction of OLIVER B. IRISH, Tutor. It embraces thorough instruction in Arithmetic, and the higher pure and practical Mathematics, with field exercises in Engineering and Surveying.

Elocution, embracing Reading, Declamation, General Oratory, and Writing, receives the special attention of a competent teacher.

The Teacher's Department will, as formerly, be in operation during the Fall Term, and last half of the Winter Term. Particular attention to this is solicited from all who intend to teach district schools.

The Female Department is under the care of Miss SUSANNA M. COON, a graduate of Troy Female Seminary, a lady every way competent for this responsible station.

No efforts will be spared to render the young ladies of this Seminary truly accomplished, as well in the social relations of life, as in the substantial branches of learning and the higher refinements of education. Ample facilities are furnished for pursuing French, Italian, German, Drawing, Painting, Music on the Piano, and Vocal Music.

Information.

Good board in private families from $1 25 to $1 50. Parents from abroad should furnish their children with very little pocket money, as many temptations may thus be avoided. Those who wish may deposit money with either of the teachers, to be disbursed according to order, without extra charge.

Tuition, to be settled in advance, per term, from $3 00 to $5 00. Extras—For Drawing, $1 00; Monochromatic Painting, $3 00; Oil Painting, $5 00; Chemical Experiments, $1 00; Writing, including Stationery, 50c.; Tuition on Piano, $8 00; Use of Instrument, $2 00; in Agricultural Chemistry, including Chemicals, Apparatus, fires, &c., (breakage extra,) $12 00.

N. B. A daily stage leaves the railroad and canal at Chittenango for this place at 4 o'clock P. M.

For further information address the President, J. R. Irish, or Professor Gurdon Evans, DeRuyter, Madison Co., N. Y.

A Card.

TO THE PATRONS OF GRAHAM'S MAGAZINE.

The close of the current Volume is deemed a proper period to announce to the patrons of this Magazine, that arrangements have been completed which cannot fail to increase its attractions during the coming year. The best writers in the country will continue to enrich our pages with their productions, and our engravers—who stand foremost in their profession—will put forth the best efforts of their art to make this peculiar department of the Magazine more beautiful than ever.

Promising unremitted exertions to merit a continuance of the favor bestowed upon the Magazine, we respectfully solicit a renewal of the subscriptions of all its old patrons, and the addition of the names of all who desire to avail themselves of the satisfaction of reading what is universally conceded to be "The Best Magazine in the Country."

Attention is called to the following list of Terms, which are unquestionably more advantageous to subscribers than those offered by any other work of the kind.

Terms.—For $3 in advance, (par money in the States from which it is remitted,) one copy of Graham and a copy of a large and magnificent print, by a distinguished Engraver, and which may be considered one of the most beautiful specimens of art ever presented by any Magazine publisher, and also a new and beautiful Engraving, suitable for framing, of a Sacred subject, "Bearing the Saviour to the Tomb," prepared expressly, and at a very heavy cost, as a Premium Gift to new subscribers to Graham's Magazine. Or, if desired, we will furnish in lieu of either of the above Prints, a complete set of our Mezzotint Portraits of the American Heroes of the Late War with Mexico. For $5, two copies for one year, and a copy of either of the Prints to each subscriber. For $10, five copies for one year, and a copy of the Magazine to the Postmaster or person forming the club, and either of the above Prints, or a set of Portraits, to each subscriber. For $20, eleven copies for one year, and a copy of either of the Prints, or a set of Portraits to each subscriber, and a copy of the Magazine to the Postmaster or person sending the club, with a copy of each of the large Prints as an additional Premium.

☞ Any person forwarding a club of 20, or upwards, shall receive for his trouble a complete copy of W. H. Graham's "American Historical and Biographical Library."

A MISSIONARY'S LETTER TO HER SABBATH SCHOOL.

[For several months previous to leaving this country, Mrs. Carpenter was a teacher in the Sabbath School at Plainfield, N. J. The following extracts from a letter written to that School, under date of Shanghai, May 2, 1849, will interest not only all Sabbath School scholars, but all our readers.]

Gladly would I tell you of awakenings, of conversions, of souls added to the church, and of the wonderful displays of grace among the heathen, but very different must be the burden of my letter "The darkness that covers the earth, the gross darkness that covers the people," these are the ever present themes with us; these are the shadowy scenes among which we dwell. We hear a great deal said, among the heathen about "Jesus' doctrine." Some speak of it for the sake of talking, very philosophically concluding, no doubt, that this is the only subject on which we either can or wish to converse. Others will talk for the sake of letting us know how much they have heard on the subject already. Others are all anxiety to compare our views with those of the "Fa-lang-se-koo-neun," [Romanists,] having no better notions about the geographical positions of "France" and America, than they have of the difference in our prevailing religions. Some, but they are few and far between, seem really desirous of asking questions for the sake of gaining information. The constitutional temperament of the Chinese is so different from that of other heathen nations, that all calculations of success among them, founded on the result of missionary labor in other places, must necessarily be far from warrantable. Still, it is much to know that the leaven of truth is at work, and that it shall eventually prevail. The promise is sure, that the heathen shall yet be given to Christ for his inheritance, and the uttermost parts of the earth for a possession.

It is no uncommon thing to meet those who will very promptly profess themselves believers in Jesus, and with the next breath, perhaps, tell you that believers in Jesus are never sick or sorrowful, or something equally absurd. Some will boldly profess to be disciples, and therefore they are entitled to such or such a favor, perhaps a place in the family, or some pecuniary assistance in other ways. Many are converts to Romanism, and these need no cloak for their sins. Their foolish hearts are sufficiently darkened to hide from their own eyes even the truths which one might suppose the light of nature sufficient to reveal. The second command is expunged from the Decalogue, and thus, from the "lowest depths" of heathenism, they sink into the (if possible) "lower deeps" of priestcraft—victims to those who thus dare the vengeance of God, as well by taking from as by adding to his word.

To illustrate to you the up-hill nature of a missionary's toil—the alternations of hope and fear which constantly attend him—I will refer to a case with which I am familiar. Our cook, Too-quay, is a man of middle age and fair abilities, reads the Chinese character well, and has been with us ever since our first arrival here. It is true, months elapsed before we felt ourselves competent to instruct him much in the doctrines of the Bible; but he had books in his hand which he could study at his leisure, and we knew he read them a good deal. Something more than a year elapsed before Mr. Carpenter commenced daily prayer with him, in his own tongue, and since the first of January he has been constant in his attendance upon the public preaching in the chapel. We knew that he had long since formally renounced idolatry, and professed to believe only in one true God. In the month of February, Mr. C., in conversing closely with him, as is his frequent custom, asked if he thought he should be saved then in case of death. He replied, that he 'thought he should, because he believed in Christ, as the only Saviour of sinners.' He was asked if he prayed to him for salvation? He replied, that 'he did not, for he did not know how to pray.' This the more surprised us, as he had formerly told us that he did attempt to pray. A few days after, I gave him a copy of the Lord's prayer, and desired him to commit it, and use it, as a help to express his desires. Some days later, I asked him if he understood it, and found that two of the petitions were unintelligible. That we could forgive others their trespasses, as God forgives us, he could not understand; and that God should lead us into temptation, was equally dark to him. These I explained, so that he said they were clear to his mind; and again I left him. The next Sabbath, wishing to converse again with him, I took a copy of the Decalogue, and went down to his room, read it over with him, and told him I wished him to fasten it to the wall, that he might constantly have it before his eyes, adding, that this, like the prayer which I had formerly desired him to learn, was very important, and then remarked, as if incidentally, "I recollect you said you did not know how to express yourself in prayer; does this form help you any?" He hesitated, and I added, "If you wished a favor of Cah-seen-sang, you would not be at a loss for words; and if your little son wished you to give him something, would he not readily know how to ask you?" I then went on to apply it to himself and his spiritual wants. He seemed interested, and I began to feel encouraged, when, suddenly turning to the table, he took up a plate, and said, "Cah-nyang-nyang, some days since you gave me a broken plate to throw out; now see, I have called a tinman and had it mended." Imagine my sudden transition from hope to despair. I did not attempt a reply. I stood a moment, and am not conscious of betraying any emotion; then, without even a parting word, came up to my room, sad and disheartened. Late in the following week, Mr. Carpenter, at our evening devotions, asked him if he was decided in wishing to be a disciple. He replied that he was. "And why?" asked Mr. C. "Because, I know that I must quickly die, and that if I die out of Christ I must be miserable forever. I know Jesus only can save the soul." "And do you yet pray to him to save you?" "Yes, I daily pray to him a little; I pray twice, but I can only use a few words." O how my heart bounded with joy, and I felt to say, "Why wert thou cast down, O my soul, and why wert thou disquieted within me? hope thou in God, who heareth prayer." We cannot but feel, at times, that this poor heathen is not far from the kingdom of God. His walk and conversation are certainly a cheering proof that he is sincere. But the hitherto even tenor of his life, leaves us no room to anticipate a very marked change, even should he come out decidedly for Christ. Thus may you gather something of the progress of the new doctrine in the minds of the Chinese. O how much faith, how much patience, we need to bear us on our way. But the consolations of the blessed Gospel are ours. While we go forth weeping, and bearing precious seed, we think of the promise, that doubtless we shall come again with joy, bringing our sheaves with us.

I have thought that a very natural inquiry might arise in the minds of the dear young friends for whom this letter is designed, namely, "What can I do for the advancement of the Redeemer's kingdom among the Chinese?" You probably know, that other foreign missionaries have sometimes appealed to Sabbath Schools and benevolent societies for donations of clothing, books, needles, and such like articles. As to clothing, the Chinese have a style of dress peculiar to themselves, and the very poorest are generally dressed in a becoming manner, if we except the actual beggar in the streets, who would on no account put on a decent suit, as it would be an obstacle to his success in begging. Donations of that kind would be needless here. Books, also, in the English language, are not, I think, extensively desirable, as the opinion is fast gaining ground, that Chinese children, except in special cases, should not be taught the English language. Instances may occur in which it is desirable, but they are rare. Pins, are not used by the Chinese, neither would our thimbles suit them. Needles they have, but consider ours a great acquisition, as being very superior. I often make them a present of a few needles, which is sure to be highly prized. Still, such are not the most desirable modes of benefiting them. They want tracts and books in their own language. No greater service can be done them, than to put it in the power of the missionaries to supply them with these books and tracts. Where the above query comes up for actual consideration, let this suggestion be considered a sufficient answer to it. Books are very cheap; many can be bought for one penny each. Boys in China learn early to read, and are fond of learning. But their own books tell them nothing of the True God, or the way of salvation by Jesus Christ. They regard foreigners as teachers, and expect books of them, and we often feel how painful it is to tell them we have none. No doubt a love of novelty, oftener than any other motive, inspires the request; still, the eye that slumbers not, nor sleeps, will guard his own word; it shall not return to him void. It is very hard to deny a bright-eyed intelligent little boy a book, when he asks so repeatedly for one, with the same kind, earnest smile, and open, affectionate manner. Yet we do it. The little son of the shoemaker, who lives near the south gate, often meets us, as we ascend the wall for a walk, and coming eagerly but respectfully up to us, says, "Teacher, have you a book?" We say, "At present we have none." "Yu-me, be-la-ngoo," [when you have, you will give to me,] he says, laying his forefinger significantly on his own nose. I do not think he can read; he is too young, and perhaps some of the children to whom this is addressed, may give the penny that that shall buy his first book. Our Chinese friends often take their acquaintances, (who come from remote parts on a visit,) to call on us. They expect to hear, as well as see, something new, are anxious to read our words, and will often sit for a long time, reading and asking questions. We want something to give them at parting, which they may carry home with them, and study at their leisure. But I shall weary you.

The proportion of females who can read is very small. They are not wanting in sprightliness and intelligence, but the difficulties attending the acquisition of the written language might well discourage any whose heart was not resolutely bent on overcoming them. To say nothing of the language itself, the little feet of the females are poorly adapted to carry them day after day to the place of instruction. Then the time spent at the toilet would seem almost incredible to one who judged of all female attire by that common to our American women. A better description of them can perhaps hardly be given than that by the Prophet Isaiah, in almost all its parts: "Walking and mincing as they go, and making a tinkling with their feet." (The little shoes are made with a hollow rattle in the heel.) "Their tinkling ornaments about their feet," describes well the rings, and the chains, which, however, are worn more at the south than here. "The chains, and the bracelets," every genteel girl has a profusion of these about their wrists, and arms. "The head-bands, and the tablets, and the ear-rings, the rings, the changeable suits of apparel, the mantles and the crisping pins," are quite indispensible to the complete toilet.

Besides all this, the physical suffering caused by the bandaging of the feet, is sometimes very great. I know a little girl of some twelve years, whose pale, almost death-like countenance, and emaciated frame, seem the inevitable precursors of a speedy dissolution. She cannot walk without support, yet, when I expostulated with her careful nurse upon the cruel practice to which she herself attributed all this suffering, she only said, it would soon be over, and the little girl be well, referring me to the child's mother for any thing I might wish to say or hear on the subject. She only smiled, and shook her head, as much as to say, "It is very cruel, I know, but it would be more so to deny her the luxury of little feet." The more I see of this practice, the more I feel how hopeless is the task of Christianizing the females of this vast Empire, with such an obstacle constantly in our path. Indeed, the more one sees of heathenism, in any of its features, the deeper sinks the conviction, that the arm of man is utterly powerless to effect a change—the stronger grows the wish that prayer might be made without ceasing, on behalf of the perishing millions, who as yet know not the way, the truth, and the life.

And now I am thinking of the question which will be naturally suggested, "What is there in all this particularly adapted to the Sabbath School." Nothing, and of this deficiency I have forewarned you. And yet, I am not sure but the Sabbath School boy, as he prepares himself for his class, may be thinking of the dear little boys in China, who love to read, and who know how to read, but whose books, if understood at all, are not the kind to make them wise unto salvation, and he will learn to prize his Bible, his Sabbath School, and his Christian education more. The little girl, as she trips joyously along to the place appointed, will say to herself, "Oh what would induce me to exchange this privilege for all the gaudy array of a Chinese young lady, if like her I must have my poor feet distorted, crippled, and compressed, until I could merely totter a little ways, and that with the utmost difficulty, practice only embroidery, live and die in ignorance, and go down to the grave as the heathen goes." How earnestly will she learn to love her teacher, and to exert herself, as only the thankful and the happy can, in behalf of the destitute and perishing. The teacher will rejoice in the multitude of present blessings, as contrasted with the toils and discouragements which are ready to overwhelm the laborer in a foreign field, and thank God on their behalf for the word of his promise, which is firm, and which is to the fainting soul an anchor sure and steadfast, and the prayer of faith will ascend with more energy, and the sorrowful heart will be made glad, in the blessings thus sought and found at a throne of grace. GROWTH OF LONDON.—What is called London, in its broadest signification, embraces the "Metropolitan Police District." This comprises every place or village that is not more than fifteen miles in a direct line from Charing Cross. The population in 1839 was 2,011,056; in 1849 it is 2,336,960; increase in ten years, 325,004, or 16 per cent. Number of new houses built in ten years, 64,058; new streets, 1,642; length 200 miles. "The City" is but a very small part of London, comprising only the space that in ancient times was within the wall. It is the center of commerce, and is apparently so filled with the pressure of business, that it can hold no more. In 1700, it had within the walls 130,000 inhabitants; in 1750 it had but 87,000, a loss of 37 per cent.; in 1801, there were 78,000, and in 1841 only 54,000, which is 37 per cent. less than in 1750.

THE SEASON.

Summer's gone and over;
 Fogs are falling down;
And with the russet tinges,
 Autumn's doing brown.

Boughs are daily rifled
 By the busy thieves,
And the Book of Nature
 Getteth short of leaves.

Honnd the tops of houses,
 Swallows as they flit,
Give, like yearly tenants,
 Notices to quit.

Skies of fickle temper,
 Weep by turns and laugh—
Night and day together,
 Taking half-and-half.

So November endeth—
 Cold and most perverse—
But the months that follow,
 Sure will pinch us worse.

"PRINCIPLES OF CHURCH DISCIPLINE."

Remarks on the Article of President Mahan.

President Mahan appears to take it for granted, that the passage which he quotes from 1st Cor. 5: 3—7, was the first advice which that church had received from the Apostle upon the case in question; and, as the passage quoted is a direction to exclude the offender, he treats it as disallowing of the use of the rule of our Saviour in the 18th chapter of Matthew. But that the text quoted does not, to any degree of certainty, contain the primary order of the Apostle on this subject, and probably on this very case, may be seen from the 9th verse of this 5th chapter of 1st Corinthians, which, let the reader notice, is the next verse but one below the passage quoted by President Mahan. It reads thus: "I wrote unto you in an epistle, not to company with fornicators." This shows that the same topic had been up in a communication of Paul to that church of an earlier date than this first epistle of his before us. I do not pretend, that this proves that Paul had directed them to apply the rule in Matthew, or that individuals of that church had done so of their own accord; but it does show, that either the one or the other or both of these things might have taken place, and may have been familiar facts to the Apostle when he wrote the quotation in question. I therefore object to the passage, as having nothing decisive in it as to whether the rule in the 18th chapter of Matthew should be resorted to in such cases or not. The Apostle told the church, that he had 'judged already'—spoke of what was 'commonly reported'—ordered the exclusion of the offender, but said nothing about trying him. Now, would it not be just as reasonable from hence to conclude, that Paul would have the man excluded without trial, as to suppose that he would have them omit to apply the rule in Matthew, because that is not spoken of. Should it be thought that the order to exclude the man, when the church should be together, involves the idea of his trial, I suggest, that it also involves the idea of regard to the rule in Matthew, in showing that the excommunicating power resides in the body of the church. And, if the idea of a trial is involved in the order, then, for any thing expressed or necessarily implied in it, the employment of the rule in the 18th of Matthew may also be involved in it.

President Mahan notices it as an error fallen into by a large part of the church, namely, that the direction given in Matthew 18: 15—17, was designed as a law universal for discipline in respect to all forms of offenses whatever, whether individual or public. I ask, how came this opinion to prevail so extensively, and what keeps it alive? Surely, it is not because individuals or churches are fond of conforming to that rule in their practice; for, in one way or another, very generally, they so manage, (not unfrequently by tattling,) as to make all kinds of misdeeds public; and, agreeable to that classification which our author employs, report them to the church, and dispose of them by having committees take them in hand, before any thing has been done on the part of those interested to settle them; or else, they neglect them altogether, and rather than act upon the rule in Matthew, allow their walk with the church to be broken up for years together. Again, the question comes up, why the opinion so extensively prevails that the rule in Matthew was designed for a universal law, to be applied in all cases. I know of no reason for this, which adequately accounts therefor, except that the rule and its context conveys that idea. That this view or opinion is the correct one, I argue thus: The 18th chapter of Matthew opens with the record of the circumstance that the disciples asked Christ this question, "Who is the greatest in the kingdom of heaven?" From the way in which the Saviour met their inquiry, I understand, that in it they had in view their relative importance in the church or Christian profession on the earth. From this point, as it brought to view the love of admiration and power, the source of so much injury to the church and the world, the Saviour seems naturally to have had his thoughts and conversation turned upon the subject of offenses in general. "Wo unto the world because of offenses," says our Saviour in the seventh verse. Here the subject seems to be viewed in the most comprehensive light, as with an omniscient glance. He then goes on to show them that whatever or whoever should be the cause of offense, should be severed from them, even though the thing or person were as dear to them as the most valued organs or members of their bodies. Then, to weigh against this strain of seemingly severe doctrine what should temper it with suitable sentiments of tenderness, he earnestly charges them not to despise the least among them, and impresses this sentiment upon them by the nearness of such to his Father when arrived in heaven, by the example of his own mission to earth to save men, and by the care of a shepherd for his flock, especially his joy on finding the sheep which had wandered, adding, that it was not the will of their Father that any such as he had been speaking of should perish. Now I ask, if the view in respect to offenses taken by the Saviour thus far is not a universal one, is there any thing like a classification of them under the terms public and private? I see nothing of the kind in all this Scripture. The word 'moreover,' with which the 15th verse or the direction of our Lord in question is introduced, points to or indicates something farther, about to be added on the same subject. And what is it which the Lord is about to add? It is a law by which his followers are to be directed touching the subject in hand—the whole subject; for when he had ordained this law, the Saviour at once left this most important subject or theme to return to it no more. And because this law was of such vast import, the Saviour therefore, in delivering it, assumed a manner of the most formal, emphatic, dignified, and imposing character. Our author says that this law is only to be used in respect to 'individual and private offenses.' But, according to this view, our Saviour leaves a principal part of his solemn and important theme unfinished—yes, untouched, so far as giving law was concerned. Who can account for the fact, if it be one, that the Saviour, having the whole mighty subject of offenses in hand, went so far as to deliver a law for the management of what is included now under the terms 'private offenses,' and yet omitted entirely to inform us as to the method of disposing of what are called 'public offenses?' And what is the proof, as drawn from his instructions, that he has done this? Why, he has used the singular personal pronouns thy, him, and thee, in the law which he has given us. But would it not sufficiently account for this, to say, that the Saviour contemplated every member of his church as seeking the advancement of his cause and kingdom as their individual interest and object of desire; and as feeling and understanding, that whoever injured the cause offended and injured them; and that, for the purpose of sanctioning such a view of their relation to the cause, and for the sake of giving greater directness, force, and effectiveness to this law, he employed the pronouns in the singular, thus riveting the obligation of this law so upon each, that it cannot be evaded? To the writer, this seems a sufficient answer to this part of President Mahan's view of these texts. But the practical bearing of these views may deserve farther elucidation. DISCIPLE.

RESEARCHES ON LIFE AND DEATH.

From the London Quarterly.

In the midst of exaggeration and invention, there was one undoubted circumstance which formerly excited the worst apprehensions—the fact that bodies were often turned in their coffins, and the grave clothes disarranged. But what was ascribed, with seeming reason, to the throes of vitality, is now known to be due to the agency of corruption. A gas is developed in the decaying body which mimics by its mechanical force many of the movements of life. So powerful is this gas in corpses which have lain long in the water, that M. Devergie, the physician to the Morgue at Paris, and the author of a text-book on legal medicine, says that unless secured to the table they are often heaved up and thrown to the ground. Frequently strangers, seeing the motions of the limbs, run to the keeper of the Morgue, and announce with horror that a person is alive. All bodies, sooner or later, generate the gas in the grave, and it constantly twists about the corpse, blows out the skin till it rends with the distension, and sometimes bursts the coffin itself. When the gas explodes with a noise, imagination has converted it into an outcry or groan; the grave has been re-opened; the position of the body has confirmed the suspicion, and the laceration been taken for evidence that the wretch had gnawed his flesh in the frenzy of despair. So many are the circumstances which will occasionally concur to support a conclusion that is more unsubstantial than the fabric of a dream. Violent and painful diseases, which kill speedily, are favorable to the rapid formation of the gas; it may then exist two or three hours after death, and agitating the limbs gives rise to the idea that the dormant life is rousing itself up to another effort. Not unfrequently the food in the stomach is forced out through the mouth, and blood poured from the nose, or the opening in a vein where a victim of apoplexy has been attempted to be bled. Extreme mental distress has resulted from these fallacious symptoms, for where they occur it is commonly supposed that the former appearance of death was deceitful, and that recovery was possible if attendance had been at hand.

The pain of dying must be distinguished from the pain of the previous disease, for when life ebbs sensibility declines. As death is the final extinction of corporeal feeling, so numbness increases as death comes on. The prostration of disease, like healthful fatigue, engenders a growing stupor—a sensation of subsiding softly into a coveted repose. The transition resembles what may be seen in those lofty mountains, whose sides exhibiting every climate in regular gradation, vegetation luxuriates at their base, and dwindles in their approach to the regions of snow, till its feeblest manifestation is repressed by the cold. The so-called agony can never be more formidable than when the brain is the last to go, and the mind preserves to the end a rational cognizance of the state of the body. Yet persons thus situated commonly attest that there are few things in life less painful than the close, —"If I had strength enough to hold a pen," said Hunter, "I would write how easy and delightful it is to die." "If this be dying," said the niece of Newton of Olney, "it is a pleasant thing to die,"—"the very expression," adds her uncle, "which another friend of mine made use of on her death-bed a few years ago."

The same words have so often been uttered under similar circumstances, that we could fill pages with instances which are only varied by the name of the speaker. "If this be dying," said Lady Glenorchy, "it is the easiest thing imaginable." "I thought that dying had been more difficult," said Louis XIV. "I did not suppose it was so sweet to die," said Francis Snarez, the Spanish theologian. An agreeable surprise was the prevailing sentiment with them all; they expected the stream to terminate in the dash of the torrent, and they found it was losing itself in the gentlest current. The whole of the faculties seem sometimes concentrated on the placid enjoyment. The day Arthur Murphy died he kept repeating from Pope,

> "Taught half by reason, half by mere decay,
> To welcome death, and calmly pass away."

Nor does the calm partake of the sensitiveness of sickness. There was a swell in the sea the day Collingwood breathed his last upon the element which had been the scene of his glory. Captain Thomas expressed a fear that he was disturbed by the tossing of the ship: "No, Thomas," he replied; "I am now in a state in which nothing in this world can disturb me more. I am dying; and I am sure it must be consolatory to you, and all who love me, to see how comfortably I am coming to my end."

EFFECT OF THE MINISTRY.—"Ah!" said Simeon, as he delivered back the adorable babe into the arms of his mother, "this child is set for the falling and rising again of many in Israel." The same may be said of the destiny of this young minister. Some—O that it may be many!—some will hail the hour they heard him when they come to die, and the memory of it will delight them through all eternity. Others—may you all go home and ask, "Lord, is it I?"—others will execrate the day he arrived among them. Of all the objects that will haunt their wretched imaginations hereafter, the chief will be the figure of this pulpit; and of all the food of the worm that never dies, and the fuel for the fire that never shall be quenched, the principal will be the sermons which he has delivered in vain from it. His ministry can not be neutral; it must either kill or cure—save or destroy. "For we are unto God a sweet savor of Christ, in them that are saved, and in them that perish. To the one we are a savor of death unto death; and to the other, a savor of life unto life; and who is sufficient for these things?"

[Jay in an Ordination Sermon.

AN ALLEGORY FROM THE GERMAN.—Sophronius, a wise teacher, would not suffer his grow-nup sons and daughter to associate with those whose conduct was not pure and upright.

"Dear father," said the gentle Eulalia to him one day, when he forbade her, in company with her brother, to visit the volatile Lucinda—"dear father, you must think us very childish, if you imagine that we should be exposed to danger by it."

The father took in silence a dead coal from the hearth, and reached it to his daughter. "It will not hurt you, my child; take it."

Eulalia did so, and behold! her delicate white hand was soiled and blackened, and, as it chanced, her white dress also.

"We cannot be too careful in handling coals," said Eulalia in vexation.

"Yes, truly," said her father. "You see, my child, that coals, even if they do not burn, will blacken. So it is ever with the company of the vicious."

MANNER IN PREACHING.—I trust, now that I am removed from the contagion of academic air, and am in the way of acquiring a greater knowledge of men and of my own heart, I shall exchange my jejune, scholastic style, for a simple spiritual exhibition of profitable truth. Mr. Cecil has been taking a great deal of pains with me; my insipid manner in the pulpit, he says, is intolerable. "Sir," said he, "it is cupola-painting, not miniature, that must be the aim of a man that harangues the multitude." [H. Martyn.

There are wells in the neighborhood of Peshawur, the water of which is invariably of one temperature, of fifty-eight degrees, while a thermometer at the well's mouth has shown the heat of the air to have been 110 degrees in summer, and below zero in winter. The luxury of such a cool, refreshing beverage in the hot months, can only be conceived by those who enjoy it. The natives of the place attribute the formation of those wells to the wisdom of the Deity.

Portraits in oil, of any size, are now taken by a photographic process in a sitting of half a minute. The process is called photo-prosopon.

The Sabbath Recorder.

New York, January 3, 1850.

THE SABBATH AS AFFECTED BY THE EARTH'S ROTUNDITY.

To the Editors of the Sabbath Recorder :—

Although I have read many of the publications of the Seventh-day Baptists, yet I have never seen the facts mentioned on the 92d page of this Manual [Dr. Edwards'] referred to in any of them. They have had much influence in leading me to decide in favor of observing the first day of the week, as the one in which we can best edify one another. Rom. 14: 19. Still, I would be ready to petition Government for a change to the seventh, or to keep it myself, could I believe that it would promote the best interests of the greatest number of our inhabitants. Believing that the Omniscient anticipated the discovery of this new world, and the spread of the Gospel far north and south, to my mind there is a peculiar meaning in the words of our Saviour, "The whole law is fulfilled in these words, Thou shalt love the Lord thy God," &c. "I am not come to destroy, but to fulfill." "One jot or one tittle shall in no wise pass from the law, till all be fulfilled." I will not now stop to inquire what was fulfilled in the days of Christ, but is there not a fulfillment of the fourth command, in spirit, wherever one seventh portion of time is consecrated to the service of God, and that portion which a Christian people shall decide is, under present circumstances, best calculated to promote the peace and edification of the people. In what other way can you give a Sabbath, with a "thus saith the Lord," to the far north and south, or the whole circuit of the earth. I think I hear the Apostle saying, "Brethren, ye are called unto liberty," &c. If this question has been answered in any of your tracts, or any number of the Sabbath Recorder, I should be happy to receive it.

Respectfully yours, ——.

Remarks.

It is not necessary to encumber our columns with quotations from the "Sabbath Manual." The place referred to by the writer of the foregoing, presents what is supposed by some to be a very formidable objection against our views of the Sabbath; namely, "that as every spot on the earth is constantly changing its position with regard to the sun, day and night, the first day and the seventh, in different places and to different people, come at totally different times." It is strangely supposed, that if the law designates one particular day as holy, to the exclusion of every other, and requires men to keep that day, and no other, strict obedience would require that men throughout the world should observe the same identical time—in other words, that they should begin and end the Sabbath simultaneously. But as such observance would be impracticable, it is hence inferred, that the law of God never meant to specify one particular day, to the exclusion of every other, but only to enjoin the seventh part of time, or the seventh day after six days of labor. We shall endeavor to shape an answer to this objection.

We believe, and teach, that the law of God requires the observance of the seventh or last day of the week as the Sabbath, to the exclusion of every other day of the hebdomadal cycle. But it is not a necessary consequence from this, that men, throughout the entire globe, must begin and end the Sabbath simultaneously. What is required, is simply this—that the inhabitants of each nation, or country, begin to observe the Sabbath when the seventh day of the week begins there, and that they end the observance when the seventh day of the week ends there, without regard to the time when it begins and ends in some other country. And here permit us to say, that by the seventh day of the week we mean the seventh day of God's week—the seventh day of the week as fixed and settled at the creation of the world. Whenever the seventh day of this week begins in any country, the inhabitants should, according to the fourth commandment, suspend their work, and begin to sabbatize. When the seventh day of this week which is the day commonly called Saturday —begins in Asia, it has not yet begun in America. Consequently, we in America are not bound to begin sabbatizing as soon as the people of Asia, by several hours. But we are bound to continue sabbatizing, several hours after they have ceased from it; because the seventh day of the week does not end with us till the lapse of several hours after it has ended in Asia.

Now let us suppose that a different arrangement obtains instead. Let us suppose, that when the seventh day of the creation week begins in Asia—which is at the commencement of twilight on Friday evening—not only the inhabitants there begin to sabbatize, but also those of all other countries. By this arrangement, we in America would have to begin early on Friday morning. Let it be supposed, too, that we end the Sabbath simultaneously with the people of Asia, which would bring us to some time early on Saturday morning. In this way, we would indeed observe their seventh day, but we would not be observing our own seventh day. On the contrary, we would observe a part of our sixth day, and a part of our seventh day. That is, instead of observing, simply and only, the seventh day, as required by the commandment, we would observe parts of two days. Would this be strict obedience to the letter of the law? Verily, no. The law requires us to observe our own seventh day, and not the seventh day of Asia, or of any other country. That is, it requires us to observe the seventh day of God's week, when it comes to us, and while it continues with us.

We are desirous of making this subject so plain, that "the wayfaring man, though a fool, need not err." Perhaps there is no better way for us to succeed in this, than by personifying the Sabbath, or seventh day. We contemplate the seventh day, therefore, as an illustrious person, whom man is required to honor by certain acts. This person is commissioned to start from that point in Asia where man was created, and thence to take his journey from East to West, round the world; and he must make this journey in the space of twenty-four hours. Meantime, the mandate goes forth from Jehovah, that unto whatsoever country this illustrous person shall come, the people shall do him honor by certain ceremonies. Of course, no people would consider themselves bound to perform these acts of honor, till the person should come into their country; and they would not feel bound to perform such acts after his departure. The ceremonies of honor are to be performed only while the illustrious person continues with them. All the inhabitants of the globe, however, would in the course of twenty-four hours, render him the honor required, though they would not all be attending to it at the same identical time. But would any man in his senses say, that the command to render homage to this illustrious person, makes it necessary for all mankind to do so simultaneously, or at the same identical time? Yet not a whit more rational is this objection against the observance of the seventh day. For each successive day may be figuratively represented as a person traveling round the globe in the space of twenty-four hours. And the seventh day, which is the Sabbath day, may be considered as this illustrious person, whom it is the duty of men to honor, starting from that point where man was created, and in the space of twenty-four hours making the entire circuit of the globe. But neither the seventh day, nor any other day, can become a different day by traveling from Asia to America, any more than a person, by traveling half way round the globe, can lose his identity and become a different person. When it reaches America it is the same seventh day still, and we are bound to honor it as God has commanded. We are bound to continue this honor, so long as the seventh day continues with us; and when it has passed on from us to some point still west, our obligation to honor it ceases till it comes round again.

If now it is asked, What is the meridian from which sacred time is to be reckoned?—we answer, that it is the meridian of the west of Asia. There man was created. Of course the first Sabbath dates from that point, for "the Sabbath was made for MAN." There, too, God made all his wonderful manifestations to the human race. There began the re-peopling of the world, after the flood. There God located his chosen people, the Israelites. There He gave the law. There Jesus Christ was manifested, there he was crucified, and there the gospel was first preached, beginning at Jerusalem. Was there no design in all this? For our part, we want no better proof that God designed the west of Asia as the meridian, from which the Sabbath was to be reckoned.

What our correspondent says about the adaptation of the Sabbath to "the far North and South," we suppose, refers to the fact that those regions are said to be without the light of the sun for six months in the year; and that again the sun does not set upon them for the remainder of the year. It is indeed true, that there are places where the sun does not appear above the horizon, for a long period. But it is not true, that the alternations of day and night are not distinguishable, during all that time. During the twenty-four hours of the earth's revolution upon its axis, the sun is not constantly at the same distance below the horizon. There is a time when it rises so high, that the tops of the mountains, icebergs, and clouds, are seen to be gilded with its rays. That is midday. There is a time again, just twelve hours from that, when the sun sinks so low, that the mountains and other objects grow dark. That is midnight. The inhabitants of those regions are fully sensible of the difference, and their periods of repose and labor are as distinctly marked as in our own country. And during that portion of the year when the sun is above the horizon, it is not, all the time, at the same distance above. At midnight, it sinks so low as to nearly, or quite, touch the horizon. At mid-day it appears at an elevation of eight, ten, or twelve degrees (according to the latitude of the place) above. So that there is no time of year, when the alternations of day and night are not plainly distinguishable. To this there can be no exception, but at the polar vertex; and when it shall be proved that there are any inhabitants there, we will undertake to show how even they may distinguish the alternations. Besides, there are other methods of distinguishing between day and night in those regions. We quote from an old work now lying before us:—

"Where the sun never sets in the midst of summer, it however does not shine with such lustre at night as at noon, but loses its splendor, and shines like a very bright moon, which a person may look at without being dazzled."—Crantz's Hist. of Greenland, vol. 1, p. 48.

As our correspondent refers us to the "Sabbath Manual," we suppose that the argument of that work upon the point under consideration, appears to him quite conclusive. We doubt not, that it does to a great many; yet we are well persuaded that it is contradictory, and cannot, by all the author's jesuitical sophistry, be made to hang together. We ask our correspondent to look at the place referred to, once more. The "Manual" takes the broad ground, that by the law of the Sabbath "no definite period of duration was made holy in itself"—that "the primary and essential idea in the numbers 'six' and 'seven,' as used in the command, is that of proportion"—that "men who call their first working day the second day of the week, and who, on the seventh day from that, keep the Christian Sabbath, do as really comply with the spirit and the letter of that commandment, as men did who of old kept the Jewish Sabbath." pp. 90, 91. The plain, common sense inference from this is, "that it is of no importance which of the six days in a week men occupy for labor and secular concerns, and which for rest and for spiritual duties," provided there be "agreement as to the time." But, as if aware that even agreement is a hopeless thing, without some indication of the divine will as to the day to be kept, he adroitly turns round, and says, "each should inquire with regard to the will of God, and observe the day which is indicated in his word and by his providence, as suited to the end for which the Sabbath was appointed." p. 94. Here then we have as glaring a contradiction as can well be conceived of. First, there is no will of God at all with regard to any particular day as holy in itself; for that would be enjoining an impracticable duty, owing to the earth's rotundity. Next, we must "inquire with regard to the will of God, and observe the day which is indicated in his word!!" It seems, then, that the will of God, as expressed in the fourth commandment, could not enjoin the seventh day of the week specifically, to the exclusion of every other, without enjoining an impossibility; but in the New Testament it can enjoin specifically the first day, exclusive of every other, without enjoining any impossibility!! Beautiful logic! Admirable consistency! Now, Dr. Edwards, stand up like a man, and answer this question: If the will of God has indicated, in the New Testament, or in his providence, or any where else, some particular day, "as suited to the end for which the Sabbath was appointed," why do you labor so hard to prove that the fourth commandment could not indicate any specific day without enjoining what would be impracticable? We charge it upon you, sir, that you have no other design in this but to blind men's minds to the obvious import of that commandment. That commandment too plainly enjoins the seventh day of the week to suit your purpose; and, rather than admit it honestly, you choose to involve yourself in a most palpable and foolish inconsistency. We recommend you to bring out an expurgated edition of the "Sabbath Manual," in which you can stick to your text. Say out at once, without any mealy-mouthedness, that the will of God indicates no particular day of the week as holy, if this is what you mean; and when you have said it, stand to it. Do not, in the next paragraph, say that you did not mean exactly that. If the necessary consequence of such a doctrine is, that the observance of any particular day can only be had by an arrangement purely conventional, never mind that. "Consistency is a jewel" which would be much more to you adorning than the contradictions of your "Sabbath Manual." If you mean, without any equivocation, that the will of God does indicate some particular day as holy, and that the first day of the week, be candid enough to confess, that this round earth lies as much against the observance of that day, as you would wish to make people believe it does against the seventh day.

Baptist Foreign Missions.—The American Baptist Missionary Union has 17 missions under its care, embracing nearly 200 stations, and upward of 300 laborers, of whom 114 are missionaries and assistant missionaries. There are 150 churches, more than 15,000 converts, 46 schools having about 500 pupils, besides seminaries where at least 130 native Christians are pursuing a course of studies with special reference to the work of the ministry. A cheering advance has been made during the year in nearly every department of the missions. Says the Macedonian for January:—

"The number of new missionaries sent forth in 1849 was not equal to that of 1848. But, with the exception of the lamented Mrs. Osgood, who died some years after she had been compelled to return home, death has made no breach in the circles of missionary laborers. One missionary family has gone to make glad the mountain homes of the Kemmees, another to re-commence the work in which Comstock fell, and a female assistant to aid Mrs. Binney in the Normal School at Maulmain. The missions, as a whole, have never enjoyed richer measures of prosperity. The appropriations for the year have been sufficient to save them from the harrowing grief of retrenchment; on nearly every one of them the influences of the Spirit have fallen; and the thousands of Karen Christians in the regions east of Sandoway have begun to support their own pastors. 'Hitherto hath the Lord helped us!'"

A Revival.—The Hartford Herald states that a revival of religion has been in progress in Westfield, Mass., for several weeks past. The work was general—the Baptist, Methodist, and Congregational churches sharing in its blessings. The Normal School is located in that town, and a large number of the young men who are qualifying themselves for teachers there have become subjects of the work of grace—to be qualified hereafter, it may be, to preach the Gospel of Christ.

TO "D. E. M."

Your communication in the Sabbath Recorder is before me. Very careful should Christians be not to misrepresent each other. And, yet, you grossly, though, I doubt not, unintentionally, misrepresent the Anti-Sectarian Convention.

That Convention did not go into the consideration of what constitutes a Christian. All that it meant to teach, in its third Resolution, is, that, if a person be admitted to be a Christian, then, however great his imperfections, he must be admitted to be a church-member.

I cannot say whether the Convention would or would not have agreed with you on the question—What constitutes a Christian? I frankly admit, that I should not agree with you on it. I believe, that a man may violate divine requirements, and, at the same time, be a Christian. You do not.

I regret your gratuitous intimation, that the Convention was made up, in part, of proslavery voters, and voters for a warrior. So far as I know, the handful of Christians, who have adopted the principle, that the Christians of a place are the church of that place, are believers in "Bible politics."

May we both be guided into all truth.

Your friend, Gerrit Smith.

Peterboro, Dec. 21st, 1849.

RELIGIOUS LIBERTY IN FRANCE.

Notwithstanding the promises made of religious liberty in France under the Republic, there is now manifest there a general tendency to resuscitate the monster of a State Religion. This is evident from a great number of events which have recently transpired, particularly those connected with the evangelical labors of Rev. Leon Pilatte. It seems that this gentleman held meetings for preaching in Paris, which attracted the attention and excited the anger of the Popish clergy, who set themselves to oppose his influence. At first their efforts were powerless, in consequence of the disposition to favor religious freedom which existed immediately after the Revolution. Subsequently, however, he was prosecuted, condemned, and his meetings closed; again they were re-opened, and he was anew attacked and criminated, and cited to appear before the tribunal of the correctional police. Here he was confronted by the public prosecutor, who, before the Revolution, was instrumental in securing the imprisonment of the Baptist missionaries. He was charged with the crime of controversy against Rome—with maintaining a meeting which was not for worship, inasmuch as there was no sacrifice—with admitting to these meetings women and children, contrary to the law in relation to clubs. The result was, that a fine of two hundred francs was imposed upon him, and he was ordered to close his meetings. He appealed to a superior court, before which he appeared on the 17th of November. Here, however, a full and fair hearing was denied him, and the sentence of the lower court was confirmed without examining the witnesses upon whom Mr. Pilatte relied to prove the injustice of that sentence. He immediately interposed an appeal to the Supreme Court, which is his last refuge. Upon the decision of that court hang consequences of immense importance to all the Protestants of France.

COLONIZATION MOVEMENTS.

A few weeks ago an appeal for one thousand dollars was made to enable an entire colored family of sixty-eight persons to emigrate to Africa. The sum has been raised, and the Secretary of the American Colonization Society authorized to draw it. Another case is thus stated by Mr. Pinney, the Agent of the Society:—

"A few weeks since, an interesting colored man, once a slave in Maryland, came to this city with a letter from Dr. Caspar Morris, of Philadelphia, to Rev. Dr. Tyng, and has since so perseveringly sought aid, that only $200 more will accomplish his purpose. The case is this. The slave was manumitted, with many others, by a kind master. They had wives and children, slaves on other estates, and immediately began to labor to get means to purchase their freedom. The subject of this article had a wife and six children. These were sold to a trader to go south-west, last summer. The man had earned by his own labor $500. His fellow-slaves let him have $300, and with this sum, ($800,) he redeemed his wife and youngest child, and they came on to Philadelphia. Meantime the other five children were taken as far as Richmond, Va., where, by the interposition of a friend, they were stopped, to await an effort by their father to raise the means for their redemption.

The entire money value of these unfortunate children is estimated at $1,750—of which $1,550 have already been raised, leaving a deficiency of $200. Of this sum, the editors of the Journal of Commerce offer to contribute $50, if the remainder is made up by the 1st of January.

Jews in France.—A case has just occurred in Paris which may illustrate the power still enjoyed by the priests in the embryo republic. The Minister of Public Instruction had appointed a Jew to the chair of Professor of Philosophy in the college of Napoleon Vende. The Christian zeal of the Bishop of Lucon was aroused, and he fulminated his anathemas against the college, laying it formally under interdict. Many of the pupils were withdrawn by Catholic mothers, and college classes were on the point of being broken up, when the Minister yielded and recalled the unfortunate Israelite. By a compromise the professor was appointed to a subordinate position in a distant college.

Tract Operations in New York.—The New York City Tract Society held its 23d Anniversary one evening last week, at which addresses were delivered by E. L. Magoon, Hon. Theodore Frelinghuysen, and Rev. Dr. Adams. The following statement of the Society's operations is condensed from the Annual Report:—

The Society now employs 20 Missionaries: two for Immigrants, one for Seamen, one for resident Germans, and sixteen who have charge of operations in the different Wards of the city. There are now employed 1,175, Visitors; the average number during the year has been 1,160. For the especial benefit of Immigrants, two have been added to the number of Missionaries. One of these is a German who devotes his attention to those who come from his native land. The other is a Swede who can converse in their native languages with Danes, Fins, Swedes, Norwegians, Italians, Spaniards and Portuguese. These Missionaries meet the different vessels as they arrive, distribute Tracts, provide Bibles and Testaments, give friendly counsel, invite to religious worship, and in every possible manner endeavor to show kindness to the stranger in a strange land.

The results in 1849 sum up as follows: Distributed 1,252,123 Tracts, containg 5,123,571 pages; 1,718 Bibles and 2,609 Testaments supplied to the destitute, on behalf of the New York Bible Society; 7,735 volumes lent; 1,979 children gathered into Sunday and 457 into Public Schools; 203 persons induced to unite with Bible Classes; and 3,067 to attend Church; 1,710 temperance pledges obtained; 1,398 district prayer-meetings held; 37 backsliders reclaimed; 168 persons hopefully converted, 117 converts united with Evangelical Churches.

"Street Children."—The following petition will commend itself to every right-minded and flesh-hearted reader. It is hoped that a sufficient number of such will sign it to produce some effect at Albany during the approaching session of the Legislature.

To the Honorable the Legislature of the State of New York:

Whereas, there are many children in the large towns and cities of our State, familiarly known as "Street Children," whose parents, being intemperate, or idle and profligate, permit them to roam at large, receiving only such education and training as will fit them to become a curse to society, and in the result fill our prisons and houses of correction—and whereas no adequate provision can be made for such children, legally, except a law shall be enacted to meet their case, we, the undersigned, citizens of ——, therefore, petition your Honorable body to pass an act, at this session of the Legislature, making it binding upon city and town officers to ascertain and duly report, to a committee chosen for that purpose, the number of neglected and destitute children in their respective bounds not receiving annually the benefit of the educational provisions of the State, or not otherwise provided for; and also extending to such authorities the legal powers to provide for the mental, physical, and moral education of such children, in such manner and way as to your Honorable body may seem best.

Christian Anti-Slavery Convention at Cincinnati.—A call has been issued, signed by Rev. Drs. Aydelott and Brisbane, and several other highly respectable clergymen and laymen of Cincinnati, of various denominations, for a "Christian Anti-Slavery Convention," to be held in that city, on the third Wednesday in April next, "to deliberate on this important subject, and to adopt such measures as the Convention may, in its wisdom, devise for freeing the American Israel from this sin." It is intended to exclude all political questions and influences from the meeting, and confine attention entirely to the moral, religious, and ecclesiastical relations of the subject. The invitation is to include Christians of all denominations, and it is desired that a large number of names may be sent to the Committee to be attached to the public call.

Dr. Lang of Australia.—That indomitable colonist, Rev. John Dunmore Lang, D. D., of Australia, says the Independent, has just sailed from England for the seventh time for his distant adopted country in New Holland—having already six times circumnavigated the globe for the benefit of his people. His object in revisiting the land of his nativity, three years ago, was to give an impulse and direction to emigration to Australia, to promote the introduction of persons and families of character and means, to send forth numbers of Protestant ministers, and in particular to direct emigration towards the Moreton Bay district of New South Wales, about lat. 27 1-2 S., where cotton and sugar could be raised by free labor. He has sent out from twelve to eighteen ministers, chiefly at his own risk and charges, and now takes with him about twenty young men as candidates for the ministry.

Methodist Episcopal Church.—The Christian Advocate and Journal gives the following statistics of the Church as gathered from the reports of the Annual Conferences. The whole number of members in the thirty (Northern) Conferences is 652,315, showing an increase of 23,849 over those reported in 1848. Of this total 586,849 are in full membership, 74,308 probationers. The number of colored members is 28,589, and of Indians 953. There are 3,984 traveling preachers, of whom 130 are supernumerates, and 316 superannuated. There have been 321 preachers received on trial during the year; 100 have located, 37 died, 5 have been expelled, and 11 have withdrawn. The number of members in the Liberia Conference is 1,063, which is 117 more than in the previous year.

Funeral Expenses.—Among the bills brought against the Common Council of New York, for expenses incident to the recent funeral obsequies of Gen. Worth, Col. Duncan, and Maj. Gates, is an undertaker's bill for $2,360 25. $4,000 was appropriated beforehand for the transportation of the bodies hither. A Special Committee has been appointed to report the whole amount expended for the burial.

William Miller Dead.—Mr. William Miller, familiarly known as "Father Miller," died at his home in Hampton, Washington County, on the 20th ult., aged about 68. Mr. Miller was a native of Pittsfield, Mass., and during the last war with England served as a Captain of Volunteers on the northern frontier. He was a shrewd man, practical in affairs, though of an ardent and fanatical temperament. He began to speak in public assemblies upon the subject of the Millennium in 1833, and in the ten years which preceded the time which he had set for the consummation of all prophecy, he labored assiduously in the Middle and Northern States, averaging, it is said, nearly one sermon a day for more than half that period.

Sunday among the Indians.—A Sabbath Convention, so called, was recently held at Tahlequah, Chrokee Nation, whereat measures were taken for a better observance of the Sunday. One resolution says that the practice, too prevalent among the Cherokee people, of preparing for and attending ball-plays on the Sunday, is productive of evil only, and destructive to every interest of the nation, of the family, and of the individual, and ought to be discouraged by every good citizen.

Revivals.—We find in our exchanges notices of several powerful revivals in different parts of the country. One is mentioned at Marsheim Center, in which about one hundred persons have been converted. Another is mentioned at Waterborough, in the British Provinces, where seventy-five persons have recently been baptized. Others are mentioned at Gallipolis and Scioto, Ohio, at Mt. Freedom, Ky., and in Dyer County, Tenn.

Bethel at Canton.—A Bethel ship, for English and American seamen, is now in progress of erection at Whampoa, the port of Canton, China, where there are constantly to be found numerous captains of vessels, and thousands of seamen, for whose welfare it might have been hitherto said "no man cared." This ship is being built by the contributions of English and American merchants in China. A chaplain, Rev. George Loomis, has been appointed by the American Seamen's Friend Society. It is proposed to establish a library and reading-room in the Bethel ship.

Munificent Donation.—It is understood, says the Vermont Chronicle, that the Rev. Daniel Campbell, late of Orford, deceased, has given by his will his estate, amounting to about $20,000, to four societies, in equal portions, viz.:—The American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions, the American Home Missionary Society, the American Tract Society, and the American Bible Society. Provision is made, however, out of the above, for the support of the widow during her life. Mr. Campbell had no children.

The Wesleyan Rupture in England.—The Church and State Gazette contains the following statement:—

"We are informed on good authority, that many Wesleyan ministers, dissatisfied with their system of church government, and not the least so with the recent proceedings, are meditating a resignation of their charges, and a course of study, preparatory to offering themselves for ordination in our church."

It seems, from this, that Methodist ministers are not considered as sufficiently educated for the church, nor eligible, till they have received a University education, so as to lose all traces of their Methodist origin.

A New Law Question.—The Hallowell Gazette states that a novel case is to be brought before the District Court, to try a fathers' right to his own child! The grandmother of the child claims it by virtue of a gift from the mother on her death-bed, and has sued out a writ of replevin and obtained possession of it. On the other hand, the father, who is much attached to his child, and amply able and qualified to provide for it, and desires so to do, contends that the gift was not intended to be a permanent one, and that it was also a conditional gift—optional with the father to ratify or annul.

CHEAP POSTAGE.

At a Meeting of the Directors of the New-York Cheap Postage Association, held on the 12th of December, 1849, the following resolutions were unanimously adopted, and ordered to be printed:—

Resolved, That the success which has attended the efforts of the friends of cheap postage in the City of New-York and elsewhere, encourages us to make renewed exertions at the present session of Congress for a further reduction of the rates of letter postage.

Resolved, That the increase of letters in four years from 24,000,000 to 62,000,000 per annum, establishes the fact that a high rate of postage has heretofore been, and is now, the cause of the small number of letters passing through the Post-Office, in proportion to the business and population of our country.

Resolved, That there being a surplus of $501,782 70 now in the Treasury, and the prospect of having more than a million at the end of the present fiscal year, after defraying all the expenses of the P. O. Department, furnishes sufficient reasons for a radical reduction of postage at the present session.

Resolved, That while we are fully satisfied that the postage on letters should be reduced to a uniform rate of two cents, yet we are willing, for the present, to accept the uniform rate of three cents pre-paid, and five cents if not.

Resolved, That we recommend to our friends throughout the Union to petition Congress to establish these rates, and to leave it to the wisdom of that body to regulate the franking privilege—the free delivery of letters—and the postage on newspapers.

General Intelligence.

TWO WEEKS LATER FROM EUROPE.

The steamer Cambria, with two weeks later news from all parts of Europe, arrived at Halifax on the 28th of Dec. We give a summary of intelligence brought by her.

There has been a slight rise in the price of Cotton; the price of American Provisions has also advanced.

Advices from Constantinople come down to the 25th of Nov. As yet the extradition question has not been settled, nor, according to the best authorities, was it likely to be settled. The Emperor had up to that time persisted in his demand for having the enemies of Russia, as he calls the Hungarians and Poles, banished from the Ottoman Empire. These demands the Porte resists, and so the matter stands. In the opinion of the Times' correspondent, the Emperor is merely desirous of postponing a rupture till Spring, when his operations would be more favored by the season. Meantime Turkey is making every preparation to meet him should he advance. The English fleet has left the Dardanelles. Russia is increasing her fleet.

Affairs in Hungary continue unsettled. A Pesth paper states that Prince Metternich has written a letter to the Austrian Minister, in which he declares that the Austrian Monarchy cannot enjoy lasting peace unless Hungary is maintained in its preceding relations as a separate State with Austria. Thirteen recent condemnations have been commuted to imprisonment with hard labor for 20, 18, and 10 years. Vienna is completely imbedded in snow, and railroads are thus rendered nearly useless. Notwithstanding all the precautions of the police, Kossuth medals have been introduced into Hungary. They are considered by Magyar patriots as of inestimable value.

The Pope has not yet returned to Rome, nor is the time of his return fixed. The new French Chief is very decided in his course towards the Cardinals, and in an address to his troops tells them that their work is not yet done.

Her Majesty Queen Adelaide died on the morning of Sunday, Dec. 2d, in the 58th year of her age. Her remains were interred on the 13th in St. George's Chapel, Windsor.

Another expedition is about being fitted out to go to Behring's Straits, and further to the eastward, in search of Sir John Franklin. Capt. Sir Edward Belcher, it is thought, will have the command.

The death of Ebenezer Elliott, the Corn Law Rhymer, is announced.

The Government of Bengal has offered the price of 100 rs. for a good and economical machine for separating the cotton wool of India from its seed. For this sum a thousand native machines might be purchased.

Working models of railways, locomotive engines, and electric telegraphs, have been ordered from England for the use of the Mahratta Sovereign, whose curiosity has been aroused by what he has heard of those wonders.

TWO WEEKS LATER FROM CALIFORNIA.

By the Steamship Empire City, which arrived at New York last week, two weeks later news from California was received. The steamer brought 271 passengers, and half a million in gold-dust.

The election had taken place, and resulted in the adoption of the new Constitution by an overwhelming majority. Peter H. Burnett was elected Governor; John MacDougal, Lieutenant Governor; P. A. Morse and Geo. W. Knight, Congressmen.

The rainy season had commenced, and mining was pretty much at an end for the present year. Provisions were high, and still rising, so that much suffering this winter was anticipated.

A short supply of food was feared at the mines, but the wild cattle were depended upon to prevent actual starvation. Preparations were also making to import largely from the Sandwich Islands, Oregon, and the Southern coast.

The old miners were generally of the opinion that next season would wind up profitable mining under the present rude system.

The reported discovery of a vein of gold at Col. Fremont's rancho was considered to be a ruse to attract attention of miners in that direction.

The annexed are the latest prices at the diggings, for the following articles—the market was still rising: Barley 50 cents per lb., Ale $2 per bottle, Candles $2 per lb., Cheese $1 25 per lb., Onions $1 25 per lb., Potatoes $1 per lb., Butter $2, Saleratus $4, Corn Meal 30 cents, Flour 50 cents, Pork 50 cents, Sour Krout $1 per quart, Molasses 75 cents per quart, Oysters, pint cans, $10.

A Presbyterian religious weekly, called the Wathcman, is about to be started at San Francisco by Albert Williams.

A difference has occurred between the Journeymen Carpenters of San Francisco and their employers. The former insist on $16 a day, the latter refuse to pay more than $12. The day laborers who have had $7 and $8, refuse to work for less than $10. About 500 are engaged in the strike.

Fernando Flint, formerly of New York, and at one time a Consul for Hanover and Brazil at Valparaiso, committed suicide on the 11th November, at a house in San Francisco, by blowing the upper portion of his head entirely off with a pistol.

On Sunday morning, Nov. 11, a Portuguese was found dead in his tent in Middle Valley, near what is known as "the Brooklyn Grave," with a wound upon his person, in which was a small sword. The inquest held next day decided that he came to his death from injuries inflicted by his own hand.

A correspondent of the Placer Times gives the particulars of a sad accident at Dry Creek, on the 25th of October. Three men named Kendell, Kent and Wright were working in partnership and lodging together in one tent. Mr. James F. Kendell had been sick, and about 2 o'clock in the morning got up and went out of the tent, leaving his partner asleep. Mr. K. made some noise in the bushes near by, which aroused Mr. A. N. Kent, who immediately sprang to the door of the tent, with pistol in hand, and inquired who was there, at the same time telling the object to be gone. Mr. Kendell did not immediately answer, but moved toward the tent, and Mr. Kent, supposing the person to be some Indian or Spaniard, who had been stealing some of their provisions, fired three shots, one of which took effect in the right breast of Mr. Kendell, who died in a moment, without uttering a word or giving more than one groan. A meeting was immediately called, and a jury selected to try the case. After a full hearing of the case, the jury returned a verdict of "accidental homicide.

DOINGS IN CONGRESS LAST WEEK.

On Second-day of last week, little else was done by Congress than to appoint Committees to wait on the President and inform him of their organization, and then hear the Message, vote for printing it, &c.; after which both Houses adjourned over to Fifth-day.

Senate.

In the SENATE, on Fifth-day, clear indication was given, that it is the fixed purpose of Southern members to resist the admission of California into the Union as a State, and only to extend over it a territorial government.

Several days previous, Mr. Foote had given notice that he would introduce a bill for the admission of two new States—a Slave and a Free State—and two Territories; the Slave State to be called Jacinta, and taken principally from the claimed area of Texas, and the Free State to be California, with boundaries greatly circumscribed from those adopted by the citizens of that Territory in the formation of their State Government. The two Territories that his bill proposed were Deseret and New Mexico. Instead of introducing that bill, however, he offered as a substitute a resolution which simply provides for the organization of California, Deseret, and New Mexico into Territories.

Following this movement was the second act in the drama, introduced to the public by the Senator from Alabama, in the shape of a resolution connected with the operations in California, the call of the Convention of her people, the qualification of voters, and who fixed such qualification, what part the Government had taken by agents or otherwise in the organization of California as a State, &c., &c. This resolution lies over, under a rule of the Senate, and consequently could not be acted upon.

Gen. Houston, of Texas, also introduced a resolution calling upon the President for all correspondence that has taken place between the heads of any of the Departments or himself, with the military authorities at Santa Fe, as also that which has passed between them and the civil authorities of Texas, and to furnish to the Senate any information in his power touching the refusal of the military authorities of Santa Fe to yield obedience to the civil authorities of Texas. The design is, to claim Santa Fe as being within the boundaries of the State of Texas as originally admitted into the Union, and by this method to make a large section of country Slave Territory that is now Free.

Mr. Douglass presented the Constitution of the people of Deseret, asking to be admitted into the Union either as a State or a Territory, which Constitution was ordered to be printed for the use of the Senate.

Mr. Douglass introduced a bill granting one hundred and sixty acres of public land to the actual settlers thereon. Also a bill making a liberal donation of public lands to the States in which they lie, to pay the expense of a geological survey of said States. Also a bill for the benefit of the Territory of Minnesota.

Mr. Clemens gave notice of a bill proposing to amend the Constitution so as to provide for the election of Senators by the people.

House of Representatives.

In the HOUSE, on Fifth-day, Mr. Venable, of N. C., sent up a resolution, which was read by general consent, calling upon the President to communicate to the House whether, since the last session of Congress, any person has been appointed civil or military Governor of California or New Mexico; if so, his name and compensation; and whether the duties of civil and military Governor have been united in one office. Also whether any Governor had issued proclamations calling a Convention in California, or had endeavored to advise or control proceedings, &c.; and that the President communicate copies of all documents and correspondence in relation to the business attending the election in California.

Then followed a long discussion, principally between Mr. Winthrop and Mr. Giddings, in relation to the course of the House and of individuals respecting slavery; it grew out of a motion that the Speaker appoint the Standing Committees, which motion finally prevailed.

Both branches of Congress adjourned over to Second-day of the present week, at which time the House proceeds to the election of a Clerk and other officers.

CALIFORNIA FROM THE DARK SIDE.—The New York Tribune last week copied from the Placer Times a statement that the diggers on the Yuba river were averaging two ounces of gold per day. Mr. A. J. Baker, of Jonesville, Mich., who has just returned from there, says that the estimate is grossly exaggerated. He worked ten days in the diggings, but remained there some six weeks suffering severely from diarrhea, &c., resulting from his privations and sufferings on the way. He thinks the diggers on the Yuba do not average more than five dollars each per day, while the cost of living there is very heavy, and the ravages of disease very general and severe. The sufferings throughout the Mining Region this Winter must be terrible beyond imagination. The country swarms with adventurers, who have frightened away all the game. Provisions, already very high, are certain to go much higher; while sickness will increase its ravages upon the strength of the incessant rains already experienced and the Winter now upon them, for which few are at all prepared. Mr. B. thinks one-third of all who started from the States last Spring overland are already dead!

FUGITIVE SLAVES RETURNED.

From the Norfolk Herald.

"Yesterday morning the schooner Minerva Wright, Smith, from Wilmington, N. C., bound to New York, put into this port to land two young colored men, slaves, who had been found concealed in the hold. Captain Smith stated that he had sailed from Wilmington on the 25th ultimo. On the 7th instant, being off Little Egg Harbor, within seventy miles of New York,) heard some one call out from the hold, "Water! water!" and soon after discovered two persons hid in the space between the cotton bales and the deck. The boys gave their names as George Walker, belonging to William C. Beettingham, and Thomas Wooster, belonging to John Wooster. They stated to the Mayor, that they went on board the schooner three days before she sailed, taking with them a two-gallon jug of water and some bread and cheese. George, who is quite an intelligent fellow, said that after exhausting their stock of water their suffering from thirst was past all endurance. He had about $100 stowed away in a belt which he wore around his waist, and $33 50 in notes and gold. His companion had only a four dollar note. Both protested most solemnly that no person but themselves had the slightest knowledge or suspicion of the elopement."

The oppressed and down-trodden of other nations find homes, protection and a welcome when they reach our soil. But the Slave who attempts to escaps from a worse than Russian or Austrian servitude, is not only repulsed, but taken back to chains and stripes. For such is the law of this Land of Freedom!

FROM CHINA.—Hong Kong (China) papers of September 29th state that the British and American fleets are engaged in operations against the pirates of those seas, who have become so formidable, in point of numbers and resources, as to endanger there the commerce of the world. The British clipper Sylph, bound with treasure to Calcutta, has been recently found missing, under circumstances which led to the apprehension that she had been captured by these freebooters. The British steamers Medea and Canton, which were dispatched to ascertain her fate, both had encounters with the pirates, the result of which was the capture of five junks; they, however, obtained no tidings of the Sylph. The partial success of these steamers enraged the pirates to such a degree that they burned the village of Chappa, captured six junks, and otherwise chastised the inhabitants. The pirates boast of one hundred sail of armed junks, and 8,000 men. Two of their junks were recently seized at Cumsingmoon by the Americans.

DEATH OF REV. AUGUSTUS THIVET, LATE SECRETARY TO THE ROMAN CATHOLIC MISSION IN CHINA.—On the 27th June a very melancholy accident occurred at Pinang. A party of gentlemen were on a visit at Batu-Kawan, some of whom went out to shoot in a plantation. The Rev. M. Thivet and another separated themselves from the rest of the party. M. Thivet was in advance, and immediately on crossing the entrance of an inclosure, disappeared. His friend heard him call out that "he was a lost man;" and after a search, was horrified to find that M. Thivet had fallen upon a tiger trap placed in the bottom of a pit about 20 feet deep, covered with grass and attap leaves laid upon slender sticks, and planted with strong nebong spears, set perpendicularly or slightly inclining towards the sides of the pit, and riveted in the soil. On one of these the unfortunate gentleman was impaled. He expired at 3 A. M. the following day. The part of the spear within the body measured 16 inches, its greatest diameter 2, and its circumference about 5 inches.—Pinang Gazette 30th June.

EFFECT OF RAIN IN CALIFORNIA.—A letter of S. S. Osgood to the New York Tribune, under date of San Francisco, Nov. 8, says: "Since the last steamer sailed we have had a taste of the rainy season. Not a day until this have we escaped a drenching, and the night before last there was a perfect deluge. I have heard of no house yet that was not more or less inundated through the roof or otherwise; many goods were damaged, and the mud all over town was intolerable. Thick boots were up in the market, and in six days they rose from one ounce to six ounces per pair. You may open your eyes, but it is true, that boots—long, thick, stout leather boots, such as can be purchased in the States for $5 or $6—sold here on the 5th of November for $100—one hundred dollars! I doubted when I heard this stated, and went to inquire the price, and was told that I could have a pair at 6 ounces."

LIBERTY PARTY STATE CONVENTION.—The State Committee of the Liberty Party (Gerrit Smith) have called a State Convention to meet at Little Falls, Herkimer Co., on the 22d of January, "to deliberate upon public affairs and the aims and purposes of that party." All the "friends of Human Freedom and of Human Rights, of Righteousness and Righteous Civil Government, are invited to attend." The Garrisonian State Convention meets at Syracuse, January 15. Gerrit Smith has promised to attend both meetings, hoping, in a letter to Samuel J. May, that Liberty Party men will attend the Syracuse Convention in "great numbers."

The New Bedford Mercury states that Midshipman Spencer, who was recently killed at one of the islands in the Pacific, in a duel with a Midshipman of the British Navy, was probably R. B. Norton Spencer, who sailed from that port October 1847, in the whaleship Elizabeth—a son of Judge Spencer of New York, not of Hon. John C. Spencer, as has been stated.

A clergyman of New Orleans, in a sermon upon the recent catastrophe on board of the Louisiana, stated, as a well ascertained fact, that fourteen hundred persons perished yearly on the Western waters from steamboat casualties.

A dispatch dated Washington, Dec. 26, says that a small frame dwelling in the rear of the Navy Yard was burned down the previous day, and a man and three children perished in the flames. Intemperance is supposed to have been the cause of the calamity.

SUMMARY.

The whaleship Richmond, Capt. Vinters, of Cold Spring, went ashore on the 2d of August, 12 miles south of St. Lawrence Bay, on the west coast of Behring Straits. Officers and crew escaped safely to land, and were among the Indians four days. They were kindly treated, the Indians furnishing them with deer and salmon. They assisted also in endeavoring to get the vessel off, and when that was impossible, aided in securing the provisions.

In the Supreme Judicial Court at Boston, a verdict for $9,975 damages was rendered in the case of Lyman Raymond vs. the City of Lowell. The city had placed a grate in the gutter in Central-st, and it stuck up some two inches above the curb-stone. In stepping off the sidewalk, the plaintiff struck his foot against the top of the grate, and, falling forward, fractured his knee-pan, causing permanent lameness.

The contracts for the continuation of the Erie Railroad to Hornellsville, 42 miles, have all been given out at very low rates. The number of bids was large, and the competition such that contracts were secured at much lower rates than were anticipated. The whole 42 miles will be completed and ironed by the 1st of September next, for about four hundred and fifty thousand dols. ready for the trains, being less than eleven thousand dollars per mile.

The official report of the Auditor of Iowa states the assessed valuation of property in that State at $18,479,751, the amount of tax being $47,249 42. Number of acres of land assessed 3,450,394; horses over two years, 34,741; neat cattle, over two years, 91,222; mules and asses, over one year, 331; sheep, over 6 months, 140,787; hogs, over 6 months, 286,261.

The financial writer in the Boston Post says that less than a year ago a brig laden with lumber sailed out of Boston harbor. Vessel and cargo complete cost $15,000. For this adventure the owners have already received $56,000 in gold—they expect to receive about $15,000 more—and they still have the vessel and equipment at anchor at San Francisco.

The President's Message was Telegraphed from Baltimore to Pittsburgh complete in six hours and twenty minutes, in ample season to be published in the morning journals of that city simultaneously with its appearance in those of Washington, Baltimore, Philadelphia and this city.

A daughter of Mrs. Choutea, at St. Louis, Mo., narrowly escaped death by burning a few days ago. In attempting to remove an article from the mantle piece, a bottle of Cologne water was knocked down and fell into the fire, the flames instantly communicating to her dress. The fire was extinguished by the prompt exertions of her mother and sister.

The schooner Ellen Sedgwick, Captain Beaston, of Newark, N. J., bound from Richmond with a load of coal for the Brooklyn Gas Co., went down in the gale on Saturday December 22, and all hands perished (7 in number) excepting the mate.

The work is completed, by which steamboat navigation is opened from the Oswego Canal at Three River Point through Oneida River and Lake, a distance of 50 miles, to near the Erie canal, a short distance west of New London. Two steamers have been built at Brewerton to run on the river and the lake, and are now receiving their machinery, and will be ready to run on the opening of navigation in the spring.

The Buffalo Commercial states that the charter of the Utica Branch Bank at Canandaigua expires by limitation on the 1st of January, 1850, and that a bank, with a capital of $300,000 is to be established in that city, under the charge of H. K. Sanger, Cashier of the Utica Branch Bank.

The brig Santiago, arrived at New York last week, from Hayti, reports that on the eve of their departure from Aux Cayes, the Dominicans had pillaged and burned to the ground two Haytien villages, named Petite Revere and Dame Maria, which caused a great excitement at Aux Cayes. The Haytien fleet was then lying at that port, but left immediately for Dame Maria.

According to the Trenton Gazette, the migration from West Jersey to Virginia continues; and indeed not only from West Jersey, but from some of the Northern counties considerable numbers of enterprising men are settling upon the cheap farms of the Old Dominion.

Francis Curtiss recovered before the Supreme Court of Massachusetts, $5,000 of the Eastern Railroad, for an injury to his leg, by a collision, so as to deprive him of the use of it for several years, and Ezra H. Corning $9,040 against the Connecticut River Railroad, for injuries occasioned by a similar accident.

At Honesdale, Pa., on Christmas Eve, just as the preacher commenced speaking in the Episcopal Church, a large circle or scroll of plastering, four feet in diameter, fell with a crash down to the floor, a distance of about 20 feet. It was miraculous that no lives were lost, as the Church was crowded in every place, except exactly where it fell, directly in front of the pulpit.

A dispatch dated Philadelphia, Dec. 26, says, that John Cornell, a passenger in the steamer Empire City, who arrived here en route to Cadiz, Ohio, and who stopped at Congress Hall, was robbed some time between night and morning of $4,000 in gold dust and money.

The great sugar refinery of Woolsey & Co., New York, was destroyed by fire on Sabbath, December 22. Loss, in building, machinery, stock, &c., estimated at $500,000 on which there was about $250,000 insurance.

On Christmas day, Dec. 25th., a laborer in the employ of Asa Dunn, of New Market, N. J., caught his hand in the teeth of a threshing machine, by which it was so badly injured as to render amputation necessary. The operation was performed by Dr. C. H. Stillman, of Plainfield, and the patient is doing well.

The Ohio State Journal of the 17th ult., says that the Rev. George Johnson, a Protestant Episcopal minister at Gambicr, lost his life in that place on the 11th, by the accidental discharge of a gun which he kept in his room.

The Secretary of the Treasury estimates the expenses of the Government for the year 1850 at over $45,000,000; of this sum, $9,575,678 is for the navy, and $5,864,137 for the army—one-third of the whole national expenditure.

The cholera has been very busy in carrying off theatrical people in England. Laycock, scene painter at Astley's, and Miss Ross Henry, have lately died of cholera; also Mr. Healy, John Nash, Henry Lee, Mr. Cook, father of Miss Cook, the actress; Prof. Hemming, rival of Risley in gymnastic feats, besides several stage carpenters and supernumeraries.

Scientific and Practical Agriculture.

HENRY STEPHENS, F. R. S. E., of Edinburgh, the celebrated author of the "BOOK OF THE FARM," and PROF. NORTON, of Yale College, New Haven, are preparing for the Press, a Book to be entitled,

AGRICULTURE—SCIENTIFIC AND PRACTICAL.

It will embrace every subject of importance connected with Agriculture in all its various branches, both Theoretical and Practical. "Science, in as far as it has, up to the present time, been made available to Practice by Experiment, will be treated in its relation to every operation as it occurs in the course of the seasons." The work will be arranged under four distinct heads, representing the seasons, beginning with Winter and ending with Autumn. The following are among the subjects to be treated of in the first and second seasons, including the Introductory, viz:

INITIATION.—On the best of the existing Methods for acquiring a thorough knowledge of Practical Husbandry; the Difficulties to be encountered in learning practical husbandry, and on the Means of overcoming them; the different kinds of farming; the persons required to conduct and execute the labor of the farm; the branches of science most applicable to Agriculture: the Institutions of Education best suited to Agricultural science; the evils attending the neglect of landowners and others to learn Practical Agriculture; on observing the details and recording the facts of farming by the Agricultural student.

PRACTICE—WINTER.—On the treatment of farm-horses in Winter; the treatment of the farmer's saddle and harness horse in Winter; the fattening of swine; the treatment of fowls; the rationale of the feeding of animals; on the accommodation of the grain crops in the steading; threshing and winnowing of grain; on the forming of dunghills and composts in Winter; on the construction of liquid-manure tanks and carts; sea-weed as manure; on gaulting or claying the soil.

PRACTICE—SPRING.—Summary of the field operations, and of the weather in Spring; on the advantages of having field-work always in a state of forwardness; on the calving of cows; the milking of cows; the rearing of calves. On the sowing of spring wheat; on drilling up the land; on the sowing of beans, and peas, and tares. On the transplanting of turnip bulbs for producing seed. On the rolling of land. On the sowing of oats, lucerne, and sainfoin. On the lambing of ewes. On cross-ploughing land, and ribbing land for the seed-furrow. On the sowing of grass-seeds and barley. On the turning of dunghills. On the planting of potatoes. On paring and baring the surface. On the farrowing of sows; the hatching of fowls, &c.

The Work will also embrace many important operations not included in the ordinary routine of farming, such as "Judging of Land," "Stocking of a Farm," "Improvement of the Soil," &c., &c.

The contributions by Prof. Norton will add greatly to the value of the book, by adapting it to the Soil, Climate, Growth, &c., of our own Country; and the united labors of two such distinguished men will make this work one of the most complete and valuable to the American farmer, ever issued from the press.

The work will be comprised in about 18 Nos. of 80 pages each, with a steel engraving in every number; besides which it will contain more than 600 wood engravings, in the highest style of the art. It will be handsomely printed on fine paper, and sold at 25 cents a number, or $4 in advance for the eighteen numbers.

The First Number will be issued in the month of January, and the work will be completed in about one year. The first volume, written by Mr. Stephens, is already published in Edinburgh, and the American edition will be printed from the stereotype plates imported for that purpose.

Booksellers and Dealers in Periodicals will be furnished on liberal terms.

Postmasters and others remitting the money for three copies at the above prices, will receive a fourth copy gratis. Remittances will be at the risk of the Publishers, if the mailing of the money is proved—otherwise at the risk of the parties remitting. A postmaster's certificate of the money being duly mailed is always satisfactory evidence to the Publishers.

OUR FASHIONABLE GIRLS.

Mrs. Swisshelm, of the Pittsburgh Saturday Visitor, gives the following matter-of-fact information in one of her admirable "letters to country girls:"

"There are hundreds of girls in every large city who parade the streets in feathers, flowers, silks and laces, whose hands are soft and white as uselessness can make them, whose mothers keep boarders to get a living for their daughters. These mothers will cook, sweep, wait on tables, carry loads of marketing, do the most menial drudgery, toil late and early, with very little more clothing than would be allowed to a southern slave, while their hopeful daughters spend their mornings lounging in bed, reading some silly book, taking lessons in music and French, fixing finery, and the like.

"The evenings are devoted to dressing, displaying their charms and accomplishments to the best advantage, for the wonderment and admiration of knights of the yard-stick and young aspirants for professional honors—doctors without patients, lawyers without clients—who are as brainless and soulless as themselves. After a while the piano-pounding simpleton captivates a tape-measuring, law-expounding, or pill-making simpleton. The two ninnies spend every cent that can be raised by hook or crook—get all that can be got on credit in broadcloth, satin, flowers, lace, carriage attendance, &c.,—hang their empty pockets on somebody's chair, lay their empty heads on somebody's pillow, and commence their empty life with no other prospect than living at somebody's expense—with no higher purpose than living genteelly and spiting their neighbors. This is a synopsis of the lives of thousands of street and ball-room belles, perhaps of some whose shining costume you have envied from a passing glance.

"Thousands of women in cities dress elegantly in the street, who have not had a sufficiency of wholesome food, a comfortable bed, or fire enough to warm their rooms. I once boarded in a 'genteel boarding house' in Louisville. There were two young ladies and a piano in the house; halls and parlors handsomely furnished. The eldest young lady, the belle, wore a summer bonnet at ten dollars, a silk and blonde concern that could not last more than two or three months, silk and satin dresses at two, three, and four dollars per yard, and five dollars a piece for making them, and the entire family, women, boys and babies, nine in all, slept in one small room, with two dirty bags of pine shavings, two straw bolsters, and three dirty quilts for bedding; no sheets, no slips, and there on the wall hung the pea-green and white satin, the rich silk and lawn dresses.

"These ladies did not work, but played the piano, accordeon, and cards; and nearly broke their hearts the week before we were there because another, who I presume lived just as they did, called on them with a great clumsy gold chain on her neck. None of them had one, and Miss Labalinda, the belle, could eat no supper, and had a bad fit of the sulks to console her for a want of a chain. But, dear me! I had no notion of running away off here. I was just thinking how busy you country girls are apt to be in the fall, and this led me to think what a blessing it is that you have something to do, and that you think it a disgrace to live idly. It is a great blessing to live in a country where it is a credit to work, for idleness is the parent of vice and misery. So do not get weary or think your lot a hard one when putting up pickles or preserves, apples, butter, sausages and sauces for future use."

GUTTA PERCHA.

Mr. T. B. Smithies recently delivered an interesting lecture, in London, on the discovery, manufacture, and various applications of the far-famed gutta percha. We make the following extracts from a report of the lecture in the London Record:—

The lecturer commenced by pointing out that the discovery of gutta percha had unfolded a striking instance of the boundless provision made by the God of Nature for the wants and comfort of the human family. After detailing the accidental discovery of the material by Dr. Montgomerie, at Singapore, in 1842, he exhibited a drawing and specimen of the percha tree, the wood being peculiarly soft, fibrous, and spongy, pale colored, and traversed by longitudinal receptacles, or reservoirs, in which the juice is deposited. The tree was stated to belong to the natural order saoocaceæ, and yields, in addition to its valuable juice, a vegetable oil or butter, a medicine, whilst the flowers are used as articles of food. The lecturer exhibited several blocks as gathered by the natives, some of them moulded into grotesque figures of birds, &c., giving proof that the Malays are not altogether void of artistic skill.

The most interesting portion of the lecture was the trial of the speaking tubes, and the hearing apparatus for deaf persons in churches and chapels. A tube was carried from the platform into the library in the adjoining building, a distance of upwards of one hundred feet, through which a whispered conversation was most distinctly carried on. Tubes were also carried round the room, in various lengths of from one hundred to two hundred feet, and notwithstanding they were twisted in every direction, yet the softest whispers were quite audible when the ear was applied to the other end. A bowl was placed on the lecture-table, from which a small tube was carried to the further end of the room; through this any deaf person could hear the lecture. It was shown how this tubing might be applied in various ways for the relief of the deaf. Another peculiar property which rendered it valuable for the conveyance of water was, its power of resisting the action of the frost, and its remarkable strength. It was stated that Mr. Rofe, the engineer of the Birmingham Water Works, had applied a pressure of three hundred and thirty-seven pounds on the square inch, to a three-quarter inch tube, without being able to burst it. Also that the extraordinary length of four hundred and sixty feet had been manufactured without a single joint.

The lecturer, being provided with a pan of boiling water, steam-box, and jet of gas-light, afforded considerable amusement and wonder by the ready mode in which the joints in mill-bands, clothes-lines, window-blind cords, lining for cisterns, tubing, &c., can be made. The facility with which pieces of tubing were in a few moments securely joined together, simply by the aid of a little hot water, seemed almost magical.

CHOLERA IN THE EAST INDIES.

A correspondent of the Straits Times writes:—"I regret to say that the cholera, that awful visitation of God, has, in its onward march, reached Bangkok and made most fearful ravages among its thoughtless multitudes. On Sunday, the 17th of June, a few cases occurred within the city walls and near the palace; by the Tuesday following it had so increased that 80 bodies were taken to a single 'wat' for burning. On Tuesday, Friday, and Saturday, it raged so that its horrors are beyond all description. You could not walk out, even for a short distance, without witnessing the dead bodies lying in all directions, and seeing persons attacked while walking from one place to another, who perhaps oftentimes never reached their homes. So great was the number of deaths, that they found it impracticable to burn them all, and many were buried, and multitudes more thrown into the river just as they had died. You may form some conception of the numbers by knowing that in many of the wats 400, or nearly that, were buried in a day. They were brought and laid in piles and fuel applied, when they were consumed like heaps of logs. No parade; no funeral; no other object but to hasten them away to the wat, where they often were left to be burned by those who would attend to it, or left to putrefy on the ground. Perhaps in the three days last mentioned not less than from 1,000 to 3,000 died daily; and at the end of twelve days it was known that more than 20,000 had fallen victims to its fearful ravages. Since that time it has very much abated, but has by no means ceased. Among those who have died were very few of the highest classes; however, among that small number was Khan Khun Bodin, a noble of high rank and great influence, a man of age, and experience, who was Commander-in-chief of His Majesty's forces in the late war in Cochin China.

HINTS TO THE BALD-HEADED.

According to the following extract from an editorial article in the Boston Medical and Surgical Journal, the easy and sure way to prevent baldness, is to go bare-headed, or wear a well ventilated hat:—

"A refined civilization has brought with it a train of physical evils which it is in the province of science to control or subdue. Our tight hats, our warm rooms, closely fitting caps, silk night caps, from which the perspirable matter cannot escape, by their combined agency, in connection with other influences, and not always easy to define, bring off the hair prematurely and turn it gray, sooner than personal vanity is willing to exhibit such evidence of decay. And this is not all; the skin is actually in a low state of disease, the effects of which are recognized in the accumulation of dandruff—desquamation of the epidermis. The bulbs of the hair are inflamed also from the same cause, and from year to year the hair degenerates and becomes thinner, and not unfrequently ends in baldness. On all that part of the head not covered, viz., from the back side, between the ears and on the temple, the hair generally remains to extreme old age, however much the vertex may be denuded. If females wore equally tight covering, the hair would probably suffer very much in the same manner; but their light, airy bonnets admit of ventilation, and hence a bald-headed woman would be a phenomenon. Who ever saw a bald-headed Indian? We have had an opportunity of seeing various tribes, in all the freedom of an unrestrained savage life, but a sparse head of hair we have never noticed. Atmospheric exposure conduces to the luxuriance of the hair and a healthful condition of the scalp."

INDIAN COLONIZATION.

George Copway, who takes a deep interest in the welfare of the aborigines of this country, has prepared the following form of Petition, and sent it all over the Union for signatures:—

To THE HONORABLE THE SENATE AND HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, the Memorial of the undersigned Citizens and Residents of the United States, most respectfully showeth: That the present state of the Indian Tribes within the jurisdiction of the United States and the Continent of North America, is a subject worthy of the consideration of every Christian and philanthropist in this Union. That if by any practical method these aboriginal and primitive owners of the soil can be civilized and incorporated into the body politic as enlightened and useful citizens, no time should be lost in making the attempt. The rapidly advancing spirit of the age presents this subject before Congress, as indispensable to be acted upon now.

With this object in view, and the earnest prayer to Almighty God to enlighten your councils on this momentous subject, we, the undersigned, present the cause of the INDIANS to the earnest consideration of your Honorable body, praying that such means may be speedily adopted, as will give to the "Red Man" a permanent home, and all the arts, conveniences, and comforts of civilized life.

To this end we pray that a sufficient portion of the great North-western Territory may be appropriated to this use for the reception and concentration of such of the Indian tribes as may be willing to become agriculturalists, &c., and receive from the hands of the white man a sound system of moral and intellectual training.

The land so appropriated to be erected into an Indian District, subject to such a form of Government and such laws as Congress may direct, consistent with the Constitution and laws of the United States.

The Septennial Census of Philadelphia City and County for 1849, shows the following results: White taxable population 76,965, of whom 75,145 are males, and 1,819 females. Colored taxable population 319, 58 are females, and 261 males. White blind persons, 166, of whom 54 are females. Colored blind persons 7. Deaf and dumb persons 175, of whom 73 are females. This table shows an increase of 26,221 in the taxable inhabitants of Philadelphia City and County since 1842.

A RAILROAD INCIDENT.—The New York and Erie Railroad, which is so widely known for the excellence of its cars and locomotives, is entitled to equal celebrity for the character of its conductors. Every traveled man knows how much he is indebted to the conductor of a road for comfort, and those who have been over the Erie road will call to mind many a pleasant hour with the hero of the following story, which we take from the Journal of Commerce:—

"Not long since, an old lady from the neighborhood of Binghamton, on the upward train of cars, when they had passed Cochecton, and were upward of a hundred miles from Piermont, suddenly missed her umbrella. 'There!' she exclaimed dolorously, in a voice that attracted the attention of all in the car, 'There! I do declare, I've left my umbrel aboard the boat down to Piermont;' and continued bewailing her great loss till Ayers entered. She repeated her great grievance and sorrow to him. 'Bless you, madam,' said he, 'is that all? We can put you all right in a minute. Send for it by telegraph, ma'am;' and so saying he reached up his hand to the bell rope that passes through all the cars, and jerked it once or twice, and then went to another car, where, by a wise arrangement, all articles picked up on the boat are carried along with the train. He returned a moment afterwards with the umbrella. 'Lord-a-massy!' exclaimed the old lady, in a fervor of delight and astonishment, 'I knowed they sent letters and newspapers by telegraph, but it's the first time I ever heard of sending an umbrel.'"

EDUCATION OF IDIOTS.—They do some things in Massachusetts which are not done elsewhere. The Legislature two years ago appointed a commission to inquire and report on the number of idiots, and what can be done for their benefit. Last year, on this report, an appropriation was made for an experiment in teaching them, and a school has been established at the Blind Asylum, under the superintendance of Dr. S. G. Howe. In the mean time, Dr. H. B. Wilbur, of Barre, has established a private school for imbeciles, which is quite successful. The Christian Register says:—

"He has eight or nine pupils, whose rapid improvement bears sufficient witness to the practicability of the education of idiots. They have already been elevated from a state of helplessness and self-abandonment to one of comparative comfort and self-direction. They have been taught to adjust their own dress with neatness, to observe many of the rules of society, to restrain their appetites, and to be careful of their conduct, and in some instances to commence a still higher grade of education. Dormant faculities have been called into action, which they were supposed not to possess. How far it is possible to develop in these unfortunate beings the germs of a higher life, which are doubtless there, no one can tell; but from what has been accomplished, much may be hoped from the exertions of a skillful and patient instructor, whose faith is equal to his task."

A RUSSIAN RAILROAD.—Letters from Russia state that the great national railroad between Moscow and St. Petersburg is advancing rapidly under the direction of Major T. S. Brown and the other American engineers who have the direction of the work. At present, one hundred and sixty-two locomotives, averaging twenty-five tons each, have been constructed for this road, and nearly three thousand cars built, of which twenty-five hundred are used for freight, and the remainder finished in the best style for passengers. The branch railroad is to extend to the ancient city of Novogorod, where the great annual fairs are held, where Chinese, Tartars, Turks, and the merchants of Southern Asia, dressed in their respective national costumes, jostle against Birmingham agents, German traders, French travelers, and Russian serfs. The branch will, it is believed, largely increase the profits on the national road, which will cost forty millions of dollars.

CORN BREAD.—We are in the daily habit, says the American Agriculturist, of eating corn bread made after the following recipe. It is equal to any thing we have ever tasted. To one quart of sour milk add two spoonfuls, well stirred in, of pulverized salæratus, two eggs well beaten, one table spoonful of brown sugar, and a piece of butter as large as an egg. Salt to suit the taste, and then stir in the meal, making the mixture about as stiff as pound-cake. Now comes the great secret of its goodness. Bake quick—to the color of a rich light brown. Eat it moderately warm; with butter, cheese, honey, or sugar-house molasses, as most agreeable to the palate.

NORTHERN MAIL FROM NEW YORK.—The great Northern Mail, and all the Way Mails to Poughkeepsie, are to go over the Hudson River Railroad, after the close of navigation on the river. To leave New York, at 4 o'clock, P. M., being conveyed in stages from Poughkeepsie up. The Mail will arrive in time to connect with the fast train Westward, which leaves Albany at 7 A. M., going through to Buffalo in 15 hours. The return Mail will leave Albany at 11 P. M., arrive at Poughkeepsie at 11 A. M., and at New York at 2 P. M., to connect with the great Southern Mail at 4 P. M. By this means letters from Buffalo will go to Washington in 48 hours. Messrs. Beach & Butler are the contractors for the land carriage by stages of one mail per day. A Sunday train will be run with Mail matter only.

PROSPECTS IN CALIFORNIA.—Private advices from California lead to the impression that there will be great suffering in the new El Dorado this winter and approaching spring. On account of the losses sustained by those who shipped provisions by the first vessels that sailed from the United States, those that followed carried out other kinds of cargoes, and the emigration being so great, the supplies have dwindled down to an alarming degree. In consequence of the Oregon farmers going to the mines, no grain or flour can come from that direction, and the supply from the west coast of South America will be very inadequate to the demand. Unless a supply can reach there from the United States in time, provisions, it is thought, will command more than they have ever done yet, and they were high enough, in all conscience, at one time. The above is the substance of several letters received from a leading citizen of San Francisco, largely engaged in business, and who can be relied on.

SENATE COMMITTEES.—The cast of the Standing Committees of the Senate is exceedingly sectional, the Judiciary Committee being composed of three slaveholders (including Chairman) and two non-slaveholders. The Committee on the District of Columbia has a pro-slavery Chairman, two members from the South, and two from the North. But the Committee on the Territories is the most sectional of all, having a slaveholding Chairman (Senator Douglas of Illinois, who owns a plantation in Mississippi,) and but one Northern member.

New York is represented but on one Committee, while the little State of Arkansas is represented on six, South Carolina three, Mississippi four, Virginia four, Louisiana four. Senators King of Ala., and Atchison of Mo., are each on two committees. The South have a majority in fifteen of the committees, and the North in twelve. Three of these committees are entirely composed of Southern men, and two of Northern. Sixteen of the Chairmen are from the South, and eleven from the North. [N. Y. Tribune.

MAIL ROBBERY.—While the steamboat Hendrik Hudson, from Albany, having on board the U. S. Mail, was coming to this city last Thursday morning, the clerk discovered a number of letters and newspapers strewed around the deck, and one of the deck hands picked up a bank note. On examining the mail bags, it was discovered that they had been cut in several places. A search was then instituted, and letters, with bank notes and drafts to the amount of about $15,000, found upon a lad named Wm. E. Harris, a passenger. He was arrested and brought to New York, and is now in custody. Harris is between 15 and 16 years of age. He states, that he was assisted by another lad about 14.

INTEMPERANCE IN BALTIMORE.—The increase of intemperance in Baltimore has rather non-plussed the Temperance Societies. In spite of the law prohibiting the sale of liquor on the Sunday, (which is violated with impunity,) and all the efforts of temperance men, taverns and grog shops increase, and intemperance prospers. The Clerk of the City Court, received within the year ending December 1st, instant, $440 more for liquor licenses than in any previous year! Father Mathew since his sojourn there has administered the pledge to about 2,000, but principally to old temperance men, very few of those who actually would be benefitted by the pledge receiving it.

THE STATE OF DESERET.—The delegate now in Washington with the memorial to Congress for the admission of this new State, informs the Globe that the word deseret is an ancient Egyptian one, and signifies a honey bee, which we had heard before. The bee is everywhere, we believe, the emblem of industry, and has been selected for that reason by the Deseretarians (if so they may be called) for their national device. Napoleon chose it for the same reason; and when the Bourbons came back one of the consequences of the Restoration was the obliteration of the imperial bees, and the substitution of the royal fluer de lis.

Deferred Summary.

There was another great sale of India Shawls last week, at Niblo's Assembly Rooms, in New York. Nearly 300 lots were put up and sold, the bidding being very brisk. Twenty-three sold under $50; forty from $50 to $100; twenty-eight from $100 to $150; twenty-three from $150 to $200; eleven from $200 to $300; six from $300 to $500. The highest priced shawl sold for $550. The lowest priced shawl was $15. The material of these goods was camel's hair. Scarfs of the same material ranged from $3 to $15 each.

The Richmond Whig of Tuesday says:—"We were shown on Monday, thirty-seven bars of gold from the Booker mine in Buckingham, Va., the average weight of which was 197 pennyweights each. It is valued by the proprietor at $6,300, and is the result of thirty-four days' labor, with thirty-six hands. As the expenses are rated by him at $20 per diem, the clear profits of the 34 days' work are upwards of five thousand dollars!"

The Constitutional Convention of Kentucky has adopted an article that the General Assembly shall have no power to pass laws for the emancipation of slaves without the consent of their owners, or without paying their owners, previous to such emancipation, a full equivalent in money for the slaves so emancipated, and providing for their removal from the State.

A cotemporary says there is now living in this city, in extreme want, a man who at one time had one hundred and eighty thousand dollars, amassed by a few weeks' successful gambling. For some years he lived in the utmost luxury, having over four hundred suits of clothes, but the smiles of fortune deserted him, and at last he has been reduced to beggary. In threadbare coat, and without energy or character, he may be daily seen in Broadway.

The City Governor of Comorn, Ladislaus Ujhazy, with his family, and several other officers of the garrison of Comorn, arrived at New York in the Hermann. They receive great attention at the Hotels where they stop. One of the distinguished persons is a lady, who, during the recent struggle of her countrymen for liberty, held the rank of Lieutenant in a Hungarian regiment of cavalry. Her name is Appollonia Jagello (pron. Yah-gello.)

A movement has been made in London to raise a fund, the interest of which shall be used for the benefit of the distinguished Nonconformist divine, Rev. John Pye Smith, D. D., F. R. S., &c., during his lifetime, and then be appropriated to found Divinity scholarships in the new College at St. John's Wood, London.

From the Minutes of the fourteenth annual meeting of the General Association of United Baptists of Missouri, held in August last, we learn that there are in that Association 386 churches, 222 ministers, 74 licentiates, 1,832 baptized, 18,771 communicants.

Dr. Buckland, the geologist, proposes a plan for supplying London with fresh water in any quantity, by means of an open canal, which should receive the rain water from an area of some 2,500 square miles, which now flows into the Thames, near Henley.

A criminal was in the county jail awaiting his trial for murder, with a reasonable prospect of conviction. The candidate for sheriffalty called one day to see him, when the prisoner, wishing to compliment his visitor, said to him; "If I should be condemned to be hanged, I know of no one by whom I would rather be hanged than by you." The visitor with one of his blandest smiles replied:—"And should I be elected sheriff, I know of no one I would rather hang than you."

A curious incident occurred to the electric telegraph between Berlin and Stettin lately. The communication having been found to be interrupted, search was made for the cause, when a mouse's nest with a little brood was discovered in the gutta percha tube; and it appeared that the little animal had contrived to gnaw through the wires.

The extent of the California correspondence may be judged of from the following statement from the Post Office books. Of course a vast nnmber of letters go by private hands, and are not included in Mail statistics:—

The Ohio	14,186	letters.
The Crescent City	751	"
The Cherokee	125	"
Total	15,062

A telegraphic dispatch dated Cincinnati, Dec. 15th, says: "Rev. James H. Perkins, Pastor of the Unitarian Church in this city, committed suicide last night by jumping from the ferry boat into the river, while crossing. He left his hat, cloak and memorandum book on board. It was the impression that he was laboring under temporary insanity. He was much esteemed by all who knew him, and leaves an interesting family to mourn his untimely end."

The following hotels and other public buildings, mostly on Broadway, N. Y., have the annexed estimated value given them (by the Assessors: Astor House, $400,000; Irving House, $250,000; New York Hotel, $135,000; French's Hotel, $130,000; Howard House, $110,000; Stewart's Marble Store, $110,000; Bonded Warehouse, $200,000.

An invention of a novel character has been made in Paris. By a simple yet ingenious mechanism, the folding of newspapers, which has hitherto been performed by the hand, is now effected by a peculiar machine. With the assistance of one person to attend to it, this machine will fold 2,000 newspapers in an hour.

The large number of penniless Hungarian refugees now arriving in this country, renders some provision for them necessary. A subscription list opened in New York was headed by Wm. S. Wetmore with $500; M. H. Grinnell, $250; Matthew Morgan, $250; R. K. Haight, $200; and many others with liberal sums.

On the morning of Dec. 19, a bold and ingenious robbery was committed on board of the steamboat John Stevens, during her trip from Bordentown to Philadelphia. A portmanteau containing $5,000 was stolen from the Captain's office, where it had been deposited by Mr. G. Gaskill, Cashier of the Mechanics' Bank at Burlington, N. J.

The Russian Scientific Academy has announced that, in obedience to the directions of the Emperor, a committee has been appointed to report on the project of the French chemist, M. Archerot, for lighting St. Petersburgh with electricity. Experiments are to be made on a large scale in several parts of the city.

Free-Will Baptists in New York give notice, that they have purchased a lot of land, in a central and eligible situation, for a house of worship, at an expense of about $1,000, and now appeal to their brethren for help to build a house, 40 feet by 60, at an expense of about $3,000.

Upward of one hundred and thirty proposals were put in for the extension of the Erie Railroad from Corning to Hornellsville. A party of rich capitalists are preparing another proposition for the completion of the entire line to Dunkirk, which it is thought will be satisfactory to the Company.

The Niagara Chronicle of the 6th has the following paragraph: There is a rumor in town to the effect that fourteen American schooners have been seized for smuggling on the Welland Canal.

Four English Regiments of the Line have been armed, by order of the Minister of War, with a newly invented musket, which carries ball 800 yards, being double the distance obtained by ordinary muskets.

Miss Fillmore, a daughter of the Vice President of the United States, received an appointment as teacher in one of the public schools of Buffalo, and is now acting in that capacity.

There is an ox in Cambridge, Mass., which now weighs 3,700 pounds, and it is thought by good judges that in less than three month' time, he will weigh nearly, if not quite, 5,000.

California would make forty-five States of the size of New Hampshire! The sea-coast extends nearly a thousand miles, and the territory extends into the interior twelve hundred miles.

On the 1st. inst., the officers of the State Government of Louisiana, with the records, &c., were transferred by a steamboat from New Orleans to Baton Rouge, the new seat of Government.

Rev. C. G. Finney was advertised in the London Patriot to preach in Borough Road chapel, Southwark, on the evenings of the 21st and 22d of November.

The Cayuga and Susquehanna Railroad Company have completed the track to the Ithaca depot, and the cars will hereafter run regularly.

The Phœnix Bank, in Westerly, R. I., was robbed on Sunday night last week of $15,000 in bills of that Bank. They were of the denominations of $20, $10, $5, $2 and $1.

A noted grower of geraniums, who lives near Portsmouth, is said by the Hampshire Guardian to possess a geranium which measures twelve feet round, and which has yielded during the present season 715 blossoms.

An apple tree on Mrs. Mills' farm, on the Reading pike, some 7 miles from Cincinnati, is again in bloom; it has also apples the size of a cherry, others half grown, and some nearly ripe.

DeRuyter Institute.

The Academic Year of this Institution for 1849–50 will commence the last Wednesday in August, and continue forty-three consecutive weeks, ending the last Wednesday of June, including a recess of ten days for Christmas and New Year holidays. The Year will be divided into three Terms:

The First, commencing August 29, of 14 weeks.
The Second, " December 5, of 15 "
The Third, " March 20, of 14 "

Encouraged by the success of the School under its present Instructors, the friends of the Institute have made liberal additions to its library, cabinet, and apparatus, thus furnishing ample facilities for illustrating branches taught in the various departments.

The Literary Department is as heretofore under the supervision of Rev. JAMES R. IRISH, A. M., President, assisted by other able instructors. In this Department, especial attention is given to the lower English Branches. Students are also fitted in the Classics to enter the advanced classes in College.

The Department of Natural Science is conducted by Professor GURDON EVANS. In this, Natural Philosophy, Astronomy, Geology, Natural History, and Chemistry, are taught in a manner of unsurpassed interest. With it is connected the Department of Agriculture Science.

The Farmer's Course is thoroughly scientific; embracing the study of the best authors, with daily recitations. During the Winter Term two hours each day will be spent in the Analytical Laboratory, where students will be instructed in the constitution of soils and ashes of plants, with a minute examination of their constituent elements, and the various modes of testing for their presence.

A course of lectures is given during the Term on Practical Farming, explaining the relation of Geology to Agriculture, the Soil, the Plant, and the Animal, and their various relations, the Rotation of Crops, Feeding Animals, Manures, Draining Lands, &c., &c. For further information see Catalogue.

Besides Globes, Maps, &c., for the illustration of Astronomy, a Newtonian Telescope of high magnifying power has recently been added to the apparatus.

During the Summer Term, Botany and Geology receive special attention, illustrated by excursions to localities where these sciences may be studied as seen in nature. A Geological and Mineralogical Cabinet is accessible to the students.

The Mathematical Department is under the instruction of OLIVER B. IRISH, Tutor. It embraces thorough instruction in Arithmetic, and the higher pure and practical Mathematics, with field exercises in Engineering and Surveying.

Elocution, embracing Reading, Declamation, General Oratory, and Writing, receives the special attention of a competent teacher.

The Teacher's Department will, as formerly, be in operation during the Fall Term, and last half of the Winter Term. Particular attention to this is solicited from all who intend to teach district schools.

The Female Department is under the care of Miss SUSANNA M. COON, a graduate of Troy Female Seminary, a lady every way competent for this responsible station.

No efforts will be spared to render the young ladies of this Seminary truly accomplished, as well in the social relations of life, as in the substantial branches of learning and the higher refinements of education. Ample facilities are furnished for pursuing French, Italian, German, Drawing, Painting, Music on the Piano, and Vocal Music.

Information.

Good board in private families from $1 25 to $1 50. Parents from abroad should furnish their children with very little pocket money, as many temptations may thus be avoided. Those who wish may deposit money with either of the teachers, to be disbursed according to order, without extra charge.

Tuition, to be settled in advance, per term, from $3 00 to $5 00. Extras—For Drawing, $1 00; Monochromatic Painting, $3 00; Oil Painting, $5 00; Chemical Experiments, $1 00; Writing, including Stationery, 50c.; Tuition on Piano, $8 00; Use of Instrument, $2 00; in Agricultural Chemistry, including Chemicals, Apparatus, fires, &c., (breakage extra,) $12 00.

N. B. A daily stage leaves the railroad and canal at Chittenango for this place at 4 o'clock P. M.

For further information address the President, J. R. Irish, or Professor Gurdon Evans, DeRuyter, Madison Co., N. Y.

A Card.

TO THE PATRONS OF GRAHAM'S MAGAZINE. The close of the current Volume is deemed a proper period to announce to the patrons of this Magazine, that arrangements have been completed which cannot fail to increase its attractions during the coming year. The best writers in the country will continue to enrich our pages with their productions, and our engravers—who stand foremost in their profession—will put forth the best efforts of their art to make this peculiar department of the Magazine more beautiful than ever.

Promising unremitted exertions to merit a continuance of the favor bestowed upon the Magazine, we respectfully solicit a renewal of the subscriptions of all its old patrons, and the addition of the names of all who desire to avail themselves of the satisfaction of reading what is universally conceded to be "THE BEST MAGAZINE IN THE COUNTRY."

Attention is called to the following list of Terms, which are unquestionably more advantageous to subscribers than those offered by any other work of the kind.

TERMS.—For $3 in advance, (par money in the States from which it is remitted,) one copy of Graham and a copy of a large and magnificent print, by a distinguished Engraver, and which may be considered one of the most beautiful specimens of art ever presented by any Magazine publisher, and also a new and beautiful Engraving, suitable for framing, of a Sacred subject, "Bearing the Saviour to the Tomb," prepared expressly, and at a very heavy cost, as a Premium Gift to new subscribers to Graham's Magazine. Or, if desired, we will furnish in lieu of either of the above Prints, a complete set of our Mezzotint Portraits of the American Heroes of the Late War with Mexico. For $5, two copies for one year, and a copy of either of the Prints to each subscriber. For $10, five copies for one year, and a copy of the Magazine to the Postmaster or person forming the club, and either of the above Prints, or a set of Portraits, to each subscriber. For $20, eleven copies for one year, and a copy of either of the Prints, or a set of Portraits to each subscriber, and a copy of the Magazine to the Postmaster or person sending the club, with a copy of each of the large Prints as an additional Premium.

FARTHER EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS OF OUR MISSIONARIES IN CHINA.

From a Letter of Mrs. Carpenter, March 12, 1849.

I am sitting alone in our little study, at the table where I have so often sat beside our excellent teacher. But I meet him no more. His books, his pens, his ink-slab and water-can, still occupy their usual places; but the hand so skillful to wield them has lost its cunning—the voice, so apt to teach, is silent in death—the eye, so bright with intelligence, is dimmed—the spirit has returned to God who gave it. His little tea-pot still stands with the untasted beverage prepared for him, so short has been his sickness, and so certain were we of soon welcoming him again among us. But he will come no more. We shall go to him, but he will never return to us. Most deeply do we feel this bereavement, for our loss is no common one. Chung-seen-sang was known and acknowledged as a teacher of no ordinary merit; and, for true native gentility, intelligence, and agreeableness, had few superiors among his countrymen. He was ever the same cheerful, active, self-denying laborer, and full of affection for us. How many memories, mournful, yet pleasant to the soul, come crowding around me as I write. He ever spoke of Jesus' doctrine as good, and during his sickness he told Mr. C. that he believed Jesus had power to save the souls of men. He seemed delighted to have us visit him, and the day before his death sent many thanks to me, by Mr. Carpenter, for the interest I felt in him, not omitting a message in favor of the religion he knew I loved. It is not for us to know whether he believed in Jesus to the saving of his soul, and we can only lie low in the dust, and plead with our heavenly Father to forgive us wherein we have failed to do our duty in times past to those with whom we have associated, and to teach us to be more faithful in time to come. Not merely a teacher, but a friend, has fallen; and the thousand little mementos of him which every where greet me, are constantly bringing the tears to my eyes, and deep sighs to my swelling heart. God has done it, and our smitten spirits seek comfort only at a throne of grace.

Afternoon.—Mr. Carpenter and myself have just returned from the house of mourning, and have looked our last on that face which has so long been familiar to us—calm and placid as in life, and having the appearance of a sweet sleep, instead of the dreariness of the tomb. This evening the body is to be placed in its coffin, and kept in the house for one or two years, before being finally removed to its last resting-place in the family cemetery. Such are the Chinese customs.

These are days of heart-searching, I believe, with us all. For myself, I feel most deeply that this chastisement is designed for our spiritual good. I needed something to rouse me from the quiet security which I have so long enjoyed. The sameness of our every-day life, the friendly disposition of the heathen toward us, the monotonous routine of studies, and the long series of days of health and peacefulness, have, I fear, combined to put us too much at our ease. We needed something to rouse us to activity. Surely this shall not be in vain. Perhaps you will wonder that an event so spirit-stirring as the opening of our chapel, should have failed to rouse our missionary zeal to the highest pitch. But there was too much of hope, of comfort, in that event. When we saw the heathen flocking in, we thanked God for what he had given us to share, and rejoiced in the evidence that our humble efforts were so far blessed. But there was nothing in it to tell us how deficient we had been in failing to urge home religious truths upon all with whom we had opportunity. Now the scales have fallen from our eyes, to some extent. Oh for a full measure of light to enable us to search our own hearts continually. Let us have your prayers still. We feel that we are much indebted to them for these answers of good which we experience.

We have already said much to you about the deep interest that has been awakened in our hearts on behalf of the family of our late teacher. That interest increases and is deepened. We can but hope, that God has begun a good work in that family. Mr. C. has told you how the only own sister of the teacher has declared herself a believer in the true God. Of her decision and fearlessness in this matter, we had ample proof even before she thus declared herself a believer. Once we found them thronged with visitors, and among them a young lady who appeared to be well acquainted, at least theoretically, with the doctrine of the Papists. We were disposed to say but little, fearing that we might be casting pearls to the ground to be trodden under foot; but Ne-may stood forth as our advocate, and we left them in the midst of a most spirited controversy upon the agreements and disagreements of that doctrine with our own.

Before we found it convenient again to visit them, a little cousin called, and said that Ne-may wished him to inform Mr. Carpenter that she was a believer in the new doctrine. The manner of the child struck us as remarkable, from the low and almost trembling tones in which he spoke. We were, however, slow to believe, and merely replied by asking him if any other members of the family believed. He said "No," and we passed the time as usual in trying to instruct him, and in cultivating kindly feelings.

For the next week or two I was prevented by the rains and other circumstances from visiting the family, and when we did so, we were struck with the unusual manner in which they received us. All was kind, but we missed the eager greetings of former days. We inquired for Ne-may, who soon came in, evidently laboring under some emotion, for which we could not account. My own spirit soon caught the contagion, and, as a relief, I asked permission to go up and see the aged grandmother. Ne-may cheerfully accompanied me, and I soon found that with the presence of the family had vanished all restraint. The blind old woman was sitting before her table, at the side of which we placed ourselves, and soon the doctrine of the Holy Book was our theme. Ne-may went to a side table, and bringing from the drawer a book, laid it before me. It was open at the "Ten Commandments," and drawing close to my side, she said, as she looked earnestly in my face, "Cah-nyang-nyang, how can one know that she believes this book; I do believe in one true God; I believe in Jesus Christ; but how can I know I believe right?" I pointed her to the first command, and said, "You believe in one true God." She read the command aloud, and said, "I do." I pointed her to the second, which she also read, and I continued, "You read that it is wrong to worship false gods; if I should hear, after this, that you do it, as you have hitherto done, I shall doubt the reality of what you say, that you believe in the true God." She replied, with much earnestness and feeling, "I do not worship false gods now; I shall never worship them again; I will worship only the true God." I said, "Do you wish to bow down [ke-duh] to the true God?"—a term which is always used to express humiliation and worship. She had never heard it applied to the worship of God, and the idea seemed to to strike her as impious. She exclaimed with much earnestness, "No; I do not wish to ke-duh, I wish to believe." I explained it, and we passed on. At the fourth command I said, "If I hear that you work on the Sabbath, I shall think you do not believe this command to be from God." "But I do believe, I wish to believe, and in my heart I will believe," she said, pressing her hands vehemently on her bosom. The fifth command, which it is so difficult for the Chinese to disconnect from the worship of ancestors, presented its usual stumbling-block to her; but with her powers of discrimination, even such difficulties may soon be removed. And so we went through, accompanied by her fervent responses, and frequent appeals to the testimony of her own heart and conscience—"I do, I will believe." The aged grandmother had sat, meanwhile, with her arms resting upon the table, and her clasped hands sometimes pressed upon her sightless eyes, and sometimes supporting the pale face, which was full of thoughtful expression; and I knew, as I had known before, that the truths which she had often heard her grand-daughter read, were full of interest for her. I asked what she thought of them now. She expressed a pleasure in hearing, and a wish to be a true believer. I then dwelt at some length upon the present blessings to be derived from such a belief, how it would destroy the fear of death, and in heaven would usher her at once into the presence of the blessed. Ne-may could hardly wait for my stammering tongue, but was constantly repeating what I said, with her hand pressed affectionately upon the brow of her beloved grandmother, exclaiming, "And, grandmother, as soon as you are in heaven, your eyes will be opened, you will have no more pain, you will see the true God, you will see Jesus, you will see all the saints, and you will see my dear brother." Then, as if a fear had crossed her mind, she turned to me and said, "Do you think she will see Chung-seen-sang?" It was a thrilling question; still, I told her faithfully, that I did not know whether he believed. "But," said she, "he used to talk about your belief; he used to tell me it was a good one; he said much about about it; did he not believe?" Alas, fond sister, I could not hold out to her hopes which I dared not myself entertain, although I often find it difficult to believe, that one so gentle, so truly Christian-like in his whole deportment, could be other than a Christian; and I could but indulge the hope that he did believe much more than he expressed. The old lady seemed to catch the spirit of Ne-may's strong faith, and once, when she raised her head, which had long been hidden in her hands, the moistened cheeks told of a light within, although her closed lids might never again be opened upon the scenes of the outer world. I felt it was good to be there.

But poor Ne-may had now another subject to lay before me. "I do believe, and I wish to believe," she repeated, "and Christians will be glad of it; but with my own friends it is not so. They laugh at me, and say, it is all very well for foreigners, but of no consequence to the Chinese. How shall I answer them? What shall I say when they laugh at me?" I tried to comfort her, and assured her that no strange thing had happened to her, which led to the expression of her astonishment that all the world were not believers. Then she must be told how none could believe on him of whom they had not heard, &c. As soon as possible I hastened her down to repeat her story to Mr. C., who was waiting for me in the reception room. I can hardly be reconciled to the rigors of a custom which prevents him from seeing the old lady. "Were my brother living," said Ne-may, "it would be proper for them to come up together." And as she cannot go down, they can never meet in this life. This I regret the more, as he is so much more familiar with the language than myself. But with such help as Ne-may, I ought not to complain.

Yesterday, after an absence of two weeks, occasioned by the excessive rains, we visited them again. Ne-may seems growing in grace, and in a knowledge of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ. Found the aged grandmother ill, and in bed. While sitting by her side, trying to sympathize with her in her sufferings, I asked her if she still took pleasure in hearing the Holy Book read. She replied that she did, but that to-day Ne-may had been too busy to read to her much. A little girl sitting near said, "But yesterday Ne-may read much to her; it was rest, rest, all day." "Yesterday was the Sabbath," I said. "Yes," continued the little girl, "yesterday was the Sabbath, and Ne-may did no work; she kept in the room, and read all day to grandmother." I looked inquiringly at Ne-may, who, smiling, confirmed the statement, adding other testimonials to those already given. She said nothing about opposition, and from the fact that several members of the family were present, and all were unusually kind and cordial, I must believe they are more favorably disposed to her change of views. But one would think they could not well oppose her. Her frankness, her candor, her constant cheerfulness, her social bearing, inspire affection wherever they are known. The dear name of "brother," was, as usual, often on her lips, mingled with earnest appeals for something on which to found a hope that he was among the redeemed. I repeated what I had often said, that I believed his confidence in false gods was shaken, but whether he relied upon the true God, I did not know, or whether he ever prayed to the Father or to his Son Jesus Christ. "But I know," said she, "I heard him, a little before his death, his head resting upon his pillow, his eyes closed, and his hands uplifted thus, I heard him repeat the name of Jesus." Blessed words! Dear Ne-may, how my heart grasped at once a faith thus inspired by her own, for him we so dearly loved. Truly, we who have seen the abounding mercy of God cannot be slow to believe that his own hand has ordered all these events, and that the dear friend so early and suddenly called away was one for whom Christ died, and died not in vain. Let us still have your prayers, particularly for this case of our dear friends.

Yours sincerely, L. M. CARPENTER.

THE RELIGIOUS NEWSPAPER.—The following passage from a recent sermon by a Connecticut pastor, was communicated to the Independent:—

"I think that the religious newspaper should be included in this class of safeguards. Take, for example, the ablest and best of those evangelical weeklies which are now circulating in New England. What labor, what energy, are enlisted in the production of a single number! What tact in selecting, condensing, arranging! How many items of deep, practical interest! What instructive suggestions of Christian experience; what brilliant gems of thought; what precious records of the descent of the Spirit; what thrilling tidings of the old world; what rich foreign correspondence, letting us into the council chambers, and carrying us to the fire sides of other and distant nations; what compact, yet comprehensive, views of Divine providence! The workings of how many vigorous minds may be discerned upon those four ample pages! Indeed, these weeklies may not inaptly be regarded as a moving panorama of the world, differing from ordinary panoramic views in the fact that they keep up with unceasing changes, and so are ever fresh, ever new. There are but few means of improvement placed within the reach of the young, which, in my judgment, will accomplish so much for their hearts and intellects as the habitual and thorough reading of an able evangelical weekly. It would be a marvel to find a youth confirmed in habits of such reading, who is addicted to vice or lacking in intelligence."

THE FIRST SNOW-FALL.

BY JAMES RUSSELL LOWELL.

The snow had begun in the gleaming,
And busily all the night
Had been heaping field and highway
With a silence deep and white.

Every pine and fir and hemlock
Wore ermine too dear for an earl,
And the poorest twig on the elm tree
Was ridged inch-deep with pearl.

From sheds, new-roofed with Carrara,
Came Chanticleer's muffled crow,
The stiff rails were softened to swan's-down,
And still fluttered down the snow.

I stood and watched by the window
The noiseless work of the sky,
And the sudden flurries of snow-birds
Like brown leaves whirling by.

I thought of a mound in sweet Auburn
Where a little headstone stood,
How the flakes were folding it gently,
As did robins the babes in the wood.

Up spoke our own little Mabel,
Saying, "Father, who makes it snow?"
And I told of the good Allfather
Who cares for us all below.

Again I looked at the snow-fall,
And thought of the leaden sky
That arched o'er our first great sorrow,
When that mound was heaped so high.

I remembered the gradual patience
That fell from that cloud like snow,
Flake by flake, healing and hiding
The scar of that deep-stabbed woe.

And again to the child I whispered,
"The snow that husheth all,
Darling, the merciful Father
Alone can make it fall!"

Then, with eyes that saw not, I kissed her,
And she, kissing back, could not know,
That my kiss was given to her sister
Folded close under deepening snow.

[The following article appeared originally in the Sabbath Recorder of March 15, 1849. It is re-printed here for the purpose of bringing the subject fairly before our readers, and enabling them to judge of the remarks upon it which will be found under our editorial head to-day.]

THE SABBATH IN CHINA.

Why was it that our denomination was guided to make choice of China, rather than any other country, as the most suitable place to begin its missionary operations among the heathen?—is a question not unfrequently asked by others, and one about which the doubts of some of our own people are not yet fully resolved. It were easy to give the reasons which governed the Missionary Board, when they decided to give up Abyssinia, to which their minds had all along been directed, and to send their missionaries to the Celestial Empire; but it is not so easy to say what were the meaning and intent of Divine Providence in the matter. But

> "God is his own interpreter,

Had our missionaries gone to Abyssinia, they would have been isolated, and shut out from all opportunity of collision with the missionaries of other denominations—a thing which, in the minds of many first-day people whom we consulted, was very desirable; and even with many, if not with the most, of our own people, it was thought expedient to occupy some spot of earth where we might propagate our peculiar tenets without disturbance. We will not say but what the Board itself was prepossessed in favor of this view. For we were not blind to the fact, that if we should undertake to cultivate a field partly occupied by other sects, there would unavoidably arise such a clashing of interests as would be very uncomfortable both to ourselves and to our missionaries. But God seeth not as man seeth; and, in his providence, often makes it necessary that there should be division rather than peace. Luke 12: 51. Abyssinia was closed against us; and it had been a want of wisdom little short of madness, with our feeble resources, to attempt the planting of a mission there. But China was open; and to her three hundred millions of population, the few missionaries already there were but as "a drop in the bucket."

Two years have not passed since our missionaries first saw the shores of that benighted land, and yet "they bring certain strange things to our ears;" not that other missionaries have been teaching the heathen to observe the first day of the week, rather than the Sabbath of the Bible—of that we were well enough aware—but that they have so "darkened counsel" as to make the Chinese converts to Christianity believe that they are actually observing the very day of the week enjoined in the fourth commandment! The doctrine of a change of the Sabbath from the seventh to the first day of the week, as taught in this country and in Great Britain, is carefully concealed. It would seem that their translations of the Scriptures are so managed, that when taken in connection with all the preparatory instruction given to the Chinese relative to the hebdomadal cycle, it does not appear but what "the ceremony-worship-day," is identically the same which God sanctified at the close of creation. In short, it seems that both their translations, and their teachings, have been so adjusted to one another as to make the Chinese think, that the day commonly called Monday is the first day of the week, yea, the very day upon which God began his creative work; and that the day commonly called Sunday by other nations, is the seventh day of the week! As the Chinese are said to know nothing of the computation of time by weeks, except as introduced among them by foreigners, it was easy to practice this imposition upon them.

When this information was first sent us, we felt rather inclined to say nothing about it. We suspected there must be some mistake about the matter. Our brethren had been there but a short season; and it might be that, owing to their knowing almost nothing of that most difficult of languages, they had received a wrong impression. Surely, we thought, men professing to have the fear of God before their eyes would not be guilty of such a flagrant outrage upon the truth. But after waiting a good while, and receiving more full details, we begin to suspect that the first impressions of our missionaries were more than half correct. At all events, we know that they have taken every method in their power to arrive at certainty in the matter; we know that they have held correspondence respecting it with the other missionaries; and we know that when they urged the consideration of the matter upon the attention of those missionaries, it was tacitly admitted, that the thing was true of which our missionaries complained. Had it not been true, doubtless some attempt would have been made to undeceive them.

We wish our readers to have perfect understanding of this matter; we will, therefore, explain more fully. It seems, that when the missionaries of other orders went to China, they did as they had always done at home; that is, they set apart the Sunday as a day of rest and worship. They gave to this day, in the language of the Chinese, the name of le-pai-nyi, (ceremony-worship-day.) Sometimes they called it ur-se-nyi, (rest-day.) These two terms were used interchangeably to designate the Sunday. Next, they set about naming the other days of the week, as follows: Monday, which is everywhere else known as the second day of the week, they called "the first day after ceremony-worship day;" Tuesday was called "second day after ceremony-worship-day;" Wednesday, "third day after ceremony-worship-day." And thus Saturday became "the sixth day after ceremony-worship-day." By this means, the Sunday became the seventh day! All this being done, the next business was to translate the Scriptures. Accordingly, the fourth commandment is made to read somewhat after this manner: "You must remember the ceremony-worship-day, to keep it holy; for in six days the Lord made heaven and earth, &c., and rested on the seventh day," which the Chinaman, of course, understands to be the Sunday, according to what the missionaries have already taught him concerning the days of the week and their names. Thus the fourth commandment is made to enjoin, positively and specifically, the Sunday, in contradistinction from any and every other day! A beautiful specimen of faithfulness this! Would such men dare to preach from the text, "We can do nothing against the truth, but for the truth?" But the thing could not stop here. When they came to translate the history of our Lord's resurrection, they seem to have found themselves in rather an awkward dilemma. They must, to be consistent with what they had already done, make the visit of the disciples to the tomb, and the consequently supposed time of Christ's resurrection, to have taken place, not on Sunday, as Christians generally hold, but on Monday! The Evangelist must be made to say, "In the end of the ceremony-worship-day," or, "in the end of the rest-day"—(it matters not which, for in the mind of the Chinaman the two terms are convertible)—"as it began to dawn toward the first day after ceremony-worship-day, came Mary Magdalene to see the sepulchre." What! give up the dogma of a Christian Sabbath, for which they always contended so strenuously when at home! Renounce the idea of a transfer of the institution from the seventh to the first day of the week! Throw out of the question all consideration of the resurrection of Christ, as having no bearing upon the subject at all! Throw to the winds the stereotyped sentiment of Christendom, that the work of redemption is so much greater than that of creation, that it needs to be commemorated by a new Sabbath! Yes, all these are given up entirely; there is no help for it. In the Old Testament the commandment was made to enjoin the keeping of the Sunday, and, of course, there could be no change brought about under the New Testament without making the "ceremony-worship-day" to come on Monday.

We are not advised whether the same trick has been practiced by missionaries elsewhere. We wish we had certain information. How is it in Burmah? In Hindostan? in Africa? In the islands of the sea? Can any one tell us? But upon the presumption that this deceit has obtained nowhere but in China, we begin to see the reason why God directed us to that field rather than to any other. It was that we might, at least, bear such a testimony against this perversion of His law by the missionaries of other denominations, as would leave them without excuse. It may be, ("charity hopeth all things,") that they did not consider the pernicious consequences of the course they were pursuing. It may be, that the idea of its being a matter of indifference what particular day is observed as the Sabbath, had taken such hold of their minds, that they never so much as suspected there was any thing wrong in making Monday the first day of the week. It may be, that overlooking the great design of the sabbatic institution, as a testimony against Atheism and Idolatry, and regarding it only as a season for devotional exercises and for bodily rest, they did not suppose that the least evil could ensue from changing the order of reckoning. But if such were their views, it is high time they were undeceived; and God, in his wise providence, appears to have called us, the Seventh-day Baptists of America, to the work of undeceiving them.

In view of this state of things, it becomes a solemn question, Are we prepared for the work which Providence has thrown into our hands? We very much fear that we are not. We very much fear that Seventh-day Baptists are not half awake to the responsibilities which lie upon them. We entered upon the work of foreign missions without even suspecting that we should be called to grapple with such a form of corruption as that which now develops itself. We never dreamed of any controversial collision with the missions of other persuasions, except in such form as we were brought into collision with them at home. It is true, we supposed that this collision, being witnessed by the heathen, would, to a certain extent, operate upon them somewhat unfavorably; and, on that account, we rather lamented the necessity under which we were laid. But never did it enter our minds, that the instruction of the Chinese in regard to the method of computing time by weeks was such, that the word of God, even though faithfully translated, could not convey truth to the mind. Of this we were quite ignorant. And it now seems, that our missionaries, and those of other orders, stand before the heathen, not as controversialists, drawing different conclusions and opinions from given premises, but as conflicting witnesses in regard to a matter of fact. In short, the controversy becomes a mere question of veracity, the most painful, distressing, and pernicious form which it could possibly assume. Who does not see that we, as a people, and our missionaries in particular, have a work to do which is attended with most unpleasant difficulties? And again we ask, Are we prepared for it?

But suppose it should appear, that the same deceit has been palmed off upon the heathen at other mission stations. Suppose it should be found, that not only the Chinese, but the Hindoos, the Persians, the Hottentots, the Ceylonese, have all been taught that Monday is the first day of the week, and Sunday the seventh—what then? Ah! then we ought to take to ourselves shame and confusion of face, that we were so supine as never to get about the work of missions, until so great an error was fastened upon all nations. Yes, shame upon us! Let us up, and do what in us lies to recover lost ground. Heaven grant that we may be prepared for our work, and do it "in meekness of wisdom."

HISTORICAL CURIOSITY.

In 1798, a clergyman, Vicar of a parish in Shrewsbury, England, committed what the Catholics or Puseyites would call sacrilege. In his church was a picture of the crucifixion of Christ, suspended over what is called the altar. This picture, as he believed it to be an object of worship, he ordered to be removed. Various efforts were made to retain it, but at length it was taken from the building. The Catholic priest, on the following day, issued the following lampoon, which was circulated over the whole town:

> "The parson's the man,
> Let him say what he can,
> Will for gain leave his God in the lurch;
> Could Iscariot do more,
> Had it been in his power,
> Than to turn his Lord out of Church?"

It may be easily supposed, that on one part of the community this would have its effect; but the worthy Vicar soon gave evidence that he possessed wit as well as his neighbor, for he immediately replied:

> "The Lord I adore,
> Is mighty in power,
> The only one living and true;
> But that lord of yours,
> That I turned out of doors,
> Had about as much knowledge as you.
>
> "But since you bemoan,
> This god of your own,
> Cheer up, my disconsolate brother;
> Though it seems very odd,
> Still, if this be your god,
> Mr. Burley* can make you another.

* A celebrated painter in Shrewsbury.

GOLDSMITH'S BENEVOLENCE.—Among the anecdotes told of him while at college, is one indicative of that prompt, but thoughtless and often whimsical benevolence which throughout life formed one of the most eccentric, yet endearing points of his character. He was engaged to breakfast one day with a college intimate, but failed to make his appearance. His friend repaired to his room, knocked at the door, and was bidden to enter. To his surprise, he found Goldsmith in his bed, immersed to his chin in feathers. A serio-comic story explained the circumstance. In the course of the preceding evening's stroll he had met with a woman with children, who implored his charity. Her husband was in the hospital; she was just from the country, a stranger, and destitute, without food or shelter for her helpless offspring. This was too much for the kind heart of Goldsmith. He was almost as poor as herself, it is true, and had no money in his pocket; but he brought her to the college gate, gave her the blankets from his bed to cover her little brood, and part of his clothes for her to sell and purchase food; and finding himself cold during the night, had cut open his bed and buried himself among the feathers.

ANECDOTE OF WASHINGTON.—When the American troops were quartered at Newburg, at the close of the revolutionary war, and the soldiers were stirred up to rebellion against the government, by the famous anonymous letters, which it has since been ascertained were written by Gen. Armstrong, then a Major in the army, Gen. Washington convened the officers for the purpose of addressing them on this subject, and calming the tumult which was beginning to rage in their bosoms. He held a paper in his hand on which the remarks he intended to make were written—and then it was, that finding himself unable to read without assistance—as he was drawing his spectacles from his pocket, that unpremeditated expression broke from him—one of the most pathetic that ever fell from human lips—"Fellow citizens," said he, "you see that I have not only grown gray, but blind in your service." The effect of this remark was electrical. No bosom, no eye was proof against it.

JOHN KNOX'S HOUSE.—The subscriptions to save and restore this venerable building, which the authorities of Edinborough had ordered to be demolished as dangerous to the public safety, amount to upwards of £300. The whole west wall has been taken down, and rebuilt, the stones being numbered, so that they will be restored to their former position. The other walls are thoroughly repaired. A projecting chamber in the top story, which added to the picturesqueness of the building, but had been removed some years ago, on account of its decayed state, has been rebuilt in its ancient form. The order for the demolition of the building is thus superseded, and this venerable relic of the days of the Reformation will now probably remain for centuries.

The Sabbath Recorder.

New York, January 10, 1850.

"THE SABBATH IN CHINA."

On our outside will be found an article, under the above caption, which we request our readers to peruse carefully before reading this. As the paper which contained it has found its way to the Celestial Empire, and created no small stir among the missionaries there; and as our brethren Carpenter and Wardner have been pretty roughly handled, for the part they were supposed to have taken in furnishing materials for its preparation; it seems demanded of us that we say something more on the subject. We shall endeavor to do so, and we hope it will appear, in the end, "that we can do nothing against the truth, but for the truth."

In the first place, it is proper to say, that the article alluded to was not written by the Editor of the Recorder. It was prepared by the one who has, since that time, become associated with him in the editorial management of the paper, and for every line of it he is justly responsible. This announcement we make, that those who consider themselves aggrieved may clearly understand who it is with whom they have to do in the matter.

In the second place, we remark, that the act of arraigning our missionaries, and calling upon them to give a flat denial to charges which originated in another quarter, did not, in our opinion, evince much magnanimity. For it seems, that the whole fraternity of first-day missionaries in Shanghai have come down upon our missionaries there, and demanded of them an unqualified contradiction of the charges which we had made. This demand they seem to have pressed with an unyielding pertinacity, threatening to suspend all intercourse with them unless it was complied with. Keenly sensitive to the loneliness of their situation, and willing to purchase peace at almost any price, our brethren have gone as far as stubborn facts would let them go, in trying to soothe their fellow missionaries; and have forwarded us a communication, intended as a sort of salvo to their wounded feelings. We would remind those who feel themselves aggrieved, that the controversy is strictly with us. If any sin has been committed, we are guilty; "but these sheep, what have they done?" As to publishing the communication sent us, we beg leave to decline doing so, for the present. It appears very much like a thing extorted from our brethren, and that circumstance suggests the propriety of withholding it, till we can have a little better understanding of the facts in which it originated. It purports to come under the sanction of their assailants; at the same time, it appears that, owing to the near approach of the hour for the departure of the mail, it was hurried off without having been seen by all of them. We do not think, that justice to either party requires its immediate publication; but if it be insisted on, or any future emergency demand it, we may give it to the world, together with the whole history of the case, documents and all, from first to last. We shall, however, embody the substance of the communication in our present remarks.

Perhaps it may be well to say, before proceeding farther, that our position, as Corresponding Secretary of the Missionary Society, requires us to collect information concerning religious operations in China from all available sources. We are not, therefore, necessarily restricted to the correspondence of our own missionaries, though we confess we drew largely from that source when making up the article which has been so much complained of. This remark we make by way of showing to those who have constituted themselves a jury to try our missionaries, that there is at least a reasonable doubt of their guilt, of which they ought to have the benefit. We plead in their behalf, that they have, in all their communications, confined themselves to a simple statement of facts. Inferences, and charges founded upon those inferences, are our own.

The communication before us sets forth, that we have done the missionaries of other orders injustice, by charging them with having translated the fourth commandment so as to make it enjoin, directly and in so many words, the keeping of le-pai-nyi (ceremony-worship-day.) We beg leave to correct this impression. We made no direct charge against the translation, as faulty in itself; but we did charge the missionaries with having given that kind of preparatory instruction concerning the weekly cyle, which rendered it impossible for a Chinaman to infer any thing else than that the fourth commandment enjoined le-pai-nyi, directly and specifically. We said, that "their translations and their teachings have been so adjusted to one another, as to make the Chinese think," &c. What we intended to convey, and what we think we pretty clearly did convey, was, that such was the tutorage which the Chinese had received concerning the weekly cycle, that the most faithful translation of the command could not convey to them a correct idea of the duty enjoined. And we are not yet sure but what our charge was made upon good grounds. It is true, that "the application of le-pai-nyi to Sunday, and the naming of the days of the week so as to make Saturday the sixth day after ceremony-worship-day, appears not to have been introduced by the missionaries." We are, therefore, willing to take back so much of our article as makes this assertion. Who, then, did introduce the custom? "One says, it was the work of the Mahometans." But it is not at all likely, that a people who make Friday their sacred day, would thus dignify the Sunday. "Another, that it was the work of the Chinese themselves on becoming acquainted with the customs of foreigners, and that the mssionaries have only adopted the practice." Let this stand, then, as the true explanation, and how much better does it make the matter? Adopted the practice! Why did they adopt it? Their voluntary adoption of it, and their winking at the error which they knew it would impress upon the minds of the Chinese, makes them as justly responsible as if they had actually introduced it themselves. Upon more mature consideration, we are of opinion, that the real originators of the practice were the missionaries of the Papal church; and that Protestant missionaries have adopted it, just as Protestants everywhere have adopted the Papal custom of rejecting the Bible Sabbath, and keeping the first day of the week in its stead.

Again, we are charged with having done injustice by saying, that "the doctrine of a change of the Sabbath from the seventh to the first day of the week has been carefully concealed" from the Chinese? Perhaps in this we spake unadvisedly, and we are willing to make all the atonement that the facts of the case will warrant. But what are the facts? Why, that out of the multitude of publications with which the Chinese have been furnished, containing allusions to the Sabbath, some two or three admit the change. Bro. Wardner favors the Board with extracts of passages, which he found by examining only about sixty tracts and small books. "Among these," says he, "I find but two in which any mention is made of a change." In fact, it would seem, that a careful searching of all the archives of Chinese missions, would bring to light just barely enough to justify our opponents from the charge of having taken special pains to conceal the doctrine of a change, but not enough to make the doctrine stand out in bold relief, as an avowed doctrine of the Christian world. In America and in Great Britain, the doctrine of a change of the Sabbath, is insisted upon as an essential tenet of Christianity. The "Christian Sabbath" is as much a part of the popular religion in these countries, as the sun is a part of the solar system. But in China it is thrown quite into the shade, and comes out only after careful inquiry! Now, whether the missionaries took special pains to conceal it, or whether they were only quite indifferent whether the Chinese ever found it out or not, is not so material. This indifference, taken in connection with their adoption of a weekly cycle different from that of the Scriptures, renders them sufficiently culpable. But we are sorry we said "carefully concealed."

Another thing for which we are censured is, that we have implicated the whole body of missionaries in China, instead of confining our charge to those who have made the mis-statements complained of. Were only a part of them concerned in adopting a weekly cycle different from that contained in the Scriptures? And in regard to the translations of the gospels, the tracts and other publications embodying quotations from the Scriptures professing to be translations of the fourth commandment, yet enjoining the le-pai-nyi—how could we know who were guilty and who were not? If we mistake not, they are all responsible, just so far as they have not protested against these errors. If they saw these publications circulated among the people, aided to circulate them, or looked on in silence, they must be held responsible.

After a careful examination of the communications from our missionaries, and of all other documents accessible, we find that the facts stand about as follows:—

1st. That one of the missionaries of Shanghai, if not more, was in the habit of teaching, both from the pulpit and the press, that the day sanctified at the creation, and enjoined by the fourth commandment, is the le-pai-nyi of China. The following is an extract from one of his tracts:—"Heaven's true God in six days created the heavens and the earth and all things, and rested the seventh day. Hence the true God established this day as a holy day, and called it the rest-day. This rest-day is the ceremony-worship-day."

2d. That in a translation of some of the gospels circulated among the Chinese, the terms ur-se-nyi and le-pai-nyi are used interchangeably for the Greek term sabbaton. In a version of the gospels of Matthew and John into the colloquial dialect of Shanghai, the word sabbaton is THIRTEEN TIMES rendered by le-pai-nyi, instead of ur-se-nyi, as it should have been.

Only look at this, reader! The matter is worse than we represented. Thirteen times is sabbaton rendered le-pai-nyi. This is explained by saying, "that the mistake was owing to a blunder of the Chinese teacher who made the colloquial version, and that it escaped their [the publishers'] attention when revising and passing it through the press; the version written in the general language of China, which was put into the hands of the teacher, was correct." Query—Was this Chinese teacher fit for his business? If he was not, why was he employed? If he was, how came he to make such a blunder? The true answer, we think, will be found to be, that his previous tutorage in regard to the week had been so erroneous that the error was not his so much as that of his instructors.

3d. That in an edition of the ten commandments, with commentary, the word Sabbath was rendered by the phrase le-pai-nyi, and there is no explanation given in the commentary. It is but fair to say, however, that the writer has recently amended this tract by inserting ur-se-nyi instead. Yet for seven years it was a standing publication of the American Tract Society, and had gone through many editions as sanctioned by that Society's Publication Committee in China.

4th. That our missionaries embraced the earliest opportunity to utter their protest against giving circulation to those translations of Scriptures, which employed le-pai-nyi as a translation of the term Sabbath. An address to the Committee engaged in a revision of the Chinese Scriptures, dated Feb. 16, 1848, contains the following language:—"Generally, we believe, it [le-pai-nyi] is used to designate the first day of the week; but it has recently been printed and widely circulated as a translation of the term sabbaton, which by general consent refers to the seventh day of the week. Without knowing the intention of the committee in reference to this term, we beg leave respectfully to object to its use altogether, as constituting a part of the Chinese Scriptures.

5th. That Dr. Bridgeman, on behalf of the revising committee, replied to the said address as follows:—

Dear Brethren,—Your note of this date has been received by the Committee to which it was addressed, and I have been directed to acknowledge its receipt, and to assure you that the Committee will endeavor to keep in mind the points to which you have drawn attention, and especially the rule requiring exact conformity to the Hebrew and Greek originals. The Committee feel that they are engaged in a very difficult work, and they trust all who love the truth as it is revealed, will unceasingly pray that it may be faithfully translated into the language of the Chinese.

In behalf of the Committee,
Yours sincerely,
E. C. Bridgeman, Cor. Sec.

From this note it appears, that the Committee did not object that our missionaries were laboring under any mistake. And this is what we meant, when we said, that "when they urged the consideration of the matter upon the attention of those missionaries, it was tacitly admitted that the thing was true of which our missionaries complained."

6th. That in the weekly cycle adopted by the missionaries of China, Saturday is made the sixth day, styled by some the sixth day after the ceremony-worship-day, and by others the sixth laboring day; and that Sunday is represented by many, in their preaching and publications, by the titles of ceremony-worship-day and rest-day, interchangeably. Therefore the fourth commandment, which says, "Six days shalt thou labor, but the seventh day is the Sabbath," would evidently convey to the mind of a Chinaman, that the Sabbath or rest-day spoken of is no other than the ceremony-worship-day.

One of the missionaries, we understand, charges, that our inference from the fact that Saturday is made the sixth day of the week in China, that Sunday must, therefore, be the seventh day of the week, is "inconsequential," because "no person, whether Chinese or foreigner, has ever been in the habit of calling Sunday the le-pai-chi, but le-pai-nyi, or le-pai." We pretend to no knowledge of the Chinese language, and we know not what is the meaning of the term le-pai-chi. But be it what it may, we suppose the Chinese have skill enough to count seven; and if Monday is made the first day of the week, Tuesday the second, and Saturday the sixth, we opine that they have sense enough to see that Sunday is the seventh. It makes no difference whether the missionaries call it so. They have numbered the other days, and that is sufficient. We insist upon it, that our inference is not "inconsequential." Besides, when it is said, in one of their tracts, that "God created all things in six days, and rested the seventh day—that he established this day as a holy day, and called it the rest-day—and that this rest-day is the ceremony-worship-day," what is this but saying, pointedly, that Sunday is the seventh day of the week?

As to the inference which a Chinaman would naturally draw from the Chinese version of the New Testament, concerning the time of Christ's resurrection, that it occurred, not Sunday, according to the generally received sentiment of Christendom, but on Monday, we still hold to what we said; at least we see no reason, as yet, for modifying our statement. Guided simply by that version, a Chinaman must suppose that the disciples visited the tomb of our Saviour, not on the ceremony-worship-day, or Sunday, but on the day following. Does that version say, "In the end of the ceremony-worship-day as it began to dawn towards the first day after ceremony-worship-day, came Mary Magdalene," &c.? Or does it say, "In the end of the rest-day, as it began to dawn," &c.? It certainly can make no difference which of these terms is used, for, as we said before, "in the mind of a Chinaman the two are convertible." Hence we conceive, that there is no possible room for him to escape the conclusion, that the visit of the disciples to the tomb was on Monday, if he is guided by his New Testament alone. If he finds out the difference at all, it must be by the missionaries disclosing the fact that they have adopted a different cycle from that recognized in the Scriptures. Have they disclosed this fact? We will not say that they have not. We will no more assert that they have carefully concealed it, as we stand corrected on that point. But we can well conceive, that they would not be at any special pains to make it known, as it would present them in rather an awkward light. And hence, very likely, the chariness of their allusions to the doctrine of a change of the Sabbath, in their publications and preaching.

As to the motives of the missionaries, we have but a few words to say. Justice, however, demands that we say something, especially as we have been charged with great uncharitableness in using such terms as "imposition," "trick," "deceit," &c. Perhaps we did wrong in using terms of such severity. On the whole, we rather regret having employed them, especially as they seem to have conveyed to the sensitive minds of those implicated more than was really intended. We would not unnecessarily wound the feelings of any one, and we are willing to take back the expressions. We would have them bear in mind, however, that if they do not wish to deceive, they would do well not to take a course, the tendency of which is to this result. If they do, and that in repeated instances, they need not be surprised if there are found those who will impute to them the intention, whether we do or not. "Charity thinketh no evil," and we shall endeavor to exercise so much of it as to suppose that there was no deliberate purpose to practice an imposition. That they have been guilty of gross carelessness, we think they will hardly venture to deny. In the communications from our missionaries, touching these points, there is nothing which, in the slightest degree, impugns the motives of others. They have confined themselves to a simple statement facts, and have uniformly spoken of the missionaries of other orders in terms of respect and love. And we may add, that notwithstanding our severity, (and perhaps censurable severity,) in the use of terms, we regard them as brethren. In many respects they are far before us, and we can but rejoice and thank God for the part they have been called to bear in the work of evangelizing the heathen. They are pioneers in the field, and are to be honored as such; we come in at the eleventh hour, conscious of the guilt that justly attaches to us for being so tardy in the great work, and confessing that it does not become us to rebuke our predecessors, in haughtiness of spirit. Nevertheless, we are satisfied that God has a peculiar work for us to do, and the humiliating circumstance of our being late in the field shall not prevent us from doing it.

TRACT OPERATIONS.

The Board of Directors of the American Sabbath Tract Society have long felt the necessity of having in the field an agent who should devote his whole time and energies to the advancement of the tract cause—who should attend all important Conventions upon the subject of the Sabbath, deliver lectures where an interest was known to exist or was likely to be awakened, visit our own churches for the purpose of giving them information of the plans of the Board and receiving their contributions, and employ his spare time in preparing tracts for publication. The only objection to such an agency has been the expense attendant upon it, and the amount of funds it would absorb which might otherwise be expended in multiplying copies of the tracts already stereotyped. Still, in view of all the facts, this plan of operations has seemed to the Board the most feasible. The Society, also, at its last meeting, came to the same conclusion, and passed a resolution instructing the Board to employ such an agent. Accordingly, the Board has made arrangements with Eld. Eli S. Bailey to engage in the agency, and he entered upon his duties with the year 1850. During the present winter, it is expected that he will visit most of the Sabbath-keeping churches in Central and Western New-York. It is hoped, that wherever he may go the brethren will coöperate with him, by advising and providing places in which to lecture, and by arranging with him some plan to secure regular and liberal contributions from the several churches to carry forward the Tract Cause.

There has never been a time, probably, when the encouragements to enlarge our tract operations were greater than at present. In many sections of our own country there is an unusual spirit of inquiry upon the subject of the Sabbath, and our tracts are gratefully received and carefully read. In other countries, also, there is a call for tracts, to which the Board would gladly respond in a much more liberal manner than they have yet been able to do. A tract in French, for distribution in Hayti, has recently been published, and an edition forwarded; besides which the Board has recently made an appropriation for printing other small tracts in that Island. In China, also, the necessity of tracts is becoming every day more apparent, and the Board desire to avail themselves of the facilities which exist for their circulation there. To answer these calls, and supply the demand which exists at home, will require contributions upon a more liberal scale than has yet been adopted. It should be borne in mind, that the Board is only the almoner of the brethren and the churches, and can go no farther than sustained by them. Upon the brethren and churches, therefore, rests the responsibility. It is hoped that they will meet it in such a manner as to secure the approbation of the Lord of the Sabbath.

On behalf of the Board,

SEVENTH-DAY BAPTIST CHAPEL IN SHANGHAI.

As Corresponding Secretary of the Missionary Society, I beg leave to call the attention of the denomination to that portion of Bro. Carpenter's letter, published in the Recorder of Dec. 27, which sets forth the importance of more enlarged operations in Shanghai. He suggests, "that the lot and chapel, together with the ground to set them on, might be obtained for five thousand dollars." This sum would suffice to procure "a good lot and commodious chapel, and good-sized house, all in good style." "If three thousand dollars were expended, a lot could be purchased, and a plain chapel and plain house built, which perhaps would answer the purpose."

It is hoped, that our brethren will see the necessity of bestirring themselves, so that Bro. Carpenter may be authorized to secure the lot at once. One brother has authorized me to say, that he will be one of ten to raise the sum of 500 dollars to purchase the lot, provided it can be obtained for that sum, which Bro. C. thinks probable. The same brother will be one of thirty to raise three thousand dollars to build the chapel. Or, if it is thought best to build on a larger and better scale, he will be one of fifty to raise five thousand dollars. Are there not enough brethren of wealth in the denomination to ensure the success of this plan? I shall be happy to receive communications bearing on this point, and request that they may be made without delay.

Thos. B. Brown, Cor. Sec.

MISSIONARY REPORT.

Having been appointed by the Executive Committee of the Eastern Association to visit some Sabbath-keepers in the State of Maine, I transmit for publication an account of my visit.

In accordance with my appointment, I visited Augusta, the capital of Maine, and called upon Eld. Harvey Hawes, the pastor of a Baptist church in that city, who has been considerably exercised relative to the claims of the seventh day as being the Sabbath. I found him in much perplexity of mind concerning the subject, and ready to aid me in the prosecution of my mission. By his advice, I procured the use of a Public Hall for one evening, (his chapel being previously engaged for that evening,) to deliver a Sabbath lecture. At the appointed hour, I lectured to an attentive audience. At the close of the lecture, I offered tracts to those who might wish them, which were received very readily. This was the evening following the Sabbath. In dismissing the congregation, I gave notice that the lecture would be repeated in the Baptist Chapel on the following evening.

The next day, being first day, by request, I preached in Elder Hawes' pulpit, at 10 A. M. and at 2 P. M., at which time I notified the congregation of my lecture in that place in the evening. Notice of the same had also been given by handbills, which I had posted up through the city.

In the evening, a large assembly convened and listened with apparent interest. Tracts were also freely given, and freely received, and before leaving the house several gentlemen requested that the lectures should be continued. On Sixth-day evening preceding, I had lectured on the east side of the Kennebec River to an attentive audience.

At 3 o'clock on Second-day morning, I left Augusta for Paris, where several Sabbath-keepers reside. At Paris Hill I delivered a lecture in the Baptist meeting-house. In this section are quite a number of Sabbath-keepers, most of whom, if not all, are believers in the near advent of Jesus Christ. They appear to be conscientious in the observance of the seventh day as the Sabbath, for which, as well as for their second advent sentiments, they have suffered much reproach and persecution. Most of them are also of the opinion, that the door of salvation is closed, and therefore they suppose it not their duty to labor for the conversion of sinners. From these brethren in Paris I learned that a goodly number of their advent brethren in various parts were observing the seventh day as the Sabbath. I saw a letter from one of them in Rochester, N. Y., which stated that there quite a number had embraced the seventh day. I also learned, that there were Sabbath-keepers in New Hampshire, and in Middletown, Conn. Although my stay with these friends was short, yet it was a refreshing season to my soul, and I deeply regretted that circumstances compelled me so soon to leave this apparently promising field. But the fatigue of the journey, together with the failure of my voice, rendered it my duty to leave. I had traveled about six hundred miles in eight days, preached two sermons, delivered five Sabbath lectures, held private conversations on the subject with many persons, and distributed a large number of tracts in the cars, steamboats, stages, and in the country adjacent to Augusta.

Before closing, permit me to remark, that in my opinion a wide door of usefulness is open for us in that section. But I am decidedly of the opinion, that the labor should not be transient. In order to accomplish the desired end, the person who goes out to lecture on the subject of the Sabbath should tarry some time in each place he visits. The policy of our opponents is, in many instances, to keep still, and take no notice of our efforts. But let the lecturer plant himself in a place, procure a lecture room, post up his placards, begin to lecture, and keep the subject before the people evening after evening until an interest is awakened which will lead to discussion. The congregation may be small at first, but it will increase, and soon Diana will be in danger, and although a tumult equal to that at Ephesus be the result, he may thank God and take courage. Could we but find the man, and furnish the means, much good might be done. It needs a man who can devote himself to that particular subject, for the various reasons assigned for keeping Sunday, all of which have to be met, are legion. Opposition the most determined must he encounter who engages in such a labor. His reception will many times be cold, but he must warm himself with a coal from off the altar of divine truth. To accomplish much, we ought to keep a man in the field continually, with a sufficiency of means to continue the siege until the enemy surrenders.

SABBATH LEGISLATION IN VIRGINIA.

So many strange and anomalous things are daily occurring in the religious world, that we have almost ceased to wonder at any thing, however unreasonable, which turns up in that department of observation and interest. Still we cannot wholly suppress or conceal our astonishment, at the pertinacity with which some of the friends of what is called the "Christian Sabbath" insist upon applying the legislative enactments which guard that day to those who observe the Bible Sabbath. One would suppose, that in this land of boasted religious freedom and equality—especially among professing disciples of Jesus Christ—it would be difficult to find persons so lost to all sense of justice as to advocate a compulsory observance of Sunday by persons who conscientiously observe the seventh day. But it seems that there are such; and a circumstance recently occurred in the Legislature of Virginia to bring some of them out, although they were not able to carry their point. For a long time the following law relative to the observance of Sunday has been in force in that State:—

Sec. 16. "If a free person, on a Sabbath day, be found laboring at any trade or calling, or employ his apprentices, servants, or slaves, in labor or other business, except in household or other work of necessity or charity, he shall forfeit two dollars for each offense; every day any servant, apprentice, or slave is so employed, constituting a distinct offense.

Sec. 17. "If a free person willfully interrupt or disturb any assembly met for the worship of God, he shall be confined in jail, not more than six months, and fined not exceeding one hundred dollars, and a justice may put him under restraint during religious worship, and bind him for not more than one year to be of good behavior.

"No forfeiture shall be incurred under the preceding section, for the transportation on Sunday of the mail, or of passengers and their baggage."

While the Legislature was engaged in revising the Code of Virginia, this item came up, and a proposition was submitted, and advocated by Mr. Mayo and others, to amend by adding the following just and reasonable paragraph:—

"And the said forfeiture shall not be incurred by any person who conscientiously believes that the seventh day of the week ought to be observed as a Sabbath, and actually refrains from all secular business and labor on that day, provided he does not compel a slave, apprentice, or servant not of his belief to do secular work or business on Sunday, and does not on that day disturb any other person."

The House of Delegates cheerfully adopted the amendment. But when it came before the Senate, a motion was made to strike out, which was advocated by Messrs. Thompson and Witcher, and opposed by Messrs. Stanard, Barbee, and Carlyle. In remarking upon the subject, "Mr. Barbee expressed his surprise that the proposition to strike out should emanate from the Senator from Amherst, who had on all occasions manifested so much regard for the institutions of our holy religion. Mr. B. did not represent Israelites or Seventh-day Baptists; he did not know of one in his district; but as an individual, and as a Senator, he would enter his solemn protest against this mode of legal proscription—denying to individuals or sects the enjoyment of their religion. The same Bible which taught Christians to observe the Christian Sabbath, also taught Jews to observe the seventh day. Religious sects, divines, and commentators, differed in giving interpretations to the language of the Holy Book; the benign laws of our country tolerated those differences; and he could not see the propriety in denying to those who rest from their labor on the seventh day, the right to recgnize that day as of divine authority. He had witnessed with pleasure and astonishment the great srcrifice of pecuniary interest on the part of Jews residing in our cities, in the observance of that day. In doing so, they were compelled, either from choice or from the force of public opinion, to observe also the Christian Sabbath. He thought they could not be induced to submit, with such calm resignation, to this sacrifice of worldly interest, if it was not the result of an overwhelming sense of moral and religious obligation."

The motion to strike out was lost, as it ought to have been, and the amendment is now a part of the law of the State. In commenting upon the happy issue of the matter, the editor of "The Occident and American Jewish Advocate," says:—

"We rejoice at this enlightened legislation, not that we wish the Jews to open their shops in large Christian communities, and invite persons to come and deal with them in violation of their principles; but we wish them to be at liberty to act their pleasure, to open or close their places of business as they may see fit, and not to have their respecting public opinion made a question for criminal inquiry. It is one thing to abstain from complaisance to public opinion, but quite another to act in this way from compulsion. We should never complain were all the Jews to resolve never to work on Sunday or any other day of the week; but we shall always object to its being demanded of them by the Legislature or the courts; we will resist tyranny in any shape, even that of opinion, for this is the manner in which all obnoxious measures are forced upon the public in republican countries; wherefore it behooves every one to see that his ideas or particular views are not exposed to public censure, through which means he will be more injured, if he has any self-respect, than by the imposition of a fine, or even a temporary imprisonment. Now, as Jews, and being in a large minority, it is our especial business to keep public opinion in our favor, and to see at the same time that it becomes not our tyrant, before whom we have to pray with bended knees. We therefore repeat, that we rejoice at this first success of an appeal for justice to one State Legislature, and hope to be able to announce a similar result in all other parts of the Union; and sure we are, that agitation will be carried forward, nay, there too where Jews have no influence as yet, even in New England, till such a thing as a compulsory Sunday law shall not exist in the whole country."

NEW YORK LEGISLATURE.

The Legislature of New York met at Albany on the 1st of January. The Senate organized by electing Wm. H. Bogart, of Cayuga Co., Clerk; Geo. W. Bull, of Buffalo, Sergeant-at-Arms; R. Vanvalkenburg, of Albany, Door-Keeper; G. A. Loomis, of New York, Assistant Door-Keeper. The Assembly elected Noble S. Elderkin, Speaker; James L. Rose, Clerk; Samuel Reynolds, of Ulster Co., Sergeant-at-Arms; James B. Anderson, of Monroe, Door-keeper; Matthew Higgins, Assistant, and Thos. Hallenbeck, second Assistant.

On the 2d of January, the Governor's Message was delivered. Its length is a sufficient reason for our not publishing it entire. Its represents the financial condition of the State as very prosperous—the public debt being twenty-five millions of dollars, while the productive public works are worth not less than fifty millions. The receipts from canal tolls, during the past year, were about $525,000 more than in the preceding year, while the expense of collection, superintendence and repairs was $170,000 less than the preceding year. The public money paid to common school districts last year was $849,710, in addition to which the districts raised $489,996. Hereafter the Common Schools are to be free to all persons over five and under twenty-one years of age. The Governor recommends the restoration of the office of County Superintendent of Common Schools; also the establishment of Tribunals of Conciliation. The condition of the State Lunatic Asylum, and of the Institutions for the Blind and the Deaf and Dumb, is very encouraging. In the former institution, the receipts for boarding patients have been adequate to defray all ordinary expenses for the year; number of patients since it was opened 2,376, of whom 1,017 have left cured. The number of Idiots in the State is said to be 1,620, and it is reccommended that the Legislature make some provision for their education, as it has done for the deaf, dumb, and blind. A Homestead Exemption Act is suggested and advocated. The Message closes with a disquisition on the subject of Slavery and Slavery extension, which harmonizes in all respects with the previous declarations of the State of New York, that she regards Slavery as a moral, a social, and a political evil.

LATE AND INTERESTING FROM LIBERIA.—The Colonization Society's Packet arrived at Baltimore last week, with late and interesting intelligence from Liberia. We clip the following from a published letter of Gov. Roberts, dated Monrovia, Nov. 3, 1849:—

"I have the satisfaction to inform you, that our efforts during the past year, for the suppresion of the Slave Trade, have been signally blessed. We have partially extirpated the traffic from all the territories between Cape Mount and Cape Palmas. In Gallinas, the Slave Trade is almost annihilated, and we hope in a few months to be able to announce that it is driven from the whole windward coast; to effect which, we are extending our influence as rapidly as possible over all the tribes within our reach, and exerting ourselves to bring within the pale of our political jurisdiction all the Territories along the coast where the slave trade still lingers.

"During the last five or six weeks an extensive revival of religion has been going on here. Scores have been converted from the error of their way, and have connected themselves with the Christian church. It is indeed encouraging to witness the conversion of so many natives, who are embracing the Christian religion. God is good, and his ways are past finding out. The heathen world must be converted, and Africa is now literally stretching forth her hands unto God."

MARRIAGE OF A MISSIONARY.—Rev. Issachar J. Roberts, who has been for more than thirteen years a missionary in China, was married to Miss Virginia Young, by Rev. W. C. Buck, in Louisville, Ky., on the 7th of December. After a brief visit to their friends, they will repair to New York to take ship for China. They will labor under the appointment of the Foreign Mission Beard of the Southern Baptist Convention.

The stock of Bibles in the depository of the American Bible Society, in Nassau-st., has not been so reduced for twenty-five years past as at present. The means are not furnished to enable the Society to keep pace with the increasing demand.

General Intelligence.

DOINGS IN CONGRESS LAST WEEK.

In Senate. SECOND-DAY, Dec. 31.

Mr. Webster presented numerous memerials of merchants and others of Massachusetts, asking the abolition of the "spirit ration" and flogging in the Navy, and took the opportunity to say, that in his opinion, the time had arrived when Congress should pass a law in conformity with the prayer of the petitioners.

Mr. Seward presented similar petitions from merchants of Baltimore, and expressed his concurrence in the views of the Senator from Massachusetts. In his opinion the use of intoxicating liquors, and infliction of corporeal punishment, were calculated to degrade the man, and could produce no good results.

Mr. Underwood presented a memorial from citizens of Kentucky, claiming to be the legitimate successors of Joseph Smith, the Mormon Prophet, objecting to the establishment of a Government for Deseret, and charging the people of the City of the Salt Lake with treasonable designs, in having, before their removal to Illinois, taken a secret oath to avenge the death of Joseph Smith upon the nation, and to pursue that design until it shall be accomplished, even to the end of time. Referred to the Committee on Territories.

Mr. Downs submitted a resolution calling upon the President for all papers relative to the abduction of Rey from New Orleans.

A bill granting the franking privilege to the widow of the late President Polk, having been received from the House, was taken up by unanimous consent, and passed.

Mr. Douglass introduced a Resolution of inquiry into the expediency of making appropriations for the extinguishment of the Indian title to the Indian lands this side of the Sierre Navada Mountain, and the expediency of setting apart a portion of the territory of the United States for the permanent location and protection of the various Indian tribes.

Adjourned to Fifth-day.

House of Representatives.

The Speaker announced the Standing Committees, which are quite as good as were expected, although, of course, slave-holding interests were consulted to a considerable extent in the formation of the Committees on the District of Columbia, on the Territories, and on the Judiciary.

A large number of petitions were presented, asking for a reduction of postage; for the removal of obstructions at Hurlgate; for indemnity for French spoliations; to abolish spirits and flogging in the Navy; for a Railroad to the Pacific, &c.

Mr. Stanton of Ky. presented a memorial from Covington, in that State, protesting against a Government for Deseret, and charging treasonable designs against the United States. Referred to Committee on Territories.

Mr. Thomson of Tennessee, introduced a bill granting the franking privilege to Sarah Polk, wife of the ex-President—passed forthwith.

Mr. Stanton of Tenesee, and others, presented memorials against the employment of Chaplains in the Army and Navy, and Congress. Referred to the Judiciary Committee.

Mr. Mann, of Pennsylvania, offered a resolution, instructing the Committee on Naval Affairs to inquire into the expediency of reporting a bill to abolish flogging in the navy, and substituting other punishments therefor. A debate arising, it was laid over.

Mr. Root offered a resolution that the Committee on Territories be instructed to report to the House a bill or bills providing Territorial Government for all that part of the territory ceded to the United States by the Treaty with Mexico, lying eastward of Sierra Navada Mountains, and prohibiting Slavery therein.

Adjourned to Fifth-day.

In Senate. FIFTH-DAY, Jun. 3.

Mr. Davis, of Miss., introduced a bill providing for the establishment of a retiring list for disabled officers of the army.

Mr. Jones introduced a bill, granting a quantity of land to the State of Iowa, to aid the construction of a railroad from Dubuque to Keokuk.

Mr. Douglass introduced a bill, granting the right of way, and a donation of public lands, to aid in the construction of the Central Railroad.

Mr. Atchison introduced a similar bill in behalf of a Railroad from Hannibal to St. Josephs, Mo. Also presented numerous memorials and resolutions of the Legislature of Missouri on various subjects. Also the resolutions of said Legislature on the subject of Slavery, and instructing their Senators to vote against the adoption of the Wilmot Proviso principle, which were read.

Mr. Turney presented a memorial from citizens of Tennesee, objecting to the employment of Chaplains by Congress, which was read.

House of Representatives.

The order of the day being to elect the remaining officers, the House proceeded to ballot for Clerk, in which interesting exercise the whole day was spent without progress. J. W. Forney, (whig,) of Philadelphia, and J. P. Campbell, (democrat,) of Tennessee, were the principal candidates.

In Senate. SIXTH-DAY, Jan. 4.

Mr. Mason introduced a bill to provide for the more effectual execution of the clause of the Constitution relative to the recapture of fugitive slaves. Referred to Judiciary Committee.

Mr. Dickinson introduced a bill to establish a Branch Mint in New-York.

A resolution introduced by Mr. Cass, to inquire into the expediency of suspending diplomatic relations with Austria, was then taken up, and advocated by that gentleman in a lengthy speech. After remarks from several individuals as to the disposition which should be made of it, the consideration of the subject was postponed to Second-day, of the present week, to which time the Senate adjourned.

House of Representatives.

The election of officers was the first business in order, but on motion it was postponed till Second-day on account of the absence of several members.

The question then arose, whether petitions could be presented in open House—the first thirty days of the session having expired. The speaker decided that they could not, and after a good deal of delay, a vote was taken, sustaining the decision.

Adjourned till Second-day.

SHIP BURNT AT SEA.

The splendid new ship Caleb Grimshaw, of 987 tons burden, was burnt at sea about the middle of November. She was valued at $80,000, and had on board a cargo worth $200,000. The following account of the matter is given by Capt. Hoxie, in a letter to the owners, dated Harbor of Fayal, Nov. 24th, 1849:—

"The fire was discovered on the 12th of Nov., at 3 o'clock P. M., the weather being fine, and the wind light from the eastward, with royals and studding-sails set for the first time on the passage. The engine was at work in two minutes, and the 'tween decks were flooded with water. Satisfied there was no fire there, raised one of the fore hatches, and saw the fire abaft of the chain lockers, on both sides. As no human being could breathe between decks, the hose was pointed down the hatch and a constant stream thrown down, together with the use of fire buckets, &c., until there was five feet of water in the hold. Steam began to generate, and the heat grew more intense. Continued the pump and buckets until there was 9½ feet in the hold, which I think was the means of preserving the ship as long as she was.

"After having the boats astern in tow for five days and nights, we espied a sail, which proved to be the British bark Sarah, of Yarmouth, N. S., from London, in ballast, bound to St. Johns, N. B., Capt. David Cook, (God bless him,) with a heart as big as Nelson's monument, and that too in the right place. As soon as he discovered our signal of distress, he wore ship, took in top-gallant sails and courses, double reefed his topsails, and made ready for any emergency. The wind came on to blow, and he was not able to get any more than were in the launch and two small boats.

"That night it blew hard in squalls, but he was enabled to keep in sight of the ship. The wind moderated, and he was enabled to get on board the bark 163 passengers. Night setting in and the wind increasing, was obliged to hoist the boats and lie to until daylight. Next day, nothing done, it blowing too much sea on to lower a boat. The next day got 7 volunteers among the crew to go with the boat and relieve those who were left on board, as there was no water or provision that could be got on board without raising the hatches. The crew reported that the main mast had settled down a foot or more, and that the upper deck worked each way 6 inches. We that day got to leeward of Flores and into smooth water, and during the night got on board all the remaining passengers, some having left on a raft the second day of the fire, say about 60. The captain sticking closer than a brother, for this is his eighth day, and acting under the influence of a Divine Providence, he has been instrumental in rescuing from a watery grave 399 souls. The Lord be praised. As soon as the hatches were lifted she was in a blaze instantaneously."

SEARCH FOR SIR JOHN FRANKLIN.—The Arctic officers have been summoned to the British Admiralty, to give counsel as to the course to pursue with reference to the fate of Sir John Franklin. Sir John Richardson expressed strong grounds of hope, that the missing Expedition may be shut up under circumstances which are compatible with its re-appearance. According to him, the lands in the neighborhood of which the lost Expedition should most probably be looked for, abound in animals which might supply the failing stores on board of the ships; and he thinks that should Sir John Franklin's provisions become so far reduced as to be inadequate, with this aid, to a winter's consumption, it is not likely that he would remain longer by his ships, but rather, in one body or in several, with boats cut down so as to be light enough to drag over the ice, or built expressly for that purpose, would endeavor to make their way eastward to Lancaster Sound, or southward to the main land, according to the longitude in which the ships were arrested. Great stress is laid on the fact that no trace of wreck, or of any misfortune to the Expedition, is found on any part of the path along which they must have passed. The Enterprise and Investigator are to be immediately equipped and dispatched at once to the Sandwich Islands, there to await further orders. From this it will be seen that the route by Behring's Straits is to be explored; and the westward coast of Bank's and Parry's Islands will be carefully examined.

PERSONAL LIABILITY OF BANK STOCKHOLDERS.—In the State of New York, on the 1st of January, the "Personal Liability" clause went into operation. It provides that "the stockholders in every corporation and joint-stock association for banking purposes, issuing bank notes, or any kind of paper credits to circulate as money, shall be individually responsible to the amount of their respective share or shares of stock in any such corporation or association, for all its debts and liabilities of every kind, contracted after the first day of January, one thousand eight hundred and fifty. This applies to all the banks of issue in the State. In case of insolvency, bill holders have preference over all other creditors.

JUNCTION OF THE TWO OCEANS.—Among the passengers who sailed by the last steamer for Chagres, were some enterprising steamship men, who have chartered the steamer Orus, at Chagres, for the purpose of going up the San Juan River to Lake Nicaragua, and thence to Lake Leon, with the view of exploring those waters, and if practicable steam navigation be discovered to the head of Lake Leon, to survey a communication thence to the Pacific, a distance of only 29 miles, which, it is believed, could be opened with comparative ease.

MORTALITY IN NEW-YORK IN 1849.—It appears from the records of the City Inspector, that the number of deaths in New-York City last year, was 23,372. In 1848, 14,618. Increase, 7,754, or nearly one hal—which is chiefly attributable to the prevalence of cholera. The places of nativity of the larger classes of the deceased are as follows: United States, 13,000; Ireland, 5,063; Germany, 1,562. Of the whole number, 11,736 males, and 10,636 females. Adults, 11,502; Children, 10,870. Whole number of deaths by cholera, 5,072.

FROM AN OVERLAND EMIGRANT.—The Cleveland Herald has a letter from Dr. Allarat, an overland emigrant to California, dated at Johnston's Station, August 21, giving an account of the journey:—

The excitement of killing a few antelopes and buffaloes on the route was more than counterbalanced by terrible storms, horrible roads, dangerous fords, cold winds, desert sands, and short allowance of provisions for men, and grass for animals. The worst of the journey was from the sink of the Humboldt river across the desert, and here they found between 50 and 60 dead animals by the side of the road, though there were only 30 ox wagons before them over the desert. After leaving Fort Laramie, at the Black Hills, the party had to lighten their loads, by throwing away provisions, medicines, trunks, &c.

Of mining Dr. A writes: "I can say but little yet. I have only seen three men at work in the mountains, which looked to me rather hard. I should rather be shut up in a penitentiary than work in that way. The valley was so narrow that you could only see the sun for six hours a day. They were making from half to an ounce of gold a day; this seems to be the average, probably a little more. One dollar here is worth about as much as half a dime in the States."

REMARKABLE ESCAPE OF A SLAVE.—We understand, says the Boston Post of Dec. 4, that a vessel has arrived here from Washington, N. C., bringing a yellow girl belonging to George W. Davis, of that city. She was secreted on beard by the mate. A bed was thrown into the hold for her to lie upon, and concealed by piling wood around it. The authorities at Wilmington, almost knowing her to be on board, made repeated searches, and smoked the vessel several times, after loudly announcing that they would smother her if she did not show herself. Upon coming out of the river the vessel was boarded by the posse for the last time, and had the girl been found the captain would have been in great peril, notwithstanding he knew nothing of the runaway. During the voyage the girl was fed in the watches, without the knowledge of the master.

THE EMBLEM OF CALIFORNIA.—The official seal of the state of California has upon its face a grizzly bear devouring a bunch of grapes. Elihu Burritt thinks that the knowing ones who designed it, intended that the bear should be an emblem of the greediness which has led to the settlement of the country, while the crushed grapes in Bruin's jaw represent the manner in which the mass of the settlers have been taken in.

A DEFAULTER.—Prosper M. Wetmore, late Navy Agent at New York, proves to be a defaulter to the Government. The amount is variously stated at from fifty to five hundred thousand dollars. He was removed about seven months ago, since which time the accounting officers have not been able to obtain a settlement. Accordingly his account has been made out, and suit commenced.

SUMMARY.

The Supreme Court of Pennsylvania has decided recently, that a husband has no claim to the possession of any property owned by his wife previous to marriage, or which may accrue to her after marriage; and that even the consent of the wife, that her husband should have possession of her property, is of no avail while the wife is a minor. This decision is based on the law of 1848, which has wrought a radical change in the condition of married females.

On Wednesday morning, Jan. 2, the dwelling-house of Mr. Alonzo Gibson, in Ringe village, N. H., was discovered to be on fire. Mr. Gibson's house and barn, together with the dwelling-house, barn, and carpenter's shop of Mr. Beman, and the house of Miss Wetherbee, were destroyed. Mr. Gibson, the owner of the house in which the fire originated, in endeavoring to save some property, perished in the flames.

On the 6th of Decemder last the Corporation of London appointed a committee "to consider the propriety of the Corporation erecting baths and wash-houses within the city for the use and convenience of the laboring classes resident therein." As this vote passed by a majority of 3 to 1 there is no doubt that the thing contemplated by it will be done.

The coins struck since Solouque was declared Emperor of Hayti are of the same nominal value as those of France. Each piece represents on one side the new Emperor, in an imperial costume like that of Napoleon on the day of his coronation, and on the other side the inscription of "Faustin I., Emperor of Hayti." Round the edge are the words, "God protects my people."

On the evening of Jan. 3, as Mr. Warren, the depot master at West Townsend, on the Fitchburg railroad, was sitting in his office, two men in disguise entered, and, having gagged him, robbed him of $400. They then bound him hand and foot and carried him to a freight car, where they hung him up by the heels, locked the door, and absconded. In this condition he was found about one hour afterwards, nearly dead.

England is the most flesh-consuming country in Europe, while its mortality is the smallest; the duration of life being about a third longer than in Italy, where maccaroni and other farinaceous substances form the staple diet, and where milk, partly from deficiency of pasture, and partly from prejudice, is little used.

Letters from California state that Randolph Barnes, a merchant, formerly of New Haven, had died in California. He was a member of the Montague (Conn.) Company, more than a quarter of whom now lie buried in the great Dorado, not a year having elapsed since their departure from New-England.

The article in the Constitution of the Free State of California, providing for common schools, provides also for the establishment of a University, as a part of the system of State education. All honor to California!

A letter from a Boston gentleman at Panama, dated Dec. 1, says that a nephew of Hon. John C. Park, of Boston, was buried at that place the day before.

The second track on the Syracuse and Utica Railroad, with the heavy rail, is completed. The Syracuse Star states that Mr. Norris, of Schenectady, is constructing a locomotive for this road, with driving wheels over seven feet high, with which he guaranties to run the road, a distance of 53 miles, with a train of passenger cars, in an hour, making one stop during the trip.

Suffield, Conn., has been the birth place of 4 Congressmen, 2 governors of Vermont, 2 governors of Pennsylvania, 1 governor of Connecticut, 1 governor of Ohio, 2 postmasters general, 2 judges of the superior court of Ohio, 1 judge of the supreme court of Vermont, 1 general in the French war, 1 judge of the county court.

Miss Dix states in a memorial to Congress, that in the New England States, the proportion of the insane to the whole population is about 1 in 600; that in the Middle States it is 1 in 1300. The worst State is Rhode Island, where there is 1 to every 503; and the best, South Carolina, where there is 1 to every 6058.

Traders arrived at Port Independence mention that three Americans, namely Mr. Callaway, Benj. Banaman and wife, were murdered by the Apache Indians. Three Germans were also killed, and a Mrs. White and daughter carried into captivity. The Governor of Santa Fe had sent to ransom them.

The steamers America and Viola came into collision a few days since, a short distance below Donaldsville, on the Mississippi, by which the latter was so badly damaged that she sunk almost immediately after. The America succeeded in saving 21 of her passengers.

Count Arthur de Montesquieu, the elder brother of the two unfortunate young men confined in jail at St. Louis, charged with the murder of Jones and Barnum, has arrived in St. L. and had an interview with the prisoners. He expresses the opinion that the oldest one is still insane.

The Guide states that the town of Chelsea received an insane pauper from Charlestown in July, 1822. After supporting her in their almshouse twenty-seven years, the authorities discovered that her settlement was in Charlestown, and sent her there a week or two since.

Mr. Walsh, in one of his late letters from Paris, says: "A sensation, and quite a flattering one, has been produced on both sides of the Channel, by the proceedings of the American Convention for the Atlantic and Pacific Railroad. Europe begins to believe that nothing is impossible for the American people."

The following was for some time a puzzle to the best readers in the London Post Office:—"Serum Fridavi, Londres." But reading the address aloud, with the French as well as the English sound of the vowels, the problem was discovered to be, "Sir Humphrey Davy, London.

Iowa State is receiving, among the thousands flocking to it, a number of the representatives of the Huguenots of South Carolina. Of these, several families are of the Legare branch.

The Governor of California under the new Constitution, will receive $10,000 a year. Members of the Legislature $26 per day, and $16 for 20 miles travel. Lieut. Governor $32 a day for actual service.

Rev. George Johnson, of the Protestant Episcopal Church at Delaware, Ohio, recently came to his death by the accidental discharge of his own gun.

The new Seventh-day Baptist meeting-house at Nile, Allegany Co., N. Y., will be dedicated on Fifth-day, January 17th, 1850, at 11 o'clock A. M.

New York State Agricultural Society.

The Annual Meeting of the New York State Agricultural Society is to be held at Albany on the third Wednesday of January. In addition to the awarding of premiums on essays, farms, grain and root crops, butter and cheese, an exhibition of winter fruits will be had at the Agricultural Rooms. It is desired that there should be an extensive competition for the premiums of the Society at the Annual Meeting, as well as a large attendance of practical farmers from every section of the State.

Mail Line between Boston and New York.

REGULAR MAIL LINE BETWEEN BOSTON AND NEW YORK via Stonington and Providence. Inland route, without ferry, change of cars or baggage! The new steamer C. VANDERBILT, Capt. Joel Stone, and COMMODORE, Capt. William H. Frazee, in connection with the Stonington and Providence and Boston and Providence Railroads, leaving New York daily, Sundays excepted, from Pier No. 2 North River, at 4 o'clock P. M., and Stonington at 8 o'clock P. M. or upon the arrival of the mail train from Boston. These steamers were built expressly for the route, and are in every respect particularly adapted to the navigation of Long Island Sound. The accommodations for passengers are commodious and comfortable—the officers capable and experienced. The route being the shortest and most direct between Boston and New York, passengers are enabled to arrive in ample time for the morning lines of steamboats and railroads running to various points from those cities. The C. VANDERBILT will leave New York Tuesday, Thursday, and Saturday. Leave Stonington Monday, Wednesday, and Friday. The COMMODORE will leave New York Monday, Wednesday, and Friday. Leave Stonington Tuesday, Thursday, and Saturday. For passage, berths, state-rooms or freight, application may be made to the agents on the wharf, and at the office, 10 Battery-place.

Sabbath Tracts.

The American Sabbath Tract Society publishes the following tracts, which are for sale at its Depository, No. 9 Spruce-st., N. Y., viz:—

No. 1—Reasons for introducing the Sabbath of the Fourth Commandment to the consideration of the Christian Public. 28 pp.

No. 2—Moral Nature and Scriptural Observance of the Sabbath. 52 pp.

No. 3—Authority for the Change of the Day of the Sabbath. 28 pp.

No. 4—The Sabbath and Lord's Day—A History of their Observance in the Christian Church. 52 pp.

No. 5—A Christian Caveat to the Old and New Sabbatarians. 4 pp.

No. 6—Twenty Reasons for keeping holy, in each week, the Seventh Day instead of the First Day. 4 pp.

No. 7—Thirty-six Plain Questions, presenting the main points in the Controversy; A Dialogue between a Minister of the Gospel and a Sabbatarian; Counterfeit Coin. 8 pp.

No. 8—The Sabbath Controversy—The True Issue. 4 pp.

No. 9—The Fourth Commandment—False Exposition. 4 pp.

No. 10—The True Sabbath Embraced and Observed. 16 pp.

No. 11—Religious Liberty Endangered by Legislative Enactments. 16 pp.

No. 12—Misuse of the Term Sabbath. 8 pp.

The Society has also published the following works, to which attention is invited:—

A Defense of the Sabbath, in reply to Ward on the Fourth Commandment. By George Carlow. First printed in London, in 1724; reprinted at Stonington, Ct., in 1802; now republished in a revised form. 168 pages.

The Royal Law Contended for. By Edward Stennet. First printed in London, in 1658. 60 pp.

An Appeal for the Restoration of the Lord's Sabbath, in an Address to the Baptists from the Seventh-day Baptist General Conference. 24 pp.

Vindication of the True Sabbath, by J. W. Morton, late Missionary of the Reformed Presbyterian Church. 64 pp.

These tracts will be furnished to those wishing them for distribution or sale, at the rate of 15 pages for one cent. Persons desiring them can have them forwarded by mail or otherwise, on sending their address, with a remittance, to GEORGE B. UTTER, Corresponding Secretary of the American Sabbath Tract Society, No. 9 Spruce-st., New York.

Scientific and Practical Agriculture.

HENRY STEPHENS, F. R. S. E., of Edinburgh, the celebrated author of the "BOOK OF THE FARM," and PROF. NORTON, of Yale College, New Haven, are preparing for the Press, a Book to be entitled, AGRICULTURE—SCIENTIFIC AND PRACTICAL.

It will embrace every subject of importance connected with Agriculture in all its various branches, both Theoretical and Practical. "Science, in as far as it has, up to the present time, been made available to Practice by Experiment, will be treated in its relation to every operation as it occurs in the course of the seasons." The work will be arranged under four distinct heads, representing the seasons, beginning with Winter and ending with Autumn. The following are among the subjects to be treated of in the first and second seasons, including the Introductory, viz:

INITIATION.—On the best of the existing Methods for acquiring a thorough knowledge of Practical Husbandry; the Difficulties to be encountered in learning practical husbandry, and on the Means of overcoming them; the different kinds of farming; the persons required to conduct and execute the labor of the farm; the branches of science most applicable to Agriculture; the Institutions of Education best suited to Agricultural science; the evils attending the neglect of landowners and others to learn Practical Agriculture; on observing the details and recording the facts of farming by the Agricultural student.

PRACTICE—WINTER.—On the treatment of farm-horses in Winter; the treatment of the farmer's saddle and harness horse in Winter; the fattening of swine; the treatment of fowls; the rationale of the feeding of animals; on the accommodation of the grain crops in the steading; threshing and winnowing of grain; on the forming of dunghills and composts in Winter; on the construction of liquid-manure tanks and carts; sea-weed as manure; on gaulting or claying the soil.

PRACTICE—SPRING.—Summary of the field operations, and of the weather in Spring; on the advantages of having field-work always in a state of forwardness; on the calving of cows; the milking of cows; the rearing of calves. On the sowing of spring wheat; on drilling up the land; on the sowing of beans, and peas, and tares. On the transplanting of turnip bulbs for producing seed. On the rolling of land. On the sowing of oats, lucerne, and sainfoin. On the lambing of ewes. On cross-ploughing land, and ribbing land for the seed-furrow. On the sowing of grass-seeds and barley. On the turning of dunghills. On the planting of potatoes. On paring and baring the surface. On the farrowing of sows; the hatching of fowls, &c.

The Work will also embrace many important operations not included in the ordinary routine of farming, such as "Judging of Land," "Stocking of a Farm," "Improvement of the Soil," &c., &c.

The contributions by Prof. Norton will add greatly to the value of the book, by adapting it to the Soil, Climate, Growth, &c., of our own Country; and the united labors of two such distinguished men will make this work one of the most complete and valuable to the American farmer, ever issued from the press.

The work will be comprised in about 18 Nos. of 80 pages each, with a steel engraving in every number; besides which it will contain more than 600 wood engravings, in the highest style of the art. It will be handsomely printed on fine paper, and sold at 25 cents a number, or $4 in advance for the eighteen numbers.

The First Number will be issued in the month of January, and the work will be completed in about one year. The first volume, written by Mr. Stephens, in already published in Edinburgh, and the Americans edition will be printed from the stereotype plates imported for that purpose.

Booksellers and Dealers in Periodicals will be furnished on liberal terms.

Postmasters and others remitting the money for three copies at the above prices, will receive a fourth copy gratis. Remittances will be at the risk of the Publishers, if the mailing of the money is proved—otherwise at the risk of the parties remitting. A postmaster's certificate of the money being duly mailed is always satisfactory evidence to the Publishers.

Miscellaneous.

A SINGULAR CASE.

The Medical Journal mentions an extraordinary case of stricture of the œsophagus. It exists in a shoemaker of Boston, who, says the Journal, actually keeps himself alive by the habitual practice of an operation that no surgeon in New England would dare to perform in the rough manner pursued by this unfortunate sufferer. Here is an account of the case :—

"He is a small man, rising of 70. For many years he had extreme difficulty in swallowing food. Deglutition finally became so painful that he took advice at the Massachusetts General Hospital, and, according to his own representation, an instrument was introduced down his throat. The relief was not entirely satisfactory; but discovering that the principle was right, since there was evidently a narrowing in the canal, the idea was conceived of practicing upon himself. At the extremity of a rattan, perhaps a yard in length, and a quarter of an inch in diameter, he wound a mass of hemp, which was confined by twine.

A rough mass, six inches long on the stick, and an inch thick at the lower extremity, was thus made. Having oiled it, the old man fearlessly forces it down through the œsophagus, fairly into the stomach. This he is obliged to do frequently, otherwise the strictures—for there are two, one just at the top of the sternum, and the other a little above the cardiac orifice—become so closed that fluids cannot pass at all. Sometimes, after swallowing a draught of water, it is stopped at the lower constriction. To relieve himself under such a dilemma, he thrusts down a long feather, which produces nausea, and, by the sympathy of the gastric apparatus, vomition is induced, and the confined fluid, according to his account, forced back. Sometimes food is checked in its descent, at the same point, and ejected by mechanical assistance.

On Tuesday of last week, after giving us a minute history of his condition, the narrator oiled the monstrous probang, forced it down into the stomach, and brought, back dripping with gastric juice. Not long since, the lower stricture utterly refused to allow the great swab to pass. Recollecting that tobacco was a relaxer, while the rattan was protruding above his teeth, he calmly lighted a pipe, and by taking a few whiffs had the satisfaction of relaxing the muscular grip, and down the mass went, passing the rebellious point into the great membranous receptacle below. On one occassion the probang was coated over with ground mustard, and thrust through the strictures, on the supposition that they required stimulating.

A more singular case, one more truly formidable in character, and managed in the rude, fearless manner here described, cannot be found, it is believed, in the annals of surgery. Under any plan of treatment but his own, this man of ten millions would have been dead years ago, a victim to an incurable malady. With the course he is habitually pursuing, life may be protracted till he is unable to repeat the operation, and then he may die of starvation.

THE CHIPPEWA INDIANS.

'T is sweet to hear the Indians singing their hymns of a Sunday night; their rich, soft voices rising in the still evening air. I have often listened to this little choir praising the Lord's name in the simplicity and fervor of their hearts, and have felt it was a reproach that these poor half-civilized wanderers should alone be found to gather together to give glory to God in the wilderness.

I was much pleased with the simple piety of our friend the hunter Peter's squaw, a stout, swarthy matron, of most amiable expression. We were taking our tea, when she softly opened the door, and looked in; an encouraging smile induced her to enter, and, depositing a brown papoose (Indian for baby or little child) on the ground, she gazed round with curiosity and delight in her eyes. We offered her some tea and bread, motioning to her to take a vacant seat beside the table. She seemed pleased by the invitation, and drawing her little one to her knee, poured some tea into the saucer, and gave it to the child to drink. She ate very moderately, and when she had finished, rose, and wrapping her face in the folds of her blanket, bent down her head on her breast in the attitude of prayer. This little act of devotion was performed without the slightest appearance of pharisaical display, but in singleness and simplicity of heart. She then thanked us with a face beaming with smiles and good-humor; and, taking little Rachel by the hands, threw her over her shoulder with a peculiar sleight that I feared would dislocate the tender thing's arms; but the papoose seemed well satisfied with this mode of treatment.

In long journeys the children are placed in upright baskets of a peculiar form, which are fastened round the necks of the mothers by straps of deer-skins; but the young infant is swathed to a sort of flat cradle, secured with flexible hoops, to prevent it from falling out. To these machines they are strapped, so as to be unable to move a limb. Much finery is often displayed in the outer covering and the bandages that confine the papoose.

There is a sling attached to this cradle, that passes over the squaw's neck, the back of the babe being placed to the back of the mother, and its face outward. The first thing a squaw does on entering a house, is to release herself from her burden, and stick it up against the wall, or chair, chest, or any thing that will support it, where the passive prisoner stands, looking not unlike a mummy in its case.

The squaws are most affectionate to their little ones. Gentleness and good-humor appear distinguishing traits in the tempers of the female Indians; whether this be natural to their characters, the savage state, or the softening effects of Christianity, I cannot determine. Certainly, in no instance does the Christian religion appear more lovely than when, untainted by the doubts and infidelity of modern skeptics, it is displayed in the conduct of the reclaimed Indian, breaking down the strongholds of idolatry and natural evil, and bringing forth the fruits of holiness and morality. They may be said to receive the truths of the Gospel as little children, with simplicity of heart and unclouded faith.

The squaws are very ingenious in many of their handiworks. We find their birch-bark-baskets very convenient for a number of purposes. My bread-basket, knife-tray, sugar-basket, are all of this humble material. When ornamented and wrought in patterns with dyed quills, I can assure you, they are by no means inelegant. They manufacture vessels of birch-bark so well, that they will serve for many useful household purposes, such as holding water, milk, broth, or any other liquid; they are sewn or rather stitched together with the tough roots of the tamarack or larch, or else with strips of cedar bark. They also weave useful sorts of baskets from the inner rind of the bass-wood and white-ash. Some of these baskets, of a coarse kind, are made use of for gathering up potatoes, Indian corn, or turnips; the settlers finding them very good substitutes for the osier-baskets used for such purposes in civilized countries.

The Indians are acquainted with a variety of dyes, with which they stain the more elegant fancy baskets and porcupine quills. Our parlor is ornamented with several pretty specimens of their ingenuity in this way, which answer the purpose of note and letter-cases, flower-stands, and work-baskets.

They appear to value the useful rather more highly than the merely ornamental articles that you may exhibit to them. They are very shrewd and close in all their bargains, and exhibit a surprising degree of caution in their dealings. The men are much less difficult to trade with than the women; they display a singular pertinacity in some instances. If they have fixed their mind on any one article, they will come to you day after day, refusing any other you may offer to their notice. One of the squaws fell in love with a gay chintz dressing-gown belonging to my husband, and though I resolutely refused to part with it, all the squaws in the wigwam by turns came to "look at gown," which they pronounced with their peculiarly plaintive tone of voice; and when I said, "no gown to sell," they uttered a melancholy exclamation of regret, and went away.

They will seldom make any article you want on purpose for you. If you express a desire to have baskets of a particular pattern that they do not happen to have ready made by them, they give you the usual vague reply of "by-and-by." If the goods you offer them in exchange for theirs do not answer their expectations, they give a sullen and dogged look, or reply, "Car, car," (no, no,) or "Carwinni," which is a still more forcible negative. But when the bargain pleases them, they signify their approbation by several affirmative nods of the head, and a note not much unlike a grunt; the ducks, fish, venison, or baskets, are placed beside you, and the articles of exchange transferred to the folds of their capacious blankets, or deposited in a sort of rushen wallet.

The women imitate the dresses of the whites, and are rather skillful in converting their purchases. Many of them can sew very neatly, I often give them bits of silk, and velvet, and braid, for which they appear very thankful. [Diary of an Emigrant's Wife.

THE LONDON NEEDLEWOMEN.

The distressed needlewomen of London have been made the object of a Commission of Inquiry instituted by the Morning Chronicle. Three gentlemen, well known in literature, have examined the state of this unfortunate class, which has so often claimed the sympathies of Englishmen. The result is, that there lives in the Metropolis a body of about 33,000 women, permanently at the starvation point, working at wages of a few pence per day.

The greater portion of these poor creatures, living, as they do, far beyond the social state, resort to prostitution as a means of eking out their miserable subsistence; whenever the pressure threatens their extinction, then they turn into the street, and pauperism runs into inevitable vice. Since the disclosures of the Morning Chronicle, many humane persons have forwarded considerable sums of money to the office of that journal for distribution among the most necessitous objects; and Mr. Sidney Herbert has come forward to found a Society for promoting their emigration.

There is something like half a million of women in excess of men in Great Britain; there is a corresponding excess of males in the British Australian Colonies. The Society above mentioned aims to bring these marriageable parties into contact; and it is hoped, that when once it is in operation, Government will assist it with funds. It costs some £15 to transport a passenger to Australia. Now, if private benevolence raises a sum of £30,000, this will only relieve 2,000 of the sufferers; a mere fraction, whose absence would not be sensible in the metropolis. It would require ten times that amount to lade out the misery to the proper extent; and also to satisfy the wants of the Colonists.

THE WIFE OF A CALIFORNIAN.

Various circumstances peculiar to the California enterprise—the length and perils of the voyage, the multifarious character of the adventurers, the anomalous condition of society there, the uncertain prospect as to individual success at the mines—ranging from great and sudden wealth down to flat disappointment, the conflicting reports that are constantly arriving, render every arrival from that country one of intense interest to the personal friends of the adventurers. A young wife, whose husband sailed from here last February, has been anxiously looking for news of his arrival at San Francisco. Eight months had passed away, and she got no tidings of him, except that he wrote her in April from Rio Janeiro, having put in there for repairs. As she was at the railroad office, to see a friend off in the cars, the other day, a newsboy approached with a bundle of extras. Her eye, always on the look-out, caught the picture of the steamer which headed the paper, as proclaiming some foreign mail arrival. "What ship is that?" she said to me, with a mixture of surprise and eagerness. "It is the Empire City," I replied. She snatched a paper from the boy, and begged me to show her at once the list of arrivals at San Francisco. She ran it half over, and throwing up her hands, exclaimed—"Here it is! Here it is! Bark ——, Captain ——, Aug. 21, 191 days from New York!" Her dear husband had reached his haven, or at least the vessel had in which he sailed. A good providence had been over him—he had been carried safely through the storms of the Atlantic, the perils of the Cape, the worse than "law's delay" the Pacific, and was in port! She fastened her eyes on that little item of commercial news, read and re-read it, and wiped away the mists that gathered before her eyes, and read it again, and twenty times more, as if to assure herself that it was not an illusion. That heaving bosom, the face glowing at one moment and pale at the next, the faltering voice, showed the intensity of her emotion, and the depth of a young wife's devotion. I took the paper from her hand, and folded it up for convenience, but she immediately unfolded it again, and placed her finger on the interesting item, as if there were danger of its escaping from her. Had that paper been filled with accounts of fresh revolutions in Europe, or of the discovery of a continent, it would have been nothing to her. I walked home with her, rung the bell vigorously, as if there were haste and urgency to enter, and as I turned down the steps, I heard her in the hall shouting the news up the stairway to her mother in the parlor above. LOVE AND SUICIDE.

The Philadelphia correspondent of the N. Y. Tribune, under date of Dec. 30, says that on the evening of the 28th, William H. Dickerson, mulatto, aged 35 years, committed suicide by stabbing himself to the heart. The cause of the rash act was love and jealousy. The particulars of the case are as follows: Dickerson has been paying his addresses for the last four years to Miss Abby Moore, a very handsome mulatto girl, residing with her mother at No. 15 Barclay-st. For some time past an unpleasant feeling existed between them, originating out of the fact of a dissimilarity of disposition—Dickerson being of a quiet, domestic nature, while Abby, on the contrary, was very lively, and fond of going out into society. This state of affairs continued until William was informed that if he would not wait on her, as he should, he had better cease his visits, and allow others to come who would. On Friday she wrote the following note:

"Dear William: As I wish to go to the fair to-night, I thought I would let you know, so that you might dress yourself before you come down; but if you do not want to go it will make no matter, I will go with some one else. ABBY."

The letter was addressed "To William H. Dickerson, Locust street, above Tenth, at Mr. Moore's tailor shop."

As William did not present himself at the expected time, Abby left the house in company with a female friend to visit the fair. About 8½ o'clock, and a short time after they had departed, he came, and expressed much astonishment and disappointment at finding she had gone out. He conversed with the girl's mother, saying that she had ceased to love him, that she did love him once, and then commenced crying, throwing himself upon the sofa, in a highly phrenzied state; in an instant he sprang upon his feet, tore open the breast of his coat, and plunged the blade of a dagger into his heart, when he exclaimed to the mother—"Tell Abby that I love her, that I love her better than life, better than my God, better than all my people," and fell to the floor in an insensible state. He did not speak another word, and expired in about half an hour.

When Abby returned to her home, and learned the sad intelligence of the death of her lover, she was very much affected, crying and tearing her hair, and charging upon herself the fault of his untimely death. The scene presented was truly sorrowful; the cries of the girl for the restoration of her William, and her self-criminations, were heart-rending.

WOOL GROWING.

From an article in the Cultivator by Newton Reed.

We follow a mixed husbandry, as the soil is about equally adapted to grain and grass, and yields a better return than by any single branch of farming. The value of improved lands, in good, sized farms, is about fifty dollars per acre. The number of sheep kept on a farm of two hundred acres, is four hundred, besides a team of four oxen, two or three horses, four cows, and a few young cattle. There are usually about forty acres under the plow, and one hundred and sixty in meadow and pasture. What proportion of the farm is devoted to the sheep, cannot be defined, probably not less than one hundred and twenty acres. The quantity of wool produced on an average of these flocks is two pounds and three-quarters per fleece; and the average price per pound, for the last six years, has been forty-seven cents. The surplus sheep sold each year from a flock of four hundred, are not less than one hundred, at the price of a dollar and a quarter per head. This amounts to six hundred and forty-two dollars.

The cost of keeping sheep includes a part of the general expenses of the farm, as fencing, taxes, seed, plaster, manure, &c. Henry Swift, of Poughkeepsie, was accustomed to pay a tenant on one of these farms, some years ago, two hundred dollars a year, for the labor given to four hundred sheep, which included the securing of the hay, winter care, washing and shearing, and all other labor devoted to them.

Now, as to the profits of the business of growing fine wool, it is plain that if it does not yield a large per cent., like other branches of farming, when well done it brings a fair return. There is a general impression among our farmers, that their business does not yield them five per cent. on the capital invested; but I believe it can be demonstrated, that with skillful and prudent management, the farm yields at least six per cent. if the valuation of the land be not too extravagant.

On good land, easily cultivated, the raising of grain is twice as profitable as any branch of grazing. But as there must be manure to keep up the fertility of the soil, it is necessary that a portion of the farm be devoted to stock. Therefore, what seems to be a deficiency in the profits of the grass crop, is made up in the increased production of grain, and thus in a mixed husbandry, the acre of grass is truly as profitable as an acre of wheat.

We prefer fine-wooled sheep to other stock, for several reasons; and the first is that on our dry, arable lands, it is more profitable than making beef, and brings much less care and labor than the dairy. We estimate that it requires as much hay and pasture for eight cows or steers, as for one hundred sheep. Sheep will do as well on straw and other coarse feed, as any stock will, and on poor or dry pasture sheep will do well, while cows or fatting cattle would not do at all. The quantity of hay to one hundred sheep through the winter, does not exceed fifteen tons. It is our opinion, also, that on land suitable for wheat and corn, the manure of sheep is better than the manure of cattle, and on certain cold grass lands as a top dressing. I might add, that there is less fluctuation in the wool market, than in that of beef and the products of the dairy, constituting a more stable and uniform business. And there is less trouble of buying and selling, after the flocks are once established.

CONJUGAL RIGHTS.—A curious case came before the London Exchequer Court recently, in which the Rev. Mr. Connolly brought suit against his wife for restitution of conjugal rights.

The brief facts were, that Mr. and Mrs. Connolly were born of American parents, and married according to the ceremonial of the English Protestant Church of America. Sometime previously to October, 1836, and about four years after such marriage, they determined to become Roman Catholics, and for such purpose proceeded to Rome. Mrs. Connolly joined the Romish Church at New Orleans, on their way; and her husband, on their arrival in Italy, also abjured the Protestant religion, and joined the Roman Catholic Church. Afterwards they returned to America, and entered into a verbal agreement that each should live a life of perfect chastity, which agreement has since been steadfastly adhered to. They again returned to Italy, where Mr. Connolly became a priest of the Romish Church, and Mrs. Connolly entered a covent. Mr. Connolly was afterwards appointed chaplain to the Earl of Shrewsbury, (a Roman Catholic Peer,) upon which, in company with his wife, he came to England, where she entered a convent at Derby. After a lapse of some years, Mr. Connolly left the Church of Rome, and applied to his wife, for the purpose of inducing her to do the same, and return to his roof. This, however, she refused to do, asserting that she could not violate the solemn oath she had taken upon entering the Convent of the Sacred Heart at Rome. Mr. Connolly, therefore, instituted the present suit.

The Court, in view of the importance of the case, took time for reflection, before giving a decision.

MRS. T. J. FARNHAM.—A letter from New York says that Mrs. Farnham, who sailed for San Francisco in the Angelique last Spring, was left behind at Valparaiso under the following circumstances: She had engaged at Valparaiso a Chilian servant, for whom she was told no passport was necessary on leaving the country. As the vessel was about sailing, news was conveyed on shore that this Chilian was on board, and she was informed for the first time that a passport was requisite. She, with the Chilian, left the ship to procure it, when the Captain immediately weighed anchor and set sail without either. On board the Angelique were Mrs. Farnham's two children —from whom she will consequently be separated until her arrival in California, whence she proceeded as soon as possible afterward, by another vessel, receiving meanwhile every kindness which some English and American residents at Valparaiso, who became acquainted with her case, could bestow. The Captain, it seems, had not conducted himself altogether properly during the voyage, and the passengers intended to apply for legal redress on their arrival at San Francisco. Mrs. Farnham taking an active part in the movement, he conceived the plan of leaving her behind to get rid of her evidence in Court. She was left at Valparaiso with only a dollar or two in her pocket, but the parties above mentioned procured for her funds to supply her wants. [Boston Bee.

A NUMEROUS ANCESTRY.—Fowler, the phrenologist, in his work entitled Herditary Descent, gives to every man a numerous ancestry. He says—"Every human being on the face of the globe is compelled, from a demand in nature, to have two parents, four grand parents, eight great grand parents, sixteen ancestors of the fourth generation back, thirty-two of the fifth, two hundred and fifty-six of the eighth, thirty-two thousand seven hundred and sixty-eight of the fifteenth, almost one million and fifty thousand of the twentieth, and nearly one thousand seventy-three million of the thirtieth generation. The whole number of every one's ancestors for fifty generations amounts to two thousand three hundred and sixty-two billion, seven hundred and forty-nine thousand, nine hundered and fourteen million, two hundred and fourteen thousand and forty-six, (2,362,749,914,214,046)—a multitude, verily, which no man can number, no mind conceive! The blood of this vast host is running in the veins of every living mortal, and that reckoning back only fifty generations!"

CLAIRVOYANCE.—Considerable excitement has existed in the village of Niles, Michigan, growing out of the following circumstances: A Mr. Martin, a farmer, residing some distance from Niles, came to that village some two weeks since, with a load of produce, which, having disposed of, his team was found without an owner, and all traces of his whereabouts were lost. Conjectures were afloat respecting his fate. The general opinion at length prevailed, that he had been murdered, robbed, and his body secreted. A clairvoyant was sent for from Cassopolis to ascertain the whereabouts of the missing man. She said he had been murdered, and located the body in the River St. Joseph. Many persons diligently searched the river for the body, and several persons strongly asserted that they had drawn the body in sight, when their hold broke and the body again sank to the bottom. All this contributed to create and keep alive the excitement. But the denouement at length came, in the shape of letters from Mr. Martin, announcing that he was in Vermont, alive and well.

SINGULAR INCIDENT IN A MAD HOUSE.—Some months since, an incident occurred in our City Lunatic Hospital, of a very peculiar character. A mother and daughter both became inmates, and were placed in the same story of the building, where they had access to the same hall. They met, and recognized each other, though one had left the other years ago, in Ireland. Both had crossed the ocean, become residents here, and lost all knowledge of the other's history or fate; and both became bereft of reason, and came upon the public for support, and in a mad house, surrounded by those who were hopelessly insane, the child and parent met, and though reason was dethroned, and each was there with a "mind diseased," yet Nature triumphed over the clouded intellect, and, for a brief moment, the parties talked of the land of their birth, and the time when they separated from each other. This incident is of romantic interest, sufficient to suit the most anxious inquiries after extraordinary adventures. [Boston Herald, Dec. 20.

ASSAY AND COINAGE OF GOLD DUST.—A scientific paper gives the following account of the mode of assaying gold dust in the mint:—The melters take the dust, melt it, and cast it into a bar, when it is weighed accurately, and a piece is cut off for the assayer. He takes it, melts it with twice its weight of silver, and several times its weight of lead. It is melted in small cups made of bone ashes, which absorb all the lead; a large part of the silver is extracted by another process, and the sample is then rolled out to a thin shaving, coiled up, and put with some nitric acid into a sort of a glass vial called a mattrass. The mattrasses are put in a furnace, and the acid is boiled some time, poured off, a new supply put in, and boiled over again. This is done several times, till the acid has extracted all the silver and other mineral substances, leaving the sample of pure gold. The sample is then weighed, and by the difference between the weight before assaying and after, the true value is found. All the silver over and above five pennyweights for each lot, is paid for by the mint at its true value. The gold, after it has been assayed, is melted, refined, and being mixed with its due proportion of alloy, is drawn into long strips, not unlike a round hoop for a cask, the round pieces being cut out with a sort of punch, each piece weighed and brought to the right size, and put into a stamping press, whence it comes forth a perfect coin.

THE CHEROKEE NATION.—The National Council of the Cherokees has been occupied for several weeks in devising some plan of paying their national debt, amounting to $100,000. The history of this people is interesting. Their nation is divided into eight districts, each furnishing three Representatives and two Senators to the National Council. For several years the nation has sustained 22 district schools, and proposes soon to establish an orphan asylum and two large Normal Schools. About $22,000 are expended by government annually for the support of common schools, in which the Chrstian religion, farming, some of the useful trades and ordinary literature are taught. Most of the Cherokees have more or less education, and are extremely ambitious to rival their white neighbors in every art. Tahlequah, the Cherokee capital, is a pretty village, containing some good brick dwellings and a court house. John Ross has been the Cherokee chief since 1828. He is wealthy, and lives in good style. His annual salary as President is only $500. Members of Council are elected for two years, and receive $3 a day during session. The Cherokees are advancing rapidly, and may at no distant day desire admittance into the Union.

Deferred Summary.

Scores of foxes were caught in the frozen regions by Sir James Ross' expedition, and turned into "twopenny postmen," by putting copper collars round their necks, stamped with the names and positions of the ships, and the localities of the provision dépôts. These foxes range enormous distances, and some of them will probably be caught by Sir John Franklin's party, if it still survive.

There are in the United States 119 colleges. The oldest is Harvard University, at Cambridge, Mass., established in 1638, just two hundred and eleven years ago. The next oldest is William and Mary, at Williamsburg in Virginia, established in February, 1692. The third in point of time is Yale College, at New Haven, Conn., established in 1700.

The Baltimore Sun asserts, on the authority of its private correspondent, that the number of Chinese arriving in California is enormous. They are brought in cargoes by English vessels, and sold as servants to the highest bidder, on the Cooley system, a shade less than absolute slavery. This is a species of trade that will soon get its quietus from the State government.

Some time ago, H. W. Butler, of Philadelphia, was robbed of jewelry to the value of $1,500. Desirous of regaining his stolen property, he agreed to pay the thief a certain sum to deliver it up, which he did. For thus compounding felony, Mr. Butler was bailed in $2,000, to appear before the Mayor, and is now being tried for that offense.

The Society for the Propagation of the Gospel has come into possession of £33,200, bequeathed by the late William Long, Esq.; of Cheapside, London. An anonymous donor has given £4,000, three and a quarter per cent. consols, to the same Society.

An anonymous donor has sent to the Rev. Derwent Coleridge, the Principal of St. Mark's Training College, Chelsea, England, the munificent sum of £1,000, with directions that the amount is to be applied to the extension of the College.

According to Mr. Macauley, the vulgar proverb that the "grey mare is the better horse," originated in the preference generally given to the grey mares of Flanders over the finest coach horses of England.

Montgomery Martin states that, of £50,000,000 of taxes, two millions and a half of rich people pay £11,530,000; eight millions of the middle classes pay £25,440,000; and fourteen millions of the working classes pay £13,030,000.

Pauperism, in contradiction to poverty, is the dependence on other people for existence, not on our own exertions. There is a moral pauperism in the man who is dependent on others for that support of moral life—self-respect.

A wag has truthfully said, that if some men could come out of their graves and read the inscriptions on their tombstones, they would think they had got into the wrong grave.

One of the London letter carriers was lately dismissed from his situation for delivering bills against Sunday Post Office labor with his letters.

DeRuyter Institute.

The Academic Year of this Institution for 1849-50 will commence the last Wednesday in August, and continue forty-three consecutive weeks, ending the last Wednesday of June, including a recess of ten days for Christmas and New Year holidays. The Year will be divided into three Terms:

The First, commencing August 29, of 14 weeks.
The Second, " December 5, of 15 "
The Third, " March 20, of 14 "

Encouraged by the success of the School under its present Instructors, the friends of the Institute have made liberal additions to its library, cabinet and apparatus, thus furnishing ample facilities for illustrating branches taught in the various departments.

The Literary Department is as heretofore under the supervision of Rev. JAMES R. IRISH, A. M., President, assisted by other able instructors. In this Department, especial attention is given to the lower English Branches. Students are also fitted in the Classics to enter the advanced classes in College.

The Department of Natural Science is conducted by Professor GURDON EVANS. In this, Natural Philosophy, Astronomy, Geology, Natural History, and Chemistry, are taught in a manner of unsurpassed interest. With it is connected the Department of Agriculture Science.

The Farmer's Course is thoroughly scientific; embracing the study of the best authors, with daily recitations. During the Winter Term two hours each day will be spent in the Analytical Laboratory, where students will be instructed in the constitution of soils and ashes of plants, with a minute examination of their constituent elements, and the various modes of testing for their presence.

A course of lectures is given during the Term on Practical Farming, explaining the relation of Geology to Agriculture, the Soil, the Plant, and the Animal, and their various relations, the Rotation of Crops, Feeding Animals, Manures, Draining Lands, &c., &c. For further information see Catalogue.

Besides Globes, Maps, &c., for the illustration of Astronomy, a Newtonian Telescope of high magnifying power has recently been added to the apparatus.

During the Summer Term, Botany and Geology receive special attention, illustrated by excursions to localities where these sciences may be studied as seen in nature. A Geological and Mineralogical Cabinet is accessible to the students.

The Mathematical Department is under the instruction of OLIVER B. IRISH, Tutor. It embraces thorough instruction in Arithmetic, and the higher pure and practical Mathematics, with field exercises in Engineering and Surveying.

Elocution, embracing Reading, Declamation, General Oratory, and Writing, receives the special attention of a competent teacher.

The Teacher's Department will, as formerly, be in operation during the Fall Term, and last half of the Winter Term. Particular attention to this is solicited from all who intend to teach district schools.

The Female Department is under the care of Miss SUSANNA M. COON, a graduate of Troy Female Seminary, a lady every way competent for this responsible station.

No efforts will be spared to render the young ladies of this Seminary truly accomplished, as well in the social relations of life, as in the substantial branches of learning and the higher refinements of education. Ample facilities are furnished for pursuing French, Italian, German, Drawing, Painting, Music on the Piano, and Vocal Music.

Information.

Good board in private families from $1 25 to $1 50. Parents from abroad should furnish their children with very little pocket money, as many temptations may thus be avoided. Those who wish may deposit money with either of the teachers, to be disbursed according to order, without extra charge.

Tuition, to be settled in advance, per term, from $3 00 to $5 00. Extras—For Drawing, $1 00; Monochromatic Painting, $3 00; Oil Painting, $5 00; Chemical Experiments, $1 00; Writing, including Stationery, 50c.; Tuition on Piano, $8 00; Use of Instrument, $2 00; in Agricultural Chemistry, including Chemicals, Apparatus, fires, &c., (breakage extra,) $12 00.

N. B. A daily stage leaves the railroad and canal at Chittenango for this place at 4 o'clock P. M.

For further information address the President, J. R. Irish, or Professor Gurdon Evans, DeRuyter, Madison Co., N. Y.

New-York, Elizabethtown, Somerville, Easton.

CENTRAL RAILROAD OF NEW JERSEY.—WINTER ARRANGEMENT—Commencing Thursday, November 1, 1849. The extension of the Railroad from Somerville to White House (10 miles) is open for travel, reducing the staging between the terminus of the Road and Easton to 25 miles. This line leaves New York by steamboat RED JACKET, Pier No. 1 North River, and by New Jersey Railroad, from the foot of Cortland-st., as per schedule below: Leave New York by N. J. R. R. from foot of Cortland-st. at 9 A. M. and 4½ o'clock P. M. By steamboat, Pier No. 1 North River, at 11 o'clock A. M. and 4 P. M. Returning, will leave White House at 3½ A. M. (freight) at 6 20m. A. M. and 1 40m. P. M. North Branch at 4 A. M. (freight) at 6 30m. A. M. and 1.50m. P. M; Somerville at 5 A. M. (freight) at 6 50m. A. M. and 2 5m. P. M.; Bound Brook at 5½ A. M (freight) at 7 A. M. and 2¼ P. M.; Plainfield at 5¾ A. M. (freight) at 7 25m. A. M. and 2 40m. P. M.; Westfield at 6½ A. M. (freight) 7¾ A. M. and 3 P. M.; Elizabethtown at 7 A. M. (freight) at 8½ A. M. and 12¾ P. M.

Stages will be in readiness on the arrival of the cars at White House by the 9 o'clock A. M. train from New York to convey passengers to Easton, Allentown, Wilkesbarre, and Mauch Chunk, Pa., and to Flemington, Lebanon, Clinton, Bricktown, Jugtown, New Germantown, &c., N. J.

For the Sabbath Recorder.

WHY IS NOT THE GOSPEL PREACHED TO THE HEATHEN?

The Gospel is the grand means of God's appointment for the enlightening and salvation of sinful man. To propagate this "glorious Gospel," is the great duty of the people of God. They are commanded to "show forth the praises of him who hath called them out of darkness into his marvelous light"—"to hold forth the word of life." They are set as "lights," not merely in some isolated neighborhood, but in "the world." The greatness of the work is such, and the interests at stake are such, as to demand the constant and united efforts, not only of a few men of superior talent, but of every one that hath "named the name of Christ."

Why, then, is so little done for the spiritual good of this lost world? Why are so many hundreds of millions of souls passing on to eternity without the light of the Gospel? God is not in fault. He has bestowed natural talents upon a sufficient number of men and women in professed Christian lands to do the work of missionaries, if these were improved. He has promised the aid of his Spirit to all such as seek it aright. He has bestowed upon professed Christians an amount of property amply sufficient to sustain as many missionaries as are needed, together with all other necessary agencies for preaching "the Gospel to every creature."

Where are these men? Some of them are pleading law. Some are physicians. Some are found in almost every worldly calling. Some are traveling for pleasure. Some are living in ease. Some are taking care of large estates acquired by their fathers. Some, whose talents are of a proper kind for the missionary work, are unwilling to leave their fashionable congregations, and large salaries, to "preach the unsearchable riches of Christ" among uncouth barbarians, for a bare subsistence. Many candidates for the ministry seem to be looking forward to the applause of men, to a comfortable living, to the popularity of a sect, and not to a life of self-denying labor for the cause of Christ, and the multitudes ready to perish. How few, among our young people who are getting an education, are doing it with reference to glorifying God, in a life of active exertion for the benefit of mankind! How few of the children and youth in professed Christian families are catching the missionary spirit from their parents, and ardently desiring to become missionaries when the proper time shall have arrived! And why should we expect these children to be thus affected when their parents are so worldly? Are worldly instructions and examples fitted to produce soldiers of the cross?

Again, where is the property that should be laid on God's altar, and employed in spreading the Gospel through the world? Some of it is used up in law-suits, carried on for the purpose of gratifying self-will. Much is invested in speculating operations. Much is laid up to curse children with. Millions are wasted on costly and splendid houses and furniture. And even our houses of worship are decorated by means of that money which might sustain the faithful servants of God in distributing the bread of life among the heathen. Another item of extravagance is dress. The demands of the goddess Fashion are insatiable. Although this "outward adorning" of the body with "gold, pearls, and costly array," (1 Tim. 2 : 7; 1 Pet. 3 : 3) is strictly forbidden in the word of God, yet the great multitude of professing Christians disregard this rule, and are striving to imitate the world around them, rather than to walk in the footsteps of the meek and lowly Jesus. And who can estimate the cost of this? Even ministers of the Gospel, who ought to be examples to the flock, are guilty in this thing. Many of them, and some of their wives, are in the front ranks, almost, of the fashionable army! There is one more form of selfishness that I will mention, which uses up, to a great extent, the time and resources of professed Christians. This is the gratification of unholy appetites. Nature's wants are few. But pampered appetites are never satisfied. Now-a-days multitudes desire to "fare sumptuously every day," and their "god is their belly." Some church members still use intoxicating drinks; multitudes use the filthy weed called tobacco; most of them use tea and coffee, and a variety of luxuries. These, except in a few extreme cases, are useless and worse than useless. Instead of keeping the system in a healthful condition, they weaken and destroy it. Men and women do not use them to "glorify God," but to gratify their own appetites. Instead of keeping their bodies under, their souls are enslaved by the flesh. And here, again, frequently, we find ministers "at the head of the heap." Sometimes they preach under the excitement of tea. They who should have "clean hands" and "pure hearts," enter the sanctuary with mouths polluted with tobacco. Some home missionaries, and perhaps some foreign missionaries, who are sustained in part by the contributions of those who have laid aside all extravagances, continue to wear fine clothes, drink tea, and smoke and chew tobacco. And will not such contributors become dissatisfied, when they see the fruit of their self-denial and economy thus perverted?

We see, then, why so little is done for the languishing cause of Christ—why we deny to "benighted men the lamp of life." It is because worldliness prevails among the ministry, to a great extent—among students, among the youth, among the professed churches of Christ at large. It is because church members love the honor of the world, their own children, and their own appetites, more than the souls of men. They think more of gratifying their pride, chewing their tobacco, and drinking their tea, than of pleasing Christ and imparting to the destitute the Gospel. Is not this so? Men spend more to please the taste than to save souls. Are these they who "confess that they are pilgrims on the earth," and that they "are not their own?" Are such good stewards?

But it is urged, that we are to "take comfort the little time we have to live on earth." And with many this is the great end of life. They say, "Soul, take thine ease, eat, drink, and be merry." Such have forgotten, if they have ever learned, the first lesson taught in the school of Christ, which is self-denial. Jesus suffered. All his true disciples have lived, "not to themselves, but to him who died for them." So must we, if we would be approved of Heaven. "Whether we eat, or drink, or whatsoever we do," we must "do all to the glory of God."

Another objection is worthy of a moment's attention. It is this: By dressing in the style of the world we can do more good. Suppose the minister of a congregation should lay aside his fine coat, and other fine clothes, would it not have a powerful effect to induce others to do the same? Thus a large sum might be saved for the spread of the Gospel. Great good would thus be done. But would his reputation as a good man be destroyed? Would the community lose their confidence in his piety? Would his prayers be hindered? Would God refuse the aid of his Spirit?

We have seen that the love of the world, ruling in the hearts of church members, is the great reason why the heathen remain in darkness. Shall the existing generation go down to death in their present condition? Reader, you will meet them at the judgment seat of Christ! Will you so act now that you can "give up your account there with joy." Remember, that, "to him that knoweth to do good and doeth it not, to him it is sin."

THE RELIGION OF HAYTI.

The religion of Hayti is not one and the same throughout the Island, but varies like the people, and assumes a totally different aspect in the interior from that presented on the coast.

You will find away among the rugged mountains, the morasses and plains of the interior of Hayti, a race of untutored blacks who will bow in awe and reverence for the enchantments of their heathenish sorcerers, and in obedience to the demands of the priests and priestesses of the ancient pagan superstitions which constituted the religion of their ancestors in Africa, and now holds absolute sway over their own minds, will yield their own lisping children into their hands, that by spilling the blood of innocence they may appease the anger or ascertain the will of the "unknown God."*

No missionary has yet appeared to declare unto them Him whom they ignorantly worship. Their inability to read, and the unstable character of their minds, would preclude them from the advantages of the labors of a colporteur, and no missionary would feel called on to locate among them while so much wider fields of labor are open in the many desolate cities on the coast.

Here a different kind of labor is required, for, with the exception of the few small circles where Protestant influence has been felt, we find throughout all the cities and villages of the Island, no influence but the all-pervading, deadening influence of Roman Catholicism.

This is the state-religion—its churches are owned and its priests appointed by government; and yet while Protestant ministers are allowed to roam at pleasure through the Island, no Catholic priest is suffered to pass the walls of the city where he is located, for, say they, "We can not trust them beyond the reach of our cannon; they would sow sedition among the people." This character the priests have always sustained, and the government is too well acquainted with the resources which they could command through the confessional and otherwise, to dare leave them beyond their reach, in the event of a revolution, lest, becoming disaffected, they should urge the people on to a revolt.

Another large portion of the population reside in the country, in the immediate vicinity of some city, and of these of course we know much less than the city residents.

The males are liable, in time of war, to be enrolled among the army, and are hence paraded and reviewed with the city troops, and the females are weekly represented at the city markets, and here rumor sometimes attracts their curious eyes and ears to the residence or chapel of "le ministre Protestant," where, if we can comprehend their mountain creole language, we may perhaps gather a few facts, and possibly lodge an idea in their uncultivated minds.

We question one about his religion and he drops upon his knees and amidst sundry crossings and alternate kissings of the little bag containing a pagan charm, "to keep the devil off," and an image of the Saviour on the cross, both which, according to the prevalent custom, he wears suspended from his neck, he will tell his beads and repeat his prayers with an astonishing celerity, to prove that he is "a good Catholic." We question another, and he immediately proffers money that we may say masses to release some dear friend from the horrors of purgatory. They are not opposed to the Protestant religion, for most of them live in infantile ignorance of its existence even.

Missionary labor has thus far been confined entirely to the cities, and here it is that we meet Catholicism in all its giant deformity. Yet here its sway is far more limited than in some portions of Catholic Europe. The lips of the people are still unsealed, and nearly all will readily tell you that the priests are men of vile character, who seek not their souls, but their money.

But while they thus distrust their priests, they repose the most implicit confidence in their religion. "Our priests are bad men, and yours are good," say they, "but our religion is as good as yours; either is able to save the soul, and we will leave you without molestation if you will do the same by us." Often they endeavor to support the dogmas of their religion by argument, and here it is comparatively an easy matter to overthrow them, but then they turn and say, "It is our fathers' religion and ours, and we cannot change it. Would you change your religion?" They at once lose sight of proof, and see no reason why they should change their religion rather than we ours.

There is far less conservatism among the males than among the females. Many of the former are quite ready to attend Protestant service provided we will hold it after dark. Usually they composed two-thirds of our little congregation, and sometimes every seat was filled by men, while not a woman was present.

The women are far more attached to their own religion—attend mass frequently, or at least as often as they have a new dress, and manifest much anxiety lest their children should be led astray by Protestants. Many wished to place their children in our school, but would not except with the condition that no influence should be exerted to induce them to change their religion. Still, most of them are far too indolent and careful of their own ease to conform to all the requirements of their religion, and prefer to barter with the priests, and obtain license to confess but once a year, eat meat during lent, &c., &c.

The mass of people are not bigoted, indeed very many of the most intelligent among them express the earnest desire and hope that the Island will eventually become Protestant, not because they deem our religion a better one, but because they think the change would be accompanied by a great political and civil reformation.

Hayti was the first portion of this Western world to embrace Catholicism, and it was not until the year 1817, long after they had thrown off the yoke of their task-masters, that a Protestant minister first settled among them.

The Island has a population of from 600,000 to 800,000, and is under two separate governments. The Eastern or Spanish portion is a republic. But little religious toleration is there enjoyed, and but one Protestant missionary is located among them. The Western or French portion is but half the size of the other, has recently become an empire, and grants, as I have said, free toleration to Protestants. In this part there are nine missionaries stationed. Five of these are of the Methodist denomination, three of the Baptist, and one is Congregational. Some of these have labored several years, and have gathered churches of considerable size; others have recently commenced their labors, yet already decided influence has been gained over the people, sufficient at least to alarm the priests and gratify the government.

Sectarianism, which in too many missionary fields has created jars and discords, and exerted a baneful influence upon the people, has thus far done little harm in Hayti. When questioned, its missionaries are ready to admit that in minor points they differ; still all are Protestants and all brethren—engaged in the same great cause—the religious emancipation of Hayti.

JOSEPHINE CUSHMAN.

I HAVE NO TIME TO STUDY.—The idea about the want of time is a mere phantom. Franklin found time in the midst of all his labors to dive into the hidden recesses of philosophy, and to explore the untrodden path of science. The great Frederick, with an Empire at his direction, in the midst of war, on the eve of battles which were to decide the fate of his kingdom, found time to revel in the charms of philosophy and intellectual pleasures. Bonaparte, with all Europe at his disposal; with kings in his ante-chamber begging for vacant thrones, with thousands of men whose destinies were suspended on the brittle thread of his arbitrary pleasure, had time to converse with books. Cæsar, when he had curbed the spirits of the Roman people, and was thronged with visitors from the remotest kingdoms, found time for intellectual conversation. Every man has time, if he is careful to improve it; and if he does improve it as well as he might, he can reap a three-fold reward. Let mechanics then make use of the hours at their disposal, if they want to obtain a proper influence in society. They can, if they please, hold in their hands the destinies of our Republic; they are numerous, respectable and powerful; and they have only to be educated half as well as other professions, to make laws for the nation.

"IT'S JEWISH."

BY ROSWELL F. COTTRELL.

When we present God's holy law,
And arguments from Scripture draw,
Objectors say—to "pick a flaw"—
"It's Jewish."

Though, at the first, Jehovah "blessed
And sanctified" His day of rest,
The same belief is still expressed—
"It's Jewish."

Though, ere sin was, this rest began,
And thence through all the Scriptures ran,
And Jesus said 't was "made for man"—
"It's Jewish."

Though, not with Jewish rites which passed,
But with the moral law 'twas classed,
Which must endure while time shall last—
"It's Jewish."

Though the disciples, Luke and Paul,
Continue still this rest to call
"The Sabbath day," this answer all—
"It's Jewish."

If, from the Bible, we present
The Sabbath's meaning and intent,
This answers every argument—
"It's Jewish."

The Gospel teacher's own expression,
That "sin is of the law transgression,"
Seems not to make the least impression—
"It's Jewish."

They love the rest of man's invention,
But if Jehovah's day we mention,
This puts an end to all contention—
"It's Jewish."

THE JEWS IN ABYSSINIA.

One of the brothers D'Abbadie, the well known African travelers, has recently passed through London on his return from Abyssinia, where he has been during the last eleven years. While in London he communicated to an Israelite some particulars relating to the Jews in Abyssinia, which are not without interest:

"The Halashaas (strangers) are held in abhorence by the Abyssinians, and when their chiefs came to M. D'Abbadie, the Abyssinians fled, being afraid of contracting an impurity by coming in contact with individuals of that hated race. In the conference which the French traveler held with them, he laid before them a letter addressed to him by the well-known Italian Hebrew scholar, S. D. Luzzatto, containing various questions bearing on Jewish matters. The letter, originally written in French, had been translated by M. D'Abbadie into Ethiopic. The traveler carefully wrote down their replies, and intends to publish them in some French paper. The halashaas appear to entertain some extraordinary religious notions, altogether incompatible with Judiasm as understood by the Jews. They hold celibacy in high honor; and when asked in what part of the Bible that state was recommended, they pointed to the example of the prophet Elijah, who, according to their opinion was never married, no allusion being made in his history either to his wife or children. They also consider suicide from religious motives as highly meritorious. Persons disposed to sacrifice their lives, repair to the brink of a river, and there solemnly inquire of God if their end has come or not. If the signs taken in reply be in the affirmative, suicide is committed; but if the reply be in the negative, they wait for a twelvemonth, when the inquries are again made.

"They are totally unacquainted with Hebrew, and read the Scriptures in their native language, into which, according to M. D'Abbadie, they were translated from the Arabic. Besides the books held by all Jews as authoritive, they also consider the Apocrypha as sacred. These books, in as far as they were examined by our traveler, perfectly agree with the Vulgate, except the book of the Maccabees, in which he discovered great discrapancies. They also possess a commentary on each of the sacred books, except the book of Ezekiel, which has been lost. In addition to the five books of Moses, they possess a sixth, which they call 'Coofaclaw.' The names of the other books agree with ours, and appear therefore to be Ethiopic translations of the Greek words, 'Genesis, Exodus,' &c. In their liturgy, however, which is also in Ethiopic, M. D'Abbadie thought a good Hebrew scholar might trace many Hebrew words. Among others he remembered to have found it in the term 'Phanuel.' M. D'Abbadie has brought with him copies of these books. He further learned from his informant, that to the south of their country, in the country of the Gazoo, there was a Jewish kingdom; a statement confirmed to our traveler by other evidence, altogether independent of the Halashaas. He also said that he met in Abyssinia a most intetesting native Jewish youth, who was most anxious to go to Europe, in order to acquire there correct notions on Judaism, which on his return to his native country, might be propagated among his brethren. This youth made M. D'Abbadie solemnly promise that he would endeavor to interest European Jews for that object, and inform him of the result within a twelvemonth. The traveler regretted his want of acquaintance with Jews, which, he was afraid, would render his exertions abortive."

MR. GUTZLAFF, THE CHINESE INTERPRETER.—Dr. Gutzlaff is about to visit Europe, after an absence of twenty-three years. That long term has been passed in China, or among the Chinese. Perhaps no foreigner of the age has more thoroughly identified himself with the people; their literature, religion, government, history, and social and domestic habits, have been investigated by a mind which finds pleasure in study. Even in personal appearance, the learned gentleman has in a degree become Chinese. We have heard it asserted, in North America, that Europeans who live for years among the Indians acquire their expression of countenance, especially a peculiar cast of the eye, which no Indian is without. Sir Henry Pottinger went to the East when a mere lad; he resided for many years at native courts, as a political agent of Government, and no person who has seen him will forget his oriental countenance. Similar influences among a different people may have had the same effect on Dr. Gutzlaff.

EVERY DAY LIFE OF LORD BACON.

During meditation, he often had music in another room, by which his fancy was enlivened. He had many little whims and peculiarities, some of which may excite a smile; for instance, in spring he would go out for a drive in an open coach whilst it rained, to receive (in the quiet language of Aubery) "the benefit of irrigation," which he was wont to say was very wholesome, because of the nitre in the air, and the universal spirit of the world. He had extraordinary notions respecting the virtue of nitre, and conceived it to be of inestimable value in the preservation of health. So great was his faith, that he swallowed three grains of that drug, either alone or with saffron, in warm broth, every morning during thirty years! He seems to have been very fond of quacking himself—once a week he took a dose of the "water of Mithradate," diluted with strawberry water. Once a month, at least, he made a point of swallowing a grain and a half of "castor" in his broth and breakfast for two successive days. And every sixth or seventh day he drank an effusion of rhubarb in white wine and beer immediately before his dinner. He made it a point to take air in some high and open place every morning, the third hour after sunrise, and, if possible, he selected a spot where he could enjoy the perfume of musk, roses, and sweet violets. Besides thus breathing the pure air of nature, he was fumigated with the smoke of lign-aloes, with dried bays, and rosemary, adding once a week a little tobacco. On leaving his bed, he was anointed all over with the oil of almonds, mingled with salt and saffron, and this was followed by gentle friction. He was rather a hearty feeder, and when young preferred game and poultry, but in after life gave the choice to butcher's meat well beaten before being roasted. At every meal his table was strewed with flowers and sweet herbs. Half an hour before supper he took a cup of wine, or ale, hot and spiced, and once during supper, wine, in which gold had been quenched. The first draught which he drank at dinner or supper was always hot, and on retiring to bed he ate a piece of bread steeped in a mixture of wine, syrup of roses, and washed it down with a cup of ale to compose his spirits and send him to sleep. In the spring he was fond of a glass of spiced pomegranate wine early in the morning, and greatly enjoyed water cresses. These little points may be unimportant in themselves, but they assist us in drawing a mental portrait of the man.

TRUE DUNCAN AND THE CAT.

Once there was a little boy named Duncan. The boys used to call him True Duncan, because he never [illegible] day he was playing with an axe in the yard of the school, and while he was chopping a stick, the teacher's cat, Tabby, came along. Duncan let the axe fall right on poor Tabby's head, and killed her. What to do he did not know. She was a pet of the masters, and used to sit on a cushion at his side, while he was hearing the lessons. Duncan stood and looked at the dead creature. His face grew very red, and the tears stood in his eyes. All the boys came running up, and every one had something to say. One of them whispered to the others and said:—

"Now, fellows, we shall see whether Duncan can make up a fib, as well as the rest of us."

"Not he!" said little Tom Pooley, who was Duncan's friend. "Not he! I'll warrant you. Duncan will be as true as gold."

Big Jones stepped up, and taking the cat by the tail, said, "Here, boys, I'll just fling her into the alley, and we can tell Mr. Cole that the butcher's dog killed her; you know he worried her last week."

Several of them thought this would do very well. But Duncan looked quite angry. His face swelled, and his cheeks grew redder than before.

"No!" said he, "no! Do you think I would lie for such a creature as that? It would be a lie, a lie, a LIE!" And every time he said the word, his voice grew louder and louder. Then he picked up the poor thing in his arms, and the boys followed to see what would happen. The master looked up, and said:—

"What is this? My fathful mouser dead! Who could have done me such an injury?" All were silent for a little. As soon as Duncan could get his voice, he said—

"Mr. Cole, I can't lie, sir; I killed Tabby. But I am very sorry for it. I ought to have been more careful, for I saw her continually rubbing her sides against the log. I am very sorry, indeed, sir."

Every one expected Mr. Cole to take down his long rattan. On the contrary, he put on a pleasant smile, and said—

"Duncan, you are a brave boy! I saw and heard all that passed from my window above. I would rather lose a hundred cats than miss such an example of truth and honor in my school. Your best reward is what you now feel in your own conscience; but I beg you to accept this handsome penknife, as a token of my approbation."

Duncan took out his little handkerchief and wiped his eyes. The boys could no longer restrain themselves; and when Tom Pooley cried, "Three cheers for True Duncan!" all joined in a hearty hurra. The teacher seemed willing to allow this, and then said—

"My boys, I am glad you know what is right, and that you approve of it; though I am afraid some of you could not have done it. Learn from this time, that nothing can make a falsehood necessary. Suppose Duncan had taken your evil advice, and had come to me with a lie; it would have been instantly detected, for I was a witness of what passed. I trust he has been governed in this by a sense of God's presence, and I exhort you all to follow his example."

BAPTIST NOEL IN THE PULPIT.

A writer in the Glasgow Examiner, in giving an account of a sermon which Baptist Noel lately preached in that city, draws the following picture of him as he appeared in the pulpit:—

"He is tall and slender. His features are small but marked—his brow high and ample—his complexion pale, and the general cast of his countenance is the most pleasant and noble we have seen. He is seemingly about forty years of age, and retains a plentiful supply of hair. Though the scion of a noble house, he is plain in his dress. The perfumer and goldsmith seem not to be called into requisition. He appears in the pulpit alike free from the canonicals of the ecclesiastic and the decorations of the dandy. No ring with diamonds on his lily hand, no chain, no gown, no bands, adorn him, not even gloves does he flourish. He is as free of the airs of the gay as he is of their adornments. On entering the pulpit, instead of gazing round on the auditory, he seems to be communing with his own heart, and unconscious of all around him. As he sat in the pulpit, humility, docility, thoughtfulness and gravity characterized every feature. He never moved a muscle, and certainly betrayed none of that restlessness which some, for want of any other, consider the manifestation of genius. When he rose to give out his text there was no flourish of handkerchief, no staring around on the congregation, no pause artificial, but a simple announcement of the chapter and verses which contained his text. Instead of notes he held in his hand a New Testament, and read from it the illustrative passages. His action was less animated than usual, as poor health forbade effort, but his gestures were varied and natural, and his voice sweet and full. As a speaker he is unquestionably the most pleasant we have heard. His neat pronunciation and his perfect intonation make his speech drop as the dew. He literally discourses music which charms the most rebellious ear."

ELOQUENT EXTRACT.

A spirit of fault-finding; an unsatisfied temper; a constant irritability; little inequalities in the look, the temper or the manner; a brow cloudy and dissatisfied—your husband or wife cannot tell why—will more than neutralize all the good you can do, and render life anything but a blessing. It is in such gentle and quiet virtues as meekness and forbearance that the happiness and usefulness of life consists, far more than in eloquence, splendid talent, or illustrious deeds, that shall send the name to future times. It is the bubbling spring which flows gently, the little rivulet which glides through the meadow, and which runs along day and night by the farm house, that is useful, rather than the swollen flood or the warring cata[illegible] stand amazed at the power and greatness of God there, as he "pours it from his hollow hand." But one Niagara is enough for the continent or a world; while that same world needs thousands and tens of thousands of silvery fountains and gently-flowing rivulets, that water every farm and meadow, and every garden, and that shall flow on every day and every night, with their gentle, quiet beauty. So with the acts of our lives. It is not by great deeds only, like those of the martyrs, that good is to be done; it is by the daily and quiet virtues of life—the Christian temper, the meek forbearance, the spirit of forgiveness in the husband, wife, the father, the mother, the brother, the sister, the friend the neighbor, that it is to be done, and in this all may be useful.

THE VIRGIN MARY IN BUFFALO.

A Catholic priest in Buffalo, N. Y., lately wished to put up his congregation to the work of building a new church, and on Sabbath morning, at high mass, he presented a large letter to them, declaring that the letter which he held up before them, was a genuine one, written by the Virgin Mary's own hand, that he found it upon the altar, and that the Virgin had given an architectural plan of a new church, which she wished should be immediately built to her honor, with a high steeple, and desiring that the faithful, especially those who are devoted to her, should be liberal in their gifts as well as devotions.

The money was poured in, the church was begun, but not finished, because there was not enough of "the needful" to complete the "high steeple." The priest said that the church could not be opened till the "steeple" was finished. While the congregation were in an unfortunate quandary, another priest, about two months ago, announced to them, to their perfect astonishment, that he had found another letter, written by the Virgin Mary, upon the tower (which was already more than a hundred feet above the surface of the earth,) who wished that the steeple should be fifty feet higher, and that it must be finished by Christmas next. FOUR DAYS AFTER that communication from the Virgin Mary, the steeple fell down, not towards the outside, but upon the church: and steeple and church are now in ruins.

RECONCILIATION.—Two celebrated ministers had quarreled; they refused to speak to each other; when John Owen, another eminent minister, adopted the following plan to reconcile them, after several others had been tried in vain. He wrote and left at the house of each these lines:—

"How rare that task a prosperous issue finds,
Which seeks to reconcile discordant minds!
How many scruples rise at passion's touch!
This yields too little, that too much.
Each wishes each with other's eyes to see;
And many sinners can't make two agree.
What mediation, then, the Saviour showed,
Who singly reconciled us all to God!"

It is said that upon receiving the lines each minister left his residence to seek the other, and that they met in the street, where a perfect reconciliation took place.

The Sabbath Recorder.

New York, January 17, 1850.

EVILS THAT REQUIRE CORRECTION.

Notwithstanding our zeal for the Bible Sabbath, in opposition to that of man's invention, there is reason to fear, that some of our denomination are of that class who "say, and do not." We shall not undertake to offer all that we might on this point, but there are some things which have fallen under our notice, against which we would, in the name of the Lord of the Sabbath, utter our protest.

1. The reading, on Sabbath days, of works which have no tendency to promote piety. The common newspapers of the day have no such tendency. Politics, the strifes of noisy demagogues, litigations at law, the rise and fall of stocks, the fluctuations of the market, the gold excitement—these are the themes which crowd their columns. Is reading about such things calculated to stir up the heart to devotion? Does it draw the soul nearer to God? Does it help to prepare the mind for the duties of the sanctuary? On the contrary, these subjects are the very aliment upon which the carnal mind feeds—the food which it seizes upon ravenously, in the use of which it riots to fatness. It is not denied, that an eminently spiritual mind may raise profitable reflections from these subjects; but we are confident, that it is only such a mind that will. The power to convert such subjects into food for the soul, does not prove that we may make the Sabbath the time for storing the mind with them, any more than the power to raise pious reflections from his daily work, proves that a man may pursue his business on the Sabbath. Besides, even if there were a chosen few, who could, without danger to themselves, read the newspapers on the Sabbath day, they ought, for the sake of the great multitude, who could not do so without danger, to forego the gratification; on the same principle that the man, who can indulge in an occcasional glass of wine, ought, for the sake of the reformed inebriate, who cannot taste it without peril, to give an example of total abstinence. However, we do not believe that in this fallen world there is any one so matured in piety, that he can practice the reading we speak of, without suffering more or less injury. At best, his power to do so is much like the power to make good use of riches, or to hold them in possession without losing his soul. The power exists, we may admit; but such is the corruption of our nature, that "it is easier for a camel to go through a needle's eye, than for a rich man to enter into the kingdom of God." So a man may have power, on the Sabbath-day, to read the newspaper, and make a spiritual use of the various topics discussed in it; but such is his natural tendency to worldliness, have his worldliness inflamed. At best, he throws himself into the way of temptation. "Lead us not into temptation," should be the daily prayer of the Christian. Our advice is, to let the newspaper lie unopened till the Sabbath is past; then you can read it with a good conscience. We have specified the newspaper, not because we conceive that its matter is any more deleterious than a thousand other things, but because it is more likely to engross the attention. Novel reading would be still worse. Books of history are not suitable for Sabbath reading. Even Ecclesiastical History is not profitable; nor can we recommend works of religious controversy. At all events, their tendency to promote piety is remote. The Bible should be the great text-book for the Sabbath. Other works may be read, but they should be of a decidedly religious tendency.

2. Sabbath-day visiting. This is a very prevalent evil. Neighbors call upon one another to beguile the tediousness of the day. And, pray, what makes the day so tedious? Surely, you do not employ your time as a Christian should, or it would not be so. The Christian is expected to "call the Sabbath a delight." Isa. 58: 13. He is expected to find his enjoyment, during its sacred hours, in spiritual exercises. He is expected to forego the "finding of his own pleasure," and even the "speaking of his own words." Is it this which makes the day so tedious? If so, you are no Christian; you are yet carnal. For it is emphatically promised, that he who calls the Sabbath a delight, and neither finds his own pleasure, nor speaks his own words, "shall delight himself in the Lord." And this promise cannot fail, "for the mouth of the Lord hath spoken it." But if you find so little delight in the Lord, that you must needs go abroad to find it in your neighbor, the fair inference is, that you do not severely exercise yourself in the duties of the Sabbath, or else that you are too carnal to find them any thing else than slavish drudgery. "Not finding thine own pleasure" is the solemn prohibition of the Almighty. There is no mistaking this language. But the ordinary visiting done by professed Christians on the Sabbath, is for no other purpose but their own entertainment. At home the time passes heavily. To sit all day in the house, is irksome. Communion with God, so far as they know anything about it, affords less pleasure than a social chat with their neighbors. Weariness of closet exercises, or an entire want of relish for them, drives them out in search of something more congenial with their spirits. And what is the consequence of such indulgence? One consequence is, that their reverence for the day is diminished. While the day was set apart strictly, and not allowed to be used as other days were, it was held in reverence. "The holy of the Lord was reckoned honorable." But the very moment that a part of the day was set apart for their own pleasure, their reverence for the institution became impaired. We are no apologists for a superstitious reverence for the day, nor for any reverence for the day merely, which shall stand in the place of reverence for Him who made the day; we ask for no such reverence for it as will be a restraint to the exercise of benevolence and humanity—such as the Pharisees of old cultivated—but we believe that no one can accustom himself to treat sacred things as common, without suffering injury to his conscience, and a consequent loss of communion with God.

We have no doubt that Christians may visit one another on the Sabbath, and spend the time to edification. But, nine cases out of ten, the actual fact is otherwise. If the motive is to pray with one another, and engage in holy conversation, no doubt the result will be edifying, and the visit may be regarded as no violation of the Sabbath. But if the motive is merely to find entertainment, as is generally the case, it may be calculated to a certainty, that the result will be accordingly. We do then, with uplifted hand, protest against this Sabbath visiting as most pernicious in its tendency. You go to your neighbor's house for your own entertainment. But do you stop to consider how much injury you may do him as well as yourself? Perhaps he is in his closet, communing with his God. Perhaps he is taking sweet delight in meditation, and reading the holy word. You go then only to frustrate the end which he has proposed to himself, and which was in a fair way of being accomplished. You go, (unconsciously, perhaps,) as the emissary of the devil, to hinder his growth in grace. Perhaps he has collected his household for religious instruction. Perhaps he has his children around him, to teach them the statutes of the Lord. You go then only to interrupt this very important duty. Satan took advantage of your unwillingness to do the same duties to your own house, and sent you off to hinder your neighbor. Your neighbor ought to be plain with you, and tell you that he is "doing a great work, and cannot come down." But he is too polite for that. He cannot bear to give you even a temporary offense; rather than do so, he will offend his God. Alas! "One sinner destroyeth much good."

In this reprobation of Sabbath visiting, we do not, of course, include those visits which are made to the sick, to pray with them, and to converse about the interests of their souls; nor even those which are made for the purpose of relieving their bodily sufferings. Watching with them, administering their medicine, and bestowing the various kindnesses which every sick person requires are all in perfect consistency with good Sabbath keeping. We condemn only that kind of visiting which is resorted to for one's own entertainment.

SECRET SOCIETIES—No. 5.

The practical opposition of modern Secret Societies to Christianity, may be spoken of under the three following heads:—

1st. That which flows from their fixtures as societies.

2d. That which flows from their claim to good works.

3d. That which flows from their claim to religion.

Fixtures.—Under this head I observe, that the first thing which strikes the attention, in looking at these Societies, is the long list of high-sounding titles employed to designate their officers. The use of these titles manifestla originates in, and also serves to cultivate and strengthen, the carnal extravagance of the mind in general, and the spirit of vanity in particular. Those who are more given to that vice naturally, will be proportionally more inclined to seek to procure themselves such titles; and they will be injured in proportion to their weakness and success in that matter. Vanity is one of the most spontaneous, excessive, injurious, and ridiculous vices, which frail humanity has fallen heir to. Many men are susceptible of injury from having a motive or a stimulus addressed to their vanity, who could not be misled by any other means. But who would have looked, at this age of the world, for such a blossom upon the stem of vanity as the titles of office in these Secret Societies present? Among them may be found such as these: Worthy and Most Worthy Patriarch, Most Worthy Associate, Most Worthy Scribe, Most Worthy Treasurer, Most Worthy Chaplain, Most Worthy Sentinel, Grand and Past Grand Worthy Patriarch, Grand Chaplain, and Grand Conductor. Here is childish weakness—silly pomposity—and what looks like a burlesque on things both sacred and profane. The above titles are more especially after the pattern of the Sons of Temperance; but they are much like those in use among Odd Fellows—not a whit more extravagant, if any thing, less so. Then comes the regalia, with all its concomitant follies. First, these men fix upon each other the most pompous titles; then, dressing one another up in fantastic royal suits, (for the word regalia, according to Webster, signifies the ensigns of royalty,) arrange themselves around their Hall, as it were on mimic thrones, to receive like kings the homage of their courts, who must also be attired accordingly in a suitable way, to appear in the presence of their superiors. Those who are vain enough to invent and use such fixtures, are not too strong to be injured by them. I think I have seen some of the evil effects of these things upon professors of Christianity, in the alienation of their feelings from the church and Gospel simplicity—the drying up, as it were, the fountains of their affections—and an increased sense of their own consequence, and claims for consideration which could not be accounted for as the result of any unkind treatment on the part of their brethren in the church, though such things do probably take place. Grand and Past Grand, Worthy and Most Worthy, and the like titles, are directly calculated to foster the carnal mind, fill men with pride, love of power, and wicked ambition. Practically they must affect men in a way precisely opposite to what Christianity does; that does not teach them that they are Grand and Worthy, but that they are degraded by sin, and most unworthy. Elihu said, "Neither let me give flattering titles unto man." And our Lord said, "Call no man Father." But the word Patriarch, so much used in these Secret Societies, not only signifies Father, but also a ruling Father. So, when we come to English these titles, we shall find them of the most flattering import. Most Worthy Patriarch signifies Most Worthy Ruling Father. Does this comport with the doctrines of Christianity? How out of all proportion are these appellations, when applied to young men, to (as they frequently must be) mere boys who are elected to fill for a few weeks or months the offices in these secret bodies. Look at these youths, clothed in their kingly attire, and then addressed as Most Worthy and Past Worthy Ruling Fathers! Not a few of these are members of the church of Christ, and a short time since they professed to renounce the vanities of the world. Who has bewitched them? Why are they silent in or absent from the the place of prayer? And if coldness, dissatisfaction, or hardness should follow, as the practical result, as in fact it does, do not these exceedingly vain and extravagant features of these societies alone sufficiently account for it? I feel disposed to go more minutely into this branch of my subject, but at present forbear.

Good Works.—This is the subject of our second head. It would seem, from the representations which these Societies present of their objects and operations, that benevolence and charity are the employments in which they are constantly and wholly engaged—that the church, having proved a failure in such respects, these Societies are really doing the work of love which she, in her falseness, has left undone. In this way, the excellency from which all this practical goodness flows, is represented as residing in their institutions. I say, such is the air with which they set up their claims. That they devote the attention, and apply the means, by which many persons are comforted, and greatly benefited, there is no doubt. But it is to be observed, that their constitutions and by-laws only contemplate the bestowment of these benefits upon the members of their order, and their widows and orphans. If they go farther, and bestow favors on any not so connected with them, (as I suppose they do occasionally,) it cannot be put to the account or credit of these Societies, because they have no functions for such a work, and were not intended for such a use. The credit, in such cases, belongs to the men composing the Society, and not to the Society, or system on which it is built. And farther, these Societies select their members from the youthful and most hale portion of the community. This is fixed by law; and if persons are advanced in life, they have to pay extra prices for the privilege. Now, when we consider the class of persons received into these Societies, the probabilities of their contributing as a whole to increase the funds of the Society, and of their drawing from those funds, it is most obvious that the practical operation of the system, (except in very extraordinary cases,) must be, to put into the hands of the Society a large balance over all expenses. Not only so, but it is fairly within bounds to suppose, that in Societies made up of the young, and most healthy, and robust, that the beneficiaries, on an average, must receive far less than they themselves, as individuals, have contributed to the funds of the Society. So that, while the Society appears to be doing a deed of charity, it is really retaining in its own hands, for its own aggrandizement, money which, in simple justice, belongs to this object of its (falsely so called) charity. From all this it appears, that so far from these Societies being charitable institutions, they do not even refund the amount which they have received, though the donors to their funds are their only beneficiaries. It is a shame for such Societies to trumpet their charity, their good works, their Friendship, Love, and Truth, as they do. Whatever may be the measure of the church's derelection from her duty in these respects, (and I doubt not it is very great and sore) positively, these Societies have a great deal less than no claim at all to the attributes of benevolence and charity. But, at the same time, the formal and showy manner in which these Societies have handled this topic, has been marked by an evident design with some to throw Christianity into disrepute, or into the shade, as touching these virtues. Many persons have exultingly lifted on high these establishments, as far more efficient in these respects than the church, and to such a length have they carried this matter, that their rivalry has become justly suspected as aiming against the Christian religion itself. Not that they were organized for that purpose—not that, as a body, they deliberately purposed such a work—nor that the whole, or the most of them, would knowingly lend their influence to such an end, (though the writer has no reason to suppose but that there are many among these Secret Orders, who would delight, if they could by any confederacy banish Christianity from the earth,) but that, in the zeal and enthusiasm resulting from the novelty, curiosity, and increase of these Orders in their early history, the members thereof generally have been so impressed with the prospect of realizing their ideas of a perfect system, and complete success, that they have, as a mass, thrown themselves, or in other words their institutions, into the scales of competition with and rivalry over Christianity, in point of good works, especially in the line of benevolence. I think such has been the actual position and practical influence of multitudes of good men, (church members,) and that they were not shocked at their position, simply because they did not know that it was what it was. And farther, it is important to notice, that while these Societies, or their defenders, have indirectly conceded that Christianity has great excellence in it, by contrasting their boasted system with it, yet it is their system which they intend to aggrandize, and not Christianity—that it is the mightiness of Christianity, as a competitor for the prize of glory, not a disposition to promote that glory, which induces them to take such notice of it as they do. I wish to be understood as speaking in general, not universal terms.

Religion.—The opposition of Secret Societies on the score of religion, I will present in a few extracts. In an editorial article contained in the "Golden Rule, and Odd Fellows' Family Companion," of March 21st, 1846, I find the following:—

"Yes, we verily believe, and it is not without confirmatory testimony from men of all creeds and churches, that the truths and principles of Odd Fellowship, and the practice which they inculcate, are the highest form of Christianity which the age presents to us."

The truths and practice of Odd Fellowship, this age's highest form of Christianity! If the truths from which this highest form of Christianity flows are the rightful property of Odd Fellowship, then Christianity must owe its highest present form, completeness, or perfection, to Odd Fellowship. When contemplating Odd Fellowship and Christianity as two things, it seems that the man who holds the views above quoted must feel more regard and esteem for the former than the latter. Does the reader doubt this? Let us hear our author farther then:—

"It is the spirit of Odd Fellowship, then, as it appears in these lofty teachings, and the practice learned of them—the angel whose shining garments and heavenly face gleam through all the forms of the Institution—it is this that we reverence and love. And it is to this shrine we ask all men to approach, confident that, having once come, they will need no entreaty to induce them to come a second time. . . . In the name of God and of his children, we say, let it still go forward, and utter its noble truths, and do its divine and blessed work."

The same paper of Feb. 7th, 1846, has an article under the heading of "Our Order," in which is found the following:—

"Then, indeed, ours is a high and holy calling, which is not only sanctioned by the silent whisperings of our honest consciences, but by the oracles of heaven, the law of God."

Then, speaking of the Order's liberality and deeds of humanity and love, the writer says:—

"Such principles shall live till time shall be no longer, and the glories of an eternal sunshine shall burst upon our vision and open to us an eternal day. Our basis, then, is as permanent as the pillars of heaven. Upon it we have securely rested the whole superstructure of Odd Fellowship; to it we mean to cling as to a 'harbinger of brighter days,' and inclosed in its happy embrace we hope to die."

In the same paper of Jan. 10th, 1846, in an article headed "The Work of our Order," speaking of their commands, mottoes, and lectures, the writer says:—

"These declare the true work of every Odd Fellow to consist in the duties of a child unto God."

In the Rev. W. Easton's ninth letter to Dr. DeWitt, he thus alludes to the position of the Sons of Temperance on this point:—

"The blasphemous pretensions of the Order, again, claiming the power of performing the work of the Gospel, purifying the heart, &c., should lead every follower of the Lamb to abhor and renounce it. In addition to what has been quoted, there are many wicked expressions in your journals, &c., that might have been referred to, in proof of the anti-Christian character of your Order. The Grand Scribe of your 'Grand Fountain Head,' says your 'Order is founded on a rock, and cannot be overthrown,' that 'the Great Patriarch above has smiled upon its efforts—that the spirit of love has been diffused,' &c. I need not dwell on the impropriety of such language—on the blasphemy of tipifying the Almighty as the Great Patriarch in the celestial hall, thus prostituting the name and the glory of the great Jehovah to do honor to a wicked and worthless Order. And this blasphemy, while remaining connected with the Order, you sanction. How plain, that in the pulpit, in the church, and in the secret hall, you are under very different masters, and obeying very different laws. The mystery is, how a minister can perform these different sorts of service."

In these extracts is seen a specimen of the tone with which the journals and disciples or members of these organizations often speak on the score of religion. And what is the import of what they say, if it is not that their system possesses the power to save the souls of men—to bring them to the enjoyment of blessed immortality? I ask, what all this does mean, if it does not ascribe the power of REDEMPTION to these establishments? If that is not its meaning, I confess I do not know what its meaning is. But I think I do know what its meaning is, and that it is REDEMPTION; let him deny it who is able to disprove it. If we believe these quotations to be the honest expressions of their author's convictions, we see that they have embraced their systems with the expectation that they would answer all the ends which Christianity professes to accomplish. In these men, therefore, we have just so many actual instances of the practical and adverse influence of these systems against Christianity. An openly declared opposition to Christianity, if it should be thought to add at all to the evidence of opposition in the case, (which I very much doubt,) would nevertheless not add to, but diminish from, the power, or effect, of said opposition, and would be far preferable to that which is now carried on, and rendered successful, and fatal, as it were, by the kisses which are employed to hide and facilitate its dark and dreadful workings. I will now close by putting two questions to the reader:—

1st. Have I proved Secret Societies to be opposed to Christianity?

2d. Will you see to it that you are not accessory to such opposition?

A MEMBER OF THE CONFERENCE.

ASSOCIATIONAL MISSION.

To the churches and brethren composing the Western Seventh-day Baptist Association:—

DEAR BRETHREN,—Your Executive Board, at a meeting held at Alfred, January 2d, directed me to make to you the following statement, with the suggestions and appeal appended thereto.

STATEMENT.—On receiving the reports of your missionaries, the Board were encouraged and greatly strengthened in their purposes of Christian benevolence in supplying destitute churches and communities with that precious Gospel which is indeed the word of life. God has graciously owned the means of His own appointing, and blessed the labors of His humble servants to the strengthening of the hopes of His saints, the reclaiming of the wanderer, and the conversion of sinners.

Bro. JAMES BAILEY informs us, that his appointments in Sharon, Pennsylvania, have been well attended, and that good attention is given to the preaching of the word; and although his heart has not been cheered by the conversion of sinners, yet he is encouraged with the hope that the seed sown will result in a precious harvest in due season. Bro. Bailey has two appointments at two different places in the above-mentioned town, preaching at each once in two weeks. It was resolved by the Board, that Bro. Bailey be requested to continue his labors as heretofore.

Bro. HIRAM P. BURDICK reports for the last quarter, that he has spent in the service of the Board sixty-six days, preached twenty-eight sermons, made ninety-nine family visits; there have been thirteen hopeful conversions, seventeen backsliders professedly reclaimed, seven persons baptized, and three have embraced the Bible Sabbath. This account, though brief, cannot fail to cheer your hearts. How thankful ought we to be for these distinguishing favors and mercies to the sinners of our race, and for that blessed Gospel, which is the heavenly almoner of the precious gifts.

The receipts for the last quarter, so far as they have come to the knowledge of the Board, are as follows:—Oswago, forty-six dollars and two cents; Independence, eleven dollars and fifty-seven cents; 1st Alfred, sixteen dollars and twenty-five cents; Ulysses one dollar; source not known, fifty-two cents; making seventy-five dollars and thirty-four cents.

The Board would suggest to those churches and brethren who have withheld their support from this work, that they are deficient in an important christian duty, and that this deficiency is embarrasing, both to the Board and the missionaries in its employ. What better evidence can we give of christian character, than to be found laboring faithfully and self-denyingly for the promotion of Christ's kingdom? And do you not perceive that if you fail to do your part in this matter, the Board becomes at once embarrassed? What can the Board do if you refuse to furnish the means for the carrying out of its plans? And further do you not perceive that you discourage your missionaries, where you thus refuse the expression of your confidence in them, and your sympathy for their work? Is this fulfilling the law of Christianity?

And now we make another appeal, and we urge you, dear brethren, by every interest that you have in the cause of our blessed Saviour, to come up at once and engage heartily in this work.

Bro. Burdick's appointment is renewed, and is extended to the first fourth-day in April. N. V. HULL, Cl'k of the Board.

ALFRED, Jan 7th, 1850.

MARRIAGES ON THE SABBATH.—The Presbytery of Bethel, Pa., recently adopted the following resolution:—

"Resolved, That in the deliberate judgment of this Presbytery, marriage on the Sabbath is in violation of the fourth commandment, consequently sinful in the sight of God, and deserving to be viewed and treated accordingly by the authorities of the Church."

It may be very easy for the Presbytery to sustain the position here assumed, that "marriage on the Sabbath is a violation of the fourth commandment." But we should like to see some member of it attempt to prove, that marriage on Sunday is a violation of the fourth commandment. That we are inclined to think, is easier said than done.

A MILLION OF CHURCH MONEY ENJOYED BY ONE FAMILY.—It is calculated that the late Bishop North, of Manchester, the father of the present Earl of Guildford, obtained for himself and family, during his lifetime, nearly a million of money out of the Established Church. He lived to a great age himself, and he made all his sons and sons-in-law prebends, besides giving them the richest church gifts in his diocess. His favorite son, the present Earl of Guildford, was loaded with wealthy preferments, for he was at one time prebend of Winchester Cathedral, rector of St. Mary, Southampton, and of Alresford, and master of St. Cross Hospital.

THE JEWS IN EUROPE.

The Jews have played an important part in the recent revolutionary movements in Europe. Hence, probably, the severity of the measures recently adopted towards them in Italy and Hungary, where they have not only been reduced to their former state of oppression and degradation, but subjected to fines, confiscations, and imprisonments, nearly as cruel as those endured by them in the middle ages. In a paper upon the subject, prepared by the Rev. Mr. Smith, of the Free Church of Scotland, who has long been a resident in Germany, it is said:—

"A large majority of the democratic societies have Jews for their leaders and chief speakers. If smaller in point of numbers, they have generally in these unions the ascendancy in talent, tact, and, what is of equal importance in such times—daring. The two levers of greatest power at present in the political world are money and the press. In respect to the former, the Jews have long had the supremacy. They rule the exchange in the greater part of Europe. Even governments have been known to tremble in the ante-chamber of a Jew. But the press of Continental Europe is no less in Jewish hands; every department of periodical literature, more especially, swarms with Jewish laborers. In the majority of cases, the newspaper press is conducted by Jews, as editors, sub-editors, and occasional contributors. The correspondence is almost entirely managed by them. These men are, without doubt, the leaders of public opinion on the Continent, and are covertly or more openly, as it suits the circumstances of the moment, undermining at once the national institutions and the national faith."

The following paragraph from the London Quarterly Review contains statements of the same import, which may probably be relied upon:—

"Nor should we omit to mention another influential body who have played a distinguished part in all the revolutions of Germany—we mean the Jews. At least one-third, if not one-half of the public journals in Germany, have for a long time been conducted by Jewish editors. In Austria, the most forward among the extreme democrats have been Jews. Dr. Jellinck, for instance, who was executed with Dr. Bekker on the 23d November of last year, at Vienna, and whose journal had been an organ of the red party since the month of March last, appears to have been a Jew, born on the frontiers of Moravia and Hungary. The names of Borne and Heine, both of whom died refugees in Paris, both occupying a prominent position in the most advanced section of revolutionary writers, are doubtless familiar to our readers. Both of these daring adventurers were Jews. In Austria, the Jews have of late played so prominent a part in revolutionary politics, that out of ten leading men six or eight will be found to belong to that nation. In Prussia, likewise, the most violent journals are in the hands of the Jews, whose leader in the Chamber at Berlin is Jacobi, a member of the extreme left."

COLORED BAPTIST ASSOCIATION.—There is an Association of Baptist churches in Illinois, composed of colored persons, and embracing an aggregate membership of 243, of whom 43 were baptized during the past year. They held their last annual meeting at Wood River, in September. The Western Christian says that "resolutions were passed setting apart the Fourth of July next for fasting and prayer to Almighty God, that the blasting curse of slavery in America may be destroyed; and recommending to the churches to devote one evening in each month to reading and exchanging views upon the Scriptures," &c.

COPYRIGHT OF SERMONS.—A question has arisen in Paisley, Scotland, whether sermons openly delivered in public are copyright property—which will probably come before the Courts for decision. The facts of the case are of the ordinary kind. A reporter makes notes of a sermon, and announces it for publication. The preacher enters his demurrer, and the intending publisher intimating his intention to persist, an interdict has been applied for and granted—preventing the issue of the work until the legal right shall have been tested. Questions of great interest to the reading world hang on the issue.

PRESBYTERIANISM IN MASSACHUSETTS.—The Presbyterian form of Church Government does not seem to take well in Massachusetts. A correspondent of the N. Y. Observer, who is traveling there, says that two Presbyterian churches in Newburyport, and a small one recently formed in Boston, are the only churches of that order in the State. In 1633, he says, a body of Presbyterians in Scotland fixed upon the mouth of the Merrimack as a place of settlement, and applied to the General Court to know whether they would be tolerated in maintaining their peculiar ecclesiastical system. The General Court passed a special enactment for protection, but for some reason, not now known, the enterprise fell through.

CONTROVERSY ON BAPTISM.—A reply to Mr. Noel's work on "Christian Baptism," is announced as shortly to be published in London. It is to be entitled "Scripture Baptism," and is the production of the Rev. Henry J. Gamble, of Hanover Chapel, Peckham. Mr. Noel is also about to bring out a new volume on the mode of baptism, and this in all probability will call out a reply.

THE SABBATH CONVENTION AT PETERBORO.—We have barely room to direct attention to the Call (which will be found in another column) for a Sabbath Convention at Peterboro, N. Y. The time and place are favorable, and the object ought to draw together a large assembly. Let the friends of a true Sabbath Reform make their arrangements to attend.

Western Baptist Theological Seminary.—About 15 years ago, some Baptists at Cincinnati, desirous of establishing a theological seminary for the West, purchased a tract of land near the village of Covington, Ky., and by a judicious sale of a part for village lots, realized an endowment of about $40,000 for the institution. They procured a charter from the legislature of Kentucky, the right being reserved of altering the charter at pleasure. Able men from the Free States were called to the professorships. But jealousies soon arose out of the "vexed question," slavery; and the Kentucky portion of the trustees, by a clandestine application to the legislature, obtained such an alteration of the charter as threw the whole power into their hands. One of the first acts of the new Board was to discharge the professors. The Central Christian Herald says:—

"The individuals who have had their hopes thus disappointed are determined not to give over their efforts to build up a Theological Seminary; and accordingly, on the first day of December a convention was held, composed of delegates from North-Western States, which resolved on the establishment of a new institution at Fair Mount, about two miles and a half north west of the city. Several individuals who have purchased a farm there, have donated thirty acres of ground (valued at $40,000) for that purpose. The donation has been accepted, and efficient measures will be forthwith adopted to carry the enterprise forward to completion. We wish it much success. The character of the present age is such, that no denomination of Christians can look for enlargement which has not an enlightened and educated ministry to guide and urge forward its movements."

Death of Rev. Dr. Miller.—This venerable divine, who has been for more than half a century one of the shining lights of the American Church, has been at length removed. He expired, as we learn from the Newark Daily Advertiser, after a long confinement, in the bosom of his family at Princeton, N. J.—having attained the patriarchal age of eighty years and two months. Dr. Miller was born near Dover, in the State of Delaware, where his reverend father—a native of Boston—was then settled as a pastor, October 31, 1769; and graduated at the University of Pennsylvania in 1789, having long been the oldest living graduate of that institution. He studied theology with Dr. Nesbit, at Carlisle, Pa., and was ordained and installed over the United Presbyterian Churches of New York in the summer of 1793. He continued in that responsible position until the spring of the year 1813, when he was called by the General Assembly to aid in founding the Theological Seminary at Princeton, of which he has been the senior Professor ever since, or rather, until he was constrained, at the last meeting of the Assembly, to ask to be relieved on account of declining health. The request was granted, but the prevailing sense of his worth and services was manifested by his election as an Emeritus Professor of the Institution which he had so served and adorned for some thirty-six years. During much of this period Dr. M. was also a leading member of the Board of Trustees of the College of New Jersey. Dr. M. was pre-eminently, in the best sense of the term, a Christian gentleman—whose personal address and deportment would have conciliated respect and attention in the most polished courts.

Another Prize Essay on the Sabbath.—The London Christian Times, in giving an account of matters at the Glasgow University, says, that a gentleman who has taken a warm interest in everything calculated to promote the proper observance of the Sabbath, has announced for the present session a prize of twenty guineas for the best Essay on "The Value of the Sabbath, when rightly observed, to Literary and Professional Men." The competition, in this instance, is open to all actual students, either in languages, philospby, medicine, law, or theology, attending the University for the current session. The Essays are to be given in to the Principal, on or before Monday, the 18th of March next, in the same form as the other University Prize Essays. The prize will be adjudged by the Theological Faculty, and will be delivered to the successful student on the 1st of May next. The Essay is to be the property of the writer, but the copy sent in, as in all similar cases, will be retained by the University. The gentleman in question has also intimated his intention of founding an Annual Prize of twenty guineas, in all time coming, under regulations similar to those already stated, for the best Essay on some topic connected with the Christian Sabbath."

Success of the Gospel among the Indians.—The December issue of the Indian Advocate records the continued success of the Gospel among the Creeks and Choctaws. In speaking of a baptism among the Creeks, at which twelve converts were baptized, Rev. H. F. Buckner says:—

"It is thought that more than one hundred Chiefs of the Creek Nation were present; among whom were the King, or head Chief, and his wife, who had come to see their son 'buried with Christ by baptism.' Among those who were baptized were D. N. and Lewis McIntosh, sons of Gen. William McIntosh, (who was killed by the hostile party in the late war,) and nephews of the present King."

Of the Choctaws, Rev. R. D. Potts says "Our prospects were never brighter than now." He had lately baptized eight, and was expecting to baptize others at another place.

The Committee of the American Tract Society charged with the award of the premium of $400 for the best essay on "Systematic Beneficence," have recommended that it be divided equally between Rev. Edward A. Lawrence, of Marblehead, Mass.; Rev. Samuel Harris, of Conway, Mass.; Rev. Parsons Cooke, of Lynn, Mass.; and Rev. Sereno D. Clark, of Ashfield, Mass.

General Intelligence.

TWO WEEKS LATER FROM CALIFORNIA.

A letter from Bayard Taylor to the N. Y. Tribune, (which was brought by steamer Unicorn to Panama, and thence by ship to New Orleans, from which place it was telegraphed to New York,) gives California news to Dec. 1. We copy the principal items.

The canvass of votes cast at the State Election shows that about 15,000 were given in all, a smaller number than that of the citizens entitled to vote, and much smaller than was anticipated. Peter H. Burnet is elected Governor, and John McDougal, Lieutenant Governor. The Members elect to the U. S. House of Representatives are George W. Wright and Edward Gilbert. All these gentlemen are Loco-Focos.

Labor is becoming constantly cheaper at San Francisco, on account of the great number of persons coming down from the mines to spend the winter, and seeking occupation in every department of industry.

The prices of vegetables there are enormous, owing to their scarcity, and, in fact, the necessaries of life generally, are much higher than they were at this time last year.

Heavy Boots are now selling at San Francisco at the rate of Ninety-six Dollars a pair.

The growth of the city of San Francisco is still without parallel, even in the records of magic. It now numbers twenty thousand regular inhabitants, to say nothing of the vast number of its transient population.

The last of the overland emigration that is to be expected this year has crossed the Sierra Nevada.

Those emigrants who came by the Truckker River and Salmon River routes have reached the settlements. About 70 teams who came by the way of Sampson's Pass were caught by the snows on the mountains, and at the last accounts were in the head waters of Deer Creek. Major Rucker with a sufficient party and all needful supplies left Sacramento City for their relief.

The rainy season has set in and has made the ground among the mines as well as the roads thither, impassable in many places. A great number of the miners are without their usual supplies and have no means of obtaining necessaries. There will be much suffering if the roads do not become better.

Freight from Stockton to the Diggings is 75 cents per pound.

Flour at Stockton is $1 per pound, and other articles in the same proportion.

The carpenters at Sacramento City made a strike for higher wages, as they were only paid $12 a day, whereupon the contractors settled the difficulty by raising their wages to $16.

TWO WEEKS LATER FROM EUROPE.

By the Steamship Canada, just arrived, we have two weeks later intelligence from all parts of Europe and Asia.

Accounts from Vienna and Berlin of the 22d ult., state that a rebellion on a most formidable scale had broken out in Servia and Sclavonia, and the military boundaries are up in arms against the Austrian Government. The Sclavonian and Servian boundary regiments have revolted and raised the cordon of the Turkish frontier. The boundary regiments which have revolted are among the bravest and hardiest in the Austrian service. The ground of their rising is resistance to the decree of November 18, organizing the Woiwodeschaft. The chief movement is in Syrmian, Peterwordein, and Zepaikist military districts, which are exasperated at being excluded from the woiwodeschaft. The military force alone of the rebels is estimnted at 120,000 men, with 110 cannon, and if they are joined by the Croats, which appears highly probable, they will have 200,000 men, with 300 cannon. The numbers of the insurgents are daily swelled by deserters from the Austrian regiments in Peterwordein, Esseg, &c. It is said that Russia has been intriguing to get up this insurrection, in order to have both Austria and Turkey entirely dependent upon her.

The Hamburg Borsenhalle announces the discovery of a new and very extensive conspiracy in Russia. Its focus was at Moscow, and its object was to depose the dynasty of Romanoff. The coup de main against the Czar was to have been attempted on New-Year's day. The conspirators, who have been hitherto discovered, all belong to the high nobility and to the Russian National party—the party of Boyards. Not a single Pole is compromised in this affair. The conspiracy is exclusively aristocratic and Russian.

The Gazette of Breslau says it is the intention of Russia to concentrate all her forces on the Turkish frontier, in order to be able at any time to take advantage of events which may arise, and that Austria shall garrison Poland.

A mutiny broke out in one of the Austrian regiments stationed in Comorn on the 19th ult., through which several superior officers were killed by the exasperated men.

The Journal du Havre states on the authority of private letters from the United States, that the Cabinet at Washington has just admitted the justice of the demand for indemnities made by Mr. G. T. Poussin, and which was the origin of his dispute with Mr. Clayton.

The Pope, it is said, will not return to Rome until after the projected loan has been completed. There has been some disturbance in the Roman provinces, in consequence of the re-imposition of the flour tax.

Plank Roads.—New York state is now adding immensely to her facilities of internal intercourse by means of Plank Roads. Utica Oswego and perhaps Rome have hitherto taken the lead in their construction, but they are fast becoming all but universal. There are probably not less than One Thousand Miles in aggregate extent at present, and are being rapidly extended. When wisely located, they pay liberal dividends to their stock-holders, while their advantages to the public may thus be elucidated: Over the old roads, a teamster, span of horses and wagon would in 'good going' transport one ton thirty-five miles per day, at a net average cost of $2 50. In bad weather the load must be much smaller, or the distance traversed would be less. On a Plank Road, the same team will transport 2 1-2 tons, at least forty miles per day in all seasons, at a cost, including tolls, of $3 1-8 or less than half the former expense. New villages are springing up and old ones being renovated by virtue of Plank Roads. They form important feeders to Railways, and obviate the stagnations of business hitherto attendant on foul weather. In short, they are Roads that the people of any section even half settled can make without calling on distant capitalists for aid; they are constructed of timber not otherwise valuable, mainly by labor when it is least needed in other pursuits, and have already added vastly though noiselessly to the comfort and substantial wealth of our people. PROCEEDINGS IN CONGRESS LAST WEEK.

In Senate. SECOND-DAY, Jan. 7.

Mr. Clay presented a petition, numerously signed, asking the recognition of the Republic of Liberia. Referred to Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. Dickinson presented a petition of citizens of New-York, without distinction of party, asking that no appropriation may be made for the Embassy to Austria.

After some unimportant business, the Senate proceeded to consider Mr. Clemens' resolution, calling upon the President for copies of instructions given to civil or military Governors of California since the 4th of March last, or to any agent of the Government, relative to the organization of a State Government; also how the delegates to the Constitutional Convention were elected, &c. The resolution was finally laid on the table.

Mr. Downs' Resolution of Inquiry relative to the proceedings in the case of Rey, was taken up and adopted.

Mr. Douglass's Resolution of Inquiry relative to the extinguishment of the Indian title to all lands east of the Sierra Nevada mountains, and the setting apart a territory for the permanent occupation of the Indian tribes, was taken up and adopted.

Mr. Dickinson's resolution of inquiry, relative to the appointment by the Postmaster General, or his subordinates, of deputy postmasters, before the expiration of the Commissions of those who were removed, &c., was taken up, and after some discussion laid over.

The resolution offered by Mr. Cass, "that the Committee on Foreign Relations be instructed to inquire into the expediency of suspending diplomatic relations with Austria," was taken up, and remarks were made upon it by Messrs. Hale, Clay, and Foote; after which the Senate adjourned.

House of Representatives.

The Committee on Rules reported amendments to the same, which were made the order for Fifth-day.

The House then proceeded to the election of Clerk, and after balloting three times to no purpose, adjourned.

In Senate. THIRD-DAY, Jan. 8.

Mr. Underwood presented a memorial from citizens of Kentucky, setting forth the evils of war, and asking Congress to take measures for the establishment of a Congress of Nations, who shall arbitrate disputed matters between different powers.

Mr. Upham presented resolutions of the Legislature of Vermont, on the subject of Slavery, which he moved be printed. This motion gave rise to a long discussion, in the course of which several Southern members indulged pretty freely in accusations and threats against the North for interference with the subject of slavery. The motion was informally passed over.

The consideration of the resolution in regard to suspending diplomatic relations with Hungary, was resumed, and remarks upon it were made by Messrs. Foote and Hall, which occupied the attention of the Senate till the hour of adjournment.

House of Representatives.

Nothing done but to ballot for Clerk, and debate questions of order.

In Senate. FOURTH-DAY, Jan. 9.

Mr. Seward presented papers relative to the establishment of a Branch Mint of New-York, showing its necessity and propriety.

Mr. Dickinson presented the memorial of the Panama Railroad Company, asking the passage of a law authorizing compensation for services which they may render to the Government when this road shall be completed.

Mr. Seward, in pursuance of notice, introduced a bill to prevent the sale, or farming out, of offices, which he said was in accordance with the English statute on the subject.—He also submitted the following resolution, which lies over:

Resolved, That the conduct of Austria and of Russia in the the war in which these powers have subverted the nationality and the liberties of Hungary, has been marked by injustice, oppression and barbarity, which justly deserves the condemnation of mankind, while they commend the Hungarian people to the sympathies of other nations, and especially of Republican States; and that the Committee on the Public Lands be directed to inquire, and report, on the propriety of setting apart a portion of the Public Domain to be granted, free of all charges, to the exiles of Hungary already arrived, and hereafter to arrive in the United States, as well as to the exiles fleeing from oppression in other European countries.

Rev. C. M. Butler, of Washington, was elected Chaplain, after which the Senate adjourned.

House of Representatives.

Balloting for Clerk, as usual.

In Senate. FIFTH-DAY, Jun. 10.

The whole day was spent in discussing the Vermont Resolutions on Slavery; without disposing of them, the Senate adjournrd over to Second-day of the present week.

House of Representatives.

Balloting for Clerk, with no better result.

House of Representatives. SIXTH-DAY, Jan. 11.

On the 42d ballott for Clerk, several Southern Democrats went for Campbell, the Whig candidate, and he was elected.

The House then proceeded to the election of a Sergeant-at-arms, but after two ineffectual ballots, adjourned.

House of Representatives. SABBATH, Jan. 12.

After a brief debate upon a motion to print 10,000 copies of the Report on Commerce and Navigation, the House went into the election of Sergeant-at-arms, but nothing was accomplished.

Dr. Webster in Jail.—We learn, says the Boston Mail, that Dr. Webster has made frequent complaints to Mr. Andrews, the jailor, that the occupants of the cells in his immediate vicinity are in the habit of shouting out to him nights, uttering all sorts of unkind epithets, such as, "You're the man that cut up Dr. Parkman," "You're a murderer," "You're a blood-thirsty scoundrel," &c., &c. Mr. Andrews had no other knowledge of this matter except what he heard from Dr. Webster. He one night placed two men in the passage-way that leads to the cells, where they remained until morning, but heard no unusual or unpleasant noises. The day following this the Doctor repeated his complaint to Mr. Andrews, saying that "last night the same outrage had been repeated." Mr. Andrews, knowing this not to be true, of course concludes that the Doctor's imagination is so wrought upon, or that his dreams are of such an unpleasant character, as to produce in some degree mental aberration. Dr. Webster has lost much of the buoyancy of spirit that sustained him when he first became an inmate of the jail.

Distinguished Emigrants.—Among the emigrants that have lately arrived in Galveston, Texas, is Dr. Florian Moerdes, recently Minister of the Interior of the Government of Bavaria and Baden during the brief career of its Republican existence. The News says he is accompanied by his lady, (born Countess Armansperg, daughter of the new Premier Minister of the Kingdom of Bavaria,) and his brother, Major Francis Moerdes, late of the 1st Regiment of Dragoons of Padez. Dr. Moerdes and his associates have been compelled to leave that country on account of their political opinions, but they are not alone, for there are also many thousands who are under the necessity of expatriation. Dr. Moerdes believes that at least from some thirty to forty thousand families will be induced to emigrate to America from the same cause. They will generally embrace the more wealthy and better educated portion of the German population.

SUMMARY.

Three burglars entered the house of Robert Rickets, Rising Sun, Ind., a short time since, and carried off $938 in silver. They took the money from the sleeping apartment of Mr. R., who was awake at the time, but they threatened him with instant death in case he should make the least alarm. Two of the rascals have since been arrested in Cincinnati, and have told where the money was deposited; so it will probably be recovered.

The Maysville (N. Y.) Sentinel publishes the death of three persons who were frozen to death while laboring under the effects of drink. One was Mr. George Walkup, of Jamestown, aged 47, who leaves a worthy family to lament his melancholy death; another was Mr. P. Parkhurst, of Westfield; he was about 32 years of age, a shoemaker by trade, and leaves a wife and four small children to mourn his untimely fate; and the third was a man named Evans, of Clymer, who also leaves a wife and family.

Mr. Bancroft, the American Historian, and late Minister from our Government to England, has returned laden with valuable materials for the further illustration of our history. His position in England afforded him great advantages in making researches, and his success has been commensurate to his labors. Mr. Bancroft proposes to reside in New-York, and to devote himself to literary pursuits.

A committee of five, of different denominations, of which the Rev. Basil Manly, D.D. is chairman, was appointed, at the late meeting of the Alabama Baptist State Convention, to award a premium of $200 for the best Essay on the Duty of Christian Masters to their Servants—unfolding the teachings of the Scriptures on the subject.

The ship Charles Crocker, which was cleared from Charleston on 2d inst. for Liverpool, had one of the largest and most valuable cargoes ever shipped from that port. It consisted of 3,960 bales Upland Cotton, weighing 1,523,730 lbs. valued at $162,259 90; and 60 bales Sea Island, weighing 20,816 lbs. and valued at $3,425. Total 4020 bales, weighing 1,549,549 lbs. and valued at $165,634 90.

An extensive conflagration occurred at Akron, Ohio, on the night of the 28th December, destroying a large part of that flourishing town. Thirty business establishments were consumed. The loss is estimated at from $40,000 to $50,000, of which two-thirds are covered by insurance. The Akron Bank was burnt—loss $3,000; funds, books and papers saved.

A Mr. Kinkhead, who arrived at St. Louis recently, from a journey across the plains, says that a new colony of Mormons has been formed, and they have made a settlement 260 miles south of Salt Lake City. Twenty-five Mormon preachers crossed the Plains with Mr. Kinkhead. It is their intention to preach Mormonism over the whole world, and make new converts.

The last was an unfortunate year for steamboats. Not fewer than 40 were burned, sunk, blown up, or seriously damaged, on the Mississippi and its main tributaries within six months.

We learn from the Richmond (Ky,) Chronicle, that the Grand Jury of Madison county, after an investigation of the Foxtown rencontre, in which Cyrus Turner was killed by Cassius M. Clay, failed to find an indictment in the case.

Richard Neale, free colored man, recently left New York, for Richmond, Va., with the sum necessary to redeem his wife and six children from slavery. He received contributions from several individuals, and was aided by the colonization society.

At the recent ordination of Mr. Asa C. Bronson, Pastor of the Church at Hanson, Mass., the father and two brothers assisted in the services, which made them unusually interesting.

A newspaper in England circulating 10,000 copies daily, has to pay over $17,000 a year to the Government for stamp duty alone,

The whole number of Unitarian churches in the United States is 246. Of these no fewer than 165 are in the State of Massachusetts.

Among the 300 boys who were taught by the late Dr. Abbott, of Exeter, are Lewis Cass, Levi Woodbury, Daniel Webster, Alexander H. and Edward Everett, Jared Sparks, Geo. Bancroft, Henry Ware, Jr., John G. Palfrey, John A. Dix, and Joseph S. Buckminster.

Early on the morning of Christmas day the dwelling of a colored man named Wells, residing at the Navy Yard, Washington, caught fire, and, sad to relate, four human beings fell victims to the flames.

At a town meeting recently held in Westerly, R. I., Joseph Potter was elected Representative in the General Assembly of Rhode Island, in place of Nathan F. Dixon resigned.

A bookseller of London recently bought a lot of books at auction; on examining them he found in one of the volumes, between some pasted leaves, a £50 and two £10 Bank of England notes.

A recent order is said to have forbidden married men to hold any office in the Emperor of Austria's household, because, as is supposed, he wishes to have no tales told out of doors.

Of the 400 shipwrights of Hull, Eng., a large ship-building port, only 185 are now in employ, and the average of their wages for the last twelve months has not exeeded 12s. 6d. ($2,50,) a week.

Twenty pilots manned a life boat to go to the assistance of a brig on shore during the late storm, at the mouth of the Tyne river, England. Lamentable to state, the whole number were drowned.

MARRIED.

In Alfred, January 3d, by Eld. N. V. Hull, Mr. Thomas Champlin to Miss Caroline Odell, all of Alfred.

On the same day, by the same, Mr. Ephraim J. Brewster, of Andover, to Miss Mary E. Burdick, of Alfred.

In Pawcatuck, R. I., Jan. 8th, by Eld. A. B. Burdick, Mr. Albert S. Burdick, of West Edmeston, N. Y., to Miss Mary E. Wells, of Hopkinton, R. I.

DIED.

In the city of Chicago, Ill., Friday evening, Dec. 28th, after a painful and protracted illness in the head, Henry Silas, only son of Henry W. and Harriet R. Clarke, aged six years and ten days. While on a visit to the East, during the past season, with his parents, the subject of this notice received a slight injury near the base of the brain, from which, after a few days' illness, it was supposed he had recovered. Slight symptoms of disease were repeatedly observed, until about three weeks before his death, when the disease showed itself in a violent fit, and finally terminated his life. His sufferings, which were acute, were borne with fortitude and quiet submission. Endowed by nature with high intellectual powers, and with the heart of an angel, he had endeared to him a large circle of friends, who, with his heart-stricken parents, will long mourn his early death. Too pure for earth, his bright spirit has taken an early flight to a better land.

> "His life was like the dew-drop,
> That glitters on the rose;
> His spirit, like the timid dove,
> In Heaven has found repose."

In Pawcatuck, R. I., Jan. 8th, of apoplexy, Miss Thankful Clark, daughter of Phineas Clark, aged 64 years. Sister Clark was a member of the Pawcatuck Seventh-day Baptist Church, and had been a servant of Christ for forty-two years. In connection with a mild and amiable disposition, she possessed a depth of piety which manifested itself in her unabating interest in the promotion of every good work, and in her readiness to "do good unto all," as her retired position and humble means gave her "opportunity." By her death, the family has lost a valuble relative, the sick and distressed a sympathizing friend, the Church a bright ornament, and the cause of benevolence a "cheerful giver." Although her tongue is silent in death, yet by the good example which as a rich legacy she has bequeathed to the cause of Christ, she will still continue to speak; and although passed from visible existence, she will long live in the memory of those who have known her.

THE NATIONAL PREACHER.

Change of Proprietorship—New Volume—Portrait of Dr. Spring.

THIS periodical, so long and favorably known as the repository of the choicest efforts of the American evangelical clergy, of all denominations, will hereafter be conducted by Rev. Francis C. Woodworth, and published by the subscriber.

The January number, commencing the twenty-fourth volume, contains two able discourses, one from Rev. Dr. Spring, of New York, and the other from Rev. R. S. Storrs, Jr., of Brooklyn, with an excellent Portrait of Dr. Spring, engraved on steel. The numerous admirers of this gifted clergyman can now obtain a most truthful and striking likeness, at a trifling expense.

☞ The present is the most favorable season to subscribe. Yearly subscriptions $1, in advance—single numbers 12½ cents—bound volumes $1 25—the whole 23 volumes $18.

New and liberal offer to Clergymen.—Any clergyman who will send the names of three new subscribers, and $3, shall receive the fourth copy gratis.

A specimen number will be sent to any person, on application, post-paid. Orders may be forwarded by mail, at the publisher's risk. All communications should in future be addressed to D. A. WOODWORTH,
135 Nassau-street, New York.

Mail Line between Boston and New York.

REGULAR MAIL LINE BETWEEN BOSTON AND NEW YORK via Stonington and Providence. Inland route, without ferry, change of cars or baggage! The new steamer C. VANDERBILT, Capt. Joel Stone, and COMMODORE, Capt. William H. Frazee, in connection with the Stonington and Providence and Boston and Providence Railroads, leaving New York daily, Sundays excepted, from Pier No. 2 North River, at 4 o'clock P. M., and Stonington at 8 o'clock P. M. or upon the arrival of the mail train from Boston. These steamers were built expressly for the route, and are in every respect particularly adapted to the navigation of Long Island Sound. The accommodations for passengers are commodious and comfortable—the officers capable and experienced. The route being the shortest and most direct between Boston and New York, passengers are enabled to arrive in ample time for the morning lines of steamboats and railroads running to various points from those cities. The C. VANDERBILT will leave New York Tuesday, Thursday, and Saturday. Leave Stonington Monday, Wednesday, and Friday. The COMMODORE will leave New York Monday, Wednesday, and Friday. Leave Stonington Tuesday, Thursday, and Saturday. For passage, berths, state-rooms or freight, application may be made to the agents on the wharf, and at the office, 10 Battery-place.

Scientific and Practical Agriculture.

HENRY STEPHENS, F. R. S. E., of Edinburgh, the celebrated author of the "Book of the Farm," and PROF. NORTON, of Yale College, New Haven, are preparing for the Press, a Book to be entitled,

AGRICULTURE—SCIENTIFIC AND PRACTICAL.

It will embrace every subject of importance connected with Agriculture in all its various branches, both Theoretical and Practical. "Science, in as far as it has, up to the present time, been made available to Practice by Experiment, will be treated in its relation to every operation as it occurs in the course of the seasons." The work will be arranged under four distinct heads, representing the seasons, beginning with Winter and ending with Autumn. The following are among the subjects to be treated of in the first and second seasons, including the Introductory, viz:

Initiation.—On the best of the existing Methods for acquiring a thorough knowledge of Practical Husbandry the Difficulties to be encountered in learning practical husbandry, and on the Means of overcoming them; the different kinds of farming; the persons required to conduct and execute the labor of the farm; the branches of science most applicable to Agriculture; the Institutions of Education best suited to Agricultural science; the evils attending the neglect of landowners and others to learn Practical Agriculture; on observing the details and recording the facts of farming by the Agricultural student.

Practice—Winter.—On the treatment of farm-horses in Winter; the treatment of the farmer's saddle and harness horse in Winter; the fattening of swine; the treatment of fowls; the rationale of the feeding of animals; on the accommodation of the grain crops in the steading; threshing and winnowing of grain; on the forming of dunghills and composts in Winter; on the construction of liquid-manure tanks and carts; sea-weed as manure; on gaulting or claying the soil.

Practice—Spring.—Summary of the field operations, and of the weather in Spring; on the advantages of having field-work always in a state of forwardness; on the calving of cows; the milking of cows; the rearing of calves. On the sowing of spring wheat; on drilling up the land; on the sowing of beans, and peas, and tares. On the transplanting of turnip bulbs for producing seed. On the rolling of land. On the sowing of oats, lucerne, and sainfoin. On the lambing of ewes. On cross-ploughing land, and ribbing land for the seed-furrow. On the sowing of grass-seeds and barley. On the turning of dunghills. On the planting of potatoes. On paring and baring the surface. On the farrowing of sows; the hatching of fowls, &c.

The Work will also embrace many important operations not included in the ordinary routine of farming, such as "Judging of Land," "Stocking of a Farm," "Improvement of the Soil," &c., &c.

The contributions by Prof. Norton will add greatly to the value of the book, by adapting it to the Soil, Climate, Growth, &c., of our own Country; and the united labors of two such distinguished men will make this work one of the most complete and valuable to the American farmer, ever issued from the press.

The work will be comprised in about 18 Nos. of 80 pages each, with a steel engraving in every number; besides which it will contain more than 600 wood engravings, in the highest style of the art. It will be handsomely printed on fine paper, and sold at 25 cents a number, or $4 in advance for the eighteen numbers.

The First Number will be issued in the month of January, and the work will be completed in about one year. The first volume, written by Mr. Stephens, is already published in Edinburgh, and the American edition will be printed from the stereotype plates imported for that purpose.

Booksellers and Dealers in Periodicals will be furnished on liberal terms.

Postmasters and others remitting the money for three copies at the above prices, will receive a fourth copy gratis. Remittances will be at the risk of the Publishers, if the mailing of the money is proved—otherwise at the risk of the parties remitting. A postmaster's certificate of the money being duly mailed is always satisfactory evidence to the Publishers.

LAST WISHES OF A CHILD.

The following beautiful little poem was written by James T. Fields, for the Boston Book for 1850:—

All the hedges are in bloom,
And the warm west wind is blowing—
Let me leave this stifled room,
Let me go where flowers are growing!

Look! my cheek is thin and pale,
And my pulse is very low,
Ere my sight begins to fail,
Mother, dear, you 'll let me go!

Was not that the robin's song,
Piping through the casement wide?
I shall not be listening long,
Take me to the meadow-side—

Bear me to the willow brook—
Let me hear the merry mill—
On the orchard I must look,
Ere my beating heart is still.

Faint and fainter grows my breath—
Bear me quickly down the lane;
Mother, dear, this chill of death—
I shall never speak again!

Still the hedges are in bloom,
And the warm west wind is blowing;
Still we sit in silent gloom—
O'er her grave the grass is growing.

FREEDOM OF THE PUBLIC LANDS.

The following Bill was offered in the Senate of the United States, on Dec. 27, by Mr. Douglass of Illinois, and was referred to the Committee on Public Lands and ordered to be printed:—

A BILL granting one hundred and sixty acres of the Public Lands to the actual settler who shall reside thereon, and shall cultivate a portion thereof, for the period of four years.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That whenever any person shall take actual possession of any tract of the public lands according to the legal surveys and subdivisions, not exceeding one quarter section, and shall reside thereon and use and cultivate a portion thereof for the period of four successive years, he shall be entitled to a patent from the President of the United States for the same, upon the following terms and conditions, to wit:

First, Any person, wishing to avail himself of this act, and desiring time to enable him to erect his house and become an actual settler, may file with the Register of the Land Office in the district where the land shall be situated, an application in writing, signed by himself and verified by affidavit, specifying the legal description of the tract or quarter section upon which he proposes to settle, and setting forth that it is not occupied by any actual settler, which statement shall be received and filed by the Register, who shall thereupon designate the tract on the books and plats of his office as claimed by such applicant, and the said tract shall not be deemed subject to location or entry by any other person for the period of six months from the date of filing said application.

Second: Within six months from the filing of the application aforesaid, the applicant shall file with the Register of the Land Office a statement in writing, signed and sworn to by himself, and supported by the oaths of at least two disinterested witnesses, who shall have a personal knowledge of the facts recited in said statement, stating that the said applicant had taken possession of said tract or quarter section of land, by enclosing a portion thereof, and erecting a house thereon, and becoming an actual resident therein, specifying particularly the date of such possession and residence, and the extent of the enclosure, and the nature and value of the house and other improvements, which statement and affidavit shall be received and filed by the Register, who shall designate the said tract or quarter section on the books and plats of his office as having been located by the occupant, and thereby reserved from sale, location, or entry by any other person for the period of four years and six months.

Third: At the expiration of four years from the filing of said statement and affidavits as herein provided, the said occupant shall be entitled to a patent for his said land, by proving to the satisfaction of the Register and Receiver of the proper land office, by his own affidavit and the oaths of at least two disinterested and competent witnesses, that he has continued to reside on said tract or quarter section during the entire period aforesaid, and had cultivated a portion thereof during each of said years.

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, That the privileges of this act shall extend to any person being the head of a family, and all unmarried persons, male and female, above the age of 18 years, who shall comply with the terms and condition herein described.

SEC. 3. And be it further enacted, That the Commissioner of the General Land Office is hereby authorized to prepare and issue such rules and regulations consistent with this act, as shall be necessary and proper to carry its provisions into effect.

UNITED STATES ARMY.

By the Report of the Adjutant General of the army for the past year, we learn that the military establishment of the United States consists of 870 commissioned officers, and 8,982 non-commissioned officers, musicians, artificers, and privates, thus:—

General officers, 3; adjutant general's department, 14; inspector general's department, 2; judge advocate of the army, 1; quartermaster's department, 43; commissary general's department, 7; medical, 95; pay department, 28. These are all connected with the general staff. Corps of engineers, 43; corps of topographical engineers, 36; ordnance department, 37; military storekeepers, 17; two regiments of dragoons, 1,300; one regiment of mounted riflemen, 800; four regiments of artillery, 2,808; eight regiments of infantry, 4,464, one regiment of engineer soldiers, sappers, miners and pontoniers, 100; ordnance sergeants, 53; aggregate of the authorized military establishment 9,862. The latest returns show 9,003 men in service, including recruits and men unassigned, being 154 more than authorized; but returns from distant regiments not being later than July and August, it is estimated that there is a deficiency of 500. The reported strength of all the regiments is 7,974. The number of enlisted men of the ordnance department in service, according to the last returns, is 513. The number is not restricted by law.

The authorized force (troops of the line) consists of 2,100 cavalry, officers and men; 2,808 artillery, of which eight companies are organized as light artillery, and 4,464 infantry—making in the aggregate 9,372.

The number of Major Generals having been reduced, as contemplated by the act of July 19, 1848, to one, Major-Gen. Scott, General-in-Chief, in accordance with the President's instructions, resumed command of the Army on the 11th of May, 1849, and established his head-quarters at the City of New-York. The number of Brigadier Generals having in like manner been reduced to two, Brigadier Generals Wool and Twiggs (Major Generals by brevet) have been assigned to the command respectively of the eastern and western geographical divisions.

THE FARMER—A BEAUTIFUL PICTURE.

BY HON. EDWARD EVERETT.

The man who stands upon his own soil, who feels that by the laws of the land in which he lives—by the laws of civilized nations—he is the rightful and exclusive owner of the land which he tills, is by the constitution of our nature, under a wholesome influence, not easily imbibed from any other source. He feels—other things being equal—more strongly than another the character of a man as the lord of the inanimate world. Of this great and wonderful sphere, which, fashioned by the hand of the God, and upheld by his power, is rolling through the heavens, a portion is his; his from the centre to the sky. It is the space on which the generation before him moved in its rounds of duties; and he feels himself connected, by a visible link, with those who preceded him, as he is also to those who will follow him, and to whom he is to transmit a home. Perhaps his farm has come down to him from his fathers. They have gone to their last home; but he can trace their footsteps over the scenes of his daily labors. The roof which shelters him was reared by those to whom he owes his being. Some interesting domestic tradition is connected with every enclosure. The favorite fruit tree was planted by his father's hand. He sported in his boyhood beside the brook, which still winds through the meadow. Through the field lies the path to the village school of earliest days. He still hears from his window the voice of the Sabbath bell, which called his fathers and his forefathers to the house of God, and near at hand is the spot where his parents laid down to rest, and where, when his time is come, he shall be laid by his children. These are the feelings of the owner of the soil. Words cannot paint them—gold cannot buy them; they flow out of the deepest fountains of the heart; they are the life-spring of a fresh, healthy, and generous national character.

PROGRESS OF A MONEY-MAKER.

Judge Martin, who recently died at New-Orleans, at the age of 84, left his father's house at Marseilles, while a lad, with four hundred francs in money, about eighty dollars, as his sole patrimony. To avoid starvation, after he had rambled about the West Indies, he got a place as apprentice to a printer in North Carolina. After three years' service he was received as journeyman. In three years he laid up money enough to buy out his employer. Afterwards he came to Louisiana. There, while Judge of the Supreme Court, he was also partner of a brick yard. After seven years his partner died. In settling their accounts, it was found that every item of their joint household expenses was marked down from day to day, and that for the whole seven years they had shared the same table together, they had each expended, on an average, only 25 cents per day, including food and clothing for their servants, and all the other expenses of housekeeping. During all this time the Judge was receiving a salary of $5,000 per year, besides large profits from the brick yard, and from his rents, and money placed at interest. His four hundred francs have been since increased to $500,000 and upwards. During the third of a century he held office, he had to decide upon immense interests submitted to the Court, and no one ever supposed that for millions of money his opinions could be made to swerve a hair's breadth. His integrity was above the slightest suspicion from any quarter. Judge Martin's will takes only five lines of writing, and bequeathes his whole estate valued at $500,000, to his brother, who being only 65, he was wont to call the boy. It is therefore worth just $100,000 a line.

A FEMALE MINER.

The only white woman I have seen in the mines is the wife of a Frenchman who came here from Calcutta. She dresses in trowsers, and wears a thin hat and red shirt, as most of the miners do, and her hair being cut short, is not suspected of being a woman, probably, by one-tenth of the persons who see her. The first time I saw her, I was digging in a hole in the Mokelumny, a few feet from where she and her husband were working a rocker. I noticed her feminine look and thoughtful expression of countenance, and mentioned it to a man who was working near me. He informed me that what I supposed to be a remarkably handsome young man, was a woman; that she was the wife of the man at work with her, that her husband was once a wealthy merchant in Calcutta, and that the wife had been accustomed to ease and luxury. Failing in business and becoming poor, the husband determined to dig a fortune out of the earth in California, and the wife, true to her companion, only consented when he promised she should accompany him. I have seen her at work with the pick and the spade, early and late—there is ever a thoughtful expression on her countenance, but she never seems discouraged; and yet the unfortunate pair have had the worst of luck, not having dug gold enough to pay their living. This is one of the many romantic incidents that a life in the gold-diggings in California, from time to time, develops. [Boston Times.

The South Carolinian says that some members of the Alabama House of Representatives were anxious to attend the races last Tuesday, but the House refused to adjourn. A member then proposed a resolution for the appointment of a committee to inquire into the condition of the ceiling of the Hall, which, as he had been informed by a mechanic, was in so dangerous a state, that it was unsafe to stay there. The House then immediately adjourned—to the races—and the committee found the ceiling all right!

ANOTHER CALIFORNIAN'S EXPERIENCE.

The following extract of a letter from an Albanian, bears date "Bark Nautilus, San Francisco, Nov. 14. 1849." We copy from the N. Y. Tribune:—

"The dysentery is prevailing here to an awful extent, and there has been considerable fever and ague—particularly among the miners. I am now done with the former diseases. I intend to return to Albany by the next steamer, if possible, as my medical attendants hold out no hopes for my recovery unless I do so or take a trip to the Sandwich Islands. I am heartily sick of this country. The wobegone looks of the miners, as they return from the diggings dissatisfied, convince me that California hardships will wholly undermine my constitution. You could tell a miner here as far as you could see him, by his ghostly features and dirty and tattered clothes. Dr. McNaughton informs me that there are nearly one hundred Albanians in San Francisco who have been unsuccessful at the mines, prowling about, penniless and shiftless, working at whatever labor they can get, so that they can get home. A large portion of the Company who went to the mines with Barrett have returned discouraged, and are now working in clay banks and tending masons, while those who have trades do very well when they can get employment. You see, the secret of it is, they are unable to endure the hardships at the mines. Those who aimed at clerkships arrived rather a day after the fair, unless they brought heavy influence with them. Alderman Rooney was at the mines, became discouraged, and died of melancholy.

JOHN COONEY."

THE ILLITERATE ROBBER.

A gentleman passing late at night over the Pont Neuf in Paris, was accosted by a polite and seemingly suppliant stranger, who asked him to read a paper which he had just picked up. The gentleman held up his lantern and complied. The following is a translation of the lines:—

Speak not a word when this you've read,
Or in an instant you'll be dead;
Give up your money, watch and rings,
Or other valuable things;
Depart then quickly as you will,
Only remember silence still.

The gentleman thought it best to deliver up his valuables as required.

The robber was afterwards recognized by the person robbed, and arrested. His identity was positively sworn to, and the following confession was made by the criminal: "My Lord, I confess that the evening specified I met this gentleman on the Point Neuf, and the transaction occurred as he has related it, but yet I am far from being guilty. I cannot read; I picked the paper up and thought it might be of consequence. Seeing that the gentleman had a lantern, I begged him to do me the favor to read the paper. He complied, and then, to my surprise, he put his watch, rings and money into my hand. I was so astonished that I could not ask him what he meant, and supposed the paper was of great value, and that he had given me his money, rings and watch to get rid of me. Thus, if any one was wronged, it was I, and I hope justice will be done me." He was acquitted. [London Times.

TRUE.

I was extremely sorry to perceive that the Americans exceed us as a novel-reading people. At every public place, the termini of the railroad, landing-places of the steamboat, and often on board as well, numbers of lads are found vending this trash. The people in general, the ladies especially, are continually seen amusing themselves by revelling in this world of fancy, often extremely vulgar and foolish. To give an instance: On one of my journeys by railroad, there sat before me a family, consisting of a husband, wife and child, perhaps two years old. This mother and wife, a very genteel and ladylike person, got hold of one of these novels, and scarcely lifted hea eyes from her book the whole of the distance they traveled, which occupied the greater part of the day. The husband, in the meantime, had the entire care of the little boy. It cried, and he patted it into good-humor; it slept on his lap, and he fanned it; it required food, and he ransacked the reticule to find cakes and sweetmeats, and, in fact, was a perfect nurse. All this time the mother was completely absorbed in her tale, and took not the slightest notice of either husband or boy, and, in fact, seemed unconscious that they were present, or that she had any duties to perform towards one or the other. This pernicious habit is eating into the American mind, and will produce sad and deleterious effects on a grand scale. [Dr. Dixon.

HELPING ONESELF.—It is told of John Broomfield, Esq., of Boston, who recently died, leaving an immense property, and bequeathing very large sums to benevolent and charitable institutions, that he always insisted on performing for himself whatever trifling offices were needful, not only about his person, but his room, and about his places of habitual resort. He did this, not from a spirit of meanness, or avaricious desire to accumulate wealth, but from the settled preference for helping himself, rather than being helped by a servant; a preference which had become ripened by time into a principle of action, and which he was most unwilling to relinquish, or even to temporarily suspend. It was a habit with him, and a pleasure to him, to do his own work, to be his own servant. He knew the work was well done if he did it himself, and that there was no wasteful expenditure about it, either of money or of time. And so addicted was he to his favorite usage, that he once left an excellent hotel, at which he was well accommodated and carefully served, for no assignable reason, except that he "was not allowed to carry up his own wood and water, as he had always done."

PENSIONS OF THE BRITISH PEERS.—In the House of Lords, there are 49 peers, State pensioners, receiving annually 22,635*l.*; 36 peers, military and naval officers, receiving 51,948*l.*; 34 peers receiving 741,580*l.*; 16 drawing salaries from office and place, 10,000*l.*; 20 bishops, dividing among them 218,000*l.*, a year; 8 peers who are clergymen with livings, getting 8,000*l.*; besides 638 immediate relatives of peers in the Church, 138,500*l.*; and 67 immediate relatives of peers in office and place, receiving 84,930*l.*, all per annum. There are, indeed, only 47 out of 433 peers who have not relatives in the Army, the Navy, or the Church.

ANECDOTE OF MR. GALLATIN.—It will be remembered that Mr. Gallatin was a Minister of the United States in Paris in 1816, at the time of the second restoration of the Bourbons to the throne of France. A loan was then created by the French government, and the most eminent capatalists assembled at Paris to make tenders for the loan, among them Mr. Alexander Baring. This gentlemen had made the acquaintance of Mr. Gallatin when in the United States many years before, and now consulted him as to the proposed loan, believing that his long experience and eminent talents as a financier would be of essential benefit to his house. Mr. Gallatin readily gave his advice in the matter, and Mr. Baring obtained the loan.

From a sense of gratitude to Mr. Gallatin, he then proposed to him, and even insisted, that he should take a part of the loan without advancing any of the funds, by which he would be enabled to realize a handsome fortune. "I thank you," was Mr. Gallatin's reply; "I will not accept your obliging offer, because a man who has had the direction of the finances of his country so long as I have, should not die rich."

This statement was made by Mr. Labouchere, brother-in-law of Mr. Baring, and father of the present Mr. Labouchere, M. P.

CURIOUS PUNISHMENT FOR CONJUGAL INFIDELITY.—The inhabitants at Barnardcastle, Durham, England, were recently amused by the town crier proclaiming the following: "Mr. John Kay is going to burn Mrs. Kay's clothes upon the Demesne Hill, and he invites Mr. Hopper to the fire which is now kindling." The crier commenced at Mr. Hopper's door, and it being the dinner hour he was followed by a large concourse of people. They proceeded to the Demesnes, a field near the town, upon a hill; a very large fire of wood and straw was made by Mr. Kay, (who is an innkeeper in the town,) upon which he laid all the valuable wearing apparel and articles of his wife, which consisted of satin and silk dresses, including nearly the whole of her bridal garments, muslin dresses, shawls, victorines, bonnets, veils, caps, artificials, parasols, a pair of beautiful stays, stockings, brooches, rings, a fine silk cloak, a quantity of bed linen, work boxes, a quantity of baby linen, a pin cushion with the inscription "welcome, little stranger," upon it, and a great many more clothes of all descriptions. These clothes were considered to be worth at least £200.

NEWSPAPERS IN EUROPE AND AMERICA.—Newspapers in Europe are not as cheap as in this country. The London Times costs $45 a year. The same rate is charged for the Morning Chronicle, Daily News, Globe, Herald, and Post. The London Evening Mail is published three times a week, at $25 a year. The London semi-weeklies are $16 60 cents per annum, and weeklies $12 and $9. The French daily papers, the large ones, are about the same price as the London prints: those about the same size of our penny papers, cost $20 and $25 per annum. The German dailies cost from $22 to $36.

The subscription to the Placer Times, a weekly paper published at Sacramento city, is $10 per year; that of the Alta California, at San Francisco, is $12 per year, and 37 1-2 cents for a single number. The Alta California, since its enlargement, charges for advertisements at the rate of $4 per square for the first insertion, and $2 for every subsequent one. Legal and official advertisements are charged $6 per square for the first insertion, and $3 for every subsequent one.

EXPERIMENT WITH THE PEAR.—Rev. J. P. Richardson, of Otisfield, Me., in a communication in the Christian Mirror, says that, five or six years ago, he grafted the St. Germain Pear into a forest tree, called the sweet Pear, and this year gathered from it nearly half a bushel of most delicious fruit. The tree, as it grows wild, is one of the first that blossoms in the spring, and bears a fruit about the size of a choke berry. The writer of this article grafted one of these bushes with a Bartlett, last spring, and it has grown finely, and thrived better than the original stocks. He also grafted the same pear on a common thorn bush, which grew very thriftily, to the length of 18 or 20 inches. A small mountain ash was also successfully budded with the same fruit. As pear trees sell very high, it may be to many an interesting fact, that they can make as good trees from useless bushes in the woods, as they can purchase from the nurseries at $1.35.

PLANTING CHESTNUTS.—At a late farmers' meeting in New-York, Mr. Rice, speaking of planting chestnut timber, remarked, that he plowed up a tract of unproductive hillside, several years ago, and planted it with the chestnut, in rows four feet apart every way. The sprouts coming up rather crooked and scrubby, he went over the field and cut them down close to the ground, which caused new sprouts to shoot up straight and vigorous. The trees were very thrifty, completely shading the ground, and grow more and more rapidly as the soil becomes strengthened by the annual deposit of leaves. So well satisfied is he with the experiment, that he is now placing other worthless lands in a similar course of improvement.

A MUSSULMAN'S ESTIMATE OF A JEW'S PRAYER.—The country around was cultivated with the grain called dra, and there was every prospect of a favorable harvest. "God be praised," said the Kaid, "for his bounty: last year, in truth, we had a sad prospect for the crops; and had not my master, Seedy Abn Selam E'Slowly, ordered the Jews—God curse them!—to pray for rain, I know not what would have become of God's creatures." "Why did not the Mussulmen," said I, "offer up their prayers?" "So they did," he replied, "and for twenty days and nights; and to the banner of each mosque was affixed a prayer written by the Fekee himself. The prayers floated in the face of heaven, but all in vain; for the prayers of the faithful are like music to God, who is worthy of all praise; and therefore the Almighty, rejoicing in the sweet sound of our supplication, granteth not the desires of our prayers, for he wishes us to continue still to pray. But no sooner is he tormented with the disgusting prayers of Jews and infidels, than he grants forthwith their petitions, in order to be freed from their importunities." Absurd as this may appear, it is, nevertheless, the general belief in Morocco. [Western Barbary.

GUIDE BOOK FOR THE DEAD.—Many years ago, a zealous antiquity-collector, named Drovetti, sold to the Piedmontese Government his collection of antiquities, among which was a large box containing half-crumbling papyri, chiefly wrapped in musty mummy-clothes. In process of time these came under the critical examination of Champollion, who was then, in 1827, developing his law of hieroglyphical reading; and in a series of letters, still extant, he announced his discovery that the writings found enfolded in the ceremonies of the dead related the life of the soul after the death of the body, its progress through the regions of Purgotory, its justification before the Judge of all, and its final blessedness or condemnation when again united with the body. He termed this code "the Funeral Ritual," or "Book of the Manifestations of Light," translating literally the hieroglyphical title. [Glidden.

WARNING TO CLERKS.—A case of melancholy interest has just been tried by the U. S. Circuit Court at Columbus, Ohio. It is that of J. F. W. Fhurman, the son of a Lutheran clergyman, residing at Fort Jennings, Putnam county, Ohio. It appears that he was a post-office clerk, at Troy, Miami Co. In making up the mail, on one occasion, a letter containing a draft of $2,500 was not put into its proper package. According to his statement, it was accidentally omitted. To avoid the reproof of the postmaster, he concealed it, intending to include it in the next mail. The temptation, however, was too strong, and he kept the money. From that hour, he states, he never had a moment's peace. He was arrested at Zanesville on the 19th of October, and on the 25th was sentenced to ten years hard labor in the penitentiary. When arrested, he was on his way to Marietta, where he intended to obtain an education with the money. Nearly all the money was recovered.

PERILS OF EXPRESS RIDING.—Mr. Calhoun, the U. S. Mail Agent, who had charge of the Express to carry the President's Message hence to Boston, over the New Haven, Springfield, and Worcester roads, had two very narrow escapes. At Wilden, Conn., the locomotive, while going at a speed of forty-five miles an hour, ran off the track, and made sad havoc of the road, for some distance, but providentially no one was injured, and the locomotive so little damaged, that after a delay of forty minutes, it was at work again. At Warren, Mass., while going at the same rate, the engine again ran off the track, and a detention was thereby caused of an hour and thirty minutes. Notwithstanding these accidents and delays, the Message was delivered in Boston before 6 A. M., the running time throughout averaging forty-five miles per hour. [Courier.

Variety.

Madam Cresswell, of King Charles the II.'s reign, died a prisoner in Bridewell. She desired by will to have a sermon preached at her funeral, for which the preacher was to have ten pounds, on condition that he was to say nothing but what was well of her. After a sermon preached on the general subject of mortality, he concluded by saying, "By the will of the deceased, it is expected I should mention her, and say nothing but what was WELL of her. She was born well, she lived well, and she died well, for she was born in Cresswell, she lived in Clerkenwell, and died in Bridewell."

An Ohio Congressman, named Carter, beats Senator Allen as a "Buckeye Earthquake." During the debate on the 13th, says an exchange, he made a speech, and as his thunder tones increased, the members, as if to ascertain the full extent of his power, called out "louder, louder!" to which he responded, until the House was in a roar of laughter. After he had concluded, it is said, the boy who sells cakes and milk near the entrance to the Hall, complained that "the thunder of Mr. Carter's eloquence had soured his milk!"

We read in the Courier des Etats Unis, that the Government of Chaipas has sent out an expedition to explore the Pimienta, a part of the mountain chain of the Cordilleras, with a view to set at rest the question as to whether there exists in that locality a city and a people with whom no communication has ever yet been established.

We have been shown, says the St. Louis Reveille, a "Bed Cooler," an ingenious machine, invented by Mr. Reeder, to supersede musquito bars. The principal feature in the invention is a couple of fans, which may be placed under a bed tester, immediately over the sleeper or patient, and which, wound up, will keep in motion 6 hours.

The editor of the Journal of Commerce was recently presented with a small parcel of tea, just received by Livingston, Wells & Co., from China, by way of San Francisco. They received also a set of China ware, silk handkerchiefs, toys, &c., by the same route. It is very possible that this is the forerunner of what may eventually be a great and important traffic.

DeRuyter Institute.

The Academic Year of this Institution for 1849-50 will commence the last Wednesday in August, and continue forty-three consecutive weeks, ending the last Wednesday of June, including a recess of ten days for Christmas and New Year holidays. The Year will be divided into three Terms:

The First, commencing August 29, of 14 weeks.
The Second, " December 5, of 15 "
The Third, " March 20, of 14 "

Encouraged by the success of the School under its present Instructors, the friends of the Institute have made liberal additions to its library, cabinet and apparatus, thus furnishing ample facilities for illustrating branches taught in the various departments.

The Literary Department is as heretofore under the supervision of Rev. JAMES R. IRISH, A. M., President, assisted by other able instructors. In this Department, especial attention is given to the lower English Branches. Students are also fitted in the Classics to enter the advanced classes in College.

The Department of Natural Science is conducted by Professor GURDON EVANS. In this, Natural Philosophy, Astronomy, Geology, Natural History, and Chemistry, are taught in a manner of unsurpassed interest. With it is connected the Department of Agricultural Science.

The Farmer's Course is thoroughly scientific; embracing the study of the best authors, with daily recitations. During the Winter Term two hours each day will be spent in the Analytical Laboratory, where students will be instructed in the constitution of soils and ashes of plants, with a minute examination of their constituent elements, and the various modes of testing for their presence.

A course of lectures is given during the Term on Practical Farming, explaining the relation of Geology to Agriculture, the Soil, the Plant, and the Animal, and their various relations, the Rotation of Crops, Feeding Animals, Manures, Draining Lands, &c., &c. For further information see Catalogue.

Besides Globes, Maps, &c., for the illustration of Astronomy, a Newtonian Telescope of high magnifying power has recently been added to the apparatus.

During the Summer Term, Botany and Geology receive special attention, illustrated by excursions to localities where these sciences may be studied as seen in nature. A Geological and Mineralogical Cabinet is accessible to the students.

The Mathematical Department is under the instruction of OLIVER B. IRISH, Tutor. It embraces thorough instruction in Arithmetic, and the higher pure and practical Mathematics, with field exercises in Engineering and Surveying.

Elocution, embracing Reading, Declamation, General Oratory, and Writing, receives the special attention of a competent teacher.

The Teacher's Department will, as formerly, be in operation during the Fall Term, and last half of the Winter Term. Particular attention to this is solicited from all who intend to teach district schools.

The Female Department is under the care of Miss SUSANNA M. COON, a graduate of Troy Female Seminary, a lady every way competent for this responsible station.

No efforts will be spared to render the young ladies of this Seminary truly accomplished, as well in the social relations of life, as in the substantial branches of learning and the higher refinements of education. Ample facilities are furnished for pursuing French, Italian, German, Drawing, Painting, Music on the Piano, and Vocal Music.

Information.

Good board in private families from $1 25 to $1 50. Parents from abroad should furnish their children with very little pocket money, as many temptations may thus be avoided. Those who wish may deposit money with either of the teachers, to be disbursed according to order, without extra charge.

Tuition, to be settled in advance, per term, from $3 00 to $5 00. Extras—For Drawing, $1 00; Monochromatic Painting, $3 00; Oil Painting, $5 00; Chemical Experiments, $1 00; Writing, including Stationery, 50c.; Tuition on Piano, $8 00; Use of Instrument, $2 00; in Agricultural Chemistry, including Chemicals, Apparatus, fires, &c., (breakage extra,) $12 00.

N. B. A daily stage leaves the railroad and canal at Chittenango for this place at 4 o'clock P. M.

SECRET SOCIETIES.

To the Editors of the Sabbath Recorder :—

In asking an explanation of the 5th Resolution of the General Conference, (which you did me the favor to publish in the Recorder of Oct. 4,) my object was simply to obtain a solution of what to me was an enigma, and not to enter into a discussion of the merits of that resolution, or a general defense of Secret Societies. Nor do I now intend to enter into such discussion or defense—having no wish for such notoriety, had I the necessary ability to discuss the subject with your correspondent, "A Member of the Conference." Yet perhaps it is due your correspondent in courtesy, inasmuch as my question called out his somewhat lengthy articles on the subject, that I should either express my satisfaction with his answer, or my reasons for not being satisfied. That I am not satisfied with the answer, might naturally be presumed from a candid perusal, by a disinterested person, of the articles of your correspondent, from the fact that the question at issue is not touched, but a sort of collateral issue made in its room.

In order that we may understand the question, I will here re-state it, together with the resolution of the Conference calling it out, viz: "That this Conference is conscientiously of the opinion, that Secret Societies are necessarily—in their organization fundamentally, and in their influence practically—adverse to Christianity." Now, among the Societies here mentioned is one known as the Order of the Sons of Temperance, who put forth the following declaration of their object and principles :—"A society formed to shield us from the evils of intemperance, afford mutual assistance in case of sickness, and elevate our characters as men" —governed by, and operating through, the great principles of temperance, benevolence, and brotherly love. Question—How this Society must be necessarily—in its organization fundamentally, and in its influence practically—adverse to Christianity? The answer to this question (if intended as an answer at all) by your correspondent, is from the provision of secrecy in such Society. Now, in order to make the answer applicable to the question, it should first be established that the provision of secrecy enters into, and is in fact the fundamental principle of the Society. This he has not attempted to do, but rather infers it from the name which the opponents of our "Order" have been pleased to give it—a name about as definite in its meaning as the name of Whig or Democratic, as applied to political parties of the present time. That the Order of the Sons of Temperance have a rule requiring secrecy in regard to some of their transactions, I will freely admit; but that the Society is organized for the purpose of keeping a secret, or for secret purposes, I deny; the object being what is set forth above, and nothing else.

Having said all I wish to on this point, I will proceed to notice the second article of your correspondent, which seems to contain the most important objections to the Societies termed secret.

In the first place, he defines a Secret Society thus: "The provision by which any Society separates itself from community at large, and meets exclusively by itself, is what constitutes it a Secret Society." If this definition is correct, then the Banking, Insurance, and Railroad Associations, are Secret Societies, for they all adopt this provision to its fullest extent; likewise Bible and Missionary Societies, although they may have no constitutional provision to that effect, do virtually adopt it, when they do not allow any but members to vote or transact business in their meetings—all of which, a Member of the Conference thinks, is adverse to Christianity.

In order to define his position farther, your correspondent goes on to say :—"The thing, abstractly and specifically, which I take upon me to say is adverse to Christianity, in such an organization, is the arrangement adopted to secure the secret meetings." Now, if he means as he says, he has lost all of his labor in his subsequent articles; for, as "One of the Initiated," I take it upon me to say, that they have no such arrangement or provision in the Order of the Sons of Temperance. On the contrary, the time, place, and hour of their meetings, are published, and the room is open to all who wish it. But if they have not sufficient interest in the object of the Society to become members, they are, as in all other Societies, not permitted to take a part in the business of the Society. But the great objection of "A Member of the Conference," after all, is that this Society, called the "Sons of Temperance," meets and transacts business in which he is not allowed to take a part, or that the Society has not seen fit to tell him what they feel disposed to keep secret. And what is it that they keep secret? Why, the pass-word, and the private business of the Order. And who is it kept secret from? Not me, for I know all about it. Nor is it kept secret from any one who feels enough interest in the object of our Order to become a member. Your correspondent manifests very plainly, that he has no interest in the object of our organization, when he says he cares not what we do, or how much valuable knowledge we may possess, if there is any secret connected with it, it is all adverse to Christianity. He thinks that for a Society to meet and transact business secretly, or, in other words, in a room convenient for its use, shutting the door after them, and not permitting any one to enter who has no interest or business there, is a violation of the common confidence and faith of society. Let me ask him if it is not a greater violation of the common confidence of society for him, or any other person, to judge that a portion of his covenant brethren are doing evil, simply because he does not choose to know what they do, as there is nothing to hinder him but his own will.

"A Member of the Conference" thinks that nothing but distrust or design against society would prompt to such a course, (that is, of secrecy,) and that "the thought of secrecy would never enter the mind, but for the existence of evil principles or agencies some where ;" and then immediately refers to the instructions of our Saviour to his disciples, admitting that he taught them to do good in secret—to give alms, to admonish a brother, and to pray, in secret. Now, either our Saviour had designs against society, when he taught his disciples the doctrine of secrecy, or "A Member of the Conference" does not reason correctly. Again, where was the existence of evil principle when the thought of secrecy entered the mind of our Saviour?

But, says your correspondent, this species of secrecy was designed for individuals as such, and not at all for societies; or, in other words, it is proper and Christian-like for one individual to do good, pray, and give alms in secret, but if three or four should associate themselves together for such purposes, then it would become adverse to Christianity. To some, this kind of reasoning may appear correct, but to me it seems the reverse of sound reason.

Again, he says, "The whole plan of organizing a Society, or the plan of secrecy, for benevolent purposes, is adverse to Christianity—for Christianity is designed to accomplish this, in its highest sense; but it has, as a system, no provision of secrecy; inasmuch, therefore, as secrecy is held necessary to accomplish those objects, in so much it is condemnatory of and adverse to Christianity." Now, unless I am very much mistaken, this course of reasoning would prove destructive to all the benevolent organizations of the day; for they all have something which is held necessary to their success, not found in the system of Christianity, in consequence of which but few, perhaps, ever dreamed that they were adverse to Christianity.

He would have us believe, that a good cause is a sufficient safeguard against all evil, and any measure to prevent imposition or injury to be adverse to Christianity. This seems to be the doctrine he would teach, and yet he has before him the example of the disciples, who, after the crucifixion of our Saviour, met in a room by themselves, with closed doors, for fear of the Jews; and also that of the early Christians, who met in the dens and caves of the earth; and of the Dissenters, who, in order to secure secret meetings, established pass-words, and placed sentinels to give them the signal if any were disposed to interrupt them in their meetings. These measures, according to "A Member of the Conference," were all wrong—all adverse to Christianity.

Perhaps, after all, he is not serious in his argument against secrecy. I am almost inclined to think he is not, from the fact that he takes such unscriptural ground in judging societies termed secret. The Scriptures teach us to judge others by their fruits; and the Apostle Paul says, "Let him that eateth not, judge not him that eateth, for God hath accepted him." And another thing, which might be considered conclusive on this point, is the fact, that while he is thus denouncing the idea of secrecy, as always arising from evil principles, he intimates that he made certain inquiries of me, with the covert intention of drawing me into a snare which he had laid, and congratulates himself on my falling into it so readily. And, farther than this, while many have had their curiosity deeply excited to know which of the "wise men of the East" had been enlightening the public on the subject of Secret Societies, he has resorted to the anti-Christian and "monstrous" idea of secrecy—withholding his name from the public, we are bound to believe, (according to his doctrine,) with evil intentions.

One word in regard to his argument on the practical influence of Secret Societies. He thinks we should judge Secret Societies of the present day by the light of the past; as if there was nothing to judge them by now, but to go back and dig up something done in the dark ages, by some Society called a Secret Society. Suppose we adopt the same principle in judging the New England Christians of the present day, and hold them responsible for the acts of their Puritan fathers in burning witches and banishing Quakers. The principles of the former and the latter are the same, or nearly so, as the principles of the Secret Societies of the present day are the same as those of the dark ages. The extract from the Rev. Mr. Easton's letter has no more bearing upon the question at issue, than the fact that Joe Smith was an impostor goes to prove that the Rev. Sidney Smith is a Mormon, because he happens to bear the same name.

Your correspondent, after all, thinks that these Associations are not wholly evil; he thinks they are as honorable as thieves, and have some regard to virtue. I am glad he is so charitable to his covenant brethren who happen to belong to some one of these "Secret Societies." Let me assure "A Member of the Conference," that the members of one of the so-called Secret Societies, have no fears on the subject. Armed with the consciousness of right, they look forward to the day when, notwithstanding the denunciations of Conference, the opposition of rum-sellers and rum-drinkers, they expect to see one common brotherhood of the Sons of Temperance covering the land as the waters do the great deep. That the evil which "A Member of the Conference" thinks he sees overshadowing the Order of the Sons of Temperance exists only in the jaundiced mind of prejudice, or the diseased imagination of the monomaniac, is known to every ONE OF THE INITIATED.

THE SUNDAY STRUGGLE IN PENNSYLNANIA.

To the Editors of the Sabbath Recorder :—

From the following article, cut from the Public Ledger, (Philadelphia,) of the 10th inst., you will find, that the good people of that State are beginning to wake up to the effort of the Sunday sticklers to ride "rough shod" over the rights and the feelings of the citizens of that commonwealth. Failing to have the sacredness of Sunday sustained by the Supreme Court, they now individually attempt to manufacture a sacredness for it, by influencing private corporations to proclaim and insist upon its holiness, and thus accomplish by stealth what they have so often and so signally failed to achieve by an open appeal to the constituted authorities. The public, discovering these attempts at ecclesiastical domination, are beginning to rebel; and it may not be long before we find the war rife among the followers of Constantine themselves. It is high time that they should wake up to the encroachments of ecclesiastical power, and strangle that tyranny in the cradle. May the Majesty of Heaven come, and turn and overturn, until He confound all the crafty inventions of men, and sweep away the refuges of lies which hold the mind of man in bondage. W. M. F.

From the Public Ledger.

The resolution of the Pennsylvania Railroad Company to suspend Sunday travel over the line of their road, in the inconvenience that is likely to result to travel, and in the loss of revenue to the Company and to the State, which seems a propable consequence, is awakening a good deal of feeling in oposition, both from the public and the stockholders. The following communication has reference to the matter, and speaks a language not to be misunderstood.

To the Editors of the Public Ledger :—

The public are much indebted to you for your remarks on the stoppage of Sunday traveling on the Pennsylvania Railroad. Some of the Directors and many of the stockholders are opposed to the measure, but they were prevented from expressing their dissent at the late meeting by proceedings deemed arbitrary.

An evening paper has expressed the idea that the Company is supreme; that the State has no more right to interfere in the transactions of the Directors than in the business of any private firm; and, to sustain these views, pursues a very extraordinary train of reasoning. It is a subject of regret that there should be any among us ready to advocate an extension of the power of Corporations—a power so continually abused.

So far from the State having nothing to do with the road, as your cotemporary suggests, it has expressly reserved to itself the right to revoke the privileges granted, if they should be abused. It is interesting to ascertain what has been granted and what are the rights of the people.

By the act of incorporation, and also that of the 19th of February, 1849, the road is declared to be a public highway, and any enactments by the Company contrary to the laws of the Commonwealth are forbidden. If traveling on Sunday is lawful in this State, which no one denies, any attempt arbitrarily to impede it must be unlawful. The bridges and railroads owned exclusively by the State are all open on Sundays, with gatekeepers and conductors appointed by law to attend them. The Pennsylvania Railroad is not private property, belonging to the stockholders; a public trust that has been committed to them, not for their exclusive benefit, but for that of the community at large; hence all become copartners in the privileges of the road, because it has been made for the advantage of all. This is the law of right and of common sense; and in Virginia it has been decided, in the case of the Roanoke Railroad, that neither the Company nor individuals had any right to take any measure to prevent the use of the road as a public highway. Owning the locomotives and the cars does not change the principle of the case, nor impair the rights of individuals. Neither the public nor the law require that the stockholders should own them. They do so for their private benefit, and if the public suffer inconvenience thereby, it is a grievance that ought to be redressed. Circumstances may have given them a monopoly; but if so, they can only legally exercise it subject to all its advantages and disadvantages.

The true intent of the laws giving corporate privileges to companies ought to be carefully investigated and understood. They are but trusts for the public good. Ignorance on this subject has led to fatal results. Bank Directors, mistaking the nature of their trusts, have often allowed the funds under their control to be applied to objects of private speculation, and ruin has followed. The same principles apply to all these public corporations.

It is not only the inhabitants of this State who are interested in this question of Sunday travel. Those of other States have a right by common consent and common law to the use of our highways. Are they to be stopped twenty-four hours on their journey, and no one to be accountable for the damage? Is this outrage to be committed, and no one to call in question its legality? As well might the citizens of Philadelphia or Harrisburg put chains across the streets, and arbitrarily prohibit any one from passing through them. My belief is, that not one-tenth of the people of this Commonwealth would feel any objection to riding in the cars on Sunday, if they had occasion to do so; but this is not a question of majorities, it is one of individual rights. Those who wish to travel on Sunday have a right to the use of this road be they many or few. If the time should arrive when no one desires to travel on that day, it will then be soon enough to inquire into the propriety of discontinuing the cars; that period has not yet come; our most estimable citizens, from all classes of society, as occasions arise, are found in the Sunday cars; and herein we have demonstration of the general opinion of the people.

Persons employed in various occupations for miles up the Susquehanna have their families living in the neighborhood of Harrisburg; others go to their devotions at that place, because none of their churches are to be found in the country. Such have heretofore had the accommodation of two packets and two lines of stages on Sunday. I deny the right of the Pennsylvania Railroad Company to create a monopoly which in effect drives other public conveyances off the road without furnishing a substitute. I deny their right to appropriate the money of the stockholders to promote any sectarian object, or for any other purpose than to make the road what the law contemplated, a public highway, to be used like other highways in the Commonwealth on every day in the week.

Not only is the action taken by them in itself injurious and illegal, but they go out of their way to set a precedent in the case. With the single exception of the Reading Railroad, which was built to transport coal, and on which an interval of Sunday travel is desirable to enable them to do this successfully, not one of the railroads in this State, which connect important points, is closed on Sunday. The Philadelphia and Baltimore and the York and Susquehanna Roads, the railroads to New York and to Harrisburg, are all open [illegible] should the Pennsylvania Railroad Company assume to dictate law and morality to this community, and enforce their decrees at the expense of the public, in defiance of common usage? Is such a course a faithful discharge of duty as conservators of a public trust? Do they duly protect the interests of their stockholders, when they close one link in our chain of western roads on Sunday, while the rival route from Baltimore is open on that day?

The argument with regard to needful rest to conductors is one of dollars and cents only. A small amount of extra pay will, at any time, procure extra conductors for that day, and leave those who are said to be oppressed at leisure. The number of persons at present required as engineers and conductors is supposed not to be so numerous as those employed in the same distance at turnpike gates. The Directors of turnpike roads has as much right to close them to the public on Sunday, as this Company has to stop the trains on the Pennsylvania Railroad.

In England, men of known benevolence have devoted their efforts to having all the railroads open on Sunday, and additional cars, at low rates, furnished for the benefit of those who work during the rest of the week, and who cannot afford to pay the highest price.

The Directors and the controlling stockholders of the Pennsylvania Railroad have at their command ample and luxurious means of recreation and travel on all days of the week—have they no sympathy for the laborer and artisan who enjoy none of these conveniences, and to whom Sunday is the only respite from severe and incessant labor?

CONFIRMATION OF THE SCRIPTURES.—Lieut. Lynch, in his Narrative of the United States Expedition to the Dead Sea, says :—

"We entered upon this sea with conflicting opinions. One of the party was skeptical, and another, I think, a professed unbeliever of the Mosaic account. After twenty-two days' close investigation, if I am not mistaken, we are unanimous in the conviction of the truth of the Scriptural account of the destruction of the cities of the plain. I record with diffidence the conclusions we have reached, simply as a protest against the shallow deductions of would-be unbelievers."

EDUCATION FOR THE DAUGHTERS OF MISSIONARIES.—An institution for this purpose has been established at Walthamstow, England, under a committee of ladies, of which Mrs. Peck and Mrs. Freeman are the honorary secretaries. In ten years that the school has existed, 130 children have been received, some of whom are now missionaries. The present number is 44, including daughters of Messrs. Moffat of Africa, and Prichard of Upolu, and grand-daugaters of Drs. Carey and Philip. It is highly commended by the secretaries of the Baptist and London Missionary Societies. An appeal is made for enlarged means.

A FEW SHORT YEARS.

A few short years—and then
What changes time hath wrought!
So strange they seem, we scarce can deem
The world, our life, ourselves are aught
But one long fitful dream.
The clouds that fly
Across the sky,
Waves tossed upon the sea,
Shadows that pass
Before a glass,
Our fitting emblems be.

A few short years—and then
Where are the hopes that shone
Where youth with flowers enwreathed the hours,
And earth had but one music tone
Of joy for us and ours?
The rainbow's hues,
The morning's dews,
The blossoms of a day,
The trembling sheen
Of water seen
More stable are than they.

A few short years—and then
Where is the ad'mant chain
That passion wrought, and madly thought
Nor time nor change could ever strain
Till life's last strife was fought?
A rope of sand,
A goss'mer band;
The filmy threads at e'en
The spider weaves
Amongst the leaves
A firmer bond had been.

A few short years—and then
Where is Ambition's pile,
That rose so high against the sky,
O'ershadowing all around the while
With its proud boast might vie?
A shadow's shade,
A card-house made
By children for their play;
The air-blown bells,
That folly swells
May vaunt a surer stay.

A few short years—and then
Where is the mighty grief
That wrung the heart with torture's art,
And made it feel that its relief
Time's hand could ne'er impart?
A stream that's burst
And done its worst,
Then left the heaven more clear;
A night-mare dread,
The morning fled,
Those sorrows now appear.

A few short years—and then
What of our life remains,
The smiles and tears of other years,
Of passion's joys and sorrow's pains,
Ambition's hopes and fears?
A faded dream
To day they seem
Which memory scarce can trace—
But seals they 're set
Shall time nor yet
Eternity efface!

EPISTLE FROM THE LATTER-DAY SAINTS.

The St. Louis Republican has a pamphlet copy of the "Second General Epistle" issued by the Church of the Latter-Day Saints, at the Salt Lake Valley, to "the Saints scattered throughout the earth." It is a detail of the condition of the Society at home and abroad, and in general embraces every thing that may be supposed to be of interest to the members of the Church. The crops are [illegible] fine—and it is stated that they have not only enough for themselves, but for their brethren on the way, until the next harvest. They have decided on forming a town or city at Brownsville, forty miles to the north, and at Utah, sixty miles to the south of Salt Lake City, at which place settlements had been made. Sand Pitch Valley is designated as another place for location. The Council House baths, at the Waring House, an extensive stone house and granary, were all in progress of erection. They had devised a plan for raising a perpetual fund, to assist the "poor Saints" to emigrate to the Salt Lake Valley, fulfilling in this respect the covenants in the Temple, that "all the Saints who were obliged to leave Nauvoo should be located at some gathering place." The whole plan is in process of execution.

As showing the extent to which efforts at proselytism are to be carried, we quote from the letter :—

"All the apostles now in the valley have had missions assigned them. Eld. John Taylor, accompanied by Curtis E. Bolton and John Peck, goes to France; Elder Lorenzo Snow goes to Italy, accompanied by Joseph Toronto; Elder Erastus Snow to Denmark, accompanied by Peter Hanson, and will start in about a week, passing through the States. Elder Franklin D. Richards, accompanied by John S. Higbee, George B. Wallace, Job Smith, H. W. Church, Joseph W. Johnson, Joseph W. Young, and Jacob Gates, will go with the mission to England, to co-operate with President Orson Pratt. Elder John Forsgreen will go out at the same time with the mission to Sweden. For wise purposes, Elder P. P. Pratt's mission to the Western Islands will be deferred until spring.

"Elder Orsan Pratt is doing a great work in England, and the cause of truth is advancing rapidly in all her home dominions, and the rejoicing of the Saints there, causes Satan to howl, for he is compelled to be subject to the power of the highest. Elder Woodruff is located at Cambridgeport, Massachusetts, and has been comforting and instructing the Saints in Canada and the Eastern States the past year. If Elder Woodruff now will gather up all the Saints in his vicinity, and come with them to this place, he will do a great work, and will be opening the way for a visit to those nations who have eyes and ears, and are crying to the Elders of Israel, come, tell us of the things of God, for we have heard that God is with you."

The letter also says :—

"Brother Parley P. Pratt is opening a new road through the range of mountains, from the Weber to this place, which is already so far advanced that this Fall's emigration will pass over it. This road will be completed at a great expense, and will be a great blessing to the emigrating Brethren, and together with the bridges in the valley, over the Weber and Ogden fork, all of which we expect will be completed before the next emigrating season, will shorten the distance and greatly facilitate the progress of travelers."

"The city of the Great Salt Lake is situated lat. 40 deg. 45 min. 44 sec., long. 111 deg. 26 min. 34 sec.; altitude 4,300 feet. It is 20 miles from the Great Salt Lake, and 35 from the Utau. It is divided into 19 wards, each ward into 9 blocks, each block into 8 lots containing 1 1-4 acres each. The streets are 120 feet wide, running to the cardinal points of the compass, one on each ward line and two each way crossing each ward. It contains about 4,000 inhabitants—the whole valley about 6,000. There is a Bishop and a Marshal in each ward, the Bishop acting as Justice of the Peace. They claim jurisdiction over emigrants, who have had a number of suits before them. The Courts take the statements of parties and witnesses without an oath, and seem disposed to do justice. In this they have been of eminent service to several emigrants. I have heard of no appeal from the decision of the Bishops. The organization of their judiciary allows an appeal from the Bishop to the Council of Twelve, from the twelve to the Presidency, (three in number,) and from the Presidency to the whole body of the people. Their land system is based on the free-soil system, They neither sell nor allow others to sell it. Every man can have us much as he can occupy by paying for the survey and recording. The record constitutes his title of occupancy, and that is all the title he has. This and his improvement he can sell—nothing more.

SLAVE AUCTION IN ST. LOUIS.

From the People's Organ, of Dec. 21.

The steps of the Court-House were crowded yesterday morning to witness the sale of a fine-looking drove of human beings. The critters, after having their mouths examined like horses, and their limbs pulled about, to test their soundness, were put up to be knocked down by the hammer. Competition was very brisk, and the lot realized good prices. A girl, Caroline, attracted our attention and interest, from the anxiety she displayed during the bidding for her flesh and blood, bone and sinews. As the price rose to $400, a hopeful, meaning smile gradually spread over her dusky, good-natured face, (the last lot, a boy, had only brought some $455 or so.) The bidding, confined to two persons, rose to $430. She became restless, continually glancing from one to the other of her would-be purchasers—her predilections for one had evidently been formed—'$470, say the five'—called the auctioneer; a pause ensued of suspense to her; the one she had hoped to serve hesitated. 'Going at $480—going—who 'll say the $500?' He still hesitated; the hopeful look had gone from her features, and was replaced by something akin to a feverish dread—still she looked in his face, wishing she might dare to urge him on. He nodded, '$500 for this fine likely girl; fifteen years [illegible] A nod from his opponent brought her up to $505. From this moment, she seemed to have cast aside all hope; it was a matter of perfect indifference to her, which might buy her; at least all outward signs had fled, and she glanced round calmly at the crowd of heads looking on her, as on some jack in the box, shown publicly and gratuitously. We grew sick of the scene as the auctioneer proclaimed $510 had been bid, and we turned to force our way through the crowd, but we were fast wedged. 'Going—fair warning—going;' the key fell on the book, and the auctioneer bent forward to enter the amount of sale—the girl looked also at the sum she fetched in the flesh market, but never moved a muscle, except, perhaps, a slight brightening was observable in the eye, and in the parting of the lips, as if in pride that she had sold for so much.

'Caroline, you and the boys go home,' exclaimed some one near; the crowd oped to let them pass, and we escaped. Home! Father of all, what a mockery of that endearing term; the home of the stranger, perhaps, the trader—a home where bondage ends but with death.

MISSIONS AND REVIVALS.

The pioneer of Foreign Missions in America, Samuel J. Mills, began to feel the desire to be a missionary when, after nearly three years of distressing anxiety, he felt the renewing power of the Holy Ghost. This spirit was communicated to others of his companions in college, during a revival of religion. It was deepened and confirmed by a season of fasting and prayer. It was still further communicated in a little meeting of brethren, who, kneeling before God, asked him to teach them their duty. These young men, thus impressed, asked counsel of venerable ministers, and they also asked God, and the spirit of missions kindled up in their souls. Thus it commenced in a work of grace, and has been fostered by prayer to God, and revivals of religion; and thus it has continued. Look at churches when revived, and you will find an increased interest in the cause of missions. They pray more, and they contribute more. The lamented Armstrong understood this well. Hence, when times looked dark for the Lord's treasury, his first inquiry was, "What are the signs of the times in respect to revivals?" He understood that the Lord opened not only the heart in revivals, but also the purse; and as men are made to feel more of the blessedness of the Gospel, they are more anxious to send it to the destitute.

Let there be powerful revivals of pure and undefiled religion all over our land, and there will be no want of missionaries, or funds to support them. Every church will have its offering, both of men and money, for the service of the Lord. [Jour. of Missions.

BEAUTIFUL METAPHOR.—The comparison of the journey of life to a transit across a desert is very felicitiously expressed in the following lines by Chas. Wesley :

"Here in the body pent,
Absent from Heaven I roam;
Yet nightly pitch my moving tent
A day's march nearer home!"

The Sabbath Recorder.

New York, January 24, 1850.

ANOTHER EVIL TO BE CORRECTED.

In glancing, last week, at some of the forms in which the sacredness of the Sabbath is violated, we noticed two—the habit of perusing newspapers and other unprofitable works, and that of social visiting. We wish, in this number, to call attention to another evil, which not unfrequently occurs—neglecting to assemble together for the worship of God. We do not now allude to those who, living in the vicinity of a church, neglect its appointed meetings, so much as to those who dwell in some remote neighborhood, yet pass their Sabbaths without assembling for prayer. "Where two or three are gathered together in my name," says the Lord, "there am I in the midst of them." This number, and some times more, will be found occasionally dwelling in the same neighborhood, or so near to one another that with a little effort they might meet together and pass an hour or two, very profitably, in prayer, reading the Scriptures, and mutual exhortation. Yet they will let Sabbath after Sabbath pass—and that for months, if not years—without so much as once assembling for such purposes. Is this right? Certainly not. The Jews were expressly commanded to meet in "holy convocation." We admit that this command is not repeated in the New Testament. But Sabbatarians, we trust, are not the ones to captiously insist, that every Old Testament injunction must be repeated in the New, otherwise it cannot be binding. Let Sunday people take that ground; as for us, we ought to stick to our own principles. The command was once given, and was so evidently founded in the nature of things, that every unprejudiced mind must admit, that it binds all to whom the word of God comes. That the Sabbath was intended to be the means of advancing God's people in the divine life, and so preparing them for the everlasting Sabbath, we all know. Is it not duty, then, to make such use of it as will most effectually contribute to this result? And is not the assembling of themselves together one of the divinely-appointed means for preparing the saints for the future life? And does it not behove them to use this means "so much the more as they see the day approaching?" These questions admit of but one answer.

Objection.—"But we are not a regularly-organized church, and have no minister to lead us in our exercises." And, pray, what difference does that make? Is the presence of Christ limited to a church organization? Cannot two or three be assembled in his name, unless they are first set apart as a church? Such popish notions, we hope, do not exist among us. We are assembled in his name, when we are assembled for the purpose of advancing ourselves in the divine [illegible] he will not fail to be in our midst, for that is his promise. And if he is in our midst, our united prayers cannot fail of receiving an answer, for that is also his promise. "If two of you shall agree as touching any thing that they shall ask, it shall be done for them of my Father which is in heaven." Because, if God will not hear our prayers and bless us for our own sake, he will for the sake of Him who is in our midst. See Matt. 18: 19, 20.

Is it right that Sabbath-keepers should afford no more evidence of their regard for the holy day, than simply to lay aside their work? Is this all the testimony they can bear to the community around them? This is something, to be sure, but it is not enough. Their neighbors may observe that they are not at their usual business on that day, but as there are so many different causes which may bring about its occasional suspension, the true cause may be overlooked. But let these same Sabbath-keepers assemble for worship, let it be known that they do so, and it will very soon be understood that they regard the day as holy to the Lord. The testimony will be understood, and felt, by the whole community. Unless they afford this testimony, they come very short of their duty.

Is it right to lay themselves under a temptation to profane the day by social visiting? This is almost sure to be the result, if they have no meeting to attend. Such is the weakness of our nature, that the exercises of the Sabbath require to be varied, otherwise we become weary. Ordinary social visiting, which is resorted to merely for our entertainment, is wrong. Yet to spend all the day in the house may put such a restraint upon our social feelings, that we shall find ourselves unable to bear it. We are under a constant temptation to break over it. No man should tie himself to such a rigid course as will be sure to defeat its own end. The holy convocation is a wise provision of the Author of our nature, that the social feeling may be gratified, on the Sabbath, in a way perfectly consistent with his glory and our spiritual good. When people have thus assembled and improved the time, such variety is given to the exercises of the day, as in a great measure takes away the temptation to profane it, and leaves us without excuse.

Here it may be asked, 'What is the man to do who is entirely alone on the Sabbath? There are no Sabbath-keepers within reach, nor is there any church open, where he may worship.' But first we would ask, how came he to be in such a situation? Did he voluntarily thrust himself out of [illegible] society of his brethren, or was it done in compliance with some providence of God, over which he had no control? If the latter, he may expect God's blessing to rest upon his earnest efforts to deny himself the gratification of the social feeling, and to improve the time in his closet. He will no doubt receive strength for the extraordinary rigidness to which he is called. But if the former, what business had he to place himself in such a situation? Did he count the cost before he undertook it? To throw ourselves from the pinnacle, under the expectation that He will give his angels charge to bear us up, is presumptuously to tempt God; and he that does it, does it only at the instigation of the devil. It might be well for those who run away from the society of their brethren, in expectation that God will keep them, and then find themselves pressed so hard with temptation to gratify their social feelings in a sinful way, that they cannot withstand, to consider whether Satan, rather than God, has not led them into such a situation. If they went merely on a money-making scheme, without any providential necessity for doing so, it may be pretty safely concluded, that the devel has had a considerable hand in it. We advise our brethren never to banish themselves from the society of Sabbath-keeping Christians, unless some clearly-marked providence make it their duty. Better stay at home, and die poor, than have the soul grow lean.

We know not how extensive the evil is, against which we have protested, but there is reason to fear that it is quite too common. In the name of the Lord of the Sabbath, we call for reformation. If there are but two Sabbath-keepers in a neighborhood, let them come together on the Sabbath for prayer and conference. Two are enough to claim the promise of the Saviour. Let them bring their families if they have any. No matter whether they have a minister to lead them, or not. They can pray, and that is more than many a minister can do. Their perseverance in this course may be the means of raising a church.

WESTERN EMIGRATION.

To the Editors of the Sabbath Recorder :—

Since the publication of my series of letters from Illinois, I have received many letters from persons in various parts of our widely-extended country, requesting information on a variety of matters; and within a few months past I have had quite a number of solicitations to furnish another series of articles for the Sabbath Recorder respecting these things. With your permission, I propose to comply with these requests, although I may run the risk of writing some of the same things that I did before.

The policy or impolicy of encouraging western emigration, has often forced itself upon the attention of good men in the older States, of all denominations. Many worthy persons not only regret the loss of estimable neighbors and valuable members of their own families, but they are some times pained to bid adieu to their right-hand men, as they leave the churches where they were born and nurtured in the things of the kingdom of God. Whether it alleviates their regret or not, it is wise to remember, that these things are more or less inseparable from the lot of man, partly from the state of human society, and partly from the appointments of Providence. It is unavoidable to a swelling population, like that of the United States, that its necessary expansion requires the extension of its settlements to make room for its own growth. And the fluctuation of human affairs, together with a natural restlessness common to men of ardent temperaments, will often induce persons, who seem to be the very pillars of society, to break up their connections and business to seize upon the promising prospects opening to every settler of a new country. It seems to be a wise and merciful arrangement of divine Providence, that this desire of change should not be confined to one class of men. He who has said, "Ye are the salt of the earth," has so arranged things, that men calculated to exert a controlling influence upon the manners and customs of society, are just as likely to feel the inspiration of a western emigrant's hopes, as the man who, desponding of success in the midst of a crowd of forehanded competitors, turns his longing eyes to a fairer field for his genius and industry, among a people who will welcome him as a coadjutor in their schemes of settlement and improvement. Hence the formation of society in these new countries is not left to the caprices of inexperienced youth, nor to the morbid despondency of disappointed men, nor to the vagrant habits of dissatisfied idlers, but all the wisdom of worthy and aged men, at the head of large families, all the the thrift that attends successful industry, with the excitement invariably attending successful enterprise, combine to give a vigorous tone to the spirit of western society, and a buoyancy to the hopes of every settler, that makes him soon forget the trials, losses, and disappointments incident to his removal from refined society, and an older, cultivated country. The children of the new settler feel inspired with new cheerfulness and joy at the brightening prospects for the old age of father and mother, the calls which are made on every hand for their labor, and the openings which daily invite the exercise of all the varied talents they possess; and the necessary part they have, and must have, in the formation of society in their adopted localities, sharpens their intellects and encourages their efforts. These are the things which give so much ardency to western society, and a seeming romance to their communications. So long as these things continue, their correspondence and their intercourse will induce hundreds and thousands of emigrants from eastern countries to the western settlements, until their lands are all possessed and cultivated, towns and cities built up, manufactories established, and every mart and every thoroughfare for commerce thronged with as busy and prosperous a population as any part of the world can show. To think of stopping or staying this swelling tide of population, would be as vain as an attempt to turn or stay the progress of the seasons of the year. These things act as cause and effect, and are as uncontrollable to human effort as the influences of the heavens upon the earth. They are, without doubt, destined by the Great Ruler of the world to fulfill, as a decree, the injunction given to man, when he first gave him authority over the lower creation, and said, "Be fruitful, multiply, and replenish the earth."

Every arrangement of divine Providence is admirably adapted to promote the same end. Sceptics and infidels may amuse themselves with their geological fatuities to account for the variations upon the surface and in the bosom of the earth, but "the pure in heart shall see God" in all these works and ways of his Providence. The ancient prophets of the Lord charged it as an inexcusable sin upon the wicked men of old, "because they regard not the works of the Lord, nor the operation of his hands," (Psalm 28: 5,) and it would surely be as inexcusable in his servants at the present day to be unmindful of such as now involve in themselves all the great interests of society. What a variety, and what an ample supply, of costly materials, adapted to the use and comfort of man, are placed within reachable distance of the labor and industry of society, in almost every part of the habitable globe, and especially in this great country! Here labor and industry are honorably rewarded, both in the eastern and western States. In this we see the wisdom and goodness of God, providing a home for exiles and emigrants from the oppressed countries of Europe. When an intelligent resident of the eastern States has visited the western country, the question is almost always forced upon him, Why were these rich lands placed so far from the Atlantic coast? One solution of it is invariably presented to his mind: The great Creator designed they should be settled, and become the residence of a free and enterprising people. Had the sterile hills of New New England, or the arid sand-plains of the middle and southern Atlantic States, been placed where the Great Valley now stretches abroad its fat and unctuous soil, and all these fertile countries spread from the eastern slope of the Alleghanies to old ocean's shore—had the east and the west of the Alleghanies been just vice versa of what they now are, in respect to surface, formation, and soil—the west would never have been settled but by force of the most grinding oppression, or despotic control. But, as it is, distance, and an almost imper- [illegible] hid them from generations of eastern settlers, until they have built up their towns and cities, with artisans, manufacturers, and merchants, gathered a large population, and created a commerce that needed a supply and an outlet for its capital and products. Now the forests are leveled; and turned into fruitful fields, the passes of the mountains are threaded with roads; and the steam carriage and the steamboat pass the traveler, the merchant and his wares, the emigrant and his effects, from the Atlantic to the Mississippi, with a rapidity unthought-of in former days. The vast agricultural productions of the western States, to say but little of the minerals exhumed from their bosom, are as indispensable to the prosperity of our nation, and the commerce of the world, as the artistic and manufacturing productions of the East. It is manifest, then, that as certainly as an increasing market creates an increasing demand for these western productions, there will be increasing inducements for emigrants to come and occupy the lands that yet lie vacant, awaiting and inviting their tillage, with promises of ample reward to the hand of labor and skill. The hand of the Lord has made this great valley, and his blessing has given it a fertility unsurpassed by any part of the earth. To talk, then, about whether people shall emigrate to the western States, is as idle as to talk about whether the rain shall fall and the sun shine west of the Alleghanies. The rain does fall as freely, and the sun shines as brightly, as on any part of the earth; and the earth itself is richer beyond all comparison than the eastern slope of the Alleghanies; and these circumstances make it certain that emigrants will continue to come, as they now do, for generations yet unborn.

Few eastern people have any just idea of the extent to which western emigration is going on. I have lived the past year near one of the main traveled roads for emigrant wagons from the eastern and middle States to Iowa and unsettled parts of this State; and I was truly astonished to see the multitudes that were making their way by this mode of travel to those parts. During the three autumnal months, I believe there was not a day but what their white canvass covered wagons were seen stretching over the prairie. Forty wagons have been seen to pass a single point in one day. This, of course, was only a portion of what were on the way by other routes, and by steamboat conveyance. Ye landless men at the East, the first question for you to decide is, not whether the West will ever be settled, but whether you and your children shall be among the proprietors of this virgin soil. Now is your opportunity. Every year is tending to crowd it farther west. My Christian brethren, it is not an open question whether our people shall emigrate; it is decided; they do emigrate; and while the same facilities are open for them as for others, it will continue so. Some will emigrate; and unless colony churches are gathered for them, they will scatter among others, and their influence be lost to the denomination, and in many instances to the cause of truth itself. There are many, many such instances in the western States now. The church at Farmington is gathered chiefly of such as had been, or would have been, isolated from our churches, had not an effort been made to raise the standard here. I am not aware that there is a single family here, but those who had already emigrated, or were designing to do so before we had made any effort to gather a church or plant the standard of the cross in this place, before my appointment as a missionary. If ever the effort of the Missionary Society to gather together the scattered of the flock and unite them in the work of the Lord was opportune, it was here. I most solemnly believe it was the will of our heavenly Father that I should come here, and I am happy in my lot. I never felt more contented in any place in my life. I think this is the case with our brethren generally.

BAPTIST NOEL A VICTIM OF SECTARIANISM.

In President Mahan's account of his visit to Rev. Baptist W. Noel, which we published a few weeks ago, he speaks of having "remarked to him, that his position as a Baptist would diminish the interest which sectarians in America and elsewhere felt for him;" to which Mr. Noel replied, "Of that I am fully aware—my aim is not popularity, but truth."

The prophetic intimation of Mr. Mahan seems to have been very speedily and literally fulfilled. The Evangelical Magazine, one of the oldest and most widely circulated religious periodicals of England, has come down upon Mr. Noel with a fierceness and unfairness which would be more appropriate to the organ of a political cabal than of evangelical protestantism. A recent number of the Magazine contains an article in review of Mr. Noel's book on Baptism, in which he is not only spoken of in disparaging terms, but is charged with partisan vices, and the "zeal of an apostate." To sustain these charges, his language is misquoted and garbled, and a coloring given to the whole subject which is calculated only to mislead and prejudice the reader. As an illustration of the reviewer's fairness, the English correspondent of the Independent gives the following. In stating the plan of his work, Mr. Noel says :—

"I assume, in the following Essay, that the word baptism means immersion, and that to baptize is to immerse ; the evidence of which fact I hope to adduce in a separate volume."

This (says the correspondent) is clear and express enough; and it will hardly be believed—and in Christian charity almost ought not to be believed—that the reviewer has quoted the above sentence down to the word "immerse," stops at the semicolon, treats the end of the sentence as if not written; and, more than this, Mr. Noel having thus very plainly stated that NO proof or argument in favor of immersion would be offered in his Essay, the reviewer has the hardihood to affirm, that this "is the very point in question, and which the volume proposes to discuss in order to prove."

In view of such facts, and of Mr. Noel's remark that he expected such—not merely from the powerful establishment which he abandoned, but from those who at first applauded him for doing so—how great and honorable appears the moral courage of the man who did not hesitate to follow the dictates of his conscience as enlightened by the Word of God.

TO GERRIT SMITH.

Very careful did I intend to be, not to "misrepresent" the Anti-Sectarian Convention. And yet you say I did grossly misrepresent it. If I were conscious that I did thus, then, verily, repentance rather than justification would become me. But I fail to see that I did, in commenting upon the third resolution of that Convention, at all misrepresent it; and yet I doubt not your integrity of purpose in thus charging me.

I endeavored to show the absurdity of a sentiment which I thought was couched both in the third resolution and in the Address. The sentiment is exactly that which you avow in your communication to me of Dec. 21st, viz., "that a man may violate divine requirements, and at the same time be a Christian." The resolution, in essence, is thus: That it is not pertinent to ask concerning the candidate for church membership, whether he honor or violate Christian requirements, but simply whether he be a Christian. From which I infer, that the candidate may be a Christian, although he at the same time violate Christian requirements. In my first communication, I endeavored to show this inference to be a logical one, and I still believe it to be an inference fairly drawn. But your own exposition of the resolution at once obviates the necessity, on my part, to discuss the matter farther. You say the resolution teaches, "that if a person be admitted to be a Christian, then, however great his imperfections, he must be admitted to be a church member. From this I infer, and I think fairly, that a person may be a Christian with great imperfections. Then, if you use the term "imperfection" as synonymous with "violation," as used in the resolution, you have admitted in your exposition exactly what I inferred from the resolution. But if you do not use the term "imperfection" as synonymous with the term "violation" in the resolution, then you have not at all defined the resolution. Now, dear brother, why do you thus charge me with grossly misrepresenting the resolution, when a fair inference from your exposition makes it to mean exactly what I charged upon it?

Again, you say that you disagree with me on the question, What constitutes a Christian? You say that you "believe a man may violate divine requirements, and at the same time be a Christian." Now, what I most ardently desire, both on behalf of myself and many others who wish to be instructed on this point, is that you will teach us the reasons of this belief. I doubt not your belief is predicated on reasons satisfactory to you, and perhaps they would be so to me, were I made acquainted with them. Will you inform those anxious to know, how a person can be a Christian while at the same time he is violating divine requirements? If at all, to what extent may he violate divine requirements without invalidating his claim to Christianity?

I will most cheerfully retract my gratuitous intimation that the Convention was made up in part of pro-slavery voters, and voters for a warrior. I am happy to be informed, that the denomination of Christians to which you belong "are believers in Bible politics," and I pray that all denominations o Christians may soon attain to that enviable point of excellence.

Yours in candid inquiry after the truth,

ALFRED ACADEMY, Jan. 12th, 1850.

CHURCH ACTION ON SECRET SOCIETIES.—The 1st Seventh-day Baptist Church of Alfred, believing it to be their duty, when they see evil coming upon the land, to raise a warning voice, and believing that Secret Societies are in their nature opposed to the peace and well-being, both of church and state, did, nearly three years past, warn their members against connection with the same; and now that the General Conference has declared its opinion in the matter, condemning said Secret Societies, and as said 1st Church of Alfred would unite its influence with the General Conference for more effectually opposing this menacing evil, have in church meeting unanimously passed the following resolution :—

"Resolved, That this Church will receive to its fellowship no adhering member of a Secret Society."

The above is published by order of the Church.

N. V. HULL, Pastor.

MISSIONARY LABOR IN CHINA.—Writing from Canton, under date of Sept., 27, Rev. Mr. Williams says that they had found various interruptions to their work. Some owners of their houses objected to the holding of religious services. The bad feeling between the local government and the Portuguese and English, and the increase of the opium trade, in spite of the Imperial decrees, renders the prospect dark. He remarks :—

"It is an encouraging reflection, amidst so much that is disheartening, that the Gospel is finding its way into the country, and that the God of the Gospel is also the ruler of commerce; and that all the ramifications of the plans of men in the pursuit of gain are a part of his wonder-working scheme to redeem the world. After what we have seen of the wrath of man praising God, we need not despair for the future."

GROWTH OF CATHOLICISM.—The first Catholic Church in New York City, (the second in the State,) was opened in 1796; the eighteenth and nineteenth were opened in 1849. 'The Truth-Teller' estimates the present Catholic population of this city at 100,000. The Catholic Almanac for 1850 says there are now in the United States, 3 Archbishops, 24 Bishops, 1,081 Priests, and 1,076 Churches—an increase of 1 Bishop and 105 Priests within the past year. Of these Priests, 52 were ordained in the United States. If California and New Mexico be included, the Catholic Priests are 1,141, and the churches 1,153. The Catholic population of the Union is estimated at 1,473,350, or if Upper California and New Mexico be included, at 1,523,350. The rapid and vast accessions to the Catholic strength in this country are due mainly to immigration.

COMPLIMENTS WORTH HAVING.—Almost all of the religious papers, says the Protestant Churchman, have heralded the interesting fact, that a reverend divine in Newark, on Thanksgiving Day, received in lieu of a turkey two full-grown eagles! But New Jersey must yield the palm in such sport to our own city. We have it on good authority, that a learned and able divine of the Presbyterian Church received on New Year's day one huudred of the same birds, eagles, in a neat bag—some would call it a souvenir—as a gift from eight or ten persons in his congregation.

To the above we may add, says the New York Recorder, that the Rev. J. R. Kendrick, pastor of the First Baptist Church in Charleston, S. C., on turning over his breakfast plate, Jan. 1, found under it the handsome sum of $250.

THE LICENSE QUESTION.—The bill introduced in the Assembly of New York by Mr. Smith, in relation to restricting the sale of spirituous liquors in this State, provides that it shall not be lawful to sell spirituous liquors, wines, strong beer, or any other intoxicating drinks, except for medicinal or mechanical purposes. It is to be applied equally to the towns, villages and cities of this State. Every person violating the law shall pay a fine of $20 and costs of prosecution for each and every offense; and for each and every offense after having been convicted, shall be imprisoned in the County jail not less than thirty days nor more than ninety days. It provides, also, that it will be lawful for any man to prosecute violators of the law, and on the conviction, they are to be entitled to receive one-half the fine that may be recovered.

DISSOLUTION OF A CHURCH.—The Congregational Church in Christie-street, New-York, having been compelled to sell their meeting-house to pay their debts, concluded to dissolve, and met for that purpose, on the evening of January 12, at the house of the pastor. After appropriate religious exercises, the Trustees reported all claims against the Church as paid, inclusive of the salaries of former pastors, and expenses of lawsuits for the same. They were then discharged from farther service, and a preamble and resolutions were adopted and entered on the church minutes, setting forth the causes which have made the alienation of their property necessary, and the regrets felt at separating from their pastor and from one another, by reason of their inability to sustain public worship any longer without a church edifice where the Gospel might be preached to the poor. Their records and other documents were ordered to be deposited in an iron box made and labeled for the purpose, and to be lodged in a suitable place for safe keeping. The church organization was then declared to be dissolved, having been in existence since the 14th of Feb., 1832, when it was organized as a Presbyterian Church by a commission from the Third Presbytery of New-York.

MEETING OF THE COLONIZATION SOCIETY.—The Annual meeting of the Colonization Society of the United States was held at Washington, Monday, January 14th, every part of the building being densely crowded. Hon. Henry Clay presided, who opened the meeting in a brief speech, setting forth the objects and prospects of the Society. The Annual Report was presented, read, and adopted. From this report it appears, that the past year has been one of great prosperity for the Society. Its receipts have reached the large sum of fifty-five thousand dollars; while its expenditures, owing to pressing and unlooked-for demands, have exceeded that sum, leaving a debt of twelve thousand dollars to be provided for. During the past year four hundred emigrants have been sent to Liberia, and as many more will be sent in the course of the next six weeks. There are more applications by persons desiring to emigrate than can be attended to. The present exigencies of the Society require the raising of above forty thousand dollars. Addresses were made by the Rev. Messrs. Scott, Bethune, and Gurley.

CALIFORNIA LETTERS.—In noticing, several months ago, the departure for California of our friend Dr. J. D. B. STILLMAN, we intimated that the readers of the Recorder might occasionally be treated to letters from him. The expectation thus raised we have now the means of fulfilling; and we intend to commence, next week, the publication of extracts from his letters, giving incidents of his voyage to California, and his travels there. Meanwhile, it may be interesting to the Doctor's friends to learn, that he is comfortably settled at Sacramento City, where, in company with Dr. Morse of Brooklyn, he has opened an extensive hospital for the accommodation of disabled miners.

RELIGIOUS INTEREST IN NEWBURYPORT, MASS.—We learn from private sources, says the Boston Traveler, that the religious interest in Newburyport, continues. Report says that several hundred persons are at the present time specially interested in religious matters, and that a hundred or more are reckoned among the recent converts, of whom a number are aged persons, and some thirty are young men.

HONOR TO THE HUMANE.—Captain Cook, the gallant master of the bark Sarah, who rescued the crew and passengers of the ship Caleb Grimshaw, is now in New-York, where he is the recipient of much attention. The authorities have presented him with the freedom of the city, and the merchants are getting up a suitable testimonial of their appreciation of his magnanimous and seaman-like conduct.

PRINTERS' FESTIVAL.—The Printers of New-York held a grand Festival on the evening of Jan. 17, being the 144th anniversary of the birth of Benjamin Franklin, the patriot, philosopher, and printer. It came off at Niblo's Assembly Rooms; consisting, in the first part, of music, odes, and addresses; and, in the second part, of a sumptuous supper, followed by toasts, letters short speeches, &c.

LITERARY DEGREES.—Some one has estimated that the degree of Doctor in Divinity has been conferred on forty-one persons in the United States during the past year. At this rate, says the Presbyterian, the evil will soon cure itself.

A GOOD EXAMPLE.—The New Haven (Ct.) Journal says that the contributions of the Center Church in that city to the different benevolent societies, amounted in the year 1849 to over $5,200. The sum of $1,700 was contributed to the Home Mission Society.

DEDICATION.—The Dedication of the New Meeting-House built by the first-day people of Scio and Amity, and the Seventh-day Baptists of Amity, took place on Fifth-day, the 20th of December. Sermon by Rev. Mr. Hammond; dedicatory remarks and prayer by Eld. Rowse Babcock.

COM.

To the Editors of the Sabbath Recorder :—

Permit me to inquire, whether it is proper, or consistent with editorial etiquet, for a correspondent to use the plural pronoun "we" in his communications? CONSISTENCY.

☞ We are not aware that the "etiquet" in such cases was ever very definitely fixed. Our own opinion is, that the first person of the pronoun is the better form for a correspondent to use when he wishes it to represent himself, especially if he attaches to his communication a signature which can only stand for one person.

Relic of Martin Luther.—A day or two since, says a writer for the Tribune, we had the pleasure of examining a most interesting relic, being nothing less than the wedding-ring with which Martin Luther, the great reformer, was married. It is of gold, curiously wrought, being broad and flat on the back of the finger, with a small ruby set in the center. On the inside is this inscription, in German: "Dr. Martin Luther, Catherine von Boren, June 13, 1525." The inscription is considerably obscured by wearing. The ring was brought to this country by Charles Luther, a lineal descendant of the reformer, who has abundant proof of its authenticity and of his own, in the certificates of the magistrates of the City of Magdelburgh, in Prussia, where he formerly resided, and of former Ministers of Prussia, through whose hands it has passed. It was once the property of an ancestor of the present King of Prussia, and by him was restored to the family. The present King has offered 3,000 thalers or about $1,800 for it, an offer which was refused by its present possessor, who was last Summer forced to emigrate on account of being involved in political disturbances.

Revivals in England.—The Oberline Evangelist has letters from Rev. Asa Mahan, who has been several months in England. Under date of London, Nov. 30, he says:—

"You and your readers will be interested to learn, that there is now in progress a very interesting revival in the church under the care of Bro. Stevenson, in connection with a series of meetings which I have been holding with him for some time past. It is safe to say, I suppose, that something over a hundred hopeful conversions are already known to have occurred. Under the labors of Bro. Finney, also, in Houghton, a village some seventy miles from this city, a revival of great interest and power is in progress. The region all around is being moved. Bro. Finney is expecting next Sabbath to commence labors in Birmingham, where a wide door is open before him. He has preached four discourses of great interest and power in this city, in Bro. Stevenson's chapel."

State Church of Scotland.—This institution does not seem to be in a flourishing condition. At Dundee, out of 5204 sittings owned by the town in five churches, only 1098 were let, leaving nearly four-fifths unoccupied, the rents amounting to only £283, while the expenditure is about £3000. The State Church is supposed to represent not more than one-fourth of the moral power of the community. The clergy are making great efforts to increase their power by obtaining the control of the education of the people; while in fact they have but 1047 parochial schools, and the non-parochial and other schools are 3995. The Free Church, has voted, 19 to 9, in favor of the parochial schools, and government grants; the United Presbyterians are in favor of schools not under sectarian management.

Wilbur Fisk, D.D.—The Ladies' Literary Repository, for January, has an interesting sketch of the Life of Wilbur Fisk, describing the difficulties which he encountered in his early endeavars to procure an education.

"I once knew a young man, who, without property, or parents, or other friends to help him, at the age of twenty, walked four miles one stormy night, to borrow a Latin grammar, and the next night, after having closed a school he was teaching, walked five miles to obtain from a young lady, who, more fortunate than he, had been to 'the academy,' some instruction how to study Latin. That homeless youth, who took his first lesson in Latin at the age of twenty from a girl much younger than himself, has occupied for twenty years and more, an important position in the literary institutions of the country, having educated thousands. Does not that girl, who readily stopped her spinning-wheel to teach him Latin, deserve a part of the reward for the good that has been done by her pupil in the cause of education?"

Accident on the Sabbath—Four Lives Lost.—The Boston Post says that three lads, named Barnabas Churchill, Jr., 16 years of age, Charles Bates, aged 15 years, and another named Leach, son of Capt. P. Leach, were skating on Saturday afternoon on a pond in Plymouth, when one broke through the ice; the others went to his assistance but also fell in. Mr. Asa Cook and Mr. George Raymond went to their relief, when they also broke through the ice, and sad to relate, all were drowned except young Leach, whom Mr. Cook contrived to lift upon the ice. Mr. Cook was 28 years old, and leaves a family. He was a printer, and a worthy man.

Mayor of Pittsburg Inaugurated, and Taken Back to Prison.—It has been announced that Joseph Barker, hitherto known as the "street preacher," had actually been elected Mayor of Pittsburg while a prisoner in jail, under sentence of 6 months imprisonment, for delivering immoral and indecent harangues to crowds of people assembled in the streets. It was also stated, that a telegraphic dispatch had been received from Harrisburg, announcing that Gov. Johnson had pardoned him, but up to Friday morning it had not reached Pittsburg, and some doubts are entertained whether the announcement was correct that a pardon had been granted.

Friday morning being the time appointed by the charter for the meeting of the new council and the inauguration of the Mayor, they assembled, and the sheriff brought the Mayor into the council chamber from the jail, to be inaugurated, when he was greeted with immense cheering by his friends assembled in the lobby.

The oath of office was administered to him by Judge Patton, who a few months ago passed sentence upon him. The Judge made some remarks on administering the oath, and immediately withdrew.

Mr. Barker, after having been sworn in, made a speech.

After the speech, he handed in a list of his appointments of the officers of the Corporation, and was conducted back to jail by the Sheriff, to await the receipt of the promised pardon of the Governor.

PROCEEDINGS IN CONGRESS LAST WEEK.

In Senate. Second-day, Jan. 14.

Mr. Webster presented several memorials very numerously signed, asking Congress for increased facilities for regular and frequent intercourse by mail, between the Atlantic Ports and San Francisco. Referred to Committee on Post Offices.

Mr. Webster also presented a memorial, containing many hundred signatures, asking Congress to take measures for the construction of a Railroad from the Missouri River to San Francisco.

Mr. Douglass submitted a resolution that the Committee on the District of Columbia be instructed to inquire into the expediency of retroceding to the State of Maryland that portion of said District which is not embraced in the corporate limits of the City of Washington; and also into the expediency of so amending the charter of the said City of Washington as to authorize the Corporation thereof to exercise the powers of legislation usually exercised by the regularly organized Territories of the United States, under their respective laws.

Mr. Clemens introduced a joint resolution proposing an amendment to the Constitution directing the election of Senators by the people.

The joint resolution, suspending for a time the act limiting the expenses of collecting the revenues from Customs, was taken up and after remarks by various individuals and several unimportant amendments, the subject was laid over.

House of Representatives.

The whole day was spent in discussing the Rules for the House reported by a Committee.

In Senate. Third-day, Jan. 15.

The joint resolution relative to expense of collecting the revenue, was taken up, and the subject was disposed of for the present by the adoption of a resolution, that instead of the sum appropriated for the expenses of collecting the same in the Act of March 3, 1849, a sum equal to that expended in meeting the revenue of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1848, exclusive of the expenses for storage, cartage, drayage and labor in that year, be, and the same hereby is, appropriated for the service of the year ending June 30, 1850, together with such sums in addition, as may be received for cartage, drayage, labor and storage.

A resolution, requesting the President to lay before the Senate all charges upon which individuals had been removed from office since the 4th day of March last, was discussed till the hour of adjournment.

House of Representatives.

Balloting, unsuccessfully, for door-keeper.

In Senate. Fourth-day, Jan. 16.

Gov. Seward presented a memorial from citizens of New-York for the abolition of Slavery in the District of Columbia, and moved its reference to the Judiciary Committee. The question of its reception was tabled, 32 to 19.

Mr. Benton introduced a bill to reduce the boundaries of Texas, and made a speech on the subject.

Mr. Foote called up his bill to organize Territorial Governments for California, New Mexico and Deseret, and to erect the District of Jacinto into a Slave State, and made a speech. Referred to the Judiciary Committee.

Mr. Butler reported back from the Judiciary Committee, with amendment, the bill in relation to the recapture of fugitive slaves, and it was made the special order for Second day of this week.

Mr. Hamlin submitted resolutions of inquiry in regard to the barbarous treatment of American seamen in Japan, and in reference to our commercial relations with the Independent Oriental Nations.

House of Representatives.

Still occupied in an unsuccessful attempt to elect a door-keeper.

In Senate. Fifth-day, Jan. 10.

The only subject before the Senate was Mr. Clemens' resolution of inquiry as to acts of the present Administration, relative to the formation of a Constitution for California, and her application for admission into the Union. After a lengthy discussion, the resolution was adopted, and the Senate adjourned over to Second-day of the present week.

House of Representatives.

The House was occupied in another fruitless attempt to elect a door-keeper.

House of Representatives. Sixth-day, Jan. 18.

The House spent the day in fooling about the election of a door-keeper, as usual, and with the usual no result.

Postmasters and Newspapers.

Post-office Department,
Appointment Office, Dec. 31, 1849.

Sir,—The Postmaster General, after careful consideration of the question as to the right of Postmasters that have the privilege of franking to frank letters to publishers of newspapers, covering money for subscriptions on the names of subscribers, has decided that, when the Postmaster is agent for the publisher, he has the power to frank such letters, and his agency will be presumed from the fact that he franks them. As no Postmaster has any authority to frank these communications but when he is such an agent, it is proper to regard him as acting in that capacity when he so conducts, until information is received to the contrary. In doing this business the Postmaster must be regarded as entirely the agent of the publisher, and not of the Department.

Very respectfully, &c.,
Fitz Henry Warren.

H. Fuller, Esq., Editor Mirror, N. Y.

Speaker of House of Representatives.—Hon. Howell Cobb is in the 35th year of his age. He is the son of Col. John A. Cobb, formerly of Greenville, North Carolina, and was born at Cherry Hill, Jefferson county, Georgia, Sept. 7th, 1815. His mother was the daughter of the late Thomas Rootes, of Fredericksburg, Va. He graduated at Franklin College, Athens, Georgia, in 1834. He married in 1835 Mary Ann, a daughter of Col. Zach. Lamar, of Milledgeville, Ga., and has had six sons, of whom only three survive. He was admitted to the bar in 1836, and in the following year elected Solicitor General of his native State. He has served in Congress six years, having been elected in 1842, and thrice re-elected. He bears the name of an uncle, who was one of the representatives from George during the last British war.

Lofty Tumbling.—One day last week a glazier was employed in putting a pane of glass in a front window of the fourth story of a building in Chatham street opposite the Theater, when by some accident he lost his hold and fell out. A crowd rushed to the spot expecting to behold his mangled and lifeless corpse, but they were cheated of that luxury by the cool glazier, who, after staring around a moment and rubbing one of his elbows, deliberately walked up stairs to finish his job. He had fallen upon a strong awning, broke through it, and landed upon a pile of California boots lying upon the sidewalk, his fall being so broken that he was not hurt in the least. [Tribune.

Discovery of a Northwest Passage.—A letter in the Courier and Enquirer, dated Mazatlan, Nov. 23, states that the British frigate Amphytrie, sloop-of-war Hecate, and the Royal Thames yacht, club schooner Nancy Dawson, arrived on the 19th inst. from the Northern Ocean. The writer affirms that they have discovered a northwest passage in lat. 73 and lon. about 30 1-2, having gone one degree and a half farther north than any vessel had previously been. He also says that they discovered a new continent, but on account of ice could not approach nearer than fifteen miles to land. They did not find Sir John Franklin, and on account of ice were forced to leave.

Difficulty in Georgetown College.—A very serions difficulty has occurred in the Georgetown College. It appears that a Foreign Professor has been tyranizing over the students for some time, and enforcing the most humiliating and demoralizing practices. The students held a meeting and passed a series of condemnatory resolutions. Three of the leaders in this movement were expelled, whereupon 60 of the students left the College, leaving only 15. It is said that before the 60 left, they forcibly released their three companions who had been confined.

SUMMARY.

The Adams Co. (Penn.) prison, at Gettysburgh, was discovered to be on fire at 3 o'clock A. M., on the 7th inst., and the interior of the building was burned out before the fire could be arrested. Isaac Musselman and John Toner, both insane, were the only persons confined in the prison, and they fell victims to the flames, all efforts to save them proving abortive, so rapid was the progress of the flames.

Jamaica papers, received by the Cherokee, give a report that the forces of the Dominican Republic have invaded the territory of the empire of Hayti, and that the Dominican fleet had bombarded and destroyed some Haytien towns and villages. The town of L'Anse a Pitre was reduced to ashes. The Haytien schooner Charite was captured near Aux Cayes. A sloop and six boats were taken and sunk, with 25 of their crew killed and 18 taken prisoners.

The total number of vessels which arrived at San Francisco from April 2 to Dec. 1, 1849, was 276—of which 174 were American, 34 English, 10 French, 16 Chilian, 1 Belgian, 1, Bremen, 2 Portuguese, 2 Spanish, 1 Danish, 1 Russian, 3 Hawaiian, 1 Swedish, 2 Norwegian, 2 Oldenburg, 18 Hamburg, 2 New Granadian 1 Mexican, 1 Italian, 7 Brazilian, 2 Equadorian. Millions of pigeons have been filling the woods for miles around Franklin, Tenn., for several weeks past. They have a roost several miles in extent in the edge of Hickman county, and with a torch and club the people sally forth at night and bring home their game by the meal-bags full.

One argument in favor of a Mint in California is that the local coining establishments make a coin which is almost a fac simile of the Government mintage, while it is considerably more alloyed. The pieces cannot be distinguished from the Government issue, except by close examination.

Another robbery of gold dust to the value of $5,000 has taken place on one of the Pacific steamers, and no clue to the metal is yet obtained. On the Isthmus, at Gorgona, another robbery took place. The dust amounted to $9,000 in value, and was the property of two laboring men. It was stolen from them while asleep.

It is said that there are, in the Sixth Ward of New York, 95 houses of ill-fame, containing 350 inmates or boarders; 35 houses in which thieves, watch-stuffers, and suspicious persons, make their homes; 17 shops for selling lottery policies, and 398 liquor stores, of which 131 are without license. Such is the record of the Police.

In Wall-street, New York, one day last week, a great and pleasant excitement was created by the appearance of Capt. Cook, of the Bark Sarah, the heroic preserver of the lives of the passengers of the Caleb Grimshaw. Scrip, shares, and bank hours were forgotten, and every body crowded to greet the brave old tar.

Prosper M. Wetmore's accounts with the Government, as Navy Agent, have been balanced, and the amount of his defalcation is ascertained to be one hundred and eighty-one thousand six hundred and five dollars and seventy-nine cents.

A firm in Boston, engaged in the boot and shoe trade, sent several months since a quantity of high-top, coarse-grained boots to California, which cost them from $24 to $30 per dozen. They recently received a bill of sale of the boots, which brought from ninety to one hundred dollars a pair.

The Plymouth Church, in Brooklyn, rented its pews last week. The annual rent for the 155 pews sold is $7,358. One pew rented for $152.

At Birmingham they have a machine by which one man and four boys will make 30,000 letter envelops per day.

The London United States Gazette has reasons for "boldly announcing that the question of abandoning Canada, as a British Colony, has been the most absorbing topic (with the Cabinet,) and we learn, from authority in which we are apt to place firm reliance, that it has been all but determined to give up Canada, as a Dependency of the British Crown.

On Saturday evening, Mr. Ralph Warren, Depot Master at West Townsend, who was so atrociously robbed of $450, on Thursday night, found a package on the step of his door, which contained just one-quarter of the money stolen from him. It is supposed that four persons were engaged in the robbery, and that one of the parties, having a qualm of conscience, has returned his share of the plunder.

The amount of California gold received from June 1 to Dec. 31 is almost 3,000,000, to which must be added the amount brought by the passengers of the various steamers, supposed to be nearly equal to as much more. Probably the aggregate amount received is not far from six millions of dollars.

The charters of the Bank of Utica, the Bank of Monroe at Rochester, the Bank of Auburn, and the Bank of Ithaca, expired on the 1st inst. The Bank of Utica has organized under the general banking law, and the Bank of Monroe will be wound up by trustees appointed for the purpose.

The St. Louis newspapers of the 29th December, record seven cases of shooting, or stabbing, with more or less fatal results; and one of attempted abduction of a little girl. The Union, which chronicles these seven different cases of broils in which fire arms were used, says that it has mentioned only a portion of the outrages that occurred within the course of forty-eight hours.

We learn from the Republican, that they are turning out new muskets at the Springfield Armory at the rate of 1500 per month, besides rapidly changing the flint lock muskets in the arsenal to percussion locks, and making a few carbines. The number of men employed there by Government is larger than at any previous period in the history of the establishment.

A small steamer, plying on the Seneca Lake, between Geneva and Jefferson, was sunk at Dresden, on the 17th inst., by coming in collision with another boat. Loss trifling and no one injured. The steamer Benjamin Loder will commence her trips on the Seneca Lake, in connection with the New-York and Erie Railroad.

Drury, the culprit, under arrest for sending the torpedo to Mr. Warner's house, in New-York, attemptad to bribe one of the Judges by sending him $200. The whole matter was laid before the Grand Jury, and if his other crimes do not send him to Sing-Sing, this will probably give him a gratuitous ten years there.

We learn from the Journal of Commerce, that the physicians in this city practicing the Homœopathic system of therapeutics, have resolved to establish a school for the education of young men. The present Medical Schools are both allopathic, yet many young men who design to adopt the system of Hahneman, are constantly in attendance upon them.

Mr. Seaman was scalded to death in the bath at French's Hotel, N. Y., a few days since. He probably found the water too cold, and let on the hot stream, which suddenly relaxed his system, and he fainted. During the syncope the hot water continued to come in, and the result was fatal.

Mail Line between Boston and New York.

REGULAR MAIL LINE BETWEEN BOSTON AND NEW YORK via Stonington and Providence. Inland route, without ferry, change of cars or baggage! The new steamer C. VANDERBILT, Capt. Joel Stone, and COMMODORE, Capt. William H. Frazee, in connection with the Stonington and Providence and Boston and Providence Railroads, leaving New York daily, Sundays excepted, from Pier No. 2 North River, at 4 o'clock P. M., and Stonington at 8 o'clock P. M. or upon the arrival of the mail train from Boston. These steamers were built expressly for the route, and are in every respect particularly adapted to the navigation of Long Island Sound. The accommodations for passengers are commodious and comfortable—the officers capable and experienced. The route being the shortest and most direct between Boston and New York, passengers are enabled to arrive in ample time for the morning lines of steamboats and railroads running to various points from those cities. The C. VANDERBILT will leave New York Tuesday, Thursday, and Saturday. Leave Stonington Monday, Wednesday, and Friday. The COMMODORE will leave New York Monday, Wednesday, and Friday. Leave Stonington Tuesday, Thursday, and Saturday. For passage, berths, staterooms or freight, application may be made to the agents on the wharf, and at the office, 10 Battery-place.

Utter, Corresponding Secretary of the American Sabbath Tract Society, No. 9 Spruce-st., New York.

Scientific and Practical Agriculture.

HENRY STEPHENS, F. R. S. E., of Edinburgh, the celebrated author of the "Book of the Farm," and PROF. NORTON, of Yale College, New Haven, are preparing for the Press, a Book to be entitled,

AGRICULTURE—SCIENTIFIC AND PRACTICAL.

It will embrace every subject of importance connected with Agriculture in all its various branches, both Theoretical and Practical. "Science, in as far as it has, up to the present time, been made available to Practice by Experiment, will be treated in its relation to every operation as it occurs in the course of the seasons." The work will be arranged under four distinct heads, representing the seasons, beginning with Winter and ending with Autumn. The following are among the subjects to be treated of in the first and second seasons, including the Introductory, viz:

Initiation.—On the best of the existing Methods for acquiring a thorough knowledge of Practical Husbandry the Difficulties to be encountered in learning practical husbandry, and on the Means of overcoming them; the different kinds of farming; the persons required to conduct and execute the labor of the farm; the branches of science most applicable to Agriculture; the Institutions of Education best suited to Agricultural science; the evils attending the neglect of landowners and others to learn Practical Agriculture; on observing the details and recording the facts of farming by the Agricultural student.

Practice—Winter.—On the treatment of farm-horses in Winter; the treatment of the farmer's saddle and harness horse in Winter; the fattening of swine; the treatment of fowls; the rationale of the feeding of animals; on the accommodation of the grain crops in the steading; threshing and winnowing of grain; on the forming of dunghills and composts in Winter; on the construction of liquid-manure tanks and carts; sea-weed as manure; on gaulting or claying the soil.

Practice—Spring.—Summary of the field operations, and of the weather in Spring; on the advantages of having field-work always in a state of forwardness; on the calving of cows; the milking of cows; the rearing of calves. On the sowing of spring wheat; on drilling up the land; on the sowing of beans, and peas, and tares. On the transplanting of turnip bulbs for producing seed. On the rolling of land. On the sowing of oats, lucerne, and sainfoin. On the lambing of ewes. On cross-ploughing land, and ribbing land for the seed-furrow. On the sowing of grass-seeds and barley. On the turning of dunghills. On the planting of potatoes. On paring and baring the surface. On the farrowing of sows; the hatching of fowls, &c.

The Work will also embrace many important operations not included in the ordinary routine of farming, such as "Judging of Land," "Stocking of a Farm," "Improvement of the Soil," &c., &c.

The contributions by Prof. Norton will add greatly to the value of the book, by adapting it to the Soil, Climate, Growth, &c., of our own Country; and the united labors of two such distinguished men will make this work one of the most complete and valuable to the American farmer, ever issued from the press.

The work will be comprised in about 18 Nos. of 80 pages each, with a steel engraving in every number; besides which it will contain more than 600 wood engravings, in the highest style of the art. It will be handsomely printed on fine paper, and sold at 25 cents a number, or $4 in advance for the eighteen numbers.

The First Number will be issued in the month of January, and the work will be completed in about one year. The first volume, written by Mr. Stephens, is already published in Edinburgh, and the Americans edition will be printed from the stereotype plates imported for that purpose.

Booksellers and Dealers in Periodicals will be furnished on liberal terms.

Postmasters and others remitting the money for three copies at the above prices, will receive a fourth copy gratis. Remittances will be at the risk of the Publishers, if the mailing of the money is proved—otherwise at the risk of the parties remitting. A postmaster's certificate of the money being duly mailed is always satisfactory evidence to the Publishers.

SMITHSONIAN INSTITUTE—SYNOPSIS OF THE ANNUAL REPORTS.

From the Philadelphia Bulletin.

The institution, during last year, has been gradually extending its operations of usefulness, and successively bringing into operation the different parts of the plan of organization. The various parts of the plan were adopted provisionally, and it is gratifying to be able to state, that experience, thus far, has indicated no important changes to be necessary. The institution contemplates effecting with the funds at its disposal the following objects:—

1. The publication of original works, consisting of positive additions to knowledge.
2. The institution of original researches.
3. The publication of reports on the progress of knowledge.
4. The formation of a library, museum, collection of apparatus, and a gallery of Art.
5. The delivery of public lectures in the city of Washington.

The greater portion of the income is at present devoted to the erection of the building, and that to be applied to the active operations of the institution is comparatively small.

PUBLICATIONS.

The first volume of contributions has been before the world for upwards of a year. It has been distributed to learned societies in all parts of the world, and to the principal libraries, colleges, and other institutions in our country. The volume has been received with much approbation, and all of the learned societies, as far as have been heard from, have signified their intention of exchanging with the institution. To enable individuals to supply themselves with those volumes, it is proposed hereafter to print an edition to be sold at a low price, barely sufficient to repay the cost of paper and press work. The copies of the first volume were disposed of for the benefit of the authors.

The second volume of contributions is now in the press. It comprises memoirs on a variety of subjects, as Astronomy, by Prof. Walker; Physical Geography, by Mr. Ellet; Voltaic Electricity, by Prof. Secchi; Chemistry, by Dr. Hare; Geography, by Prof. Gibbes; Natural History, by Prof. Agassiz; and the ancient monuments of the Aborigines of this country, by Mr. Squier, and other memoirs of great interest.

RESEARCHES.

The institution has assisted Lieut. Gilliss in procuring instruments to be used in his expedition to Chili, and has caused to be computed, published, and distributed to Astronomers, a set of occultations of fixed stars during the year 1850, for the scientific exploring parties and others. It has supplied magnetic instruments to the Mexican boundary survey. It has in preparation a circular to be issued to engineers and other suitable persons, requesting them to transmit to the institution statistics of railroad and canal explorations, measurements of hights, geological sections, &c. It has sent letters to different individuals and various historical societies, asking them to assist in collecting information on the ancient monuments of North America. It has assisted explorers in New Mexico and California in collecting Natural History and Botany, by subscribing for the specimens brought home by them, and in purchasing collections made in other parts of the United States, and has established an extended system of meteorological observations, reaching from the Atlantic to the Pacific, now comprehending 150 stations, from which returns are regularly received, and which, by the acts of the States of New York, Massachusetts, Pennsylvania, with observations made at the military posts and naval stations, will probably comprise 300 observations.

Instruments are likewise to be furnished for officers of the telegraph lines, from which returns once a day are to be transmitted to the Institution, and it has aided its own observers to supply themselves with instruments by having a large number constructed in a very superior manner, and selling them at about half cost.

REPORTS ON THE PROGRESS OF SCIENCE.

The first part of a report on Forest Trees of America will be published in a few months, illustrated by original drawings from Nature. It is divested of technicalities, so as to adapt it to popular as well as scientific use. It will contain all the recent discoveries, with much original matter. It is by Professor A. Grey, of Cambridge, Mass.

A report on Meteorological Instruments, their Use and Construction, by Professor Guyot, is ready for the press. It will be sent gratuitously to all the meteorological observers of the Institution.

A report on Recent Discoveries of Astronomy, by Dr. B. A. Gould of Cambridge, Mass., is also ready for the press. Also a report on Agricultural Chemistry, by Dr. Lewis C. Beck, of N. J.

LIBRARY.

As far as the appropriations of the year would permit, Prof. Jewett has been actively engaged in collecting, arranging and catalogueing the books in the library. A catalogue of all the books in the principal libraries of the United States is in progress, as well as the libraries of Congress, Departments, &c., in Washington City. Much information has also been accumulated relative to the libraries in the United States, the number of their volumes, the state of their catalogues, the general rules for their government, how sustained, &c.

MUSEUM.

The portion of the building devoted to this department is yet unfinished, and but little advancement has been made. It is the design of the institution to procure special collections; a series of objects intended to elucidate a particular subject of inquiry, being preferable to amassing a heterogeneous assemblage of miscellaneous articles of mere curiosity.

APPARATUS.

Collections in this department are to be arranged as a Museum of Physical Instruments to exhibit the progress made in this line of workmanship, and to furnish models to workmen in our country for their construction. The munificent donation of Dr. Hare has been received and partly arranged, comprising the apparatus collected and used by him for the illustration of the lectures in the Chemical Department of the University of Pennsylvania. It contains also a suite of instruments for the illustration of the laws of light and heat. Some have been received from Europe, and a very fine set of Apparatus for Pneumatical experiments has been furnished to order from Boston. A descriptive catalogue of all the collections of this character will be issued for the use of visitors. It is proposed hereafter, when the building is completed, to permit portions of the apparatus to be used by persons making original researches in Physics or Chemistry, who are competent and skillful in their use.

LECTURES.

A series of lectures will be delivered in the Smithsonian building, commencing on the 16th of January, to be continued at intervals during the session of Congress. The lecture-room in the east wing has been much enlarged, and rendered more suitable in its arrangements for the accommodation of the audience. A number of gentlemen distinguished for their attainments in literature and science, have accepted the invitation of the Secretary to visit Washington to deliver two, three or more lectures each.

REPORT OF THE EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE.

The whole amount of the Smithsonian bequest received into the U. S. Treasury was $515,169. The interest which had accrued on the same up to 1st July, 1846, was $242,129, making in all $757,298.

The Regents were authorized to expend on the building the $242,129 which had accrued in interest, together with such portions of interest on the original bequest as might remain unexpended in any year. They concluded, however, to limit the whole expenditure on the building and the grounds to a sum not exceeding $250,000; and in order that this might not exhaust the accrued interest, it was resolved that this expenditure should not be made at once, but in the course of five years, and that in the meantime the sum of $242,000, authorized to be expended on the building, should be invested so as to yield an interest which might, in part, serve to defray the expense of the building. To carry out this plan, the $242,000, with the addition of accrued interest sufficient to make up the sum of $250,000, was invested in Treasury Notes; and in order that the institution might not be a loser by a possible depreciation of these notes, the contracts for the building were made payable in these at par value, or in specie, at the option of the Regents. Up to this time, only $50,000 of these notes have been expended. They have thus been made to yield a constant interest, beside increasing in value on account of the rise in government securities. The whole expenditure since the commencement of operations to the present time is $199,157 21, the whole of which has been made from the accruing interest on the fund and the sale of $50,000 of notes above mentioned.

From this it appears that after paying for more than half of the building, carrying on the operations of the Institution, collecting a library and philosophical apparatus, the sum originally intrusted to the Regents has only been diminished by less than $10,000.

DESTRUCTION OF PIRATES IN THE CHINA SEAS.

From the Hong Kong Register of Oct. 29.

The past month has been marked by an unusual activity on the part of our ships-of-war in the suppression of piracy in these waters. We mentioned in our last, that a formidable fleet of 50 large piratical junks, under the command of a notorious pirate-chief named Shap-'ng-tsai, had been discovered in a bay called Tien-pakh, on the west coast, by her Majesty's steamer Media. Five junks were destroyed on the occasion by the boats of the Media, after which the fleet appears to have divided itself, one squadron consisting of about 25 large junks, under command of Chui-a-poo, the murderer of Captain Da Costa, proceeding up the north east coast; the other, under Shap-'ng-tsai himself, proceeding to the southward.

The northern squadron has been totally destroyed. Twenty-three large junks, averaging 500 tons each, mounting from 12 to 18 guns, three new junks on the stocks, and two dockyards, full of naval stores, were totally destroyed by the shot and shell of the Fury on the 2d of October, in an inlet called 'Pirates' Cove,' about fifty miles to the northward of Hong Kong, and out of 1,800 men who manned them, 400 have been killed, and the rest dispersed without resource.

Flushed by this splendid success, a second expedition, consisting of the Columbine, Fury, and Hon. Co's steamer Phlegethon, sailed for the south-west in search of Shap-'ng-tsai and the remainder of the pirate fleet.

The Columbine first had a fight with a large piratical junk, which was blown up by the pirates, after a sharp cannonading, just as boats from the Columbine were boarding. The crew, supposed to be 90 in number, perished in the explosion: of the boarders, an officer and a marine were killed, the others badly wounded.

Afterward the Fury had an engagement with sixteen junks, with the following result: At 10 30 A. M. the steamer returned their fire, and the first shell set one of their number in flames. At 10 46 A. M. the firing opened from the furthermost junks, and another row on the right, which also commenced a rapid fire. Matters proceeded in this style until 11 30, when more of the junks took fire from the shell which exploded inboard, and the exertions of the pirates become now, for the first time, sensibly diminished. Within ten minutes two large junks blew up, with fearful effect on their neighbors as well as themselves, and these were succeeded by three others in rapid succession. A shell now entered one of the largest from the foremost 68 pounder, and she almost immediately followed her predecessors; another also proved to be on fire, and exploded. Their detachment on the right seemed now hors du combat; numbers might be seen jumping from the stern of the still remaining junks, against whom the grape told with fatal effect. Such as escaped took to the hills. A harrassing fire was still kept up from those on the left of the creek. By two P. M. the firing on the part of the Chinese had ceased. A party of marines was dispatched on shore, under cover of the boats, to examine and destroy the various houses, and to prevent the descent of the enemy, who were watching on the summits of the various hills which surround this beautiful and well-chosen site, while others of the force were busily engaged firing the yet remaining junks; this accomplished they returned on board.

CALIFORNIA ITEMS.

From letters received by the last steamer.

A year ago, there might have been 500 inhabitants in San Francisco. There are now, at a low calculation, upward of 20,000.

The steamboat Senator, which formerly run on Long Island Sound, is now running between San Francisco, and Sacramento City. She is coining gold for her owners. She carries about 150 passengers daily, at $30; the meals, scantily provided, are $2. Her net profits are at least $100,000 monthly. The McKim runs also to Sacramento, but is a slower boat, and not so well patronized. Both of these vessels touch at Benicia. A large steamer called the Capt. Sutter, makes regular trips from San Francisco to Stockton. The Sacramento, a small boat, has commenced running to the Pueblo San Jose. There is also a tri-weekly stage to the same place—fare $32, or something more than half-a-dollar per mile.

There is no variation in the cost of living in San Francisco, except that lodgings may be had at a cheaper rate. Houses are fitted up now, ship-fashion, with state-rooms, each of which contains four berths. In this way an ordinary room will lodge twenty or thirty persons. The cost of lodging in this style is $6 per week. Boarding of a plain kind, may be had at $14 and $16 per week, but at most of the eating-houses it is $20 and $25. No probability of much reduction in prices, for a year to come.

Laborers' wages have slightly decreased since the previous steamer. The carpenters have had a strike at San Francisco as well as in Sacramento City, and gained their point. Waiters get $150 per month. Many persons have come down from the mines, seeking employment for the winter. Several suicides have been committed, through disappointment and despondency. Physicians who are connected with the hospitals say that they have frequent cases of lunacy under their charge, some caused by the sudden accumulation of gold, and others by the lack of it.

BAD NEWS FOR THE RATS.

A grand battue against the rats in the sewers of Paris, which are about 150 leagues in extent, commenced recently. The result is said to be, the destruction of 250,000 rats, and it is expected that by the 1st of February the number will have reached 600,000. The municipal authorities are of the opinion that by making four battues a year Paris will be rid of these destructive vermin. Several plans of destruction were made use of by the different brigades of sewermen; but that which was found to be most successful was the placing of a large leather sack, in which a large piece of mutton tallow was placed—a dainty of which these animals are very fond—at the corner of each sewer, and toward which the animals were driven.

The Union, in giving an account of the affair, says: The 250,000 rats were all of the grey Norwegian breed, except from 500 to 600 black or English rats. Two of these animals were put aside by the men as a curiosity, to be presented to the collection of animals at the Jardin des Plantes. From the extremity of the tail to the tip of the nose these two rats measured 51 centimetres, (nearly 20 inches English.) Their eyes are red, like those of white mice, and their coats are as black and glossy as the silk on a hat. The ferocity of these animals is such that one of the Norway rats was literally devoured in ten minutes by the two English rats above-mentioned.

The animals after their capture were all taken to the Ils des Ravageurs, where they were killed and skinned, an operation that was not performed without much danger. It is said that some demur has arisen on the part of two glovers of Grenoble, who had offered to take all the rat skins at the rate of 100 francs per 1,000, they having discovered a means of rendering them available in making gloves. It appears that they had calculated on the number reaching 100,000, and are now alarmed at the immense increase in the number; but as they have entered into a contract it must be fulfilled. It is said, however, that more advantageous propositions have been made by a Mr. John Warton, a rich leather dresser in London, who is not alarmed at 1,000,000, more or less, and it is thought that he will be the purchaser of the lot.

THE LOWELL MANUFACTORIES.

The Factories extend in a continuous line on the Merrimack River, from Pawtucket Falls to the junction of the Merrimack and Concord Rivers, a mile in length of mills and machinery. On the opposite side of the city are twelve other mills.

Merrimack Manufacturing Co., employs 2050 hands, producing 345,000 yards of cotton cloth weekly; Hamilton Co., 1200 hands, 180,000 yards sheeting and shirting; Lowell Co., 800 hands, manufacturing 6,500 yards carpeting, and 95,000 yards cotton cloth weekly; Middlesex Co., 1750 hands, 18,967 yards cassimere and 2,334 yards broadcloth; Suffolk mills, 500 hands, 100,000 yards drilling; Tremont mills, 500 hands, 120,000 yards of sheeting and shirting; Lawrence, 1,400 hands, 260,000 yards sheeting and shirting; Boott mills, 1100 hands, 220,000 yards drilling, shirting and printed cloth; Massachusetts mills, 1,500 hands, 475,000 yards sheeting, and drilling; Lowell Bleachery, 320 hands, dyeing 2,000,000 yards and bleaching 4,000 lbs., annually; Lowell Machine Shop, 700 hands. One pound of cotton will make three and two-tenths yards of cloth. The wages of the operatives are paid once a month. The average pay of females is $2 per week, clear of board; men, 80 cents per day. Each corporation has boarding houses to accommodate their own employees. The population of Lowell at present is 35,000.

IMPORTANT INVENTION.

We learn from a letter in the Union, from Rufus Porter, Esq., a gentleman well versed in the arts and inventions, that Henry M. Paine, Esq., discovered and practically tested an almost expenseless mode of decomposing water and reducing it to the gaseous state. By the simple operation of a very small machine, without galvanic batteries, or the consumption of metals or acids, and only the application of less than 1-300th part of one horse power, Mr. Paine produces 200 cubic feet of hydrogen gas, and 100 feet of oxygen gas per hour. This quantity of these gases, the actual cost of which is less than one cent, furnishes as much heat by combustion as 2,000 feet of the ordinary coal gas, and sufficient to supply light equal to 300 common lamps for ten hours, or to warm an ordinary dwelling-house twelve hours, including the requisite heat for the kitchens; or to supply the requisite heat for one horse power of steam.

The invention, it is stated, has been tested by six months' operation, applied to the lighting of houses, and recently the applicability of these gases to the warming of houses has also been tested with perfectly satisfactory results. A steam engine furnace and a parlor stove, both adapted to the burning of these gases, have been invented and measures taken for securing patents thereof. The only actual expense of lighting houses by this apparatus is that of winding up a weight, (like the winding up of a clock,) once a day; and the heat produced may be as easily graduated and regulated as the flame of a common gas-burner. No smoke whatever is produced, but a very small quantity of steam, sufficient to supply the requisite moisture to the atmosphere.

Remarkable River.—The Florida Sentinel contains an account of the examination by a committee of scientific gentlemen of the River Wacissa, in Florida, with a view of testing its capacity for a water-power for manufacturing purposes, and the practicability of connecting it with the St. Marks by a canal. They found water at the head of the river thirty-two feet above the high water in the St. Marks, at Newport. The Sentinel describes the Wacissa River as one of the natural curiosities almost peculiar to Florida. It takes its rise, like the Wakulla, in springs of tremendous volume, forming an immense basin with bold shores, from which it runs in a SSE direction in a deep and broad stream, about fourteen miles to a swamp, where most of it disappears through a subterranean channel, by which it is discharged into the gulf. This river is said to contain a greater volume of water than the Potomac or James River, and like all rivers having a similar rise in Florida, it is affected neither by drouth or fresh, affording one steady, uniform, and unvarying current all the year. Any conceivable amount of water power can be obtained by means of the canal in question, and it will not only be unfailing but unvarying. The committee are of opinion that more than ten times the water-power of Lowell can be found there at a small exeense.

New-Grenada.—The Republic of New-Grenada is composed of twenty-five Provinces; each Province is entitled to one or more Senators, and some two or three Representatives. The Congress meets at Bogota on the 1st of March in every year; and each Province has a Chamber of Deputies, amounting in all to the number of near 300. The President is elected every four years, and is ineligible afterward. He is chosen by Electors, the same as in the United States. His salary is $12,000 per annum. The present incumbent of this high office is Joseph H. Lopez. The Vice-President is chosen in the same manner and for the same space of time. Rufing Cuervo is the present incumbent of the Vice-Presidency, and his term will expire in 1851. His salary is $4,000 per annum. Each Senator and Representative receives $6 per diem for the term of two or three months, the usual period of the session of Congress. The mileage is equal to about $6 per mile. The Secretaries of the Departments are paid the sum of $3,000 per annum. The population of the City of Bogota is estimated at about 60,000 inhabitants. It is the Capital of the Republic. [Panama Star.

Awful Catastrophe in Ireland.—English papers received by the last steamer, state that on a recent Wednesday, from four to five hundred paupers attended at the Kilrush union, in order to seek either admittance to the work-house or out-door relief. But alas! their supplications were fruitless, and after spending the day (a most inclement one) in a miserable state of suffering, they were obliged, when evening came, to return unrelieved to their homes, some of these being from eight to ten miles distant from Kilrush. Within two miles of the town there is a ferry, about 200 yards wide, over which a number of these starving creatures were obliged to cross. Too many crowded into the boat, and she sunk on the passage, when about 40 men, women, and children perished, five only being saved! Up to Thursday morning there had been 31 bodies recovered. Language fails to describe the sad state of this doomed union. The guardians have neither funds nor credit, and are in debt £18,000. There are 13,000 paupers actually starving.

Patent Improved Safety Sliding-breech Fire-arm, or celebrated Prussian Zund-Nadel.—John B. Klein of New York has lately received a patent for the United States as assignee of the inventor. This gun has been used with extraordinary effect by the Prussian army against the Danes; and in the Grand Duchy of Baden and in Dresden. It can fire ten shots in a minute, and carries a ball with effect 800 yards, needs no priming powder or cap. The igniting material is in the cartridge, and this is ignited by the trigger forcing a needle into the cartridge. There is an air chamber behind the cartridge the expansion of which assists in projecting the ball, and causes it to be carried to so great a distance. No priming is required, it is therefore not affected by wet weather; and all that has to be done to load, is to draw back the breech-pin, put in the cartridge, and then push the breech-pin forward, and it is ready to be fired.

The Hungarian Refugees in Turkey.—Letters from Constantinople of Dec. 28, state that the following conclusions have been come to as regards the question of the refugees. As the internal dissensions of Austria, notwithstanding they have been appeased, have not been settled, the refugees who have sought Ottoman hospitality are to be located, for a term not exceeding one year, in some distant province of Turkey, whereas such as are furnished with foreign passports will be free to quit the country immediately. The Poles who have embraced the Mahomedan faith are, according to the sense of treaties, screened from expulsion; but they are to be withdrawn from the province of Rumelia, where their presence near the focus of their recent intrigues might be dangerous to Austria. Syria is proposed for the former, whereas the latter will be employed according to their capacities, either civil or military, nearer Constantinople.

Prices in California.—The Placer Times of Nov. 17, says: "All the necessaries of life have advanced within a few days past, and there is little prospect of their falling again before next summer. Flour is now $50 the barrel, and scarce at that; loaves of bread which could be bought for 6 cents in New-York, are selling for 75 cents; beef which was selling last week for 12 1-2 cents, is now 50; mutton is held at a dollar a pound; veal 75 cents. During last week we were somewhat "hurried up" by the election printing, which gave our compositors an opportunity of making something over a hundred dollars each—a sum which probably was never before handed to a journeyman printer in this or any other country for a week's work."

Whaling Business.—Since the opening of the California trade to the commerce of the world, the whaling business has fallen off. The article of oil has steadily advanced in price for the last year, and upward. On the 1st of Jan. 1850, there were but 3,469 barrels of sperm, and 1,300 of whale oil in the United States, in first hands, a smaller quantity than during any previous year since 1845. Sperm is firm at 118 a 119, and whale quick at 48. The whale fleet on the 1st of Jan. 1850, consisted of 510 ships and barks, 20 brigs, and 13 schooners, being a diminution of 71 ships and 1 brig, and a total of tonnage of 24,626 tons. These vessels have nearly all of them gone to California with gold hunters. [Bost. Tran.

Variety.

A company of manufacturers have recently put up a castor oil mill in Cincinnati, Ohio, and in order to encourage the growth of the castor bean in that State, propose to furnish all farmers wishing to cultivate them with seed, and contract with them for all they raise, at the market price. The present price is $2 a bushel. The bean is planted and cultivated the same as Indian corn, and will produce from 30 to 50 bushels an acre. The market is now supplied to a considerable extent from Illinois.

The Jerseyman says that John B. Gough, in a recent Temperance address, made the following forcible declaration, which we commend to the special attention of young men who think they can safely tamper with intoxicating drinks, and to all who have not progressed beyond the degree of "moderate drinkers:" "Every moderate drinker could abandon the intoxicating cup if he would—every inebriate would if he could!"

A letter from Rev. H. P. Scholte, pastor of the colony of Hollanders settled at a place which they call Pella, in Iowa, informs the Chicago Herald that the colony has an English school during the entire year, and that their children are all becoming acquainted with the English language. The name of their town is after a place on the east of the Jordon, in the Holy Land, to which the Christians fled from Jerusalem when it was destroyed.

On the marriage of the second daughter of Baron Anslem von Rothschild, of Frankfort, with Baron Willy von Rothschild, of Naples, the sum of 1,000,000 florins (£83,000) is said to have been presented to the youthful pair by Anson von Rothschild, the head of the great Frankfort firm. The ceremony was performed under a strict observance of the older Jewish ritual, Baron Willy being a devoted Hebrew.

Typhoid fever is now said to be cured in a few days by the French physicians, in the follwing manner:—Every two minutes the patient swallows a small bit of ice, equal in quantity to a glass of water every hour. Every six hours a demi-lavement of cold water is applied, and every second day a bath, at twenty-seven degrees of Reau Mus.

It is stated in the Journal of the American Temparence Union, that the millionare, the John Jacob Astor of Calcutta, a native and a heathen of the grossest kind, has put himself at the head of a temperance movement to stem that tide of drunkenness which has been introduced by Christian nations.

A Sheffield paper states that an old woman at Barnsley, lately cut two leeches into pieces, and compelled her daughter to swallow them, a surgeon having ordered that they should be applied to the girl's stomach, without explaining the modus operandi, of which, it seems, the mother was ignorant.

Gov. Fish in his annual message, says that out of 746 persons confined on Balckwell's Island at one time during the past year, upon the charge of vagrancy, 220 were there from the effect of "poverty, sickness, or destitution." Out of the whole number, 746, he remarks, "only three were lawfully imprisoned!"

But six deaths have occurred in the town of Middlebury, Ct., during the past year out of a population of 770 persons. The ages of the deceased were as follows: 84, 57, 90, 78, 77, and 84. Average age, 78⅓. Aggregate age, 470 years.

As a specimen of the manner in which the affairs of New York city are administered, it is said that the markets, which ought to bring in a large revenue, cost the city $50,000 a year.

The cultivation of flax and manufacture of linen will shortly be introduced into the south of Ireland, and will probably form a prominent element in regenerating the condition of that country.

Not long ago, in Norfolk, Eng., containing 600 souls, a woman was appointed to the office of parish clerk, because there was not a fit man to be got who could read.

In the Island of Japan, it is said, a change in the fashion of dress has not occurred during a period of two thousand five hundred years.

Bronzes, jewelry, and other works of art, to the value of 30,000,000 francs, were recently exported from Paris within a fortnight.

A correspondent of the Boston Times states that a couple of men have been arrested in Woonsocket, R. I., for highway robbery.

Mayor Jones, of Philadelphia, hast lost his only daughter, six years old, who came to her death by swallowing a bit of ivory, which lodged in her throat.

DeRuyter Institute.

The Academic Year of this Institution for 1849–50 will commence the last Wednesday in August, and continue forty-three consecutive weeks, ending the last Wednesday of June, including a recess of ten days for Christmas and New Year holidays. The Year will be divided into three Terms:

The First, commencing August 29, of 14 weeks.
The Second, " December 5, of 15 "
The Third, " March 20, of 14 "

Encouraged by the success of the School under its present Instructors, the friends of the Institute have made liberal additions to its library, cabinet, and apparatus, thus furnishing ample facilities for illustrating branches taught in the various departments.

The Literary Department is as heretofore under the supervision of Rev. JAMES R. IRISH, A. M., President, assisted by other able instructors. In this Department, especial attention is given to the lower English Branches. Students are also fitted in the Classics to enter the advanced classes in College.

The Department of Natural Science is conducted by Professor GURDON EVANS. In this, Natural Philosophy, Astronomy, Geology, Natural History, and Chemistry, are taught in a manner of unsurpassed interest. With it is connected the Department of Agricultura Science.

The Farmer's Course is thoroughly scientific; embracing the study of the best authors, with daily recitations. During the Winter Term two hours each day will be spent in the Analytical Laboratory, where students will be instructed in the constitution of soils and ashes of plants, with a minute examination of their constituent elements, and the various modes of testing for their presence.

A course of lectures is given during the Term on Practical Farming, explaining the relation of Geology to Agriculture, the Soil, the Plant, and the Animal, and their various relations, the Rotation of Crops, Feeding Animals, Manures, Draining Lands, &c., &c. For further information see Catalogue.

Besides Globes, Maps, &c., for the illustration of Astronomy, a Newtonian Telescope of high magnifying power has recently been added to the apparatus.

During the Summer Term, Botany and Geology receive special attention, illustrated by excursions to localities where these sciences may be studied as seen in nature. A Geological and Mineralogical Cabinet is accessible to the students.

The Mathematical Department is under the instruction of OLIVER B. IRISH, Tutor. It embraces thorough instruction in Arithmetic, and the higher pure and practical Mathematics, with field exercises in Engineering and Surveying.

Elocution, embracing Reading, Declamation, General Oratory, and Writing, receives the special attention of a competent teacher.

The Teacher's Department will, as formerly, be in operation during the Fall Term, and last half of the Winter Term. Particular attention to this is solicited from all who intend to teach district schools.

The Female Department is under the care of Miss SUSANNA M. COON, a graduate of Troy Female Seminary, a lady every way competent for this responsible station.

No efforts will be spared to render the young ladies of this Seminary truly accomplished, as well in the social relations of life, as in the substantial branches of learning and the higher refinements of education. Ample facilities are furnished for pursuing French, Italian, German, Drawing, Painting, Music on the Piano, and Vocal Music.

Information.

Good board in private families from $1 25 to $1 50. Parents from abroad should furnish their children with very little pocket money, as many temptations may thus be avoided. Those who wish may deposit money with either of the teachers, to be disbursed according to order, without extra charge.

Tuition, to be settled in advance, per term, from $3 00 to $5 00. Extras—For Drawing, $1 00; Monochromatic Painting, $3 00; Oil Painting, $5 00; Chemical Experiments, $1 00; Writing, including Stationery, 50c.; Tuition on Piano, $8 00; Use of Instrument, $2 00; in Agricultural Chemistry, including Chemicals, Apparatus, fires, &c., (breakage extra,) $12 00.

N. B. A daily stage leaves the railroad and canal at Chittenango for this place at 4 o'clock P. M.

New-York, Elizabethtown, Somerville, Easton.

CENTRAL RAILROAD OF NEW JERSEY.—WINTER ARRANGEMENT—Commencing Thursday, November 1, 1849. The extension of the Railroad from Somerville to White House (10 miles) is open for travel, reducing the staging between the terminus of the Road and Easton to 25 miles. This line leaves New York by steamboat RED JACKET, Pier No. 1 North River, and by New Jersey Railroad, from the foot of Cortland-st., as per schedule below: Leave New York by N. J. R. R. from foot of Cortland-st. at 9 A. M. and 4½ o'clock P. M. By steamboat, Pier No. 1 North River, at 11 o'clock A. M. and 4 P. M. Returning, will leave White House at 3½ A. M. (freight) at 6 20m. A. M. and 1 40m. P. M. North Branch at 4 A. M. (freight) at 6 30m. A. M. and 1 50m. P. M; Somerville at 5 A. M. (freight) at 6 50m. A. M. and 2 5m. P. M.; Bound Brook at 5½ A. M (freight) at 7 A. M. and 2¼ P. M.; Plainfield at 5¾ A. M. (freight) at 7 25m. A. M. and 2 40m. P. M.; Westfield at 6½ A. M. (freight) 7¾ A. M. and 3 P. M.; Elizabethtown at 7 A. M. (freight) at 8¼ A. M. and 12¾ P. M.

Stages will be in readiness on the arrival of the cars at White House by the 9 o'clock A. M. train from New York to convey passengers to Easton, Allentown, Wilkesbarre, and Mauch Chunk, Pa., and to Flemington, Lebanon, Clinton, Bricktown, Jugtown, New Germantown, &c., N. J.

On Tuesday, Thursday, and Saturday, to Delaware Water Gap, Strondsburg, Bartonsville, Stanhope, Daleville, Bucktown, Lackawana, Iron Works, &c.

N. B. All baggage at the risk of the owners until delivered into the actual possession of the Agents of the Company, and checks or receipts given therefor.

Boston, via Newport and Fall River.

FOR BOSTON, VIA NEWPORT AND FALL RIVER, by the splendid and superior steamers BAY STATE and EMPIRE STATE, of great strength and speed, particularly adapted to the navigation of Long Island Sound, running in connection with the Fall River and Old Colony Railroad, a distance of 53 miles, to Boston only. Leave Pier No. 3 North River, near the Battery. The steamer EMPIRE STATE, Capt. Comstock, on Tuesdays, Thursdays, and Saturdays, at 4 P. M. The BAY STATE, Capt. Brown, on Mondays, Wednesdays, and Fridays, at 4 P. M. This line is the only one that runs direct for Newport. For freight or passage apply on board, and either to TISDALE BORDEN, 70 Wall-st. or at the office of the Line, at the corner of Washington-st. and Battery-place.

NOTES OF A VOYAGE TO CALIFORNIA.

[From letters of Dr. J. D. B. STILLMAN to his friends in New York, we are permitted to take the accompanying extracts. Though not written for the public eye, they give such glimpses of sea life, and such descriptions of places visited, as will be interesting to the general reader.]

SHIP PACIFIC, at Sea, Feb. 26th, 1849.

We have now been out thirty-four days from New York; and as we shall be at Rio Janeiro in a few days, I will use the opportunity, while I have it, to write you a brief account of our voyage. I shall quote chiefly from my journal.

On the third day out, the wind freshened from the S. W., and continued to increase until night. As it increased, sail after sail was furled, until we were under double-reefed top-sails, and going at a furious rate. The Captain looked unconcerned, and it was not for me to worry; so I turned in, though, not without some uneasiness, as the Captain told the mate, when leaving the deck, to let no one sleep on his watch. There were others, beside the watch, who did not sleep that night.

The next day was a very unhappy one. The gale still continued, the sea was rough, nine-tenths of the passengers were sick, and in all the ship there was not a cheering sound. On the following morning, the wind shifted to the N. E., but continued so severe that no more sail was carried. This state of things continued until Monday, when the wind died away, and in the morning there was a general turn-out. The sick were spread out on the cabin roof—reading, writing, music, &c., were the order of the day. The wet sails flapped against the mast, as the ship rolled lazily on the bosom of the Ocean, sobbing itself to sleep. In the afternoon, the wind again sprang up from the S. W., and by the following morning we were again under close-reefed topsails. The gale continued to increase until Thursday about noon. This was by far the most exciting day that we have yet experienced. I shall not attempt to give you an idea of a full-grown storm, when others have failed to give me any conception of its magnificence. The barometer continued to fall, and the Captain, who had hardly left the deck for forty-eight hours, looked troubled. The ship rolled violently, and though running before the wind, she was so wet that we could make ourselves comfortable in no situation. About two o'clock, a dark line was visible in the N. W. horizon, and the Captain's quick eye caught the meaning. He took his place beside the capstan, and sent the first mate to the wheel. Twenty minutes had not elapsed, when a scene was presented that defies description. As the storm came driving on, the tops of the waves were lifted or cut off, and driven like drifting snow, filling the air with spray, so that we could not see twice the ship's length. It had seemed that the ship had already as much as could be borne, groaning through all her frame; and, at every plunge, it would appear that the next wave must bury us. Just before the squall struck us, the Captain called to the men at the wheel to "port;" but so much noise did the wind make, that it was not heard, and before the ship could be put about, our lee scuppers were under water. I stood on some timber, holding on to the lee davits, when something coming over the roof, I let go my hold, instinctively, to protect myself, and was thrown across the deck, severely bruising me. We were now in the trough of the sea, our scuppers rolling alternately under water, and throwing every thing in the cabin into confusion. In a few minutes, the wind again blew steady, and a most animated conversation was kept up for some time, when all took occasion to express the feelings that were pent up in the excitement of the moment.

Feb. 9th.—We are off the Cape de Verds; the air is fresh and balmy; the trade winds are bearing us on at the rate of eight miles an hour. We are all lounging about in the shade, writing, musing, or reading. Few objects of interest present themselves. An occasional sail in the horizon; the nautilus, with its filmy sail, now scudding before the wind, and now tacking and running close to the wind, and though frequently capsized, as soon righting itself and going—no one knows where—thousands of miles from land, without chart or compass, he journies on, and when storms come too roughly, folds his little sail, and finds good roadstead in the blue regions below. Then you see something that looks like a swallow, skimming along the surface of the waves—his wings and body glisten like silver—a little splash in the water, and you have seen the flying fish. Birds we see only at long intervals—a solitary gull—and it goes as suddenly as it comes. The evenings are charming. The moon is so bright as to be dazzling, and forms what I never saw before—the lunar bow; and whenever a thin cloud passes over it, a circle is formed, with all the colors of the rainbow. I have wished you could look in on us these moonlight evenings. We are well supplied with music, and are—bating thoughts of home, which come over us at times like Swiss home-sickness—a very contented company.

Feb. 11th.—We are still driving on with the N. E. breeze. Our latitude yesterday, at noon, was 12° 30' N., long. 28° W. Last evening, the moon being very late, and the weather thick and dark, we had a narrow escape. I was sitting on the weather rail, watching the phosphorescence in the water. The Captain had just ordered the watch to keep a sharp look-out to windward. It was not five minutes, when the cry was given, "Sail, ho!" I raised my eyes from the water, and a large ship was bearing down on our weather bow within pistol shot. A collision seemed inevitable. The Captain, who was on deck at the time, called for a light, and ordered the helm to "port." A ball of turpentine gleamed in the air for a moment, and we passed so near that I could have thrown a biscuit on board. Another moment, and she was gone in the thick gloom. The whole passed in the space of thirty seconds. "D—n such a watch!" was all the Captain said, after the stranger passed. By this time all hands were on deck, and various were the surmises as to what could be the character of the strange intruder. It was the first vessel that had come within hailing distance since we left our pilot off Sandy Hook. The Captain thought she must be an East Indiaman bound to Europe, as the longitude was too far eastward to be an American. I think I express the sentiments of all who saw the ship, when I say that we had a narrow escape. It was late before I could recover sufficiently from the shock to sleep, and it is to-day the chief subject of conversation.

Feb. 13th.—We have had but little sunshine for several days, though for the most part the nights have been clear. The temperature has been very uncomfortably warm, especially in the morning. The thermometer stands 77° to 80°, and the most of our company complain of lassitude, with febrile symptoms. The wind blows from the great African desert.

Feb. 14th.—It is now three weeks since we weighed anchor in the bay of New York. Our way is still south—on, on, into the very eye of the sun. Our old familiar land-marks in the sky are changed or gone. "Polaris" no longer greets the eye of the wanderer. True to his trust, he still keeps his vigils over those who have been true to their natal star. "Orion" stretches his "giant form" directly over head. We are three degress north of the equator, due south from the Cape de Verds. The trades, that have been carrying us steadily on for fifteen hundred miles, are to-day dying away, and we are sweltering under the fierce heat of the sun. Games and reading seem to the chief means of killing time and trouble. Upon the whole, we are decidedly a reading community.

Feb. 16th.—While several passengers were bathing from the bows this morning, a large shark made his appearance among them. He has followed us all day. He refused to be hooked, and an attempt to spear him was equally unsuccessful. Night came on, and we expected to see no more of the finny fiend. When it became dark, we looked over the taff-rail at the phosphorescent glow of the ship's wake, and there was our evil genius following us, enveloped in the blue light, as the evil one is said to appear to the wicked. He seems determined to have some one of us before he leaves.

Feb. 17th.—The night has been oppressive; thermometer 82° between decks. As I went on deck this morning, I witnessed the capture of the shark. He was struck with the "grains," and once hooked and liberated himself, yet was as voracious as ever, and seized another hook. He was raised along side, until killed, and then cut loose, as a thing too foul to touch the decks. At noon to-day we were fifty-five miles from the line. Thunder, lightning, and variable winds, have been the order of the day. To-night the lightning is very vivid, and schools of porpoise and other fish are playing about us, and may be seen by the lines of light more distinctly than by day. The sea is so phosphorescent that fish-lines, when drawn up and rubbed with the hand, glow like phosphorus itself. Large luminous bodies are very numerous—the same as Wilkes saw in these regions. Some of these are so bright, in a night like this, as to be taken for signal lights. This day's performances closed with that beautiful electrical phenomenon, called by the sailors "corposants," or Jack o' lantern—a ball of electrical light at the top of each mast.

Feb. 18th.—The wind has been fresh from the S. W. We crossed the line about daylight. The wind shifted, and at noon we were eight miles N. latitude, and at night we again stood south; so that we have crossed the line three times to-day.

Feb. 19th.—To-day we are again in the "doldrums," and no comfortable place. The sea is nearly of the same temperature as the air, and water gives us no relief. We are using a cask of water that was caught from the cabin roof, (which, in good weather, is a favorite resort for the tobacconists of the ship,) and I find it difficult to drink it raw.

On that subject of tobacco I have a word to say. Waving the question of its physiological effects, or the right of a man to gratify his taste in his own way, the right of any man to render others uncomfortable in order to gratify that taste, is very questionable. You have found, perhaps, a very comfortable, shady place, where you wish to read, or give yourself up to thoughts of friends and home, when some one, cigar in mouth, plants himself directly by your side, and forthwith you are in a state of siege. Under the tranquilizing influence of the narcotic, he feels himself at peace with all the world, and wonders you are ill at ease. To remonstrate would be preposterous, as no one questions the right of any man to smoke on deck; and the right of compelling you to take it, at second hand, unless you choose to abandon your favorite retreat, is undisputed; and as there is no alternative, you go to the main top—no smoking is allowed there, and there at least you may escape annoyance. A fellow passenger is already there, and, while reading, has encircled his seat with a strong decoction of the same vile weed, and occupied the only "spare-room" on board. To fully appreciate the privileges to which the use of tobacco entitles you, make a voyage to sea with a hundred men, without your protectio—woman. On board our ship it is a high crime to spit on the decks, unless the offender chews tobacco. That is allowed on the quarter deck and cabin roof, and goes into the water cask, for drinking and culinary purposes. The man who stands to windward, from sheer indifference, has discharged upon your person what ought to have gone overboard. The affair is honorably settled by an "Excuse me, sir," and he goes on with the same indifference as before. It is almost inconceivable how the taste and manners of gentlemen may be corrupted by the vile use of that villainous weed.

To-day we had a visit from a strange monster, called a "diamond-fish." Its general form was that of a bat, with a head like a beetle, and measured about five feet in length, and the same in breadth. It moved sluggishly about the ship, and was attended by the pilot fish, with zebra-like stripes, and several fish known as suckers, very white, and which attach themselves, like a parasite, to the great fish, and get their sustenance and protection through the same source. The diamond-fish was harpooned, and drawn along side; the instrument drew out, and we had the great disappointment of seeing them all disappear together. I witnessed the whole scene from the mizzen-top, and a very exciting one it was. Few of the seamen ever saw one of these fish before, and we were all very anxious to have a nearer inspection.

Feb. 20th.—A vessel lay becalmed about ten miles from us, and a couple of Francis' Life Boats were manned with volunteers from among the passengers to go to her; but a breeze springing up, we returned after having gone about two miles. We are now sixteen miles south of the Equator, long. 24°. Yesterday the sky had a very remarkable appearance. A bank of clouds extended entirely around us, with the same cloud level or base, about three degrees above the horizon, and reaching up about ten degrees towards the zenith, with summits of dazzling whiteness. They remained without material change from morning till night. This morning the sun rose with an equally novel appearance. The whole eastern sky seemed a mass of purple and gold. It would have done an artist good to have looked upon it. This evening a breeze has sprung up, and we are made glad at the prospect of getting away from these dreaded latitudes.

Feb. 22d.—Washington's birth-day was celebrated by firing at the birds and spearing the fish, that hover around the bows to prey upon the poor flying fish, who seem to stand a small chance of escaping from both. One of these little fish struck me, as I stood at the ship's waist, this evening, and fell at my feet.

Feb. 26th.—At noon the sun's declination was four minutes north, so that we were four miles too fast to see the sun exactly vertical; but it was as nearly so as is often ed on board last night, of a beautiful brown and white plumage. It was killed, and prepared by an ornithologist on board.

Feb. 27th.—To-day, for the first time, we signaled a ship, bound home. You may imagine with what satisfaction we saw the reply from her, that she read our signal, and the assurance it gave that she would bear home news of our near arrival at Rio.

Sunday, March 4th.—To-day the cry of land was made. Our course for a week past has been interrupted by no event worthy of record. To-night the dew falls heavily on deck, and the smell of the shore is, at times, very strong.

March 6th.—Yesterday we saw the land off our lee bow, rising like a cone from the sea, and which was declared to be Cape Frio. We stood off, as the wind was unfavorable, in order to get to windward, and at night we were about five miles to southwestward of the Cape, with a high promontory bearing N. W. by West, when the wind fell off to a perfect calm. The swell rolled very heavily, and with our head to the shore, we seemed to be working on. The boats were got out, and held in readiness, in case the ship approached too near, to work her head off. In this way the night was passed. The Captain was constantly on deck, and the roar of the surf upon the rocks was distinctly heard. A light breeze sprang up this morning, and we stood off to clear the headland before us. About two o'clock to-day, the Captain discovered that the land he had made as Cape Frio was not that Cape, but was Cape Thomas, and that we had lain all night in a very critical position. We were now weathering the true Cape Frio. This is an island about 2 1-2 miles long, and rising in the center nearly 1,570 feet. A British ship of war was wrecked here, about twenty years ago, with 800,000 dollars in silver. The most of this was recovered, and the island, which before was uninhabited, became the residence of the company who undertook the recovery. They describe it as abounding in splendid plants and birds, and enormous serpents. Before us is the great saddle mountain; its twin summit has a cloud resting upon it—and near it is a rock rising from the sea, called the Sugar Loaf. It is just perceptible to us from the sea, and is seven miles from Rio.

March 9th.—We have been becalmed in the mouth of the harbor, and are just arrived. A boat from one of our ships of war is here, and takes our letters. I must close, and send again as soon as possible.

An anecdote, affording a good hint to young ministers, is told of Dr. Dwight, to this effect:—A young clergyman called upon him for advice as to the best method of treating a very difficult and abstruse point of mental philosophy, upon which he was preparing a sermon. "I cannot give you any information on the subject," the doctor replied, "I am not familiar with such topics, I leave them for young men."

TO-DAY AND TO-MORROW.

Do n't tell me of to-morrow!
Give me the man who'll say,
That, when a good deed's to be done,
Let's do the deed to-day.
We may all command the present,
If we act and never wait;
But repentance is the phantom
Of the past, that comes too late.

Do n't tell me of to-morrow!
There's much to do to-day
That can never be accomplished,
If we throw the hours away.
Every moment has its duty—
Who the future can foretell?
Then why put off till to-morrow
What to-day can do as well?

Do n't tell me of to-morrow!
If we look upon the past,
How much that we have left to do
We cannot do at last!
To-day! it is the only time
For all on this frail earth;
It takes an age to form a life,
A moment gives it birth.

THE JEWS OF EUROPE.

We are indebted to "The Independent" for the following extracts from a letter addressed to Mr. Moody Stuart, chairman of the Jews' Committee at Edinburgh, by the Rev. G. Schwartz, a Prussian minister, long resident in Germany, and now laboring among the Jews of Amsterdam. His letter bears date 9th of November last.

"The Jews—can it be expected that they will be idle spectators, and that their mode of thinking or acting will not be influenced by all that has been going on in these years past? O no! they have taken an active part in all these proceedings; and, cruelly treated by the Christian State, they have directed all their talents and means to overthrow the State and Christianity, believing that both are alike inimical to their political liberty. As editors and correspondents of almost all the influential newspapers, and as public speakers in the great assemblies, they have excited the middle and lower classes, have promised them great liberties and good payment for their work, and have represented the orthodox Christians as the great obstacle to all reform, and of course to the real happiness of the people. As men love darkness more than light, all such opinions were very acceptable to their hearers; the Jews became the heroes of the day, and led public opinion whereto they pleased. While, on the one hand, they influenced the Christians, they remained not unmoved by all that was going on among the Christians. It is a very remarkable sign of the times, that while in former days the Jews did their utmost to keep up their nationality, and to remain separated from all contact with the Christians, Israel has long since begun to learn from the Gentiles; they wish to be mixed up with them, and everywhere they deny their nationality. It is a vain undertaking, for after the will of the Lord they shall never cease from being a nation before Him; but they endeavor to adopt all the manners they are, therefore Christians. In Germany hesitation to profess it publicly with their lips and pens. The minister of the reform party in Berlin (he would be ashamed of being called their Rabbi) declares, therefore, that circumcision is quite unnecessary; for, argues he, this rite was originally instituted as a sign of the covenant made with Abraham, in order to distinguish him and his posterity from all the other nations, but that is the very thing we do not want now. The Jewish Sabbath needs not to be kept up; we can have our religious meetings on the Sunday. True, it is said, in the beginning of the second chapter of Genesis, that God has sanctified the seventh day, but what is that to us; all the three first chapters of Genesis are nothing but a mythos, and have therefore no great authority. Christians and Jews admire the clearness of his reasonings, and the great liberality he manifests in all his sermons and writings. In Magdeburg, a Jewish Rabbi has held public lectures on Judaism and Christianity, and they were attended by the wealthiest and noblest Christians of the town; and in the same place a Christian minister has written 'his confession,' wherein he distinctly declares that there is no real difference between him and a Jewish minister. In Holland such things would not be tolerated; such teachings of Jewish or Christian ministers would give offense to the Synagogue and the Church. The Jews here, like the Christians, are in general orthodox, and keep up their old forms and ceremonies, and would not venture to deny the authority of the Old Testament."

"In Amsterdam there are about 25,000 German Jews, and 2,000 Portuguese Jews. They have many synagogues, and the largest one of the Portuguese Jews is built in the form of the temple. Holland has ever been to them a place of refuge, and hence they have come here from all parts of the Continent; and, being strangers in a strange land, they probably felt drawn one to another, and have lived in the same parts of the town. Till this very day there exists a Jewish quarter, where almost all the Jews live together, though they are allowed to live in every part of the town. They are not very cleanly; and on a week-day it is not very pleasant to go through that part of the city, but it is quite different on the Jewish Sabbath. You see nothing but happy faces, nicely dressed, all enjoying the rest of the Sabbath day. I have been told that on Saturday evening the poor Jews give up their Sabbath dress to the leaders of the synagogue; a sum of money is lent to them to earn their livelihood during the week; on Friday morning they pay back the money and get their clothes for the Sabbath. Thus the poorer Jews are kept in continual dependence upon the munificence of the synagogue, and the Rabbis exercise great power over them. Alas! many of the Jews, and especially of the Jewesses, are very ignorant and bigoted; many of the latter are not able to read Hebrew or Dutch. Here they enjoy all political liberty, and yet they are much more despised than in Germany. It is impossible to say how little real love is shown to them. Hence it comes that none cares for their spiritual welfare; their promises are not believed, and the clean Dutchman fears lest he should be polluted by coming into close contact with the filthy Jew. Six years ago a little interest was awakened on their behalf; but as the work was not carried on in the right spirit, even the former few friends have become lukewarm."

ANECDOTE OF REV. JOSEPH BUCKMINSTER.

Selected for the Sabbath Recorder from Mrs. Lee's Memoir.

His biographer, speaking of his mother, says, "She was indeed an admirable woman, of that gentle and loving disposition, and devout heart, which were afterward so happily reflected in the character of her son. Him she consecrated to God on her death-bed; and the recollection that his lost mother had called him to be a minister would have been sufficient to determine his choice, even if the matter had not already been decided by his own feelings."

When Joseph was between five and six years old, his parents left home on a journey for a few weeks, and his father, when he took leave of the boy, said, rather jestingly, "Well, my son, you must have an eye to the family while I am absent, and see that every thing goes on in its accustomed regularity;" never suspecting the extent to which his suggestion would be acted upon. Joseph, accordingly, as soon as the hours of school were over, repaired to his father's study, and spent the time alone with the books; and when the hour for the morning or evening devotions of the family arrived, he rang the bell, and, in his sweet childish voice, summoned the inmates of the house to prayer. He read a chapter, with the commentary, as usual, and concluded with an extemporaneous prayer; and this with so much gravity and solemnity that, instead of any approach to levity in the servants, they were impressed with a deep seriousness, and one of them was greatly affected. This was not done once or twice only, but continued during the absence of his parents.

Another somewhat singular circumstance is related as having occurred at the death of this remarkable youth, in the 28th year of his age, which is thus narrated by his biographer:—

The real union of spirit between the father and his richly gifted son was attested in an affecting manner by their deaths within twenty-four hours of each other, though at places too distant to allow the news to be carried from one to the other during this short interval. The father died at a little village near Bennington, Vermont, while on a journey to Saratoga Springs, that was undertaken in the hope of promoting his recovery from a serious attack of the malady which had hung about him ever since his college days. He had not shared in this hope, but had yielded to the advice of his with perfect composure, "My son Joseph is dead." As no news of that son's illness had reached them, she supposed he had been dreaming, and endeavored to convince him that it was so. "No," he replied, "I have not slept nor dreamed; he is dead." He was right; the son had died of brain fever in Boston the night before, and within a few hours the father followed him. As Mrs. Buckminster herself related the conversation which she had with him that morning, there can be no doubt of the truth of the story. The son had died prematurely, while the father was declining in years; but the fruit which had just appeared under the blossom, and that which had grown old on the stalk, were equally ripe for heaven.

THE INWARD WITNESS.

We learn from the Mirror, that the author of the following paragraph was a good minister who came over to this country not many years after the Pilgrims landed on Plymouth Rock, having been driven by persecution from not less than seven places in England. He abode a short time at Dorchester, afterward at Weymouth, and finally at Rehoboth—perhaps he was the first settler of this last named place, as the name was given it by him. He was accustomed to record the results of his personal examinations of the state of his heart. One of these entries has been preserved. It is as follows:

"I find that I love God, and desire to love him more. I find a desire to requite evil with good. I find that I am looking up to God to see Him and his hand in all things. I find a greater fear of displeasing God than all the world. I find a love to such Christians as I never saw or received good from. I find a grief when I see the commands of God broken. I find a mourning when I do not find an assurance of God's love. I find a willingness to give God the glory of all my abilities to do good. I find a joy in the company and conversation of the godly. I find a grief when I perceive it goes ill with Christians. I find a constant love to secret duties. I find a bewailing of such sins as the world cannot accuse me of. I find I constantly choose suffering to avoid sin."

The man who can truly say this of himself is fitted for earth or heaven. There are test points in this record, very convenient for others to try themselves by.

One day, when Bunyan had been preaching with considerable warmth and enlargement, he was met by one of his congregation who complimented him upon the excellence of his discourse. "O!" replied the preacher, "you need not have told me so; the devil reminded me of that before I came out of the pulpit."

A CHIEF JUSTICE OF ENGLAND.

[From Lord Campbell's Lives of the Chief Justices.]

It is scarcely possible that the wildest romance could exceed the true history of Chief Justice Popham. He was born at Wellington, in the year 1531, of genteel, though not high parentage.

"While yet a child he was stolen by a band of gipsies, and remained some months in their society; whence some pretend to account for the irregular habits and little respect for the rules of propriety which afterwards marked one period of his life. His captors had disfigured him, and had burnt on his left arm a cabalistic mark which he carried with him to the grave. But his constitution, which had been sickly before, was strengthened by the wandering life he had led with these lawless associates, and he grew up to be a man of extraordinary stature and activity of body. We have no account of his schooling before he was sent to Baliol College, Oxford. Here he was very studious and well-behaved, and he laid in a good stock of classical learning and of dogmatic divinity. But when removed to the Middle Temple, that he might qualify himself for the profession of the law, he got into bad company, and utterly neglected his juridical studies. He preferred theatres, gaming-houses, and other haunts of dissipation, to 'readings' and 'moots'; and once, when asked to accompany a friend to hear an important case argued by great lawyers in Westminster Hall, he declared that 'he was going where he would see disputants whom he honored more—to a bear-baiting in Alsatia.' Unfortunately, this was not, as in a subsequent age, in the case of young Holt, afterwards Lord Chief Justice, merely a temporary neglect of discipline—'a sowing of his wild oats.' * * It seems to stand on undoubted testimony, that at this period of his life, besides being given to drinking and gaming, either to supply his profligate expenditure, or to show his spirit, he frequently sallied forth at night from a hostel in Southwark, with a band of desperate characters, and that, planting themselves in ambush on Shooter's Hill, or taking other positions favorable for attack and escape, they stopped travelers, and took from them not only their money, but any valuable commodities which they carried with them—boasting that they were always civil and generous, and that, to avoid serious consequences, they went in such numbers as to render resistance impossible."

All this seems singular enough; and that he should have continued these lawless courses, after he had been called to the bar, and married respectably, is more so. But the account of his reformation, as related by Aubrey, outvies the wildest fiction.

"For several years he addicted himselfe but little to the studie of the lawes, but profligate company, and was wont to take a purse with them. His wife considered her and his condition, and at last prevailed with tunity, he did, being then about thirtie yeares old. He spake to his wife to provide a good entertainment for his comerades to take his leave of them, and after that day fell extremely hard to his studie, and profited exceedingly. He was a strong, stout man, and could endure to sit at it day and night; became eminent in his calling, had good practice, was called to be a sergeant and a judge."

The result of his reformation was, 'that he became a consummate lawyer, and was allowed to be so by Coke, who depreciated all contemporaries, and was accustomed to sneer at the "book learning" of Francis Bacon.' Singularly enough, he rose rapidly—and in 1571 became 'Sergeant Popham.' 'His feast was on a scale of extraordinary magnificence, and he furnished some very fine old Gascoigny wines, which the wags reported he had intercepted one night as it was coming from Southampton, destined for the cellar of an alderman of London.' In 1581 he was elected speaker of the House of Commons; and he was subsequently made Attorney General—when he conducted the trials of Babington and his accomplices. In 1592 he became Chief Justice; but although he must have well known the temptations to 'life on the road,' there never was a more severe Judge in all such cases. He was notorious as a 'hanging Judge;' and not only was he keen to convict in cases prosecuted by the government, 'but in ordinary larcenies, and above all in highway robberies, there was little chance of an acquittal before him.' Popham, however, was not always cruel. Though severe against common felons, he was touched by the misfortunes of the high-minded Essex;' and his conduct afforded a most praiseworthy contrast to that of Coke and Bacon, who, though almost life-long enemies, could yet join in an actual 'baiting' of that gallant young nobleman. Popham recommended a pardon, which would have been extended, if the fatal ring had duly reached the hands of Elizabeth. He presided with much impartiality at the trial of Sir Walter Raleigh. 'In examining the mode in which criminal trials were then conducted,' our author remarks, 'it is curious to observe that the practice of interrogating the accused, which the French still follow and praise, prevailed in England. Many questions were put to Sir Walter on this occasion in the hope of entrapping him. On account of his great acuteness they were rather of service to him; but they proved how unequally this mode of striving to get at truth must operate, and how easily it may be abused. Popham tried Guy Fawkes and his associates; and his last appearance in a case of public interest was upon the trial of Garnet. The following year he died.

Good nature is the very air of a good mind, the sign of a large and generous soul, and the peculiar soil on which virtue prospers.

The Sabbath Recorder.

New-York, January 31, 1850.

A BAPTISTERY PROPOSED.

We are troubled with no conscientious scruples about administering the ordinance of baptism in a font, provided it is large enough to admit of the burial of the candidate; but we confess that we are not very partial to such artificial accommodations. If we could always have our choice, we would go to the open river. The nearest practicable approach to the primitive mode of conducting the ordinance is, to our mind, the most solemn and impressive. But "necessity knows no law;" and we think it probable that the time will soon come when, in this city, we shall have to avail ourselves of an artificial structure, or else resort to sprinkling. As we cannot, with a good conscience, do the latter, we suggest to all our Baptist brethren, whether the time has not come for building a public baptistery. The business of this great commercial Babel has increased to such a degree, that but few places are left where the ordinance of baptism can be comfortably administered, and these will, no doubt, soon be occupied with the improvements of the day. On the East River, there is now no suitable place below Twelfth Street. We find a very comfortable spot at the foot of Thirty-first Street. On the North River, we know not what is the lowest point which can be resorted to; but we are under the impression, that it is too far up to be convenient for a great many of the churches. In fact, the steady march of commerce will soon present one unbroken line of docks on both rivers, and leave not a spot where the believer can testify his allegiance to the King of kings. We believe, therefore, that the construction of a public baptistery would meet the hearty approval of all who subscribe to the scripture doctrine of baptism. We have nothing to say, at present, as to the style in which such a structure ought to be built; we merely throw out the hint, and hope it will receive attention.

As to the little baptistery within the walls of a meeting-house, perched on the platform of the pulpit, or some other equally unsuitable place, we confess our own dislike of it. We never dipped our feet in one more than once, and then we felt almost as awkward as if we were using a bowl. It was so narrow, that we doubted, at first, whether there was room for "BOTH to go down into the water," and were debating, in our own mind, whether we should not stand on the outside, till, at length, the sexton relieved our perplexity by assuring us that there was ample space. We do not know whether they are all so contracted, but we know that some of them are so situated that the administration of the ordinance becomes invisible to a the administrator standing in what [illegible] to be a baptistery; we saw the candidate laid down till he was concealed completely from our view; and, as he came up, after the words of the ceremony, dripping wet, we inferred that he was baptized; but we had no other proof of it. We like such things done in a way that all can see. There is no place like Jordan; but if we are precluded from going to the river, let us have a good large pool in an open lot, surrounded by raised seats, and such other accommodations as are necessary.

THE SUNDAY STRUGGLE IN PENNSYLVANIA.

The cloven foot of priestcraft is showing itself in the Keystone State very significantly of late, and as a natural consequence the people are waking up to its insatiable encroachments in various quarters. While their efforts were confined to oppressing a small band of Sabbath-keepers whose testimony to the true Sabbath they dreaded, and to stifling redress for the sore grievances of the persecuted Seventh-day Baptists, the public gave themselves little care or thought about their proceedings; but now, growing bolder, and taking greater strides to ecclesiastical domination, the community are beginning to discover the wily machinations of that insidious and tyrannical power, and have begun to utter reproofs, louder and louder. A second article from "PENN" has appeared in the Philadelphia Ledger; and I have just received two papers from Harrisburg, containing hints of the doings at the seat of government in reference to this exciting topic.

A week or ten days since the petitions of the German Seventh-day Baptists were presented to the Legislature, asking relief from the invidious operation of the laws of 1705 and 1794, under which they have been persecuted so long and so unrelentingly; upon which the following "Notice" was published in the papers of that place, with the view of forestalling the action of the Legislature on their behalf, and to pave the way for the presentation of memorials to close the public works on Sunday:—

NOTICE.—The undersigned, Clergymen of this Borough, impressed with the [importance of the proper observance of the Christion Sabbath to the welfare of the community, and with the evils resulting from its violation to individuals and to the country, hereby give notice, that they will preach on the obligation and mode of its observance in their respective pulpits on Sunday morning, the 20th inst.

In the next issue of the same paper (The Pennsylvania Telegraph) from which I cut the above notice, I find comments on the performances of that momentous occasion, in which the writer says that he has "heard objections expressed to one of the sermons preached, on account of the political doctrines advanced, especially to some hinting at party measures and derelictions."

It must have been a funny, though a solemn farce, to witness ministers of the Gospel converting the "sacred desk" into a "political rostrum;" and still more so, to reflecting minds, to discover the flimsy cheat of pretending to urge Bible truth, and at the same time astutely foisting a day upon their observance, for which there is not the slightest command in the Word of God, and contending for the sacredness of a day not once named as holy time in the whole inspired volume. More anon. I shall endeavor to keep you apprised of these matters as they transpire. W. M. F.

P. S. Since the drilling of Sunday, the 20th, petitions have been presented to the Legislature, praying, that the Public Works be closed on the "Sabbath," and also for "the passage of a law prohibiting travel on the Sabbath-day"—Sunday.

WESTERN SETTLEMENTS.

In most instances, Western Settlements are commenced in a very promiscuous manner. The country is just as open, and opportunites as free, to one as to another; consequently lands are often selected under the most fortuitous circumstances as it respects the character of the prospective population. The first emigrant settler is too often like the gold-hunter, intent only on getting a fortune by taking up a piece of land, improving it, and then selling at an advanced price to the second and more permanent class of settlers. The first sometimes seem to have acted by caprice in selecting their location; others have evidently acted under the direction of a more discerning judgment as it respects the prospective advantages of the localities they have chosen. When a settlement is once commenced, public report or friendly correspondence draws others to the place, and each selects his lands as his fancy may dictate, without reference to the question who may be his neighbor. He hopes others will follow; he knows not who, nor is it a matter of much consequence to him, so that the lands are but settled all round him, and the price soon doubled or trebled by settlement and improvement. With this consideration in view, every new comer is usually welcomed, without respect to his pretensions or whence he came. Of course at first it is impossible to tell what will be the prevailing religious characteristics or the prevalent manners of such a place. Under such circumstances, a man is just as likely to have a set of dancing and frolicking neighbors as to have steady religious society around him. Sometimes a zealous Christ-[illegible] into a district of country al-[illegible] a considerable society of his own religious opinions around him, and so lay the foundation of a prosperous church; but frequently the most heterogeneous sentiments are commingled together for years, until one society gains the ascendancy, and the disaffected sell out and leave the ascendant society in possession of the chief part of the settlement. In other instances, some two or three societies will grow up side by side, and overshadow the minor numbers of other sects, without reference to the relative numbers of their several denominations in the world at large.

There are a few instances in which companies have been formed for emigrating and settling in a compact body, who have sent out their agents to select and purchase a tract of land suited to their purpose. When they are governed by some close compact, that secures union and submission, they succeed very well. But there are very few native-born Americans who will submit to the direction or government or judgment of other men in a voluntary society. It is often the case, that a number of families, about emigrating from one place at the East, think and say, 'We will all settle together, and have a real homogeneous society, like that we are accustomed to here;' but, having no binding compact, when they arrive out West, one sees an advantage in this neighborhood, another in that; some one, who is a little quicker sighted, takes hold of some chance that was at first common to the whole, and then, as soon as he has made fast, while others were hesitating, they will turn round and say, 'He has got the best chance there was, and I will go somewhere else, and see if I cannot do as well as he has;' and so they scatter and mingle among the whole population. Seventh-day Baptists do this as much as others. It is perfectly obvious to me, however, that Christian compacts might be formed which would be of the greatest temporal advantage to families and young persons about settling in life, as well as to society at large. Every one must know, that there are persons in every society whose years, experience, talents, and opportunities, qualify them to judge of and manage such matters in a manner far superior to that of other persons; and when made responsible for other people's interests, as well as their own, I know not why they should not manage for the whole as wisely and successfully as for themselves, and indeed more so in proportion as their capital is augmented by a union of interests. I would like to see it tried. The West is often misrepresented at the East by the failure of persons who became dispirited for want of courage or perseverance and capacity to carry out the enterprises in which they were engaged. Some such individuals will lounge round a settlement, without doing any thing for themselves, until their means are gone, opportunities taken up, and themselves impoverished, and all for want of a prompt decision to take hold of such chances as there were, instead of grumbling and snarling because they thought somebody had pitched upon a better chance than themselves.

There are many excellent opportunities for compact settlements yet remaining in this State. As I stated in my letters on this matter last winter, not more than about a third of the country within fifty miles of the Illinois River, northward and westward, is as yet settled, although the title to the greatest part of these lands is vested in private hands and speculators. This is generally looked upon by men of small capital as a great objection; but there are weighty considerations to abate this objection. I have heard some of the oldest settlers say, that it is their opinions that lands are relatively cheaper now than when they came and bought them at Congress prices, and that a man buying on credit now can pay for his farm easier than he could then. At that time, they could not get more than twenty-five cents a bushel for wheat, and only store-pay at exorbitant prices at that rate; now, wheat is worth seventy-five cents in cash in all the river counties. Then, corn would not sell at any price; now, it sells for twenty-five cents cash. An aged minister told me, that in the early settlements he had ridden thirty miles on Sunday morning to preach to a congregation gathered out of such a space of country; and when meeting was out he had ridden twenty miles to get his dinner. Now it is far different; we are subject to no such hardships. Society in general is good and rapidly improving; the settlements are but a few miles apart, and plenty and hospitality are found in almost every house. The pioneer settlers and squatters have for the most part gone farther west; the men who hunt their own meat, and crack their own corn, are driving it a hundred miles west of the Mississippi; and the present population plant orchards, make garden parterres, build brick houses, paint their handsome frame dwellings, shade their windows with green venetian blinds, and surround their door-yards with painted picket fences. I have never lived in a climate that I liked better, or one more congenial to health. Not a single case of cholera occurred on the prairies, except in the case of two inebriates who had a debauch at the river, so far as my acquaintance extended, during the past year, although it made sad havoc in the river villages. Nature is as prolific and the land as fertile as in any part of the earth with which I am acquainted by observation or report.

At present the Sabbath-keepers in Illinois are somewhat scattered in their locations. We have, however, four and five families in a school-district in four distinct places, and these afford good opportunities for others to settle close by them. There are other adjacent locations, equally eligible for prosperous settlements, with single families in them at present. There are quite a number of forties, eighties, and some one hundred and twenties, of Congress lands, within a few whole quarter section within ten or twelve miles. More than twenty were entered within this distance last year. These are what are called second-rate lands. Lands of the first class quality, unimproved, sell for $400 to $1,000 per quarter section, and improved farms at from $10 to $20 per acre.

One of the first difficulties of a new settler is to get a dwelling-house. I do not know of an unoccupied cabin in twenty miles round. Necessity, however, makes every body generous on that head, and for a time every family that comes finds a home by squeezing in with those already here. Yet each one should have the means to buy or build a house, as one of the first things he does after he arrives; or, by correspondence with some friend, have a house provided before he arrives. Labor of all kinds is abundant, and amply rewarded. Every one of our friends has found all the employment wanted, and every one has a home. All who have located themselves have a great desire for others to settle near them, and vie with each other in accommodating and assisting every new emigrant in finding and fixing a location, especially when it favors the settlement of their own vicinity. The trades particularly needed are tanners and curriers, shoemakers and shoe-menders, builders and masons, teachers and tailors, blacksmiths and wheelwrights, millers and laborers. Some of our friends offer to find building sites for such purposes, and I am confident it needs but capital and enterprise and union to secure the sites, and make the arrangements for flourishing country villages. It is certain that the country is destined to contain a large population, and business posts must yet be multiplied and enlarged to accommodate their commercial and mechanical necessities. But few such places are attempted at present. Every thing around us invites industry, enterprise, genius, and capital, to improve wide and lasting advantages. S. D.

CHEAP PAPERS.—The Vermont Chronicle mentions the cases of two papers in its region of country, which were induced to try the cheap plan by reducing their subscription price, both of which, after trial, announce to their subscribers, that they shall be compelled to return to their old prices. One states that a handsome addition to its list was not sufficient to make up its losses; and the other, that the experiment has cost its publisher a postive loss of $1,500.

The Liberator last year tried the experiment of reducing its subscription price from $2 50 to $2 00. The experiment has proved unsuccessful, and the publishers announced, some time ago, that they must return to the old price with the beginning of the new volume.

Every year furnishes illustrations of the folly of catering to the taste for "cheap papers." In nine cases out of ten, it results in loss to the publishers, or such a falling off in the quality and quantity of reading matter as proves a loss to the readers.

SUNDAY LAWS IN PENNSYLVANIA.

[Extract from a business letter.]

"I am glad to find that your society is again petitioning the Legislature of this State. My ancestors were among the earliest and most active advocates of religious liberty in Pennsylvania. My own feelings are much opposed to an infringement of your rights. Upon several occasions I have referred to your case in addressing the Legislature of this State, and I think there will be several remonstrances presented to the present session. But there is a solid phalanx of men well paid who are opposing you. I have both spoken and written to the Governor respecting your wrongs, and I think his private feelings are in your favor; but politicians generally take the popular side.

"Educated as a Quaker, I have taken the Quaker view of this subject. But any one who candidly investigates must find that it is a great absurdity to found the observance of the Sunday on the command to observe the ancient Sabbath. As well might they call the Fourth of July Easter.

"You take the right ground in opposing all Sunday laws. It is my sincere belief, that the day would be more appropriately observed were coercive enactments done away with. Men would then inquire into its true foundation." W. L. F.

HOW IT STRIKES THE CATHOLICS.

In the "Freeman's Journal and Catholic Register," of last week, we find Mr. Morton's Circular to the Members of the Synod of the Reformed Presbyterian Church. The Editor introduces it with remarks which show how little confidence Catholics have in the integrity and consistency of men who, while they profess to take the Bible as the only rule of faith and practice, do in fact follow the traditions of the Romish Church in opposition to the Bible. We copy the introductory remarks, not because the idea which they develop is new to our readers, but because they have it here on Catholic authority of a high order.

The Bible and the Presbyterians.

It is no new argument to bring against the Presbyterians, and other Protestants who agree with them, that they have no other warrant for infant baptism, and for the observance of the first day of the week, except the precept of the Catholic Church and traditions derived therefrom. But we conceive that within the past year a body of the more rigid and old-fashioned of the Presbyterians in the United States must have been unusually harrowed by a reproduction of the argument, not by a professed opponent, but by one of their own brethren.

Some five or six months ago a circular was published in this city, and a copy addressed to this office, by a Mr. Morton, "late a minister of the Reformed Presbyterian Church in the United States." We purposed noticing it at the time, but more important topics put it out of its place, and we contented ourselves with copying from the Pittsburg Catholic a few passing remarks on the self-stultification of the Calvinistic Pres-[illegible] in its Bible-expoundings, put poor Morton out of the synagogue for not agreeing with the decisions of his brethren. The document is rather long for our colmmns, but it is written with so much candor and sincerity, and knocks so hard at Presbyterians, that we think Mr. Morton deserves our helping him to a wider reading of his circular than he could have anticipated. We recommend to our Catholic readers who have Presbyterian acquaintances to mark this article and put it aside till the latter shall some time call them to account for some Catholic doctrine which, through Calvinistic spectacles, they are unable to see in the Bible.

DR. ACHILLI IN ROME.

A correspondent of the London Daily News, under date of Rome, Dec. 26, announces an increase in the degree of severity with which Dr. Achilli is treated in the Castle of St. Angelo. He is now confined in one of the upper prisons of the fortress, dark, dirty, and unwholesome, with strict injunctions for the jailor to allow him to hold no communications with the other prisoners, or to receive messages or visits from his friends. The cause of these rigorous orders appears to have been chiefly the discovery that an enthusiastic zeal had prompted Dr. Achilli to converse with his fellow-prisoners upon religious subjects during the hours allotted to their meals or exercise. The person who was base enough to inform against him was no other than Diamilla, who is in custody for the robbery of gold coins and medals in the Vatican Library. He accused Dr. Achilli of entertaining the inmates of the prison with heretical discourses and of scandalizing them by eating meat on Fridays and Saturdays, and his testimony, although that of a thief, was considered quite sufficient to condemn the unfortunate advocate of Protestantism to the carcare duro, while the informer was rewarded for his treachery by a greater degree of liberty than before.

In a letter written two days afterward, the same correspondent, speaking of Dr. Achilli, says that nothing favorable has yet been effected, although his friend Mr. M——, has made every possible exertion in his behalf. The British Consul has warmly seconded his efforts, and the commander-in-chief has shown himself by no means indifferent to the case, although decidedly averse to use any other influence than that of his good offices. Several French officers, acquainted with the circumstances of Achilli's arrest, and interested in his misfortune, have stated it to be their conviction that he will be sacrificed to the vengeance of the Inquisition as a scape-goat for many others not in custody.

A COLORED D.D.—We learn from the North Star, that the University of Heidelberg has conferred the title of D. D. upon J. W. C. PENNINGTON, a talented and worthy colored clergyman of this city—formerly of Hartford, Conn.

FATHER VENTURA.—A European correspondent of the New York Evangelist describes a visit to Father Ventura, made near the close of November last. He found the Ex-General of the Theatins writing at a desk, sitting in the sun, with a cloak about his shoulders. He is a noble-looking old man, of a majestic aspect when in repose, with a smiling countenance in conversation. A dialogue passed between the visitor and the re-converted Papist, from which it appears that the latter is more than ever bent on defending Romanism. It will be seen, by the following extract, that his hope of regaining what he has lost is forlorn enough:

"I am astonished that Father Ventura, who seems to me to be shrewd among the shrewd, should not have understood that submission to the Pope, after his semi-emancipation, will avail him nothing. Rome graciously receives into her bosom those who have temporarily deserted her, but Rome never gives them her confidence, for the very simple reason that, wanting herself in serious conviction, she does not believe in the convictions of others; she says to herself, He who has deceived me once through interest, may deceive me the second time from the same reason. At all events, Father Ventura does not appear to have regained the favor of Pius IX., for he lives humbly at Montpelier, laboring to give new pledges on his part, by theological labors which he is preparing, and some fragments from which he read to me. His reconciliation with the Pope will be worth as much as that of the Pope with the Roman people."

THE WESLEYAN MOVEMENT.—The Wesleyan movement, in England, says the British Banner, proceeds with energy. The expelled ministers prosecute their calling, which is, at present, to enlighten the people, with a zeal, energy, system, and effect, that would have done honor to JOHN WESLEY himself, assisted by GEORGE WHITFIELD. Wherever they go, vast crowds attend them, and not only the most entire unanimity, but the most intense feeling, characterizes the immense assemblages they address. One of the most remarkable seems to have been that held recently at Leeds, where 1,600 people sat down together to tea, and 3,000 or 4,000 people remained together till twelve o'clock at night! In fact, the progress of the Expelled Ministers can be compared to nothing but a triumphal march.

HOW TO PRAY AT THE MISSIONARY CONCERT.—Nowhere, says a cotemporary, is the monthly concert of prayer for the conversion of the world more highly appreciated, and nowhere is it attended with more deep and heartfelt interest, than on missionary ground. In Aintah, at the monthly concert in August last, several women wept like children, while one of the native brethren was pleading with God for the conversion of the world. Oh, what a blessed day will that be, when all in our churches at home shall, in like manner, go to the throne of grace, and with strong crying and tears, beseech God to have mercy upon a world lying in wickedness.

A RELIGIOUS NEWSPAPER IN EVERY FAMILY.—The Philadelphia Christian Chronicle says that Rev. Dr Malcom, in a sermon which he preached on the last Sunday of 1849, urged upon the people, that to have their religious denominational paper in every family in the congregation, is a Christian duty. Having dwelt on the influence of such a paper in promoting piety, intelligence, and benevolence, he expressed a readiness, if necessary, to become responsible for the money required to place it in every family in his society.

ANOTHER ACCIDENT ON THE SABBATH.—On Sabbath day, (commonly called Saturday,) Jan. 12th, four persons were drowned at Plymouth, Mass., by breaking through the ice—a full account of which we published last week. We have now to record a most melancholy accident which occurred at Honesdale, Pa., on Sabbath, (Saturday,) Jan. 19th, resulting in the death of three young ladies—one of whom was a daughter of Judge Woodward, of Wilkesbarre, Pa. It appears that they were enjoying themselves by sliding on the ice, when it suddenly gave way, and, before assistance could be rendered, they were drowned. Their bodies were afterward recovered and taken to their friends.

TOLERATION IN ROME.—A correspondent of the London Daily News, writes from Rome under date of Dec 26, that an American Protestant minister had twelve of his countrymen joining him in worship at his own house in the Via S. Bastianello. The police were acquainted with the circumstance before night, and the American Charge d'Affaires, Mr. Cass, was apprised, that if the offense were repeated, the minister would be sent away from Rome immediately.

A TRIPLE LAUNCH.—On Second-day morning last, between nine and ten o'clock, three steamers were launched from the ship-yard of Wm. H. Brown, New York. One of them was the "Arctic," of 3,500 tons, built to ply between New York and Liverpool in connection with the "Atlantic" and "Pacific." Another was the "Boston," a small steamer for river navigation. The third was the "New World," destined for the California trade; and she, as if to illustrate the way they do things in the country to which she is bound, was launched with her machinery all in order, and steam up, so that in five minutes after she touched the water, her wheels were in motion, and she proceeded down the bay on her trial trip.

REVIVAL INTELLIGENCE.

Rev. C. M. Fuller states, in a communication to the N. Y. Baptist Register, that several churches in North-eastern New York are enjoying refreshings from the presence of the Lord. At Burke, in Franklin Co., twenty converts have been baptized. In Fullerville, a score or more have been hopefully brought to the knowledge of the truth. Near Canton, the county seat of St. Lawrence Co., a pleasing revival is in progress, and at West Plattsburg there are indications of good.

The Morning Star has letters communicating the progress and results of revivals of religion in several places. To the Free-Will Baptist Church in Lowell, Mass., over forty have been added by baptism the last season. In Raymond, N. H., nine have been baptized, and a delightful work of grace is going on. In Sutton, Vt., Dexter and Sangerville, Me., Center Square, Ia., Royalton and Auburn, N. Y., revivals are reported.

During the late revival at Jackson, says the Tennessee Baptist, between sixty and seventy made a good profession of faith in Christ; several more will unite with us, several with sister churches in our vicinity, and several with the different denominations in town. The revival was marked by the conversion of a large number of the older and most worthy citizens of Jackson.

The Journal and Messenger reports revivals in various parts of Ohio and Indiana. Cheering additions to the Baptist churches are mentioned. Two churches in Schuyler Co., Illinois, have received more than fifty by baptism within a few weeks.

An interesting revival of religion commenced several weeks since in Winchendon, Mass. An encouraging state of religious feeling is manifest among Christians, and the inquiry of the impenitent is, What must we do to be saved?

The St. Johns (New Brunswick) Christian Visiter learns that a revival is in progress at Hillsburgh, Nova Scotia. Many have been baptized.

The Christian Secretary has intelligence of revivals in Williamantic and Stratsfield, Ct. At the former place, thirty-eight have been baptized since the revival commenced.

The Watchman of the Prairies says that at Kanesville, Ill., there is a revival in progress, and already twenty-nine have been added to the church by baptism.

The same paper contains the intelligence of a revival at Bath, Mason county, Ill. On the 20th of December, there had been twenty conversions, and the work of grace was still going on.

The Western Watchman says that eighty-five have, within a few months, united with the Bethlehem Church, Mo.

The same paper says that twenty persons were baptized at Little Cedar Lick during the last autumn, and twenty-two at Rutland.

WHAT HAS BEEN DONE FOR MISSIONS.—At the Missionary Concert held in a Boston Church on the first Sunday of the present month, Rev. Dr. Anderson gave a cheering view of the past achievements of the Missionary enterprise. As reported in the Puritan Recorder, Dr. A. said:—

"A greater progress has been made in publishing the gospel than is generally supposed. The Bible has been translated into more than two hundred languages, printing presses established, churches gathered, and schools instituted. There are from eight to ten hundred missionary stations. These are so many light-houses to guide into the right haven the voyagers on the ocean of time. The American Board has expended five millions of dollars. There is no impropriety in asking what the means they have used are worth. Abroad they have buildings, presses, churches, and missionaries who have learned much by experience. At home they have organizations, officers, and agencies. Dr. A. thought that with all the experience that we have now had, it would cost $4,500,000 and take twenty or thirty years to accomplish as much as has been already done. He thinks that $40,000,000 have been invested in the missionary enterprise in this country and England. The whole sum collected at the Monthly Concert in Boston the last year, was $1,168. The amount contributed to the Board by the churches of Boston, in addition to what was received from the Monthly Concerts, was about $15,000."

TEACHERS FOR OREGON.—A recent letter from Rev. Mr. Atkinson, of Oregon City, to a lady in Boston, utters an urgent call for female teachers of the requisite qualifications. Mr. Atkinson writes:—

"The idea of going to superior teachers is very fascinating to parents and children in the West. This is the way the Papists acquire such influence. The 'Sisters of Charity' profess to teach music, French, needlework, with the common branches. They adapt themselves very much to the people. There has been lately a nunnery established at this place. It is a few rods from my house, on the river bank. A large number of our Protestant girls are attending their schools. They have another institution up the valley twenty-five miles. They design to build one across the river, opposite this place. A Papist, who holds the claim, has given them sixty acres for their purposes. Six vessels with French Cath[illegible] on their way here. One has arrived—the rest will soon be in. What have we to oppose them, but schools and churches? But we have few teachers, and most of these poorly qualified. Our girls are very early married; it is while they are girls, and but poorly educated in any way to be at the head of a family. We must depend upon the East for teachers. We have money enough; we can pay teachers liberally."

A BAPTIST CHURCH ROBBED.—A few nights since the Rev. Mr. Gillette's church, located in Twelfth street above Race, Philadelphia, was entered by a sacriligious villain, and about twenty volumes were taken from the teachers' library. The sum of about two dollars and a half, being the contributions of the Sunday-school children for benevolent purposes, was stolen from the missionary box. A number of articles of clothing, pieces of goods, &c., that had been presented to the Dorcas Society, to be made up for the poor of the church, were also stolen.

General Intelligence.

PROCEEDINGS IN CONGRESS LAST WEEK.

In Senate. SECOND-DAY, Jan. 21.

Mr. Hunter gave notice of a bill to abolish the Home Department.

The Senate then took up the special order, the resolution submitted some time since by Mr. Foote, declaring it to be the duty of Congress at the present Session to provide Territorial Governments for the Territories.

Mr. Cass proceeded to address the Senate on the question of the Wilmot Proviso, and continued his remarks until the hour of adjournment.

House of Representatives.

The House refused, by two majority, to reconsider the vote by which the election of Doorkeeper and Postmaster was postponed till March, 1851, thus allowing the present occupants of those offices to hold over to the end of this session.

Two Messages from the President were received and read. The first related to the action of the Government, in the search for Sir John Franklin's expedition, and submitted the propriety of an appropriation to further the object. The second was an answer to the call of the House for information relative to operations in California.

The President communicates all the documents in his possession respecting the formation of the government in California. Acting under the treaty of Gaudalupe, without the aid of any legislative provision, he found on coming into office that the former administration had made certain arrangements, which he had thought it not best to disturb. With a view to the faithful execution of the treaty, so far as laid in the power of the Executive, and to enable Congress to act at the present session with as full knowledge and as little difficulty as possible on all matters of interest in those territories, he sent the Hon. Thomas Butler King as bearer of dispatches to California and New Mexico, whose duties are particularly defined in the accompanying letters of instruction, addressed to him severally by the proper departments. He did not hesitate to express to the people of those territories his desire that each territory should, if prepared to comply with the requisitions of the constitution of the U. S., form a plan of a State Constitution, and submit the same to Congress, with a prayer for admission into the Union as a State; but he did not anticipate, suggest or authorize any government agent or officer to interfere with, nor exercise any influence or control over the election of delegates, or over any convention, in making or modifying their domestic institutions, or any of the provisions of the proposed Constitution. The President pledges himself to defend them in the formation of any government republican in its character, to be at the proper time submitted to Congress, and declares that its plan must be their own deliberate choice, without the interference of the Executive. His object was to avoid angry discussions in Congress on topics which did not properly belong to national legislation. As under the Constitution Congress has power to make all needful rules and regulations respecting the territories of the United States, every new acquisition of territory, has led to discussions of the question whether involuntary servitude, which prevails in the States, should or should not be prohibited in that territory. To avoid this, he wished both California and New Mexico to come in as States at once. He earnestly recommends the admission of Western California, under the constitution now formed. He advises that no government be established in New Mexico until the boundary controversy with Texas is settled. He has unofficial information which leads to the belief that New Mexico will soon ask for admission into the Union, and thus settle all domestic questions for themselves, and then the boundary can be settled judiciously. He concludes thus: "Seeing then that the question which now incites such painful sensations in the country, will in the end certainly be settled by the silent operation of causes independent of the action of Congress, I again submit to your wisdom the policy recommended in my annual message, of awaiting the salutary operation of those causes, believing that we shall thus avoid the creation of geographical parties, and secure the harmony of feeling so necessary to the beneficial action of our political system."

In Senate. THIRD-DAY, Jan. 22.

Mr. Dickinson, from the Finance Committee, reported without amendment the bill to establish a Branch Mint in the City of New-York, and recommended its passage.

Mr. Webster submitted a resolution asserting that provision ought to be made by law allowing to every male citizen of the United States, who should settle upon and cultivate the same for three years, a quarter section of public land, which, however, should not be alienated by the settler, or converted except by devise by will.

Mr. Cass concluded his speech.

House of Representatives.

Mr. Clingman, of North Carolina, made a violent speech on Slavery, complaining that the South is getting into a minority, but suggesting no remedy. He said that "but for the passage of the Wilmot Proviso, from time to time, by this House, slaveholders would have gone to California to work the mines and make that a slave State."

Mr. Howard, of Texas, followed, and after him Mr. Brown, of Miss., obtained the floor, when the house adjourned.

In Senate. FOURTH-DAY, Jan. 23.

Mr. Hunter introduced a bill to abolish the Home Department and to establish the Board of Accounts.

The motion to print the Anti-Slavery Resolutions of Vermont was taken up, and Mr. Phelps made an able speech in defense of those Resolutions. The motion was laid on the table at the conclusion of Mr. Phelps's remarks.

House of Representatives.

Mr. Boyd asked leave to present the credentials of Mr. Babbit, Representative from Deseret, and the Constitution of that State, and refer them to the Committee on Elections. Mr. Stephens objected.

A resolution was adopted authorizing the parties to the contested election in the first District of Iowa to take depositions, and to allow ninety days for that purpose.

The motion to refer the President's late Message to the Committee on Territories was taken up, and Mr. Seddon made a speech, in which he tried hard to convict the President of misrepresentation in regard to the course of the Administration on California affairs.

In Senate. FIFTH-DAY, Jan. 24.

Among the numerous memorials presented was one by Mr. Clay asking the purchase by Congress of Mount Vernon. The Senate then proceeded to the consideration of a Resolution presented by Mr. Clay authorizing the Joint Committee on the Library to purchase the original manuscript of Washington's Farewell Address. It was stated that the manuscript was now in the hands of the descendants of Mr. Claypole, the editor of the Daily Advertiser, a paper formerly published in Philadelphia, which was selected by General Washington to publish his Farewell Address. It has been advertised for sale recently at public auction, and not being willing that this document, which was and always would be so venerated by the American people, should be lost to the country—perhaps be transported to grace the parlor of some European nobleman—Mr. Clay said he had thought proper to make this effort to rescue it for the Library of Congress. The resolution was adopted.

The Senate, in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to the consideration of the special order—the bill providing for the more effectual, execution of the provision of the Constitution relating to the recapture of fugitive slaves.

Mr. Butler addressed the Senate in support of the bill, stating its object, and explaining the necessities which, in his opinion, required its immediate adoption; in the course of his remarks, stating that the loss to the South, by the escape of slaves, amounted annually to at least $150,000.

At the conclusion of Mr. Butler's remarks, Mr. Mason expressed a desire to be heard on the bill, and its farther consideration was postponed; after which the Senate adjourned over to Second-day of the present week.

House of Representatives.

Mr. Ashmun asked leave to introduce a bill to reduce the rates of postage, and to abolish the franking privilege.

The House then took up Mr. Savage's resolution, calling on the President to communicate to the House, provided it be not prejudicial to the public interest, all information in his possession relative to the alleged extraordinary proceeding of the English Government, in the forcible seizure and occupation of Tigre Island, in Central America, &c. The resolution passed.

The subject of electing a Chaplain came up, but before going into an election, the House adjourned over to Second-day of the present week.

TWO WEEKS LATER FROM EUROPE.

By the steamer Niagara, which arrived at Boston on the 26th inst., we have Liverpool dates to the morning of the 12th inst.

There had been a considerable advance in cotton—half a cent per pound. Breadstuffs had slightly declined.

Parliament was to meet for dispatch of business on Feb. 1, when it is expected that some important change in the monetary system will be laid before the Legislature.

President Taylor's Message has been extensively published, and largely commented upon by the English press. The general expression of the public sentiment is very favorable.

There was a rumor in Paris that a treaty had actually been concluded between the Emperor of Russia and the President of the Republic, the particulars of which will yet be found to be any thing but desirable, so far as England's interests are concerned.

There is little likelihood of an understanding being come to between the French commandant at Rome and the Government of the Cardinals, owing to the manifest jealousy of French influence entertained by the latter, while the Cardinals are placing the Pope under the protection of a mixed garrison of Austrians and Italians. Gen. De Hillers insists upon leaving a French force of 12,000 men in the city of Rome. This proposition has been met by the Cardinals with a decided refusal, and affairs are as far as ever from being arranged.

In relation to the Refugees in Turkey, it is said that the Turkish Ministers were willing to consent to the expulsion of all those Poles who had been concerned in the late Hungarian insurrection, but that they objected to the expulsion of Polish refugees who were resident in Turkey previously to that event, and who were provided with French or other passports. The Czar has agreed to the terms proposed by the Porte. Kossuth and the Hungarian refugees are to be confined in a fortified town in the interior; they are not to be close prisoners, but their place of residence will be under the constant surveillance of the Turkish authorities.

In Austria, the report that an alliance offensive and defensive had been concluded between Prussia, France, and England, was circulated on the 30th ult.

Gen. Count Urbna, who commanded the Imperialists when they were defeated at Raab, by the Hungarians, has committed suicide at Verona.

The typhus fever was raging fearfully at Vienna on the 20th ult. No less than 80 medical men had been seized with it from visiting their patients.

THE CUBAN EXPEDITION.—A telegraphic dispatch from Washington, dated Jan. 24, says it has been represented to the President that the Revolutionists are again maturing their plans for a descent on the Island of Cuba, and calls have been made for the interference of the Government to arrest the completion of their designs. It is said the representations are to the effect that companies are being raised and drilled in New-Orleans, New-York, Philadelphia, and other parts of the United States, and that money is being raised for the purpose of providing funds for this expedition, by pledging the rents of the Island. The expedition is understood to be nearly ready, and that one or two vessels will sail from New-York, during the present week, clearing for some port in the Southern Main, with men and arms. Also, that men are going out by the Chagres and New-Orleans steamers, which stop at Havana.

GENERAL BANKING LAWS.—The General Banking Law of New-Jersey, reported by a Joint Committee, provides that any association may form a Bank, and that the Treasurer of the State shall furnish circulating notes on pledge of New-Jersey, Maine, Massachusetts, New-York, Connecticut, Vermont, Ohio, Kentucky, Pennsylvania, or Government Stocks. The Stocks to be made equal to 6 per cent Stocks, and the circulation delivered dollar for dollar. The security may also consist of Bonds and Mortgages on productive, unincumbered lands worth double the amount of the mortgage. No Bank to have less than $50,000.

A general Banking Law has also been introduced into the Senate of Pennsylvania. This law requires the deposit with the Auditor General of Government or Pennsylvania Stocks, four-fifths of said Stock to bear interest of at least 5 per cent per annum, and not to be taken above its par value. One-quarter per cent semi-annually on these Stocks is retained by the State for the extinguishment of the Public Debt. The amount of circulating notes issued not to exceed four-fifths of the amount of securities. Capital not to be less than $50,000. No personal liability is involved.

THE ERIE RAILROAD.—The Directors of the Erie Railroad Company have passed a resolution to complete the Road to Dunkirk on the Lake as soon as possible, and ordered the Contract Committee to make a contract to that effect. The route will be partly on the old line, and partly a deviation from it. The estimated cost is $2,100,000 from Hornellsville, or $2,600,000 from Corning. There was, when this great enterprise was commenced, a large expenditure made on the Lake end of the Road, a considerable portion of which will be now available. Some seventy miles of the distance is graded and nearly ready for the superstructure. The old line will be generally adhered to. In the Legislature, the other day, Mr. Owen, from the Railroad Committee, reported a bill confining the location of the New-York and Erie Railroad through Allegany, Cattaraugus and Chautauque Counties, to the following points: Phillipsburgh, Allegany County; Olean and Randolph, in Cattaraugus County, and Dunkirk in Chautauque County.

FEARFUL RAILROAD ACCIDENT.—At Madison, Indiana, on the 17th inst., a disastrous collision and general smash of the entire freight train, with the contents, occurred on the great plane of the Railroad. The coupling between the train and the large locomotive used for letting it down the inclined plane, gave way at the top of the hill, whence the cars came down with such velocity as to burst the wheels by their centrifugal force, and at the foot of the plane some of the cars flew off the track, running entirely into the river. The others followed the road and came in collision with another train which was waiting in the street below, and the concussion was so violent as to literally shatter to atoms some twelve or fourteen cars, flinging wheels, axles, timbers, &c. even into the river—a distance of at least fifty yards. The cars were loaded with flour and other produce, all of which was more or less damaged. Ten or twelve freight cars were entirely destroyed. The brakemen escaped without injury, but one man has his leg broken.

INDIAN OPERATIONS IN MEXICO.—The New Orleans Picayune of Jan. 15th, says that the Indians of Durango continue their barbarities. On the 3d of December, a band of savages carried off two women, one of whom they murdered. They likewise put to death a laborer and his daughter, and wounded several persons, and captured three children and a lady. The latter was subsequently rescued. The inhabitants of the district appear utterly powerless for defense, and the government is either unable or unwilling to help them. In New Leon similar atrocities are of frequent occurrence. In Coahuila alone has anything like organized resistance been attempted.

DESPERATION OF A SLAVE.—The Cumberland (Md.) Civilian says: A gentleman of this place, having reason to believe that one of his negroes would soon "set up shop" in Pittsburgh, determined very properly to sell him. The negro was accordingly sold, but resisted the agent of his new master, knocking him down with a bar of iron, and doing him serious injury. When he found at length that his plans of escape were frustrated, he deliberately took a hatchet and attempted to sever his hand from the arm. The blow was not quite successful, and it is supposed he may recover without amputation of the hand.

SUICIDE OF A MURDERER.—Elias Knight, of Kentucky, committed suicide on the 7th inst. He killed a man in Trigg County, but had thus far eluded the officers. The Sheriff, with a posse, proceeded to his house, but found the doors barred against them. They finally, however, obtained admission, and found Knight secreted up stairs. Finding all chances of escape futile, he promised to surrender if they would give him a little time. His request being acceded to, he pulled off a boot, put the muzzle of a gun to his head, and blew out his brains, pulling the trigger with his foot.

A GALLANT BROTHER.—Isaac B. Dunn, Esq., a member of the House of Delegates of Virginia, from Washington County, resigned his seat in that body on Tuesday. Mr. Dunn's sister is the Mrs. White who, traveling in the far West, with her husband, on their way to or from Santa Fe, was a short time since seized and carried off, with her child, into captivity, by a band of Apache Indians. He has resigned his seat, in order to accompany a party, who are to set out immediately for the Indian Country, in order, if possible, to discover and rescue his sister.

N. Y. STATE AGRICULTURAL SOCIETY.—The State Agricultural Society met at Albany on Wednesday, Jan. 16, and received the Annual Report of the Executive Committee, which presents some important facts connected with the Agriculture of the State. It appears from the Treasurer's Report, that the entire receipts of the year have amounted to $12,000, of which $8,144 55 was for the recent State Fair at Syracuse. The expenditures of the Society during the same period have been about $3,000—leaving a balance of $9,000 in the treasury.

SUMMARY.

For the last two evenings, says a N. Y. paper of Friday last, a large number of destitute immigrants were lodged at the Tombs. A litter of straw was shaken down in the large basement hall of the Police Office, upon which the unfortunate strangers stretched their weary limbs, persons of both sexes being promiscuously intermingled. Loaves of bread were distributed among them. It was a sad and sorry sight to witness these poor outcasts, who had expected a better state of things on their arrival in a foreign country, subjected to such misery.

On the 11th inst., as Mrs. Plass, of Brooklyn, was preparing her morning meal, the coffee-pot, which was standing upon the stove, suddenly exploded; the confined steam forcing the top against the ceiling with great force, and throwing the boiling coffee into the face and upon the neck and arms of Mrs. Plass, who is very badly scalded, and fears are entertained that she will lose both eyes.

A wounded and disbanded soldier, named Lang, has obtained a verdict in the Circuit Court at New York against General Harney, of $700 and costs, for an assault and battery. It was proved that the plaintiff and defendant were passengers on board the Alabama from Mexico, in November, 1848; and because plaintiff and others complained of the fare, Harney beat him severely.

At the recent election in Wisconsin, the question of free suffrage was voted upon, and decided in the affirmative; the vote showing 4,090 for, 3,603 against it. This establishes the right of every male citizen, of whatever color, over the age of twenty-one years, to vote at all elections in the State.

Several Banks in Wall-st. have cut loose from all business connection with the Dry-Dock Bank, and refuse even to receive its notes over their counter. This will probably become general, as a movement to that effect has been made. At the Stock Board every day, when this Stock is called, the only response is three groans.

The Spanish papers state, that during some excavations recently made at Saragossa, a discovery has been made of many medals and other relics, which appear to be remains of a civilized people which had occupied the place before the Carthagenian invasion of Spain.

The Legislature of Indiana, in granting divorces, append the proviso, that the party applying shall not contract marriage, during his or her life, with any other person than the one from whom he or she is divorced.

William L. May, Esq., formerly a member of Congress from the Springfield district, Illinois, died at Sacramento, a few days after his arrival there with the train of emigrants from Missouri.

A bill has been introduced in the New-Jersey Legislature to repeal the monopoly clause in the charter of the Camden and Amboy Railroad Co.

The ice is frozen to such a thickness on the North River at the city of Hudson, that teams with heavy loads cross to Athens, on the opposite side of the river, almost every hour in the day.

An association has been formed, at the city of London Mechanics' Institution, to promote the practice of decomposing the dead by the agency of fire. The members propose to burn, with becoming solemnity, such of their dead as shall have left their remains at the disposal of the association.

The forge branches of ten of the iron mills at Pittsburgh are now idle, resulting from the difficulty between the employers and boilers and paddlers, and the number of hands thrown out of employment by the stoppage is about eighteen hundred.

A Convention of all opposed to the new and unjust privileges which (it is alledged) are given to the owners of the Woodworth Patent by the act of 1845 authorising its renewal is responsibly called to assemble at Syracuse on the 20th of February.

Capt. Manson of ship Rome, from Calcutta via St. Helena, states that when he left the latter port on the 14th ult., a slaver with 500 slaves on board, prize to an English war steamer, was in the offing.

Accounts from New Orleans to the 24th inst., state that the steamer Ohio, while coming up the river, came in contact with the towboat Dinah, having in tow propeller Col. Stanton, and sunk them both. The Ohio received no injury. No lives were lost.

The beneficial results of industry, simple food, and regular habits, are seen in the fact that the Society of the United Brethren (Shakers) at Enfield, Conn., numbers 269, and not a death has occurred for 14 months.

The Florida Sentinel comes out strongly against the Southern Convention, which is proposed to be held in Nashville, Tenn., in June next, and to which Mississippi and South Carolina have already chosen delegates.

The first sale of precious stones, in this city, for five years past, consisting of diamonds, turquoises, topazes, garnets, rubies, chrysalites, pearls, saphires, aqua marines, Oriental garnets, opals, amethysts, emeralds, Panama pearls, and rough diamond opals, took place on Friday morning last at the store of Henry H. Leeds. The proceeds amounted to about $8,000.

"The Sons of Washington," is the title of a new secret society, instituted at Wilmington, Del., on the 1st of January. Its object embrace the freedom of the public lands; the equality of man; combinations to advance the interests of labor, as well as beneficial considerations for those who avail themselves of the key of the order.

The Delhi Gazette says that the Utica and Bridgewater plank-road, 20 miles long, and cost $40,000, pays 25 per cent. regularly. The Boonville road pays 22 per cent. The Watertown pays 35 per cent. The Forea and Johnson road, 4 miles long, and costing $8,000, pays regularly 50 per cent.

Mr. Mappin, of Sheffield, has invented a razor possessing the keenness of the lancet point, while it retains the temper and lasting qualities of the steel.

A negress, named Carlota Green, recently died at Vera Cruz, at the age of 113 years. She retained her faculties to the last moment.

An attempt was recently made by two sturdy scoundrels to rob Mr. Peter Sampson, who was traveling on horseback near Hamilton, Ky. He was stopped by the villains, who demanded his money. He immediately drew a pistol and fired it at the fellow who had hold of the bridle of his horse, and the shot took effect, as the man fell to the ground. He fired two more shots, which caused the other to fly, and he then made his escape by putting spurs to his horse.

The Cincinnati Nonpareil of the 17th says: "It is estimated that six thousand persons, or nearly one-fifteenth of our whole population, have had the small pox or varioloid during the last four months. It is spreading to a considerable extent in Covington and Newport. Like the cholera, it bears a milder form than it did in 1832—3, when it followed in the wake of that dreadful scourge."

A Paris paper, of Dec. 1, announces the death on that day of George Washington, oldest son of General Lafayette. He accompanied his father on his visit to this country in 1823, and was a member of the Chamber of Deputies under Louis Phillippe. He was also a member of the Constituent Assembly after the February revolution.

The North Carolinian tells a story of a slave who has gradually become white. The change is supposed to have been caused by the bite of a rattle-snake, which occurred some ten or a dozen years since. He was formerly as black as any African, and now shows no signs of the negro except the kinks in his hair.

The ship Huguenot cleared from Savannah on 14th inst. for Glasgow, freighted with 3,457 bales of upland cotton, weighing 1,522,655 pounds, and valued at $164,291 40, and 96 bales Sea Island cotton, weighing 32,358 pounds, and valued at $7,474 03. Total number of bales 3,553, weighing 1,585,023 pounds, and valued at $171,765 48.

Mail Line between Boston and New York.

REGULAR MAIL LINE BETWEEN BOSTON AND NEW YORK via Stonington and Providence. Inland route, without ferry, change of cars or baggage! The new steamer C. VANDERBILT, Capt Joel Stone, and COMMODORE, Capt. William H. Frazee, in connection with the Stonington and Providence and Boston and Providence Railroads, leaving New York daily, Sundays excepted, from Pier No. 2 North River at 4 o'clock P. M., and Stonington at 8 o'clock P. M or upon the arrival of the mail train from Boston. These steamers were built expressly for the route, and are in every respect particularly adapted to the navigation of Long Island Sound. The accommodations for passengers are commodious and comfortable—the officers capable and experienced. The route being the shortest and most direct between Boston and New York, passengers are enabled to arrive in ample time for the morning lines of steamboats and railroads running to various points from those cities. The C. VANDERBILT will leave New York Tuesday, Thursday, and Saturday. Leave Stonington Monday, Wednesday, and Friday. The COMMODORE will leave New York Monday, Wednesday, and Friday. Leave Stonington, Tuesday, Thursday, and Saturday. For passage, berths, state-rooms or freight, application may be made to the agents on the wharf, and at the office, 10 Battery-place.

The Society has also published the following works, to which attention is invited:—

A Defense of the Sabbath, in reply to Ward on the Fourth Commandment. By George Carlow. First printed in London, in 1724; reprinted at Stonington, Ct., in 1802; now republished in a revised form. 168 pages.

The Royal Law Contended for. By Edward Stennet. First printed in London, in 1658. 60 pp.

An Appeal for the Restoration of the Lord's Sabbath, in an Address to the Baptists from the Seventh-day Baptist General Conference. 24 pp.

Vindication of the True Sabbath, by J. W. Morton, late Missionary of the Reformed Presbyterian Church. 64 pp.

These tracts will be furnished to those wishing them for distribution or sale, at the rate of 15 pages for one cent. Persons desiring them can have them forwarded by mail or otherwise, on sending their address, with a remittance, to GEORGE B. UTTER, Corresponding Secretary of the American Sabbath Tract Society, No 9 Spruce-st., New York.

Scientific and Practical Agriculture.

HENRY STEPHENS, F. R. S. E., of Edinburgh, the celebrated author of the "BOOK OF THE FARM," and PROF. NORTON, of Yale College, New Haven, are preparing for the Press, a Book to be entitled,

AGRICULTURE—SCIENTIFIC AND PRACTICAL.

It will embrace every subject of importance connected with Agriculture in all its various branches, both Theoretical and Practical. "Science, in as far as it has, up to the present time, been made available to Practice by Experiment, will be treated in its relation to every operation as it occurs in the course of the seasons." The work will be arranged under four distinct heads, representing the seasons, beginning with Winter and ending with Autumn. The following are among the subjects to be treated of in the first and second seasons, including the Introductory, viz:

INITIATION.—On the best of the existing Methods for acquiring a thorough knowledge of Practical Husbandry the Difficulties to be encountered in learning practical husbandry, and on the Means of overcoming them; the different kinds of farming; the persons required to conduct and execute the labor of the farm; the branches of science most applicable to Agriculture: the Institutions of Education best suited to Agricultural science; the evils attending the neglect of landowners and others to learn Practical Agriculture; on observing the details and recording the facts of farming by the Agricultural student.

PRACTICE—WINTER.—On the treatment of farm-horses in Winter; the treatment of the farmer's saddle and harness horse in Winter; the fattening of swine; the treatment of fowls; the rationale of the feeding of animals; on the accommodation of the grain crops in the steading; threshing and winnowing of grain; on the forming of dunghills and composts in Winter; on the construction of liquid-manure tanks and carts; sea-weed as manure; on gaulting or claying the soil.

PRACTICE—SPRING.—Summary of the field operations, and of the weather in Spring; on the advantages of having field-work always in a state of forwardness; on the calving of cows; the milking of cows; the rearing of calves. On the sowing of spring wheat; on drilling up the land; on the sowing of beans, and peas, and tares. On the transplanting of turnip bulbs for producing seed. On the rolling of land. On the sowing of oats, lacerne, and sainfoin. On the lambing of ewes. On cross-ploughing land, and ribbing land for the seed-furrow. On the sowing of grass-seeds and barley. On the turning of dunghills. On the planting of potatoes. On paring and baring the surface. On the farrowing of sows; the hatching of fowls, &c.

The Work will also embrace many important operations not included in the ordinary routine of farming, such as "Judging of Land," "Stocking of a Farm," "Improvement of the Soil," &c., &c.

The contributions by Prof. Norton will add greatly to the value of the book, by adapting it to the Soil, Climate, Growth, &c., of our own Country; and the united labors of two such distinguished men will make this work one of the most complete and valuable to the American farmer, ever issued from the press.

The work will be comprised in about 18 Nos. of 80 pages each, with a steel engraving in every number, besides which it will contain more than 600 wood engravings, in the highest style of the art. It will be handsomely printed on fine paper, and sold at 25 cents a number, or $4 in advance for the eighteen numbers.

The First Number will be issued in the month of January, and the work will be completed in about one year. The first volume, written by Mr. Stephens, in already published in Edinburgh, and the American edition will be printed from the stereotype plates imported for that purpose.

Booksellers and Dealers in Periodicals will be furnished on liberal terms.

Postmasters and others remitting the money for three copies at the above prices, will receive a fourth copy gratis. Remittances will be at the risk of the Publishers, if the mailing of the money is proved—otherwise at the risk of the parties remitting. A postmaster's certificate of the money being duly mailed is always satisfactory evidence to the Publishers.

Miscellaneous.

THE PLOW AND THE SICKLE.

BY TRISTAM BURGESS.

With a pioneer axe, what a conquest is made!
  What a field from the forest is won!
What regions, reduced from the wilderness shade,
  Are now warmed in the beams of the sun!

From the rock where our fathers in exile first landed,
  Their clearing, from river to river, has spread;
And mountains and plains by their sons are commanded,
  'Till now on the beach of Pacific they tread.

What a farm for a nation to cultivate now,
  And gather the wonderful harvest it yields!
'T is an empire reduced to the Sickle and Plow,
  An empire of gardens, and orchards, and fields!

Hail, Nation of Farmers! rejoice in your toil,
  And shout when your harvest is o'er;
Receive the oppressed to your land with a smile,
  But frown every foe from your iron-bound shore.

And He who by deeds has now reached a high station,
  And is called to preside o'er the commonwealth now,
Must relinquish his farm to save our young nation,
  As for Rome, Cincinnatus relinquished his plow.

The Plow and the Sickle shall shine bright in glory,
  When the sword and the scepter shall crumble and rust;
And the farmer shall live, both in song and in story,
  When warriors and kings are forgotten in dust.

JUVENILE DEPRAVITY IN NEW-YORK.

The recent Report of Mr. Matsell, Chief of Police, to the Mayor of New-York, brings to view some of the vices which prevail in this city, and call loudly for immediate remedies. We copy a portion of the Report:—

In connection with this report I deem it to be my duty to call the attention of your Honor to a deplorable and growing evil which exists amid this community, and which is spread over the principal business parts of the city. It is an evil and a reproach to our municipality, for which the laws and ordinances afford no adequate remedy.

I allude to the constantly increasing numbers of vagrant, idle and vicious children, of both sexes, who infest our public thoroughfares, hotels, docks, &c.,—children who are growing up in ignorance and profligacy, only destined to a life of misery, shame and crime, and ultimately to a felon's doom. Their numbers are almost incredible, and to those whose business and habits do not permit a searching scrutiny, the degrading and disgusting practices of these almost infants in the schools of vice, prostitution and rowdyism, would certainly be beyond belief. The offspring of always careless, generally intemperate, and oftentimes immoral and dishonest parents, they never see the inside of a school-room, and so far as our excellent system of public education is concerned, (and which may be truly said to be the foundation stone of our free institutions,) it is to them an entire nullity. Left, in many instances, to roam day and night wherever their inclination leads them, a large proportion of these juvenile vagrants are in the daily practice of pilfering wherever opportunity offers, and begging where they cannot steal. In addition to which, the female portion of the youngest class, those who have only seen some eight or twelve summers, are addicted to immoralities of the most loathsome description. Each year makes fearful additions to the ranks of these prospective recruits of infamy and sin, and from this corrupt and festering fountain flows on a ceaseless stream to our lowest brothels—to the Penitentiary and the State Prison!

Reports have been made to me from the Captains of the 1st, 2d, 3d, 4th, 5th, 6th, 7th, 8th, 9th, 10th, 11th and 13th Patrol Districts —from which it appears that the enormous number of 2,955 children are engaged as above described in these wards alone. And of these, two thirds are females, between eight and sixteen years of age. This estimate I believe to be far short of the number actually thus engaged. Astounding as it may seem, there are many hundreds of parents in this city, who absolutely drive their offspring forth to practices of theft and semi-bestiality, that they themselves may live lazily on the means thus secured—selling the very bodies and souls of those in whom their own blood circulates, for the means of dissipation and debauchery. These embryo courtesans and felons may be divided into several classes, as follows:—

1st. Those who congregate around the piers, &c., where merchandize is chiefly landed. Cunning and adroit in their operations, they daily pilfer immense quantities of cotton, sugar, spirits, coffee, teas, &c., from the bales, hogsheads, casks, bags, chests, &c., with which the wharves are generally more or less loaded; and in the absence of other articles of plunder, they wrench the knobs from doors, steal building hardware from unfinished dwellings, lead and copper pipe, and even tin roofing! * * * The number of children engaged in this nefarious occupation, is estimated at seven hundred and seventy in the districts enumerated.

The 2d class of youthful vagrants are the "crossings sweepers." They are entirely different from those first mentioned, and in regard to moral degradation, they occupy a still lower position. Citizens generally suppose that in bestowing pennies upon these children, they are performing acts of charity and of mercy. This is a mistake. Whatever may be their gains during the day, the amount is always spent during the night, in visiting the galleries of the minor theatres, or in the lowest dens of drunknness and diseases which abound in the Five Points and its vicinity. And they oftentimes waste large sums of money amid half-grown boys of similar stamp, in the most disgusting scenes of precocious dissipation and debauchery. The number thus engaged is estimated, in the lower districts, at about one hundred.

The 3d class are also sufficiently well marked to present distinctive features. They likewise are mostly girls of tender years, and frequently neatly dressed, modest-looking, and in many instances even pretty. Their ostensible business is the sale of nuts, fruits, socks, toothpicks, &c.; and, with this ruse, they gain ready access to counting-rooms, offices, and other places, where, in the secrecy and seclusion of a turned key, they submit, for a miserable bribe of a few shillings, to the most degrading familiarities. By these practices they are frequently enabled to carry home some two or three dollars daily. And this very money, to obtain which the miserable child sells its present and future welfare, is eagerly grasped by the often inebriate parents, who, with a full knowledge of the sacrifice by which it was obtained, scruple not to use it, and on the morrow the girl is again sent forth upon the same disgusting errand. The captain of the 11th patrol district, in speaking of this class of children, says that scenes of almost nightly occurrence might, if necessary, be related, which for vileness and deep depravity would absolutely stagger belief. These enormities have long been known to the Department, and they come to me in such an unquestionable shape, that I cannot doubt the truth of the statement.

I am aware that there are honorable exceptions to the above, and that some among the hundreds included in this third class, are in reality honest children, endeavoring to gain a living by the legitimate sale of trifles, but the majority are vicious, and only so. Their number is computed, in the districts named, at three hundred and eighty.

The 4th class are BOYS. They are termed "baggage smashers;" they congregate around steam-boat landings, and railroad depots, apparently for the purpose of carrying parcels for individuals arriving in the city. A large proportion of them have no homes whatever;—they will not hesitate to steal when opportunity offers, and live idle and dissolute lives, generally sleeping in the markets, under sheds, and occasionally in cheap lodgings; but the luxury of a bed is an article, however, which they seldom indulge in. There are about one hundred and twenty thus engaged.

A 5th class consists of boys similar to those last mentioned, with this exception, they have homes, and many of them are the children of respectable parents, but through a mistaken leniency or a criminal carelessness, they are suffered to spend their evenings and Sabbath in small gatherings on the corners of the streets, annoying the neighborhood and passers by with their wrangling and fighting practices, and with the most reckless oaths and blasphemies. They will often steal, and many of them absent themselves from the roof of their parents or guardians for weeks together, sleeping in market wagons and other places of shelter; consorting with the vilest of both sexes, and forming habits of vice and dissipation which cling to them through all their after years. The number of these is estimated at between 1,600 and 1,700. Besides, these there are reported to me from the above named districts, twenty-three hundred and eighty-three children that do not attend school.

But what are the remedies? Mr. Matsell closes his Report to the Mayor thus:—

In presenting these disagreeable facts for the consideration of your Honor, I trust that I may be pardoned for the suggestion in conclusion, that in my opinion some method, by which these children could be compelled to attend our schools regularly, or be apprenticed to some suitable occupation, would tend in time more to improve the morals of the community, prevent crime, and relieve the city from its onerous burthen of expenses for the Alms House and Penitentiary, than any other conservative or philanthropic movement with which I am at present acquainted.

THE LOSS OF THE SHIP "CALEB GRIMSHAW."

The Caleb Grimshaw was one of the best of our New York built ships, launched in February, 1848, and on the 22d of October sailed from Liverpool, on her sixth voyage, with a large number of passengers, and a full cargo. No unusual incident occurred on the voyage, until Monday, the 12th of November. The day commenced with light airs from the northward, and for the first time since leaving Liverpool the weather was pleasant; the decks were dry, and all were enjoying the bright rays of the sun. At 8 P. M., a cry of fire was raised, and instantly the passengers were thrown into a terrible state of alarm and confusion, in which it was difficult for the officers to make any command to be heard. Without delay, however, the engine was got to work, and continued to work during the whole time that the crew were able to stay by the burning wreck.

When the alarm was given, it was supposed the fire was in the steerage, and the between decks were flooded. This did not subdue the fire, and it was evident that the steerage was not the scene of disaster. One of the forward hatches was opened, and the flames were discovered in the forward hold, abreast of the chain-locker, on both sides, Mr. Hoxie, the chief officer, was lowered by a rope into the hold, but was at once overcome by the smoke, and immediately drawn out almost senseless The smoke within the first hour became so dense, that it was impossible for any person to breathe between decks. The consternation among the passengers now became appalling. They were perfectly frantic. Some refused to work longer at the fire engine, and abandoned themselves to despair; while others rushed to the quarter boats, hanging at the davits, and crammed them full—stowing themselves in like sheep, without regard to the possibility of the boats sustaining them. By the use of force, the captain and crew were able to clear one of them, while, sad to relate, the other was carried away from the davits, by the immense number who instantly crowded into her. These all perished, with others who sprang from the chains after the boat as she went down. The boat which had been cleared was then lowered, and by her means the other, which had been swamped, was righted, and both, together with the stern boat, were towed astern, with two men in each, subject to the orders of the captain. Hopes of subduing the fire were still entertained, and the most strenuous exertions with the engine and with buckets were continued. The sails of the ship were reduced to two close-reefed topsails.

At 8 A. M., the pumps were sounded, and 5½ feet water found, the smoke and steam continuing very dense, while the excitement among the passengers had not abated. At 11 A. M. got the tackle on the long boat, launched her overboard, and placed in her such articles of provision as could be obtained, and dropped her astern, with two men in her. The construction of a raft was also commenced, under the direction of Capt. Hoxie, from the spars and planks on deck. As soon as it was finished, the passengers became uncontrollable, and contrary to the orders of the captain, and in spite of his endeavors to prevent them, launched the raft, broke the locks from the "harness casks," and removed the beef and pork they contained to the raft. The smoke increasing, the passengers became reckless, and about sixty of the strongest rushed to the raft, and fearing it might be over burthened, at once cut it adrift. and at sunset that day were scarcely visible. The next day, the 13th, the wind blew heavily from the eastward, and Capt. H. does not believe it possible that the raft could have withstood the sea, and has little doubt that they were all lost. Nothing has been heard of them.

The remaining passengers, deeming that those who had taken to the raft were more fortunate than they, proceeded to construct another out of such materials as they could lay hands on. At 3 P. M., the heat and smoke became alarming, and the long boat was ordered to be hauled under the stern; and Mrs. Hoxie and child were lowered from the cabin windows into it. The other cabin passengers were also lowered over the stern, the cabin windows being too small to allow their egress by that means. The boats were filled with as many of the passengers and crew as they could safely carry, reserving places for such of the crew as remained by the vessel for the purpose of keeping the fire under. When the boats were thus filled, those for whom no places could be found became perfectly wild; their shrieks of despair were frightful. Maddened by the increasing heat, they began to cut holes in the deck and to stave the water tanks, containing some 2,200 gallons, notwithstanding the entreaties of the captain, as their existence might depend on the preservation of such water and provisions as were on the deck, for no other could be reached. A thirst for drink and plunder now manifested itself among them, and it required all the energies of the captain and crew to keep them in anything like subjection. At 4 P. M., Captain H. went on board the boat, leaving Mr. Hoxie, two mates and six seamen in charge to keep the engine at work. The boats were all now astern of the ship, and she settling fast. At 12 M., on Tuesday, it was found that more steam than smoke came from below, and the exertions at the pumps were somewhat remitted.

On Wednesday sail was made on the ship, and she ran to the N. W., (the wind being at the time S. E.) hoping that some vessel might be fallen in with. All the boats still in tow. The decks were very hot, and at the hottest places holes were cut, and the hose applied.

Thursday.—The weather was moderate; continued to pump out hot water and pump in cold. The heat of the decks was increasing. Stood to the S. E.—no vessel in sight. A difficulty at this time occurred in the long boat, as it was found too deep to tow with safety. Some were induced to come on board the ship, and sail was then made on the ship for the Western Islands.

Friday, at 12 meridian, a sail was made out from the mast-head, bearing E. S. E., 20 miles. Desponding faces brightened up, and all felt that there was yet hope. But as the burning ship neared the stranger, he did not appear to notice the signals of distress, which were flying from the two mast heads. Despair again prevailed—topsails were lowered, and the chase abandoned. At that moment the stranger appeared to notice the signals, and at once altered his course, furled his topgallant sails and courses, reefed his topsails, and prepared his vessel for any emergency. At 4 the stranger came within hailing distance, and proved to be the British Bark Sarah, of Yarmouth, Nova Scotia, Capt. DAVID COOK.

Owing to the severity of the gale, great difficulty was experienced in transferring the passengers and crew of the burning ship to the bark. But after the most praise-worthy exertions, continued until Sunday P. M., Captain Cook succeeded in rescuing the remaining passengers, 163 in number, and all the crew except six, these last still remaining on board until Tuesday. They at length succeeded in bringing both vessels into Flores, one of the Western Islands, on Wednesday at 7 P. M. The passengers and crew having all been removed by 4½ A. M. of Thursday; the hatches of the ship were raised, and in 20 minutes she was wrapped in flames, and at daylight nothing remained of her. [Courier and Inquirer.

LAKE NICARAGUA.—Lake Nicaragua is described as a magnificent lake, and the scenery on its borders is remarkable for beauty. The banks near the sea are low, and are covered with palms, which look like so many giant plumes. Higher up, the banks are more elevated, "and covered with a dense mass of verdure, coming down like a wall to the very edge of the water. These are the broad leaf plantain, the gigantic cebia, the slender cocoa palm, basides an hundred other strange varieties, twined and bound together with vines, covered with bright flowers, and hanging their long pliant tendrils from every stem. On this mass of impenetrable verdure, which never fades, parrots and noisy macaws glanced in, and our long-necked cranes mounted on the sand-bars; bright green iguanas looked from the overhanging limbs, and queer monkeys hung by their tails and chattered vociferously. The lake Nicaragua is a remarkably fine body of water; nearly as large as lake Ontario. On the north, "are the undulating slopes and grassy hills of Chartales, the paradise of the cattle raisers—on the south, for a long distance, are the rugged hills towards Costa Rica, the abode of the untamed Indians of the fine department of Nicaragua, lately the seat of terrible commotions; the department of Grenada, with its indigo and cocoa estates, and its volcanic peaks. In the midst of the lake rises the regular cone of Ometne, a very fine mountain, and by its side the volcano of Madeira, capped with clouds."

CONVOCATION OF BIRDS.—A large number of swallows and martins, supposed to be between two thousand and three thousand, assembled at six o'clock in the morning, near Plymouth station on the South Devon Railway, and eventually pitched on the upper wire of the electric telegraph. Here they sat side by side, as close as they could stow; the swallows to the westward, and the martins on the east. It was a very calm morning; the birds had their heads facing the rising sun, and all seemed, by their grave deportment and occasional faint chiripings, to be in deep consultation on some important measure. It being necessary to send a message up the line, the station clerk, wholly unconscious of the position of the feathered assemblage, touched the electric wire, and suddenly dissolved the meeting. The swallows and martins jostled and tumbled against each other, and fluttering off their mysterious resting-place, shortly resumed something like order, and quickly flew out of sight.

THE EIDER (Somateria Mollissima.)—Captain Penny, of the Advice, who, much to his honor, had penetrated in search of Sir John Franklin, as far as Navy Board Inlet, in Lancaster Sound, discovered upon landing on one of Wollaston's Islands, in this inlet, some few pairs of these singular birds yet remaining, together with numerous nests, the occupants of which had, without doubt, winged their way southwards. It is always in the most dreary and inhospitable parts of the north that eiders are found in the greatest numbers, and where they may be said to be quite at home—as in Iceland, in the Fern Islands, and in other northerly places, where they serve many important purposes, and the inhabitants would find their comfort much diminished if they were deprived of the eiders. Their beautiful and delicate down is proof against the most severe cold, and, without very serious injury to the birds, a vast quantity of the finest down is procured from them every year. So firm and elastic is this down, that the same quantity which can be compressed and concealed between the two hands, will serve to form a garment, which, while it is hardly the weight of a feather, has more warmth than the finest blanket.

"EXCHANGE."—Passing along one of our streets the other day, we saw written in flaming characters over the door of one of our rum saloons, "The Exchange." Exchange, exchange, thought we, musing, as we wended our way; surely that is a most appropriate name! Here a man can exchange wealth for poverty; health for disease; and an untarnished reputation for the drunkard's notoriety! Here he can exchange the respect and esteem of acquaintances for the hoots and derision of the rabble; the pleasures of social intercourse for the companionship of vagrants; and the delights of a happy fireside for the miseries of the gutter. He can exchange the cheerful countenance, with the impress of intellect, for the bloated face and unmeaning stare; a proud and manly bearing for the drunkard's stagger; comfortable and respectable garments for those soiled and torn; all that is pure, and lofty, and noble in humanity, for all that is foul and groveling and debased. He can exchange a happy home for the drunkard's grave, and the joys of heaven for the miseries of hell. An appropriate name is "Exchange," for all our groggeries, and we recommend its universal adoption.

EXTEMPORE RHYMING.—Bartholemew Willard (called "Barty," for short) was once very well known in the north of Vermont, for his careless, vagabond habits, ready wit, and remarkable facility at extempore rhyming. Sitting one day in a village store, among a crowd of idlers, who always gathered about him on his arrival, the merchant asked Barty why he always wore that schocking bad hat. Barty replied, that it was simply because he was unable to purchase a new one. "Come," said the merchant, "make me a good rhyme on the old one immmediately—without stopping to think—and I'll give you the best castor in the store." Whereupon Barty threw his old hat on the floor, and began:

"There lies my old hat,
  And pray what of that?
'Tis as good as the rest of my raiment!
  If I buy me a better,
    You'll make me your debtor,
  And send me to jail for the payment."

The new hat was adjudged to belong to Barty, who wore it off in great triumph, saying it was but a poor head that couldn't take care of itself.

NATURALIZATION OF FEMALES.—Many women who come from Europe and intend residing permanently in the United States, think, as they cannot expect to vote, there is no use of their becoming naturalized; but this is a very serious mistake. By the law, the property escheats to the State, and it is the duty of the Attorney-General to see that estates which would descend to the wife if she were a citizen, are taken by the State. Previous to the year 1845, public informers could draw one-eighth of the property informed of thus seized, but by change of the law this is no longer the case. It is now left in the power of persons who are at enmity with a widow, thus to inform and have her all taken away. Of course, cases of this kind are few; the widow is usually allowed to enjoy property unmolested, but she cannot make a title to it, and if she attempts to sell, or when she dies, and her heirs dispose of her estate, litigation almost certainly ensues, and on examination, the State seizes the property in dispute. Cases of this kind are constantly occurring; thousands of dollars are thus lost annually, and all women not naturalized should become so at once. [N. Y. Tribune.

LIABILITIES OF MINORS.—Persons under twenty-one years of age are called minors. If a person pretend to be of age, and obtain credit for goods (not necessaries,) and then refuse payment on account of his non-age, the person injured cannot recover the value of his goods, but he may indict him as a cheat. Minors cannot bind themselves by contract for any thing but necessaries for their subsistence, clothing or education. If a minor contract for other things, his contract is void or voidable at his election; but if he choose to affirm it, the other party cannot avoid it. A minor whose parent may have released his claim for his labor or wages, is not thereby enabled to bind himself by his contracts, nor can a parent or guardian authorize him to make contracts by which he will be bound, if he choose to deny them.

WONDERS OF PHILOSOPHY.—The polypus receives new life from the knife which is lifted to it destroy. There are 3041 muscels in a caterpillar. Hook discovered 14,000 mirrors in the eyes of a drone; and to effect the respiration of a carp, 13,000 arteries, vessels, veins, bones, &c., are necessary. The body of every spider contains four little masses pierced with a multitude of imperceptible holes, each hole permitting the passage of a single thread; all the threads, to the amount of 100 to each mass, join together when they come and make thread with which the spider spins its web—so that what we call a spider's thread consists of more than 1000 united. Leuenhoek, by means of a microscope, observed spiders no larger than a grain of sand, who spun threads so fine, it took 4000 of them to equal in magnitude a single hair.

CIVIL ENGINEERS' INSTITUTE.—Among other societies and associations for the collection and diffusion of knowledge important to the public interest, one of the most prominent is that which has recently held its first anniversary as the "New York State Institution of Civil Engineers." An association of the members of this profession was formed in January, 1849, and during the past year has furnished a set of rooms in very appropriate style; laid the foundation of a large and valuable collection of models, maps, books, and geological specimens; issued a volume of transactions; and now commences its second year with a second volume in the press, and an addition to its numbers of some twenty-five members, gentlemen of professional standing deservedly high. The importance of this Profession and the institution that represents it, to the welfare of the State, whether as constructors of its public works, or agents for the development of its private enterprise, is too apparent to need argument. We understand that the trustees of the Institution are about to present a memorial to the Legislature, setting forth the object of its formation, and asking an appropriation to its funds. Their claim is certainly a strong one, and we hope the success which has attended them thus far may continue to crown their efforts, in the consideration of their noble profession and the furtherance of the public weal.

LADY MINERS IN CALIFORNIA.—A young man from Maine, writing to his friends from California, says that his party found, near the Sacramento, and almost thirty miles from any other digging, two intelligent and beautiful young ladies, with no attendant except an old grey-headed negro, whom they had enticed to accompany them, and who is the servant of the father of one of them. The eldest of these girls was not twenty. It seems their imagination had become excited by the gold stories, and they had determined to try their hands at making a fortune. The old negro was past work, and was left in the camp during the day to look after the household affairs, and keep watch, while the girls pursued their mining operations. When the party reached their camp, the old darky was alone in it, but the girls came in during the day, and received their visitors hospitably. They expressed no fear of being molested or robbed, and said that they should leave for home when they had accumulated $10,000; they had already gathered $7,000. They were from Florida, and the youngest ran away from school to enter upon the expedition.

A BEAR TRAP.—At the time of settling the town of Paris, Maine, bears were so very numerous that the first settlers resorted to many expedients to destroy them; among others, the log trap was much used. One Joe Daniels built one some distance from any habitation, and his wife, who was a native of Massachusetts, went to see the trap. She could not in any way be made to understand how bears could be taken in such traps. Joe waxed impatient. "Now s'posing I was a bear, (and down he went on all fours, imitating as near as possible the motions of a bear,) and I should smell the bait, and I should hit the spindle,"—suiting the action to the word; and down came the trap upon old Joe with a weight and force which would have instantly extinguished any bear in the pine State. His wife, after a trial of her strength, was obliged to go a mile and a half to procure assistance; and, strange to say, old Joe was relieved from the trap alive, though somewhat the worse for the experiment.

RIGHT USE OF LEARNING.—The late Rev. Caleb Evans, of Bristol, having once occasion to travel from home, wrote to a poor congregation to say that he should spend a night in their village, and that, if it were agreeable to them, he would give them a sermon. The poor people hesitated for some time, but at length permitted him to preach. After sermon he found them in a far happier mood than when he first came among them, and could not forbear inquiring into the reason of all this. "Why, sir, to tell you the truth," said one of them, "knowing that you were a very learned man, and were a teacher of young ministers, we were much afraid we should not understand you; but you have been quite as plain as any minister we ever had." "Ay, ay," the Doctor replied, "you entirely misunderstood the nature of learning, my friends; its design is to make things so plain that they cannot be misunderstood."

DEAD HORSES.—At the corner of 40th street and 10th Avenue, in the upper part of New York city, is a "Depot for Dead Animals." Here upwards of 50,000 dead horses are manufactured in a year, and many dogs and other animals. They are cut up after being skinned, and thrown into a cauldron and boiled. The hoofs are sold to the glue makers, and the bones sell readily for $12 a ton; the skin is worth $1 25, and the fat is sold to the soap makers. The residue is fed to a large number of hogs, which are kept for the purpose of consuming it. There are six other factories of the kind in the outskirts of the city, though this is the largest. The manufacturers pay from 50 cents to $1 for the carcass of a dead horse.

THE ARCTIC REGIONS.—Sir James Ross narrates some remarkable incidents connected with his recent voyage to the Arctic regions. A bear walked into Captain Ross's party, and surveyed them with cool inquisitiveness; guns were leveled, and the bear was wounded in the head; he scratched his ear, and walked off with an air of superior contempt. Another bear was seen to slide on his haunches down a cliff of seven hundred feet high, steadying himself with his fore paws most "judgmatically," as the sailors said.

On Sir Sidney Smith's invasion of the South American coast, in 1808, the Marquis of Alorna returned the following laconic answer to the enemy, the commander of which asked for safe passage and supplies, wishing at the same time to know if he and his troops would be regarded as friends or enemies:—"We are unable to entertain you as friends, or resist you as enemies."

DeRuyter Institute.

The Academic Year of this Institution for 1849-50 will commence the last Wednesday in August, and continue forty-three consecutive weeks, ending the last Wednesday of June, including a recess of ten days for Christmas and New Year holidays. The Year will be divided into three Terms:

The First, commencing August 29, of 14 weeks.
The Second, " December 5, of 15 "
The Third, " March 20, of 14 "

Encouraged by the success of the School under its present Instructors, the friends of the Institute have made liberal additions to its library, cabinet and apparatus, thus furnishing ample facilities for illustrating branches taught in the various departments.

The Literary Department is as heretofore under the supervision of Rev. JAMES R. IRISH, A. M., President, assisted by other able instructors. In this Department, especial attention is given to the lower English Branches. Students are also fitted in the Classics to enter the advanced classes in College.

The Department of Natural Science is conducted by Professor GURDON EVANS. In this, Natural Philosophy, Astronomy, Geology, Natural History, and Chemistry, are taught in a manner of unsurpassed interest With it is connected the Department of Agricultura Science.

The Farmer's Course is thoroughly scientific; embracing the study of the best authors, with daily recitations. During the Winter Term two hours each day will be spent in the Analytical Laboratory, where students will be instructed in the constitution of soils and ashes of plants, with a minute examination of their constituent elements, and the various modes of testing for their presence.

A course of lectures is given during the Term on Practical Farming, explaining the relation of Geology to Agriculture, the Soil, the Plant, and the Animal, and their various relations, the Rotation of Crops, Feeding Animals, Manures, Draining Lands, &c., &c. For further information see Catalogue.

Besides Globes, Maps, &c., for the illustration of Astronomy, a Newtonian Telescope of high magnifying power has recently been added to the apparatus.

During the Summer Term, Botany and Geology receive special attention, illustrated by excursions to localities where these sciences may be studied as seen in nature. A Geological and Mineralogical Cabinet is accessible to the students.

The Mathematical Department is under the instruction of OLIVER B. IRISH, Tutor. It embraces thorough instruction in Arithmetic, and the higher pure and practical Mathematics, with field exercises in Engineering and Surveying.

Elocution, embracing Reading, Declamation, General Oratory, and Writing, receives the special attention of a competent teacher.

The Teacher's Department will, as formerly, be in operation during the Fall Term, and last half of the Winter Term. Particular attention to this is solicited from all who intend to teach district schools.

The Female Department is under the care of Miss SUSANNA M. COON, a graduate of Troy Female Seminary, a lady every way competent for this responsible station.

No efforts will be spared to render the young ladies of this Seminary truly accomplished, as well in the social relations of life, as in the substantial branches of learning and the higher refinements of education. Ample facilities are furnished for pursuing French, Italian, German, Drawing, Painting, Music on the Piano, and Vocal Music.

Information.

Good board in private families from $1 25 to $1 50. Parents from abroad should furnish their children with very little pocket money, as many temptations may thus be avoided. Those who wish may deposit money with either of the teachers, to be disbursed according to order, without extra charge.

Tuition, to be settled in advance, per term, from $3 00 to $5 00. Extras—For Drawing, $1 00; Monochromatic Painting, $3 00; Oil Painting, $5 00; Chemical Experiments, $1 00; Writing, including Stationery, 50c.; Tuition on Piano, $8 00; Use of Instrument, $2 00; in Agricultural Chemistry, including Chemicals, Apparatus, fires, &c., (breakage extra,) $12 00.

N. B. A daily stage leaves the railroad and canal at Chittenango for this place at 4 o'clock P. M.

NOTES OF A VOYAGE TO CALIFORNIA.—No. 2.

From letters of Dr. J. D. B. STILLMAN to his friends in New York.

RIO JANEIRO, March 15th, 1849.

When I closed my last letters, we had just anchored in the harbor of Rio. Twelve Californian ships were dropping anchor around us, and the excitement was great. Cheer answered cheer from every part, and all doubts about our getting on shore were removed. Palm groves, cocoanut and banana trees, were mingled in the deep green of the tropics. We were almost frantic with delight.

This is an interesting, curious place. The largest liberty is allowed on shore, by special edict of the Emperor, to Americans on their way to California. When we landed, there were over three thousand of us in port, and every place was full, even to the billiard tables; and where we lodged, there were six beds on the floor, and for every such accommodation we were required to pay fifty cents. The currency here is droll enough. For a dinner you will be required to pay a bill somewhat like this: Coffee, 250 reis; Rolls, 160 reis; Omelet, 500 reis. You look at it with horror, and feel yourself a bankrupt. You cannot make him who presents it understand, that you have not so much money in your pocket. He relieves you by putting his fingers in your hand, and, taking out two half dollars, gives you more than two pounds of copper coins, each as large as two of our cents. Then you have the "dumps," for that is what they call them. There is no silver or gold coin in circulation.

There is no society in Brazil—no social sound, no voice of mirth. You will hear, now and then, the broken notes of a guitar or piano, as you wander through the streets; but the rumble of carts, the woful sing-song of the slave, with filed teeth and tattoed face, as he trots along with the bag of coffee or barrel of flour on his head, are nearly all the sounds that greet the ear, except when Majesty issues forth. I asked myself, Why is this—why, in a country where nature has combined her rarest qualities, and varying but endless Spring is blended with Autumn so as hardly to be distinguishable, and Summer and Winter are but as the pledge and fruition of the year, while health sits on every hill-top, and spreads its blessings over all the land? Alas, it is because woman is a slave. She has no intelligence, and consequently no virtue. Jealousy and suspicion enter every and the most sacred relations of life. The husband, on leaving home, locks up his house, and takes the keys into his own safe keeping. Women are not allowed to walk the streets, night nor day. A Brazilian never laughs heartily, never hurrahs, and rarely gets drunk. They like Americans, and wherever you go among them, you will be treated most generously. Gardens and groves, public and private, are alike open to you. You will be invited to enter the houses, and will be treated handsomely, but you will not see females, except they are blacks.

Of the natural scenery of this country, you cannot have an exaggerated description. All that is picturesque in land and water is combined in every possible way. If a population of Americans had possession here, I doubt if the world could produce anything to equal it; but, with the present inhabitants, it will never improve. They are small, sallow, and without energy. They dress with exceeding good taste and with much elegance. They are amazed at the appearance of our people. It is difficult for them to comprehend how one man can fill any situation, and perform that which it takes all classes here to do. We generally employ shore-boats to carry us betwen ship and shore. They are rowed by slaves, and we are often two hours in the passage. Sometimes we take one of the iron boats, and man it with our own men. The gentlemen lay off their coats, and lay to their oars; and, oh, how the people will stare! All business is suspended within sight of the boat, to witness this new display of these universal Yankees. They say, "If these are the emigrants, what a d—l of a nation you must be!"

March 24th.—Yesterday I visited the Empress' Garden. It seems strange to see the finest hot-house plants of the North growing here in immense profusion in the gardens half-cultivated. By the way, the Empress is homely, as are all the women here Color gives no distinction—all are on the same footing, except as master and slave. The maids of honor are all white, but not handsome. By pulling off our hats, and looking respectful, we were admitted to the Palace, day before yesterday. The Emperor and Empress were expected, the guard were waiting with arms resting against the wall in the outer court, and the band were playing loyally, when a sentinel gave a scream like a wild-cat, and then there was hurrying to and fro, and valiant men rushed to arms, and the royal pair descended from the coach, and passing through a file of glittering spears, ascended the stairs to the great hall above, where the maids received their Empress, and His Majesty looked out for himself among the nobles. I have remarked to many here, that he looked like an American; but the reason did not occur to me till now—it is because he is a sovereign.

This morning I saw a great military display. The Emperor and Empress, drawn in their carriage of State, which is truly magnificent, preceded by his body guard of a hundred men, and followed by about one thousand horse, came down the street at a furious rate—ladies of honor in their coaches. I saw a diamond in the sword of the Emperor worth £600,000.

March 30th.—Yesterday we started from the ship, eleven in number, and rowed outside of the bay. We landed on the beach, between two high mountain rocks; it is one of the approaches to the town from the sea, and is fortified by a battery. We were met by a soldier, who would not allow us to pass, and we walked along the beach, picking up shells, flowers, lizzards, &c., when an English soldier told us that no one was permitted to land there, and that we had better be off. We had made the shore in the surf without much difficulty, except the breaking of our rudder from neglecting to unship at the proper time; but to get off was not an easy matter. We shipped a sea that nearly swamped us, and wet us from head to foot, but fortunately cleared the surf before another wave could break over us. We then shaped our course around the "Sugar Loaf," and landed on the shore of Bota-fogo Bay. Here we left our boat in charge of some negroes, and started off on foot along a road lined with orange trees in full fruit, with cottages and gardens at intervals, and now and then a grassy lawn, where were cattle feeding, like those of our own clime. Ruined walls and rocks, overgrown with cactus and twining trees, lined the road for miles. We had supposed the novelty of Rio exhausted, but this as charming. Our own scenery is beautiful, in the freshness of June, and I think of it now with tears, its plain utilitarian features, corresponding with the practical character of our own people; how much of its interest to us lies in association, too, is a question; but for gorgeous display and prodigal profusion of surface and production, nothing can equal the scenery about Rio. On reaching the most elevated portion of the road through the mountains, we passed a massive arch of masonry. It had the appearance of having been built centuries ago. On the side towards the sea, it was pierced for cannon, and contained apartments for working them under cover. It was all overgrown with trees, and dismounted cannon, of very large size, lay scattered about. Here we partook of lunch, and looked down upon the fleet in the rear, and the ocean before us, with its long line of surf, dashing with a roar like thunder. On either side the mountains of solid rock rose among the clouds, bare, except where tall spires of cactus clung to its rough surface, or large lizzards run or basked in the sun. A little way off, perched a tiled cottage, its mud walls peering through the banana and the deep green of the orange trees. As we passed, the family were gathered in a compact group of ten or eleven. We distinguished the head by the mustache. They were gazing with mute curiosity at us as the renowned Americanos do California. The surf at this beach is the heaviest that I ever saw. Storms are almost unknown here; but the south-east trades blowing so constantly, drive a heavy swell from the Indian Ocean on this shore, which is grand. After a refreshing bath, we wandered about the woods, and by the springs from the mountains, till we were lost. We reached the shore of Lake Tagandes; and here, taking Corcovado Peak as our land-mark, a part crossed the Lake in a canoe, and the rest returned by the way we came. We reached our boat before sun-down.

The day before this, three of us took a sail-boat, and two slaves, and went up the bay, landed at San Christova, visited the Emperor's country palace, and returned late at night. We run the guard boats about twelve o'clock.

March 31st.—This letter must be landed this P. M., as we sail in the morning.

A SCENE OF ABSORBING INTEREST.

In the midst of the recent outpouring of the Spirit in Western Virginia, Mr. Cross relates that he retired from one of the meetings to spend the night in a pious family in which a daughter had been recently awakened by reading a religious volume. A theological student, who had been assisting at the meeting, was with them, and being about to leave the family, the little circle united in prayer. "At the close of the prayer," says Mr. Cross, "there was such a scene of the divine presence as I never witnessed. We talked a few minutes of heaven, and prayed again. The young lady soon exclaimed, 'Mother, I have found the Savior.' The mother broke out in ecstacies of joy. In a few minutes another lady, wife of an elder in the church, broke forth in joyful strains, 'I have found peace.' Her attention was first arrested by reading the tract, 'Have me Excused.' In a few minutes more a daughter-in-law exclaimed, 'I have got peace to my soul.' The father of the family who had been absent returned at that moment. His daughter met him before the door, and caught him around the neck and exclaimed, 'Father, I have found Jesus.' Tears of joy flowed down the cheeks of the pious father, but his soul was too full to utter a word for some time. An old mother in Israel, a relative, walked to and fro through the parlor and exclaimed, 'Mr. C——, is this heaven?' She had a large number of servants. She asked me to speak to them. A room was soon filled with them, and the young brother and myself each addressed them. One of them soon praised God in ecstacies of joy, and many of them were deeply concerned. The scene had some faint resemblance to the day of Pentecost. The joy of that pious family, none but the real child of God and angels could imagine."

PERSEVERANCE.

A swallow in the spring,
Came to our granary, and 'neath the eaves
Essayed to make a nest, and there did bring Wet earth, and straw, and leaves.

Day after day she toiled
With patient heart; but ere her work was crowned,
Some sad mishap the tiny fabric spoiled,
And dashed it to the ground.

She found the ruin wrought,
But, not cast down, forth from the place she flew,
And, with her mate, fresh earth and grasses brought,
And built her nest anew.

But scarcely had she placed
The last soft feather on its ample floor,
When wicked hand, or chance, again laid waste,
And wrought the ruin o'er.

But still her heart she kept,
And toiled again; and last night, hearing calls,
I looked, and lo! three little swallows slept
Within the earth-made walls.

What truth is here, O man!
Hath hope been smitten in its early dawn?
Have clouds o'ercast thy purpose, trust, or plan?
Have FAITH and struggle on. [Nat. Intel.

INDIAN COUNCIL EXTRAORDINARY.

From the Syracuse Journal.

From time immemorial, the Iroquis nations have had their stated seasons for convoking the tribes of the several cantons. On these occasions, thanksgivings, offerings, and sacrifices, are freely offered to the Great Spirit, as an acknowledgment of his special kindness and guardian care, to appease his wrath when he has been offended, to conciliate his favor for the future, that He may cause the corn to grow luxuriantly, the streams to be well stocked with fish, and the woods to abound with game. During these festivals the good are reminded of their duty to persevere in the way of well-doing, and the unruly of their obligations to reform. The hunter is made bold for the chase, and the warrior valiant for battle.

During the past fortnight there have been held daily, at the Onondago Castle, a series of Indian Councils, preparatory to the commencement of the New Year. On Friday last was celebrated the annual and important rite of sacrificing the "White Dog." The customary victim was immolated on the flaming altar, with all the formality and circumstances of ancient usage among the Iroquis, in presence of a pagan portion of the nation, and numerous white persons spectators. On Tuesday last, this crowning festival of the Indian year, after a continuance of nine days, was closed with the exciting and wonderful ceremony of the "War Dance." These observances are continued in the midst of a Christian community with all the reverence, solemnity and zeal of ancient times, with a punctuality and devotion which shows the regard these people have for the institutions of their fathers, and with what tenacity they still cling to their ancient customs.

At this great festival, in grand council, all vacancies are filled which have occurred during the year among the Chiefs and Sachems of the nation, and the new incumbents on these occasions are inducted into office and installed with all the ceremony of aboriginal etiquette, as practiced in olden time.

At this season it is customary and appropriate to adopt and initiate individuals of other nations, and occasionally white people, to the Onondaga nation, and consort them with particular families, clans and tribes. On this occasion, while the sires and sages of the nation were convened in solemn council, according to ancient usage, and in consideration of the high estimation in which he has for a long time been held by the Onondaga nation, J.V. H. Clark, Esq., of Manlius, was adopted and initiated as a tribe Onondaga, and most cordially affiliated with the "Wolf Tribe" of that nation, to be forever hereafter known throughout all the six nations by the name, Fy-yah-da Koe-nah-has, (the red man's friend and defender) and to be everywhere accepted as a brother, a counsellor and warrior.

In these days it is a circumstance of rare occurrence, to adopt and initiate a white person among the Onondagas, and is only admissible in cases where the individual has done the nation some distinguished service, or has in some way become honorably conspicuous among them.

At a subsequent council and more advanced stage of the proceedings at the Council-house, the same individual was elected as honorary Sachem of the Onondaga Nation, and was duly invested with the rights and privileges of native incumbents.

It may be worthy of remark, that more than 200 years have passed away since Christianity was first introduced among the Onondaga Indians. The French, Dutch, English and Anglo-Americans have established what have been termed "prosperous Missions" among them. With what success present practices most clearly indicate. For more than 100 years the French were predominant. For a period of more than half that time the English prevailed in all that pertained to trade, diplomacy and political influence.

Since the close of the American Revolution, the United States and the State of New York have had the perishing remnant of the Iroquois under their influence, protection and control. Still they are in many respects an independent people, speaking their own peculiar language, governed by their own laws, and adhering with unyielding pertinacity to their primitive customs.

JOSEPH'S WELL AT CAIRO.

The most remarkable well ever made by man, is Joseph's well at Cairo. Its magnitude, and the skill displayed in its construction, which is perfectly unique, have never been surpassed. All travelers have spoken of it with admiration.

This stupendous well is an oblong square, twenty-four feet by eighteen; being sufficiently capacious to admit within its mouth a moderate-sized house. It is excavated (of these dimensions) through solid rock, to the depth of one hundred and sixty-five feet, where it is enlarged into a capacious chamber, in the bottom of which is formed a basin or reservoir to receive the water raised from below, (for this chamber is not at the bottom of the well.) On one side of the reservoir another shaft is continued one hundred and thirty feet lower, where it emerges through the rock into a bed of gravel, in which the water is found. The whole depth being two hundred and ninety-seven feet. The lower shaft is not in the same vertical line with the upper one, nor is it so large, being fifteen feet by nine. As the water is first raised into the basin, by means of machinery propelled by horses or oxen within the chamber, it may be asked, how are these animals conveyed to that depth in this tremendous pit, and by what means do they ascend? It is the solution of this problem that renders Joseph's Well so peculiarly interesting, and which indicates an advanced state of the arts, at the period of its construction.

A spiral passage-way is cut through the rock, from the surface of the ground to the chamber, independent of the well, round which it winds with so gentle a descent, that persons sometimes ride up or down upon asses or mules. It is six feet four inches wide, and seven feet two inches high. Between it and the interior of the well, a wall of rock is left to prevent persons from falling into, or even looking down it, (which in some cases would be equally fatal,) except through certain openings or windows, by means of which it is faintly lighted from the interior of the well; by this passage the animals descend, which drive the machinery that raises the water from the lower shaft into the reservoir or basin, from which it is again elevated by similar machinery, by other oxen on the surface of the ground. In the lower shaft a path is also cut down to the water; but as no partition is left between it and the well, it is extremely perilous for strangers to descend.

This celebrated production of former times resembles an enormous hollow screw, the centre of which forms the well and the threads a winding staircase round it. To erect of granite a flight of geometrical or well stairs, two or three hundred feet high, on the surface of the ground, would require extraordinary skill; although in the execution every aid from rules, measures, and the light of day, would guide the workmen at every step; but to begin such a work at the top, and construct it downward by excavation alone in the dark bowels of the earth, is a more arduous undertaking, especially as deviations from the correct lines could not be remedied; yet, in Joseph's Well, the partition of rock between the pit and the passage way, and the uniform inclination of the latter, seems to have been ascertained with equal precision, as if the whole had been constructed of cut stone on the surface. Was the pit or the passage formed first? Or were they simultaneously carried on, and the excavated masses from both bore up the latter?

The extreme thinness of the partition wall excited the astonishment of M. Jonark, whose account of the well is inserted in the second volume of memoirs in Napoleon's great work on Egypt, part 3d, p. 691. It is, according to him, but sixteen centimers thick (about six inches!) He justly remarks, that it must have required singular care to leave and preserve so small a portion while excavating the rock from both sides of it. It would seem no stronger in proportion than sheets of paste-board placed on edge, to support one end of the stair of a modern built house, for it should be borne in mind that the massive roof of the spiral passage next the well has nothing but this film of rock to support it, or to prevent such portions from falling as are loosened by fissures or such as, from changes in the direction of the strata, are not firmly united to the general mass. But this is not all; thus insufficient as it may seem, the bold designer has pierced it through its whole extent with semicircular openings, to admit light from the well.

Opinions respecting the date of this well are exceedingly various. Pocock thought it was built by a visier named Joseph, eight hundred years ago; other authorities more generally attribute it to Salidad, the intrepid defender of his country against the hordes of European savages, who, under the name of crusaders, spread rapine and carnage through his land. His name was Yusef (Joseph.) By the common people of Egypt it has long been ascribed to the patriarch of that name, and their traditions are often well founded. Van Sleb, who visited Egypt several times in the 17th century, says some of the people in his time thought it was digged by spirits, and he adds, "I am almost inclined to believe it, for I cannot conceive how man can compass so wonderful a work."

MY YOUNGEST.

BY REV. DANIEL SHARP, D. D.

They say my youngest is a pet,
And has too much her way;
It can't be so, I think, and yet
I would not dare say nay.

For, if my memory serve me right,
And truth must be confessed,
Each youngest that has blest my sight
Has seemed to be loved best.

Thus one by one has shared the love
Of a fond father's heart;
The youngest tenderer thoughts could move,
Than those who had the start.

The oldest was to me most dear—
So was the next—so all;
The youngest came my age to cheer—
On her my love did fall.

'T is not that she is loved the most,
But she is loved the last,
The youngest may my fondness boast,
But so could all the past.

My youngest, then, is not a pet,
More than each child before;
I think so, certainly—and yet
They say I love her more.

THOMAS PAINE.

In New York, on the evening of January 29th, the admirers of Thomas Paine celebrated the 113th anniversary of his birth, by a ball and supper. The editor of the N. Y. Tribune, in acknowledging the receipt of an invitation card, gives the following sketch of Paine's life and death:—

Thomas Paine was born in Thetford, England, in 1737, of a Quaker father and a Church-of-England mother. He says he was an infidel from his seventh year. He was twice married; his first wife died within a year; the second parted from him very soon after marriage. He tried several different pursuits, but was not successful in any; so in 1774 he migrated to this country. He soon plunged into the midst of the Revolutionary ferment, and rendered signal service to the American cause by his pamphlets entitled 'Common Sense' and the 'Crisis,' the latter issued at intervals throughout the war. In 1780 he went to France with Col. Laurens, who was sent out to negotiate a loan, returning with him the next year. He had previously been a Secretary of Congress, and dismissed for violating the secrets confided to him as such; but he was fairly paid in one way or another for his Revolutionary writings. After the peace he went to England, where he was prosecuted for seditious writings; fleeing thence to France, where he was chosen a member of the National Assembly; thence prosecuted by the Terrorists, imprisoned, and all but executed. Liberated on the fall of Robespierre, he lingered in poverty and obscurity at Paris till 1802, when Mr. Jefferson, then President, had him brought to this country in a national vessel. A woman, who was not his wife, but another man's, accompanied or followed him. His reception by Jefferson was not such as in his own opinion he merited, and though he wrote, as formerly, on the side of the Jeffersonian party, his writings were no longer seized, perhaps because no longer needed. He was not complimented with office—perhaps his habits (which had grown gradually worse) did not allow it—and he lingered in comparative obscurity, some times in this city, but mainly on a farm at New Rochelle, which our State had given him, until 1809, when he died almost unattended. His remains were buried at New Rochelle, but his bones were dug up by Cobbett, ten years afterward, and taken to England—a foolish as well as culpable adventure, whereof the only reward was contempt. Such was the life and death of Thomas Paine.

IRISH PRESBYTERIANS.

A bold project has been started in a pamphlet addressed to the Rev. Dr. Cooke, of Belfast. It assumes that the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church in Ireland has reached a crisis in its financial affairs, and suggests a way to meet the exigency. The plan proposed is to reject the aid heretofore rendered by Government, and establish a system of self-support on the plan of the Free Church of Scotland. The minimum number of adherents of the Assembly is put at 500,000, who raise of themselves, and obtain from Government, about $300,000 for the annual support of 500 ministers in Ireland, and 11 missionaries among the Jews and the heathen. The writer proposes an Association based on the principles of total abstinence from all intoxicating drink and tobacco, and makes some curious calculations. In 1847, the year of famine, 651,147,409 gallons of rum, whiskey, brandy, beer, &c., were consumed in Great Britain and Ireland, at a cost of about $332,144,305. Taking the population of the United Kingdom at 27,000,000, the average expense to each individval would be £2 8s 10d. On this basis, after allowing for the fact that the English drink more ale than the Irish, £2, or $10 is the average assigned for each of the 500,000 adherents of the Assembly. The total annual expenditure for intoxicating drinks, therefore, is put at $50,00,000. This, says the writer, would enable the Assembly to support annually 2,000 ministers in Ireland, at salaries of $1,000 each; 2,000 schoolmasters, at $250 each; 800 missionaries to the Jews, to the colonies, and to the heathen, at $1,500 each, and to build, in ten years, 2,000 school-houses, 1,500 meeting-houses, and 4 colleges. In view of these things, the British Banner asks: "What say our Presbyterian friends? Is not the matter very clearly put?" That paper thinks the glories of Father Mathew are, in a great measure, fictitious, as, if the Bible be kept back, while the whiskey bottle is withdrawn, there can be but little advance, intellectual or moral. It likes the plan of total abstinence proposed by the pamphlet writer. "The idea," it says, "of a great community giving up the use of intoxicating drinks, simply for the sake of the gospel, is transcendently grand." It calls on Dr. Cooke to take the lead in the path now before him to immortal fame.

ADVICE IN TIME.

One night, in the autumn of 184–, there was great agitation among the inmates of a mansion in one of the Southern States. It was whispered from servant to servant, that their master could not live. In one of the apartments, surrounded by those comforts which wealth affords, and watched by the sleepless eye of a tender and loving wife, lay the sick man. He was not far advanced in life, and but two or three years had elapsed since he had left the halls of one of the most venerable institutions of learning in the land. In circumstances that placed him above want, he engaged not in the active duties of the legal profession, but passed his days in social intercourse with the friends of his youth. They looked upon him as a happy man, and dreamed not that he could be a mark, at which the archer, Death, was about to shoot.

In the wisdom of God, this youth had been stricken with a fever. For days he had been decreasing in strength, and near relatives began to gather in anxiety around the couch. Among others, stood the father. He had been a kind parent, in the worldly sense. He had furnished this, his first born son, with all the money he desired, and encouraged him in all the fashionable dissipation of the day, but neither cared himself, nor taught his son to care, for the God who made them, and gave them everything they possessed. As he listened to the remorseless cries of his death-stricken son, his heart was ready to burst with grief. With the hope of soothing his departure from this world, he bent over the body of his boy, and said: "My son, put your trust in God!" The advice was good, but it came too late. The sufferer, in despair, exclaimed: "Father, you never told me that before!" And soon the pulse of life ceased to beat.

OBEDIENCE THE GREATEST TEST OF PIETY.

The Bible assigns peculiar importance to the test of religious character which is furnished in obedience. God knows the blindness of the human heart, and the strong exposure of men to self-deception. He has therefore provided that the reality of those dispositions we profess to cherish toward him, shall be evinced by corresponding conduct. Do you inquire, who are the friends of Christ? He himself replies, "Ye are my friends if ye do whatsoever I command you." Do you ask, who are those that love the Redeemer? His answer is, "He that loveth me, keepeth my commandments." Do you ask, how shall we know that we possess a saving knowledge of him? "Hereby do we know that we know him, if we keep his commandments." Would we know the evidence of hostility to Christ? "He that loveth me not, keepeth not my sayings." Would we know who are they that are deceived or deceivers? "He that saith he knoweth him, and keepeth not his commandments, is a liar, and the truth is not in him." Would we trace out the grand line of demarcation between saints and sinners? "In this the children of God are manifest, and the children of the devil—he that doeth not righteousness, is not of God." Would we know what will be the grand and universal rule of trial at the final day? "Without respect of persons, the Father will judge every man according to his works." From beginning to end—from first to last, the great test of character is, "By their fruits shall ye know them."

A YEAR GONE.

In whatever way we consider the subtraction of one year from our whole allotment, it is an important circumstance. It reduces to a narrow space the uncertainty of life's continuance. At the beginning we might, for anything that could be known, live but one or a few years; yet we might live fifty, sixty, or seventy years. But now, as to many of us, there is no such wide range of life. It brings us nearer to see what we are likely to be at the end and after the end. It has increased the religious danger, if there be danger. It tells us of too much, that now can never be done. It has added very greatly to the weight of every consideration that ought to impel us to make the most of what may remain. The year departed may admonish us of the strange deceptiveness, the stealthiness of the flight of time. There have been a prodigious number of minutes and hours to look forward to, and each hour at the time did not seem to go so wonderfully fast; and yet how short a while they now seem to have been, in all vanishing away! It will be so in what is to come. Each day will beguile us with this deception, if we are not vigilant; and will leave us, still to be done, that which it should have done. Therefore every period and portion of it—the ensuing year, and each part of it—should be entered upon with emphatically imploring our God to save us from spending it in vain! [John Foster.

A QUEEN'S DYING WORDS.

"I die in all humility, knowing well that we are all alike before the throne of God, and I request, therefore, that my mortal remains be conveyed to the grave without any pomp or state. They are to be moved to St. George's Chapel, Windsor, where I request to have as private and quiet a funeral as possible. I particularly desire not to be laid out in state, and the funeral to take place by daylight, no procession, the coffin to be carried by sailors to the chapel. All those of my friends and relations, to a limited number, who wish to attend, may do so. My nephew, Prince Edward of Saxe Weimar, Lords Howe and Denbigh, the Hon. Wm. Ashley, Mr. Wood, Sir Andrew Barnard, and Sir D. Davies, with my dressers, and those of my ladies who may wish to attend. I die in peace, and wish to be carried to the tomb in peace, and free from the vanities and the pomp of this world. I request not to be dissected nor embalmed, and desire to give as little trouble as possible.

The Sabbath Recorder.

New York, February 7, 1850.

SABBATH TRAVELING.

This is another evil which needs to be corrected. We do not know whether it obtains very extensively among us; we rather suppose it does not. We sometimes hear of a Sabbatarian making his arrival in our city early on Sabbath morning. He left Boston, or Albany, the evening before, and, by traveling all night, was landed here about sunrise. Sometimes we hear of one leaving New York for home before the Sabbath is quite gone. Bound for some point up the Hudson, or for the Eastern States, he embarks upon one of our steamers, about five o'clock, and thus occupies an hour or two of holy time in getting a good start on his journey. When we have heard of such cases, we have hoped, for the credit of the cause, that none of their fellow travelers recognized them. But whether they did or not, there was One who saw them, and said, "How long refuse ye to keep my commandments and my laws?" Let us consider some of the apologies, which are offered for this profanation.

One says, "My business would not permit me to leave home earlier in the week, and I was, consequently, obliged to spend part of the Sabbath in getting to my place of destination." Why, then, did you not put off your journey till the next week? But that would have subjected you to some pecuniary loss, it may be. If a man can secure himself against loss without being dishonest, he has a perfect right to do so. But he has no right to rob another for the sake of securing himself. Did it never occur to you, that you are guilty of robbing God, when you take His time to do your work? You rob Him of that obedienee to his law, which is his rightful due. You rob Him of that revenue of praise, which your steadfast obedience would bring to Him. He is defrauded of the glory which would redound to Him from your example. And all to save your pocket. Now this is downright dishonesty, and God will so regard it in the great day of reckoning. We put it to you, solemnly, that you have no right to save money, or to accumulate except so far as you can do so without violating God's commands. If rigid obedience render you poor, make up your mind to be poor. You cannot be reduced lower than He was, who "became poor for your sake." It is not likely, that you would be reduced to absolute starvation; for He hath said, "I will never leave thee, nor forsake thee." You are a pilgrim, at His bidding, for the heavenly Canaan, and your traveling expenses are sure, if nothing more. His word is pledged for it. You may not be able to ride, it is true, but take your staff, and travel on, and "as thy day is, so shall thy strength be." But even were you called to starve, would that be worse than what many of Christ's people have had to undergo for his sake? Would it be worse than being shut up in a gloomy prison, and at last broken upon the wheel, or burnt at the stake? It would be but death, at any rate; and what if it should be necessary to lose your life for the truth's sake? "Do not talk to me of being poor," said the eminent Dr. Gill, to one who advised him not to preach what he believed to be God's truth, lest it should offend his supporters, "I am not afraid to be poor." Whether, in the long run, rigid obedience would be attended with pecuniary loss, we shall not undertake to say. But we do say, that when one begins to calculate the extent of moral obligation by dollars and cents, he gives but a miserable proof of knowing anything about "the love of God shed abroad in the heart."

Another apologizes after this manner: "I left home, calculating to reach my destination on Sixth-day afternoon; but on my arrival at Albany, I was a few minutes too late for the morning boat, and I was therefore driven to the necessity of occupying a portion of the Sabbath to finish my journey." But why did you not stay in Albany till the Sabbath was past? If your detention was providential, it is a conclusive proof that God intended you to remain there; and your coming away is, therefore, a double disobedience. Perhaps He had some important object to accomplish by you there. Perhaps he detained you, on purpose that you might give your testimony in that place to His holy institution. Or, perhaps he intended to hinder you from accomplishing that which might eventually be to your injury, and to the injury of His cause. Yet you rebelled against the leadings of His providence, and against His express command. But it is not unlikely that there was something wrong in your first starting on the journey. You knew, or ought to have known, that detentions were among the ordinary misfortunes of traveling. You ought, therefore, to have made some allowance for them. You ought not to have started so late in the week, that you could not have accomplished your journey even if you were detained; and you would not have done so, if you were in the habit of shaping your calculations with reference to the Sabbath, as much as you are with reference to your own business. It is only because you seek first the advantage of your own little self, instead of seeking first the kingdom of God, that you fall into such mistakes. Our advice is, to start so that you will have a day to spare, unless some imperious necessity hinder. At all events, if you cannot finish your journey before the Sabbath, stop where it overtakes you, and rest according to the commandment. Give substantial proof that you love God's law better than you do your worldly interest or comfort.

A third excuses himself in this way: "I have finished all my business in the city, and I am anxious to get home. I have rested the greater part of the Sabbath, and there are but two or three hours remaining. The boat is just about leaving, and if I do not embrace this opportunity, I shall be detained two days longer, for there is no conveyance on Sunday." Rather a hard case, some might think; but let us examine it. If you do leave by this tempting opportunity, you may, it is true, escape observation here where you are not known, but when you get home, where you are well known, it is understood by all your neighbors, that you took a portion of God's time to do your traveling. Your example, therefore, goes to encourage Sabbath-breaking. If there is any one of your neighbors who inclines to find his own pleasure on God's holy day, he will be sure to plead your example; especially, if you are a deacon, or a prominent man in the church. If there is any one of them who is an enemy of the Sabbath, and is inclined to avail himself of the delinquencies of its professed friends to heap reproach upon it, he will be sure to seize upon what you have done. If there is any one of them laboring under a conviction of its claims upon his regard, but waiting to see some proof of its sanctifying influence upon those who do keep it before yielding the point, the devil will be sure to send him to you; and you will soon have the satisfaction of seeing him settle down contentedly in the observance of Sunday. He does not see that it makes a bit of difference. Now, suppose that instead of yielding to the temptation to leave the city before the Sabbath is ended, you conclude to stay, and the unavoidable consequence is, that you are detained two days instead of one—what will be the loss? Why, your labor at home would, perhaps, bring you a clear profit of ten dollars. Add to this, say five dollars for your expenses in the city. Your actual loss, then, is fifteen dollars. And do you think that this is too much to lose in the cause of God? It is now a question of dollars and cents. Will you sell the sanctity of the Sabbath for fifteen dollars? Is God's law a commodity of barter and sale? Simon was denounced as worthy of perdition, because he thought to purchase the gift of God with money. Acts 8: 20. How much better is he, who thinks to sell it for money? If we understand the wise man, truth is not to be sold at any price. Prov. 23: 23.

A fourth thinks, he "can enjoy himself quite as well in traveling along quietly, as he could if he were to remain in the city, or at some public house where the Sabbath is not regarded." If he can, he is to be pitied. A man who can enjoy himself just as well in an act of disobedience, as in obeying the voice of the Lord, must have such a searedness of conscience, as justly entitles him to the pity of all who can weep over dead souls. His brethren ought to make him a subject of special prayer. Enjoy himself in the act of breaking God's law? Miserable delusion! That his position, where he would be obliged to spend the Sabbath, would not be the most comfortable, we can very well imagine. But we suppose, that a Christian is not to make his own enjoyment the end of all religion. His great object—that which should take precedence of every other—should be the glory of God. Freedom from annoyance, when attempting to serve Him, is not always to be expected.

If any of our readers are disposed to think our notions too rigid, in regard to the manner in which the Sabbath ought to be observed, we commend to their careful perusal the following extract. It shows what reverence the Scotch cherish for that which they call the Sabbath. Their example might be very profitably imitated by us. It is a burning shame that we, who have the true Bible Sabbath, should have so little reverence for it—"holding the truth in unrighteousness."

From the Christian Observor.

THE SABBATH IN SCOTLAND TWENTY YEARS AGO.

BY A NATIVE OF EDINBURG.

In order to encroach as little as possible on the duties of the Sabbath by worldly avocations, it was customary, both in the city and country, to improve Saturday as a preparation day—to do every thing, so that on the Sabbath all servile labor, except works of necessity and mercy might be omitted. On Saturday evening the dinner for the Sabbath day was made ready—the water vessels were filled—the interior of the house cleansed—boots and shoes all cleaned—fathers and young men all shaved and washed. Last, not least, family worship before retiring to rest, was a very general practice.

Sabbath morning, as soon as convenient, all the members of the family assembled for family worship. The next thing was breakfast; then all who had attained to a proper age, prepared to attend the church or meeting-house.

On returning from Church, the food prepared on Saturday was served up for dinner. A blessing was invoked from the Giver of all good, and all partook of the simple fare. Dinner over, and thanks returned, the members of the family were kept together; some to read their Bible, or other religious books.

The father, or head of the family, allotted to the younger members their various tasks for the afternoon and evening. So many verses of the Bible were to be committed to memory; so many verses of the Psalms of David; so many questions and answers of the Shorter and proof Catechisms. Thus employed, they werekept within doors, and, not allowed to roam a bout the fields or streets learning mischief.

After sunset, the family was again called together, every one with a Bible, and moral chapters were read "verse about," as it was called, with some remarks of observation by the head of the family. Next the young ones were called up to repeat their tasks in the hearing of the older branches of the family. This done, a family circle was formed, and the questions of the Shorter Catechism from beginning to end were asked, and the answers repeated by the family class thus formed. Then the simple supper and the family worship closed the duties of the day. Such was the general way of spending the Sabbath in my younger days by all classes of community; by wealthy farmers who had men servants and maid servants, by ploughmen and carters, and by mechanics who had journeymen and apprentices under their care.

> That makes her loved at home, revered abroad;
> Princes and lords are but the breath of kings;
> An honest man's the noblest work of God."

DISSOLUTION OF THE UNION.

There is no reason to doubt, that a formidable number of Southern politicians are now conspiring to bring about a dissolution of the Union, and so to secure a slave-holding Empire stretching from the Susquehanna to the Rio Grande. In the Senate, it is said, there are eight Southern members, and in the House of Representatives thirty Southern members, who are organized as disunionists, and opposed to any compromise whatever looking to a perpetuity of the Union. Of course the occasion for such a movement is found in the progress of free principles at the North, and the manifest determination of Northern politicians not to consent to the extension of human slavery. In justification of the extreme measures proposed, the representatives of the South maintain, that their constitutional rights are infringed by the State Laws or the decisions of State Courts which operate to prevent the reclamation of fugitive slaves, and that they are likely to be still farther infringed by the application of the Wilmot Proviso to the new territory over which Congress alono has power to legislate. Some politicians believe that the Slave States are on the point of tendering to the Free States the choice, to recede from the efforts to exclude slavery from the territories, or meet the consequences of a dissolution of the Union. Others believe that a dissolution is determided upon in any case, and that the leaders are only waiting for a favorable opportunity to announce this determination. Whatever course may be pursued by these men at Washington, it is evident that a crisis is at hand. Meanwhile, the action of the Convention of Slave States, which is to be held at Nashville on the 1st day of June, is looked for with increasing interest. It is most devoutly to be hoped, that the North will stand firm to its principles, and fearlessly wait the developments which are at hand.

MISSIONARY REPORT.

Although I have not been particularly instructed to make a report of my missionary labors through the medium of the Recorder, still I have thought it might be interesting to the denomination to know something of what I am doing, and what are my prospects.

I reached Lost Creek in the early part of December, and received from my brethren a most cordial welcome to this field of labor. I was with the church at Lost Creek on the first and also on the second Sabbath in December. The brethren were ready to counsel and coöperate with me in accomplishing the objects of my mission. A plan of labor was adopted, making it necessary for me to preach equal to nearly every day in the week, demanding several hundred miles of journeying on horseback, and requiring more than two months time to accomplish it.

Leaving Lost Creek, I was with the church in Salem on the third Sabbath in December, and preached for them on the Sabbath and on First-day. On Second-day I proceeded to Green Brier Settlement, and in the evening preached at the house of Bro. Wm. F. Randolph. On that occasion, one of his sons, about fourteen years of age, wept, nearly all the time I was preaching. After sermon, and before the meeting was closed, he arose, and expressed that he felt himself a great sinner, and desired the prayers of Christians. Special prayer was made on his behalf. At the close of the meeting he expressed to me the hope, that God hed heard his prayer and forgiven his sins. The next morning I conversed with a brother older, and two younger, than the one just referred to, who appeared deeply anxious to secure the salvation of their souls. From what I witnessed while with that family, I was led to thank the Lord and take courage.

Having an appointment to preach on Third-day evening at the residence of Bro. George Davis, in the neighborhood of the Middle Island Church, I went to meet that appointment. A respectable congregation convened, and listened to the discourse with attention and apparent seriousness. I preached on Fourth-day at the school-house in the same neighborhood; also at the same place on Fourth-day and Fifth-day evenings. We had a refreshing season. The brethren were revived, and greatly encouraged, whilst a number of the unconverted were in tears, and earnestly desired the people of God to pray for them. The spirit of the Lord was evidently in our midst, working effectually in the hearts of many.

I left this neighborhood on Sixth-day, and proceeded through a wilderness country to the residence of Dea. Lodowick H. Davis, and preached at his house on Sabbath evening. On Sabbath morning I went to Salem, a distance of six miles, and preached there on the Sabbath, and on First-day. Having been with the Salem and Middle Island Churches about ten days, I returned to Lost Creek, and was with the church there on the first Sabbath in January.

During the following week, I went to Fayette Co., Pa., nearly eighty miles distant from Lost Creek, for the purpose of visiting the few brethren in that region, who are remaining as members of the Woodbridgetown Church. While on my way to that region of country, I stopped in Bridgeport, and preached for the Baptists on Second-day evening. On the next day I journeyed some twenty-six miles, and put up with a First-day Baptist brother, with whom I formed an acquaintance six years ago, when in this country, at which time he and his wife appeared to be fully convinced that the seventh-day was the Sabbath, and ought to be kept. They remain of the same opinion, but have not had strength to come out and keep it. They desired me, when I returned from Fayette Co., to stop and preach at their meeting house on the subject of the Sabbath. I have been furnished with satisfactory evidence that my labors were not in vain when in this country six years ago. A Baptist minister tells me, that he has recently been informed that one half of the members of the church which I visited, and called their attention to the subject of the Sabbath, furnishing them with our publications, were at that time ready to come over and keep the seventh day for the Sabbath, if he had resolved to do it. Whether he did right, or not, he could not tell. But the problem was easily solved in my mind. Circumstances like these ought to encourage us to go forward in the work of Sabbath reform with moie diligence and in the exercise of more faith.

Passing on, I reached Morgantown on Fourth-day. A desire being expressed that I would preach on the subject of the Sabbath in that village, I consented to do so, and on my return from 'Fayette Co., I deliuered a discourse on that subject, at the Court House, to a very attentive congregation,

My stay in the neighborhood of brother Daniel David was short. My visit was agreeable, and I trust my labors not in vain. I preached three times at the school house in the neighborhood. On First-day morning I preached on the subject of the Sabbath.

Returning to Lost Creek, we commenced a protracted meeting in that place on the third Sabbath in January. Our meeting was very interesting. Sinners were made to feel their lost and ruined condition, and in the bitterness of their souls to cry to God for mercy. Several rejoiced in the hope that they had during the meeting experienced the pardoning mercy of God. Last Sabbath I had the happiness of baptizing five willing converts, who were added to the church, and who, I trust, will go on their way rejoicing. On First-day, which closed the protracted meeting, I preached on the subject of the Sabbhth, to a numerous and attentive congregation.

Leaving Lost Creek, I arrived at this place last evening. AZOR ESTEE.

THE FREE BIBLE PRESS IN ENGLAND.

Much interest has recently been excited in the churches of Great Britain by an appeal issued from Bristol, proposing to raise, by general contribution, a Testimonial Fund for Dr. Adam Thompson, the originator of the "Free Bible Press," at Cold Stream, Scotland. The following historical sketch of that institution, which we copy from the Independent, will give an idea of the change which has taken place within a few years, and of the merits of those through whose instrumentality this change was wrought:—

From the time of Henry VIII. till the year 1839, the printing of Bibles had been a close monopoly in the hands of the King's printers of London and Edinburgh, and the two Universities of England and no other person could print the common version. They charged their own pricus, and their profits became exorbitant by the operation of the Bible Society.

In 1837, Dr. Thompson took the lead in a movement, which brought the subject before Parliament, and finally led to the abolition of the monopoly in Scotland. To secure to the public all the benefit of this triumph, Dr. T. and his family invested all their property in the enterprise of printing cheap Bibles at Cold Stream. This has worked a great reduction of prices. The brevier or minion Testament, which in 1840 sold in sheets for 1*s*., was invoiced in 1849 at 5*d*, and the minion Bible was reduced from 4*s*. to 2*s*., in sheets. A great increase in circulation has followed. In two years ending April, 1836, the British and Foreign Bible Society issued 791,668 Bibles and Testaments; in the two years ending April, 1846, the issues were 2,214,011. More Bibles were printed in Scotland in 1846 than in all Great Britain in 1833. In 1845, the Cold Stream Press printed more than were printed in all England in 1832. An immense saving of money has also been made to the public. The saving to the British and Foreign Bible Society in one year cannot be less than one hundred and fifty thousand pounds. The saving to the public the first three years was over HALF A MILLION POUNDS STERLING.

Yet the Bible Society never patronized the Cold Stream Press. Being in the hands of the aristocracy, it would not do to give its countenance to free trade, even in giving free circulation to the Word of God. And they carried this deference to monopoly so far as actually to sell their Bibles at a loss, sinking £14,000 in six months, while paying the monopolists their full price—making up their loss out of the free contributions of the people!

The Free Bible Press had no charity fund to fall back upon; and at a moment when their stock of Bibles was very heavy, the monopolists came down with their prices, and thus crushed the obnoxious concern at Cold Stream, and overwhelmed the good Doctor and his family in utter bankruptcy.

VAGRANT CHILDREN IN NEW YORK.

The recent report of the Chief of Police relative to vagrant children in New York, seems to have made a deep impression upon the public mind, and convinced those in authority that something ought to be done, and that speedily. The Officers of the House of Refuge have memorialized the Common Council for permission to enlarge and improve their accommodations, so as to make the institution what it was originally designed to be—a School of Reformation. They express the opinion, that at least one thousand of the three thousand neglected children in this city, might be brought within the walls of a House of Refuge, and trained up in a school of reform to become good and virtuous men and women, instead of a disgrace and a curse to the community. They set forth, also, that great saving in expense would result to the city from a sufficient provision for the reformation of its vicious and vagrant youth. A bill in relation to Juvenile Delinquents in New York, was last week brought before the Legislature of the State, where it is hoped the subject will be thoroughly canvassed, and some effectual provision made for this long-neglected class.

A UNIVERSALIST SCHOOL.

For some time past, the Universalists have been making an effort to raise a permanent fund of ten thousand dollars for the benefit of Clinton Liberal Institute. The subscriptions were made on condition of the whole sum being subscribed by the 31st of December, 1849. Some $400 was wanting when the day arrived, but that sum was made up by the Trustees, and so the ten thousand dollar fund was secured. In announcing this fact, through the New York Christian Messenger, the agent, Rev. T. J. Sawyer, gives some account of his efforts to raise the fund, and of the present condition of the school, from which we conclude that there is great need of education, particularly religious and benevolent education, among the Universalists. He says:—

"The collection for the Institute has, by no means, equaled my expectations. Of more than 200 societies, I had hoped and believed that much the larger part would give us a collection. It seemed to me the method was so simple, and every man so left to give according to his ability or disposition, that neither pastor nor people would or could object to it. But I have been disappointed. Out of all our societies, only twenty-six have, so far as I know, given the subject any attention. This is discouraging beyond expression. It betrays the utter want of interest in much the greater part of the denomination in the cause of education among us. This ominous silence makes me almost despair of success.

"We greatly need money at the present moment. We have no philosophical and chemical apparatus worth mentioning. How necessary, at the present day, such apparatus is, must be known to all. It constitutes one of the great attractions of our best schools. We are suffering every day from its want. Students inquire for our advantages, and none forget to ask whether we have an apparatus. This very term we lose, to our certain knowledge, between fifty and a hundred dollars from its want.

"We have no means to do any thing. Our appeals to our societies are disregarded; they will not even give us a trifling collection. Our friends will not send their sons here, because we have so poor advantages, or if they are sent, they sneer at our poverty, and despise instead of respecting the school. Yet how easily might the Institute be rendered an honor and an ornament to our denomination, of which it is now a disgrace!"

THE JAILS OF MASSACHUSETTS.

The Annual Returns of the Jails and Houses of Correction in Massachusetts, has just been published. We learn from the Boston Traveler, that the whole number of persons in all the Jails and Houses of Correction, was confined during the year, is 9970, of whom 1434 were debtors. This list of criminals embraces 8327 males, and 1433 females; 1542 minors; 9238 whites; 512 colored; 10 committed for murder; 21 arson; 14 rape; 10 highway robbery; 807 assault; 118 burglary; 4 forgery; 2507 intemperance; 74 keeping brothels; 1490 larceny; 26 passing counterfeit money; 3 perjury; 1 executed; 217 sent to State Prison; 3125 had been addicted to intemperance; 1477 natives of Massachusetts; 2527 foreigners; 3145 couldn't read or write. Expenses of clothing prisoners, $4615; average weekly cost of boarding prisoners, $1.61; expenses for medicine, $1553; expense for fuel, $14,706; expense for officers, $15,399; total expense, $95,933; value of labor of prisoners, $17,662. Boston furnishes materials for more than half of this black list, having had 5698 prisoners, at an expense of between 40 and $50,000.

In regard to instruction given to prisoners, the returns are various. In Boston there is no instruction, except an occasional paper or tract. In Essex county, moral and religious occasional instruction by clergymen. In Middlesex, no instruction. In Worcester a chaplain is employed at a salary of 500 dollars, who holds religious services on Sunday, and visits prisoners at other times, and keeps up a Sunday School. In no other county does there appear to be any special regard for instruction; although Bibles are generally furnished to prisoners. There are not many to whom it can be said, "I was in prison and ye came unto me." No labor is performed or required in any of the Jails. Solitary confinement in a dark cell, with bread and water, is the usual mode of punishment for misdemeanors. In Concord, "chaining to a ring-bolt" is the mode.

A PHILANTHROPIST.—Such, says the Independent, was William Wilson, a Friend, late of Bradford. His father was ruined by the Revolutionary war, but his children paid his debts. William retired from business when he had accumulated a fortune of £20,000, and devoted his life to labors of humanity, in which it is believed he spent about £40,000. His personal expenses never reached £150 per annum. He employed his own time industriously in domiciliary visits among the poor, and had two trusty agents in the same business, the whole as methodically conducted as his trade had been formerly. He left but £2,700, which was chiefly given to charitable objects, as his relatives were not in want. The Leeds Mercury says:—

"Mr. Wilson had great reliance on tracts, and had them printed by tens of thousands. Through his London agent he supplied large parcels of tracts to almost every Temperance Society throughout England and Wales. For nerly two years he furnished the means of providing a temperance missionary in Bradford. He was deeply interested also in the 'prevention of cruelty to animals;' and circulated largely tracts on this subject."

"CATHOLIC."—A curious quarrel has arisen in Australia, between the Bishops of the Roman Catholic and Established churches. The important question mooted is, "Which church is entitled to enjoy the term Catholic?" An Australian paper, representing neither branch of the "Apostolic Succession," disposes of the question very summarily, by defining the term catholic to mean universal, and then declaring that, according to this definition, neither of the said churches is "Catholic." The Pope, as head of the Roman, and the Queen, as head of the English Church, will have to meet and settle the momentous question. The only difficulty they can encounter, will be to fix upon the proper standard for judgment, whether that of the Vatician or that of the Court of Arches.

PAPAL MOVEMENTS.—The Pope is said to lead a very active life at Portici, his new residence. During the day he visits monasteries and religious establishments, and in the evening receives visitors. "Everybody desires to kiss the feet of the Holy Father," says the Observatore Romano. Three genuflections are made in approaching him, after which "he slightly raises his foot, and they kiss the cross embroidered on his shoe." Afterwards they may kiss his hand. The old man "rarely speaks of politics, but often of the hospitality and piety of Ferdinand II.," the king of Naples. Ferdinand, one of the most despicable tyrants in the world, is distinguished for his piety in the estimation of Pio Nono, the late liberal Pope!

SABBATH PETITIONS IN PENNSYLVANIA.—In the Pennsylvania House of Representatives, on the 28th of January, Mr. Powell presented a petition from Bradford County, that the Canal locks be closed on the Sabbath; after which Mr. Leonard presented a remonstrance from Crawford County against the passage of any law to enforce the observance of the Sabbath. In the Senate, on the 29th, Mr. Sadler presented a petition signed by two hundred and forty-seven persons, that the Seventh-day Baptists be exempted from the penalty of the Sabbath laws.

DEATH OF A MISSIONARY.—The last steamer from England brought intelligence of the death of Mrs. Harriet Scudder, wife of Rev. John Scudder, M. D., and for more than thirty years a missionary of the American Board. She died at Madras, on the 18th of November, after an illness of four days. She was a woman of great excellence of character; and her loss will be severely felt by the mission to which she belonged. Her end was eminently peaceful and happy. She was the sister of Rev. Dr. Waterbury of Boston.

A GOOD RULE.—A postmaster informed us the other day, that he made it a rule never to request the discontinuance of a paper, if the subscriber is in arrears, and did not at the same time forward the amount due. Should this practice generally prevail, it would be a powerful protection to publishers, shielding them against the forgetfulness of their subscribers. It would also have a tendency to convince delinquent subscribers that by law they are responsible till all arrearages are paid.

DIVORCES IN PENNSYLVANIA.—A decision of the Supreme Court of Pennsylvania, recently delivered by Judge Coulter, in the case of Jones vs. Jones, is one of very great importance. The principle established is, that divorces granted by the Legislature, for causes within the jurisdiction of the Courts, are unconstitutional and void. As the Legislature has granted much the largest number of divorces in the State for a number of years, this decision will invalidate a great proportion of them.

PEDO-BAPTIST TESTIMONY.—President Sturtevant, of Illinois College, is reported to have immersed, of late, several students of the college, and to have said, in the Baptist Church in Jacksonville, in the hearing of a large congregation, that, in his opinion, immersion was the original mode of baptizing, and the only mode for several centuries.

The American Unitarian Association, Boston, proffer a complete set of Dr. Channing's Works, in six volumes, to the library of every regular College in the United States not yet supplied with them.

MANORIAL SUITS.

The Select Committee appointed by the Legislature of New-York to inquire into the state of the suits brought by the Attorney-General to test the legality of certain manorial titles, reported on the 19th of January. The following is the substance of their report:—

On the 12th day of April, 1847, the late Attorney General commenced an action of ejectment against Henry Overiny and John Garnet, to eject them from lands situate in the County of Delaware; another against Allen Bullet, Jr., to eject him from lands situate in the County of Steuben; and one against William Arnold, to eject him from lands situate in the County of Livingston.

On the first day of May, 1849, an action of ejectment was commenced against Stephen Van Rensselaer, to eject him from lands situate in the County of Albany; and one against William P. Van Rensselaer, Charles B. Lansing, Andrew White, and James C. Bell, to eject them from lands situate in the County of Rensselaer.

The answers of the several defendants in these actions were, by the late Attorney-General, thought to be insufficient in law to bar a recovery by the people, and were by him demurred to.

The demurrers were argued by the late Attorney General, or by counsel employed by him for that purpose, during the months of October and November, but the decision of the Court upon these demurrers has not been rendered in either case.

On the 7th day of August, 1847, an action was commenced against Jeremiah Livingston, to eject him from lands situate in the County of Columbia. Issue has been made thereon, and the case notified for trial. On the first day of November last a suit was commenced against George Clarke, by summons, to eject him from lands situate in the County of Montgomery. The complaint in this action is now being prepared.

It will be perceived there is a vast amount of real estate the title to which is shaken by the suits above enumerated or by others which are probably to be commenced.

In consequence of the immense stake at issue, and the serious consequences to interested individuals of delay, the committee recommend that the Legislature pass a bill to give these suits the preference at the circuits at which they are tried, at the terms of the Supreme Court where they may be reviewed, at the Court of Appeals, if they shall be carried there for final adjucation.

Early Baptists of Illinois.—Robert Leman, in a letter dated St. Clair County Illinois, Dec. 1849, and published in the Watchman of the Prairies, communicates the following items of intelligence concerning Illinois Baptists forty years ago:—

"At that time the Baptists in Illinois were in union. Shortly afterwards a disunion took place; a certain number agreed to unite with the slave-holding union of Baptists; others agreed to unite and be known by the name of the Illinois Baptist Union, and some, though few in numbers, agreed to unite and be known by the name of the baptized church of Christ's Friends to Humanity, denying union and communion with all persons holding the doctrine of perpetual involuntary, and hereditary slavery. Thus the Baptists in Illinois were formed into three separate divisions; and to the latter I attached my membership, as I thought, and still think, that slavery is contrary to the rule given by the Savior, 'As ye would that men should do unto you, do ye even so unto them.' And although it has been forty years since, my belief is still the same, or rather, it has grown with my growth and strengthened with my strength; and with that class of Baptists I expect to continue so long as I live."

State Temperance Convention in Rhode Island.—An adjourned meeting of the Rhode Island Total Abstinence Society, was held at Providence on Wednesday, 14th Jan. A memorial was prepared for presentation to the Legislature, asking that the efficiency of the existing License Law of the State may not be lessened. The following resolutions, after a full discussion, were unanimously adopted:—

Resolved, That the landlord who knowingly lets his property and buildings for the purpose of selling intoxicating liquors, is equally guilty of crime with the tenant who occupies his premises, and vends the same to the community; for the tenant only aids and abets, while the landlord is principal, furnishing capital and location to irresponsible men, to consummate this sin and pollution, and fasten upon the community, in violation of law, the crime and misery of rum-selling, with all its attendant evils.

Resolved, That this Convention earnestly exhorts the clergy of Rhode Island, of all denominations, to renew and redouble those efforts and appeals on their part, which in the early history of the cause were among the most efficient instrumentalities by which it was sustained.

Rhode Island against Navy Flogging.—In the Legislature of Rhode Island, one day last week, the Senate adopted the following resolution relative to flogging in the Navy, in which the House immediately concurred, viz:—

Whereas, It appears that evils and abuses exist in the Navy of the United States, which call loud for correction, that the use of ardent spirits as rations lays the foundation of intemperance and causes many of the breaches of discipline which are punished with the lash; and whereas the use of the lash is itself a relic of barbarism, and unworthy of the enlightened spirit of the present age; therefore,

Resolved, That our Senators in Congress be instructed, and our Representatives requested, to use their influence to procure the passage of a law prohibiting the use of spirit rations and of the lash in the Navy of the United States.

There was a fire at New Bedford, Mass., on the 28th ult., by which one life was lost, and a large amount of property destroyed.

General Intelligence.

PROCEEDINGS IN CONGRESS LAST WEEK.

In Senate. Second-day, Jan. 28.

Mr. Seward presented the petition of the Chamber of Commerce for a Branch Mint in New York. Also, the resolutions of the Legislature in favor of a grant of land to the Hungarians, and to all actual settlers.

Mr. Davis, of Mass., from the Select Committee on the Census, reported the bill providing for the taking of the seventh census, which was made the special order for Fifth-day.

Mr. Douglass' resolution, calling upon the President for all correspondence relative to Nicaragua and Central America, was adopted.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the special order—the bill providing for the more effectual execution of the clause of the Constitution relative to the recapture of fugitive slaves.

Mr. Mason, of Virginia, made a speech in favor of the bill.

Mr. Seward gave notice of a substitute for the bill, providing, in effect, the same legal remedy and process for the escaped slave as the white citizen is allowed in a controversy relative to the ownership of property.

House of Representatives.

The Speaker presented the legislative resolution from the territory of Minnesota, for the removal of the Chippewa Indians.

Mr. Tuck presented a memorial, praying that national disputes may be settled by arbitration, and asking the government to enter into treaties for a Congress of Nations to arrange the mode. Referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

Mr. Bayly said a petition had been sent to him asking for the establishment of a monarchy, but it not coming within the provisions of our Constitution, he declined to present it.

Mr. Boyd presented the Constitution of the Mormon State of Deseret. It was ordered to be printed.

Mr. Mason introduced a bill granting bounty land to those who served in the war of 1812 against Great Britain.

In Senate. Third-day, Jan. 29.

Mr. Seward introduced, on previous notice, a bill granting land to all emigrants who have taken part in the recent struggle for liberty in Europe.

Mr. Clay then rose, and after a few remarks, introduced a series of resolutions, designed as the basis of a final settlement of the slavery question. They declare the importance of an adjustment of the controversies arising out of the institution of slavery. They propose to admit California as a State, with suitable boundaries, with or without slavery, and to give the same right of decision to the other territories acquired from Mexico, with a declaration that Slavery has not now a legal existence therein; to limit Texas by the south line of New Mexico, and grant her a sum equivalent to the duties she surrendered at the annexation; to abolish the Slave-trade in the District of Columbia, so far as relates to slaves brought in for sale, and to guarantee the continuance of Slavery there until both Maryland and the District consent to its abolition, and then to make compensation to the owners of slaves set free; to make more effectual provision for the recapture of fugitive slaves, and to recognize the continuance of the slave-trade between the States.

After reading and commenting on the resolutions severally, Mr. C. observed, that they involve no sacrifice of principle on the part of the North (a grand mistake), but only of feeling; and that, in view of all the circumstances, it is to be expected that the Free States will be more liberal than the Slave States in concessions, for the sake of harmony; as with the former it is a mere abstraction, while with the latter their all is involved. The North, too, is the more powerful, and greatness and magnanimity should always go together. Mr. Clay concluded with an eloquent appeal in behalf of harmony, peace, mutual concessions, and forbearance, for the sake of the Union.

Mr. Rusk regretted that the Senator from Kentucky had thought proper to offer up a portion of the rights of Texas, as a peace-offering to the spirit of aggression upon the rights of one half the States of the Union. He would only say now, when the question comes up he would undertake to prove that the boundary of Texas is the Rio Grande; and that any attempt on the part of Congress to take from her any part of the territory this side of that limit, would be as dishonorable as an attempt to deprive her of her whole territory.

Mr. Foote said there were certain views of constitutional law, expediency of certain actions, and so forth, suggested in the resolutions, to which he could not assent. For one thing, he was not satisfied with the resolution which asserts that it is not expedient to abolish Slavery in the District. He believed it to be more than inexpedient—that it would be a gross fraud upon the people of the entire South. As a compromise, however, he would agree to the proposition to receive California into the Union as a State. He asserted that the faith of Congress was pledged to all the Southern States, and not Maryland alone, for the preservation of Slavery in the District.

Mr. Mason could not allow the resolution of the honorable Senator to pass unnoticed for his part. He regretted that the Senator had felt himself authorized to offer such a scheme of compromise. The proposition to organize a territorial government at once, was the only one to which he could lend his countenance. He denied that slavery is now abolished in the newly acquired territories; that proposition had never before been conceded by any Senator from a Southern State. Assent to the proposition would concede the whole controversy.

Mr. Davis, of Miss., said he would never consent to any compromise except that which extends the Missouri Compromise line to the Pacific Ocean.

Mr. Downs objected specially to the assertion that the Slave trade should be abolished in the District. He considered the whole proposition a compromise entirely on one side.

Mr. Berrien yielded every consideration of respect to the spirit of patriotism and conciliation in which, he knew, the resolution had been conceived; but he would not have it for a moment supposed that he could acquiesce in the proposition which they contained.

Mr. Butler also expressed his objection to the resolutions. They proposed no compromise.

House of Representntives.

Bills were reported regulating brevet rank; for the relief of the captors of the frigate Philadelphia at Tripoli; to establish reciprocal free trade in certain articles with Canada; to compute mileage by the nearest mail route.

In Senate. Fourth-day, Jan. 30.

After the reading of several petitions and reports of Committees, Mr. Houston introduced an amendment to a resolution previously presented in favor of giving lands to actual settlers. This led to a spirited discussion, in which Messrs. Houston, Cass, Mangum, Seward, Douglass and others, took part. The proposition to give lands to actual settlers was received with much favor, but that to give lands to the Hungarians was held up as a bid for foreign votes.

Mr. Walker addressed the Senate in support of a proposition, to cede the public lands to the States in which they lie; after which the resolution under discussion was laid on the table, and ordered to be printed.

House of Representatives.

Mr. Cobb of Ala. introduced a bill to provide for all American soldiers, not heretofore provided for, with bounty land. Referred to Committee on Public Lands.

The Mileage question then came up, but was soon laid on the table for the purpose of considering the Senate resolution limiting the amount for the collection of the revenue. Mr. Bayly made a speech in favor of the resolution, and was followed by Mr. Brown, of Mississippi, whose remarks were directed against the northern agitators of the subject of slavery. On the conclusion of his remarks, the House adjourned.

In Senate. Fifth-day, Jan. 30.

Mr. Mason, of Va. presented a substitute for the bill now before the Senate, providing for the recapture of fugitive Slaves.

A message was received from the President transmitting the correspondence between the Government at Washington and the Military authorities at Santa Fe—also the correspondence between the Government and the authorities of Texas in regard to the boundary question. The message reiterates the opinion, that the question of jurisdiction in New-Mexico is a question for Congress, rather than the Executive, to decide.

Mr. Cass's Austrian Resolutions were taken up. Messrs. Hunter and Smith opposed them. Mr. Foote advocated their adoption. No question taken.

Adjourned over to Second-day.

House of Representatives.

The death of Hon. Rudolphus Dickinson of Ohio, (who died in March last,) was announced, and after passing the usual resolutions, the Houses adjourned.

House of Representatives. Sixth-day, Feb. 1.

The Committee on Indian Affairs was instructed to inquire into the expediency of extinguishing the Indian title to the territory lying west of the Cascade Mountains in Oregon, and the propriety of creating a Superintendent of Indian Affairs. No other business of any consequence was transacted, except the re-election of Mr. Gurley as Chaplain of the House. Adjourned over to Second-day.

Erie Railroad.—The N. Y. Tribune says: As we announced some days ago that Company would, the Erie Railroad has advertised for proposals to finish the road from Hornellsville to Dunkirk on Lake Erie. The distance is about 125 miles, and the whole is to be completed by the 31st of May, 1851. Thus sixteen months will see this important work completed, uniting the Hudson with Lake Erie, and opening the immense traffic of the Great West directly to the enterprise and capital of our merchants. By the time the Erie Road is in running order to Dunkirk, there will probably be a road completed along the Lake shore from Buffalo through Erie, Cleveland and Sandusky to Toledo, from whence the Southern Michigan Road will be extended to Chicago, and the Chicago Road completed to Galena, giving us a connected Railroad from New York to Galena on the Mississippi River. A Cleveland and Sandusky Railroad from Cincinnati, will bring from the Ohio River much of the travel which now goes to Pittsburgh and thence to Philadelphia.

A Sad Death.—We have previously mentioned, says the Springfield Republican, the case of Dr. Miner of Ware, who has been suffering from the effects of a wound received during a post mortem examination. The wound was but the prick of a needle, and the body examined was of a child who had died of inflammation of the bowels. Dr. M. has not yet recovered, and suffers from abscesses in different parts of his system. At the time of the accident, Mrs. Affa Miner, mother of Dr. Miner, an old lady of 63 years, was visiting in her son's family, and remained to render assistance. A few days since, while engaged in washing some bandages used in dressing the Doctor's abscesses, she pricked her finger slightly with a pin which had been left in them. She very soon began to feel pain in her hand, and in forty-eight hours the inflamed member began to exhibit signs of mortification, which finally extended up the arm to the body. This singular accident terminated in her death.

Kentucky and the Union.—In the Kentucky Legislature, on the 15th January, the following resolution was unanimously adopted:—

Resolved, That the Governor is hereby requested to cause a suitable block of native marble to be conveyed to Washington City, to take its proper place in the monument to the memory of the Father of his Country, and that the following words be engraved thereon: "Under the auspices of Heaven and the precepts of Washington, Kentucky will be the last to give up the Union."

Fire and Loss of Life.—A disastrous fire occurred at Peoria, Ill., on the 27th of January, by which a drug-store and two printing offices were destroyed. While the fire was raging, an explosion took place in the drug store, causing the building to fall in, killing Mr. James Kirkpatrick, Editor of the Peoria American, and Mr. J. Pickett, Editor of the Champion, was smothered to death and buried beneath the ruins, while attempting to save his books. It is feared that several others have been killed by the falling walls.

Accident and loss of Life.—A dispatch from Memphis, Tenn., dated Jan. 29, says that the steamer St. Joseph, from New Orleans, blew up and burnt to the water's edge on the 23d, near Napoleon, at the mouth of the Arkansas River. The St. Joseph had on board a large cargo, and a number of emigrants. Fifteen persons were killed outright, and thirty-eight horribly scalded—many of whom have since died. At the time of the explosion, the steamer South America was near at hand, and towed the wreck to the shore. Capt. B., with the assistance of part of his crew and some passengers, succeeded in recovering the iron chest from the wreck, which contained $1,300 or $1,400. He took the money out of the chest, counted it, and handed it to the clerk of the South America, for safe keeping. The next day Capt. Baker asked the clerk for the money, as he wanted to pay off his crew. The clerk refused to pay over more than $300 of the sum—claiming the balance for salvage.

Fate of Mrs. White among the Indians.—Advices have been received from Santa Fe to the 28th of November, announcing that a few days provious Major Green and party started in pursuit of a band of Indians, who, it will be remembered, had made Mr. and Mrs. White and child, together with eight others, prisoners—all of whom were afterwards killed, with the exception of Mrs. White and child, who were still held as prisoners by the Indians. As soon as the Major and his comrades came in sight of the Indians' camp, and were discovered by them, the latter became much alarmed, and, after having shot Mrs. White, precipitately fled, leaving their camp equipage and two Indian children behind. The body of the lady was then taken possession of, but no trace of her child was to be found.

Reward of Humanity.—The whole sum collected as a testimony of the appreciation, by the citizens of New-York, of the noble conduct of Capt. Cook and his crew, in saving the passengers of the Caleb Grimshaw, was $8,000. It was appropriated as follows:

To Captain Cook - - -	$5,000
To the First Mate - - -	700
To the Second Mate - -	400
To the Carpenter - - -	350
To each Seaman - -	125
To each Ordinary Seaman and Boy	100

This is well; and we doubt not every donor to the fund will remember his subscription with far more satisfaction than if it had been given to furnish some glittering bauble as a reward for the destruction instead of the saving of human life.

SUMMARY.

On the 28th of March next, there is to be a public sale of lands, 3000 acres, belonging to Kenyon College, situated in the village of Gambier, five miles from Mount Vernon, Ohio. In the village there are two Grammar Schools, a College and Theological Seminary, and an Episcopal church, having each commodious and appropriate buildings. The lands are divided into lots of convenient size, the most remote of which are within one mile and a quarter of the old college and church. More than 1000 acres are under improvement.

Jesse M. Eyre, of Chester Borough, Pa., in digging a well on the west side of Chester Creek, near the site of the house of Robert Wade, visited by William Penn on his first landing, in 1682, came directly on the well which supplied water to the above named resident. About six inches below the surface was found the old well, neatly walled, and, on clearing it out, the well bucket was found at the bottom. It had been closed a hundred years.

The Pittsburg Chronicle contains an account of a meeting of the Members and Pewholders of the 5th Presbyterian Congregation in Pittsburg, held on the 24th of January, for the purpose of discussing the proposition for a reunion with the old school division of the Church, and which, according to the reported proceedings, was riotous and disgraceful in the extreme. The reunion was finally carried by a large vote.

It is estimated that Cincinnati will show a population of 125,000 and St. Louis one of 70,000 by the census of 1850. But for the ravages of the Cholera last Summer, each would have been considerably higher. The suburbs of either city, which practically form a part of it, are not included in the foregoing estimates.

As many as fifty removals were made at the N. Y. Custom-House, on the 26th ult., to take effect on the first of February. The places vacated include every variety of office, while the persons have been selected from both parties. The object of this is to reduce the expense of collection, in accordance with the act of Congress of last spring.

There is to be, in the second week in March, a grand convention in London of delegates from all the Wesleyan circuits, which have protested against the course of the Conference. The President of the Conference has issued a manifesto, a copy of which has been sent to every preacher for his signature in support of the doings of Conference.

Dr. Daubeny, Professor of Chemistry at Oxford, has announced that a steamer is to start from Leith about two months before the next meeting of the British Association, with a scientific expedition to explore the geology of Iceland, and return in time to communicate the result to the Congress at Edinburgh.

The Pittsburg Gazette gives the following estimates of that city and its environs. Pittsburg City, 50,468; Allegany City, 23,710; Birmingham, 4,592; East Birmingham, 1,452; South Pittsburg, 9,562; Lower St. Clair, 7,700; Pitt Township, 1,512; Lawrenceville, 1,298; Manchester, 2,826; Duquesne, 550; total population, 162,008.

Professor Webster will probably be arraigned at the March term of the Supreme Judicial Court, but his trial will not take place until June or July, it being impossible so to arrange the business of the Court as to secure a full bench before that time. The day of trial will be fixed at the time of his arraignment.

We learn by the Wisconsin papers, that the taxes of that State are so heavy, that many of the collectors have given up their commissions, rather than incur the odium of enforcing the collection.

The amount of premiums received by the Atlantic Mutual Insurance Company last year reached the enormous sum of $2,400,000. The losses paid in the same time were $960,246. The return premiums and expenses, $226,389 12. Net premiums, $1,276,363.

There was a riot at Poughkeepsie, N. Y., on the 28th of January, growing out of a quarrel between the Irish and the blacks, fed by the free sale of intoxicating liquors. It was quelled by the arrest of about seventy of the persons engaged in it.

The oldest man in France, M. Jeane Baptise Robillard, died on the 1st of October at Fontenay, near Paris, at the age of 113 years, 4 months, and 2 days. He was born in June, 1736. Robillard retained the use of all his faculties to the last moment.

The Journal of Commerce says that the Tabernacle recently occupied by the Plymouth Congregation at Brooklyn, has been sold to a gentleman from California, and will immediately be shipped for San Francisco.

Mr. Thurston, the Oregon delegate in Congress, was in 1844 a citizen of the State of Maine, and moved thence to Iowa; the next year he started, with his wife, two children and an ox team, for Oregon, driving the team himself two thousand miles to the Columbia river.

At a recent election in Michigan, the people decided in favor of a Convention to revise the Consitution, by a vote of 33,193 to 2,095; and in favor of the election of all State Officers, District Attorneys, &c., by a vote of 38,117 to 728.

The Lowell Telegraph says that the Lowell Brass Band have ordered a gold bugle to be manufactured for their leader, Mr. Hall. The instrument is to be made by Mr. Wright, of New York, and is to cost about one thousand dollars.

At the late printer's festival, Dr. Francis referred to the fact that most of Franklin's experiments with electricity were made in New York, in the cupola of the Old Dutch Church, now the Post-office.

Mr. Hepworth Dixon, in his new work on the London Prisons, says that the Millbank is the largest prison in England, having so many cells that the corridors to them are upwards of three miles in length.

A gang of counterfeiters have recently been discovered in Pittsburg. They seem to have been extensive manufacturers and dealers in counterfeit notes on sundry banks. Four of them have been arrested.

Terrible Explosion and Great Loss of Life.—New York was the scene of an awful catastrophe on Second-day morning last. The boiler in the large machine-shop of A. B. Taylor & Co., No. 3 Hague-st., exploded at about half past seven o'clock, the force passing upward and outward toward the street, and completely demolishing the building. There were on the premises at the time over one hundred persons, of whom it is supposed that not more than one quarter escaped without serious injury. Throughout the day, every effort was made to remove the rubbish so as to reach the wounded and dead. Up to the time of writing, (Third-day morning,) it is not possible to state precisely the number injured and killed. The best estimates place the former at 50 and the latter is not known. Some days must elapse before the whole truth will be known.

DIED.

In Brookfield, Madison Co., N. Y., Jan. 26th, after a lingering disease of several months' continuance, Deacon William Whitford, aged 68 years. We believe that brother Whitford was a good man—one that feared God, and eschewed evil. He had been a member of the church of Christ about 28 years. His first membership was in the first Seventh-day Baptist Church in Brookfield, where he was called and ordained to the office of deacon. For a few years past, his membership has been in the second Church in the same town, where his official services were duly appreciated. In his illness, he exhibited much patience under his sufferings. His mind was tranquil to his heavenly Father's will, and his hope in and reliance on Christ were unshaken to the end. He has left a deeply-afflicted widow, several worthy sons, and a large circle of connections to lament their loss.

Information Wanted.

Information is wanted respecting the residence of the widow Nancy Crandall, formerly Nancy West. She had a sister Mary, who was the wife of Col. Zebulon Scrivens, of Grafton, Rensselaer Co., N. Y. If now living, she must be about ninety years of age. Any information of her residence, if living, and, if dead, that of her heirs, communicated to Mr. Tiba Hewitt, (administrator of the estate of widow Mary Scrivens,) Grafton, Rensselaer Co., N. Y., will be thankfully received. [32w3] By request, W. B. Maxson.

Medical Notice.

DR. T. A. MAXSON, Botanic Physician, takes this method to inform the friends of Medical Reform, that he is located in Watson, N. Y., one mile east from Beach's Landing. Believing that there are vegetable remedies adapted to the cure of all diseases, he consequently uses no other. Calls attended to without delay. [32m3.] January, 1850.

Sabbath Convention.

With Divine Permission, a Convention will be held in Peterboro, N. Y., on Wednesday and Thursday, 27th and 28th days of February next, for the purpose of considering what are the import and obligations of the Sabbath, and what is the proper day and the manner of its observance The Convention will meet at 11 o'clock A. M. It is expected that it will be attended by persons of other States as well as this.

Mail Line between Boston and New York.

REGULAR MAIL LINE BETWEEN BOSTON AND NEW YORK via Stonington and Providence. Inland route, without ferry, change of cars of baggage! The new steamer C. VANDERBILT, Capt. Joel Stone, and COMMODORE, Capt. William H. Frazee, in connection with the Stonington and Providence and Boston and Providence Railroads, leaving New York daily, Sundays excepted, from Pier No. 2 North River, at 4 o'clock P. M., and Stonington at 8 o'clock P. M. or upon the arrival of the mail train from Boston. These steamers were built expressly for the route, and are in every respect particularly adapted to the navigation of Long Island Sound. The accommodations for passengers are commodious and comfortable—the officers capable and experienced. The route being the shortest and most direct between Boston and New York, passengers are enabled to arrive in ample time for the morning lines of steamboats and railroads running to various points from those cities. The C. VANDERBILT will leave New York Tuesday, Thursday, and Saturday. Leave Stonington Monday, Wednesday, and Friday. The COMMODORE will leave New York Monday, Wednesday, and Friday. Leave Stonington Tuesday, Thursday, and Saturday. For passage, berths, staterooms or freight, application may be made to the agents on the wharf, and at the office, 10 Battery-place.

Sabbath Tracts.

The American Sabbath Tract Society publishes the following tracts, which are for sale at its Depository, No. 9 Spruce st., N. Y., viz:—

No. 1—Reasons for introducing the Sabbath of the Fourth Commandment to the consideration of the Christian Public. 28 pp.
No. 2—Moral Nature and Scriptural Observance of the Sabbath. 52 pp.
No. 3—Authority for the Change of the Day of the Sabbath. 28 pp.
No. 4—The Sabbath and Lord's Day—A History of their Observance in the Christian Church. 52 pp.
No. 5—A Christian Caveat to the Old and New Sabbatarians. 4 pp.
No. 6—Twenty Reasons for keeping holy, in each week, the Seventh Day instead of the First Day. 4 pp.
No. 7—Thirty-six Plain Questions, presenting the main points in the Controversy; A Dialogue between a Minister of the Gospel and a Sabbatarian; Counterfeit Coin. 8 pp.
No. 8—The Sabbath Controversy—The True Issue. 4 pp.
No. 9—The Fourth Commandment—False Exposition. 4 pp.
No. 10—The True Sabbath Embraced and Observed. 16 pp.
No. 11—Religious Liberty Endangered by Legislative Enactments. 16 pp.
No. 12—Misuse of the Term Sabbath. 8 pp.

The Society has also published the following works, to which attention is invited:—

A Defense of the Sabbath, in reply to Ward on the Fourth Commandment. By George Carlow. First printed in London, in 1724; reprinted at Stonington, Ct., in 1802; now republished in a revised form. 168 pages.

The Royal Law Contended for By Edward Stennet. First printed in London, in 1658. 60 pp.

An Appeal for the Restoration of the Lord's Sabbath, in an Address to the Baptists from the Seventh-day Baptist General Conference. 24 pp.

Vindication of the True Sabbath, by J. W. Morton, late Missionary of the Reformed Presbyterian Church. 64 pp.

These tracts will be furnished to those wishing them for distribution or sale, at the rate of 15 pages for one cent. Persons desiring them can have them forwarded by mail or otherwise, on sending their address, with a remittance, to George B. Utter, Corresponding Secretary of the American Sabbath Tract Society, No. 9 Spruce-st., New York.

Scientific and Practical Agriculture.

HENRY STEPHENS, F. R. S. E., of Edinburgh, the celebrated author of the "Book of the Farm," and PROF. NORTON, of Yale College, New Haven, are preparing for the Press, a Book to be entitled,

AGRICULTURE—SCIENTIFIC AND PRACTICAL.

It will embrace every subject of importance connected with Agriculture in all its various branches, both Theoretical and Practical. "Science, in as far as it has, up to the present time, been made available to Practice by Experiment, will be treated in its relation to every operation as it occurs in the course of the seasons." The work will be arranged under four distinct heads, representing the seasons, beginning with Winter and ending with Autumn. The following are among the subjects to be treated of in the first and second seasons, including the Introductory, viz:

Initiation.—On the best of the existing Methods for acquiring a thorough knowledge of Practical Husbandry the Difficulties to be encountered in learning practical husbandry, and on the Means of overcoming them; the different kinds of farming; the persons required to conduct and execute the labor of the farm; the branches of science most applicable to Agriculture: the Institutions of Education best suited to Agricultural science; the evils attending the neglect of landowners and others to learn Practical Agriculture; on observing the details and recording the facts of farming by the Agricultural student.

Practice—Winter.—On the treatment of farm-horses in Winter; the treatment of the farmer's saddle and harness horse in Winter; the fattening of swine; the treatment of fowls; the rationale of the feeding of animals; on the accommodation of the grain crops in the steading; threshing and winnowing of grain; on the forming of dunghills and composts in Winter; on the construction of liquid-manure tanks and carts; sea-weed as manure; on gaulting or claying the soil.

Practice—Spring.—Summary of the field operations, and of the weather in Spring; on the advantages of having field-work always in a state of forwardness; on the calving of cows; the milking of cows; the rearing of calves. On the sowing of spring wheat; on drilling up the land; on the sowing of beans, and peas, and tares. On the transplanting of turnip bulbs for producing seed. On the rolling of land. On the sowing of oats, lucerne, and sainfoin. On the lambing of ewes. On cross-ploughing land, and ribbing land for the seed-furrow. On the sowing of grass-seeds and barley. On the turning of dunghills. On the planting of potatoes. On paring and baring the surface. On the farrowing of sows; the hatching of fowls, &c.

The Work will also embrace many important operations not included in the ordinary routine of farming, such as "Judging of Land," "Stocking of a Farm," "Improvement of the Soil," &c., &c.

The contributions by Prof. Norton will add greatly to the value of the book, by adapting it to the Soil, Climate, Growth, &c., of our own Country; and the united labors of two such distinguished men will make this work one of the most complete and valuable to the American farmer, ever issued from the press.

The work will be comprised in about 18 Nos. of 80 pages each, with a steel engraving in every number; besides which it will contain more than 600 wood engravings, in the highest style of the art. It will be handsomely printed on fine paper, and sold at 25 cents a number, or $4 in advance for the eighteen numbers.

The First Number will be issued in the month of January, and the work will be completed in about one year. The first volume, written by Mr. Stephens, in already published in Edinburgh, and the Americans edition will be printed from the stereotype plates imported for that purpose.

Booksellers and Dealers in Periodicals will be furnished on liberal terms.

Postmasters and others remitting the money for three copies at the above prices, will receive a fourth copy gratis. Remittances will be at the risk of the Publishers, if the mailing of the money is proved—otherwise at the risk of the parties remitting. A postmaster's certificate of the money being duly mailed is always satisfactory evidence to the Publishers.

CALIFORNIA FROM THE BRIGHT SIDE.

A friend who thinks our California selections have given rather too much prominence to the dark features of the picture, sends us a paper containing the following extracts from a letter by H. C. Lynch formerly of St. Louis, dated Lynchburg Diggings, California, Oct. 18, 1849 :—

My fondest expectations are realized. . . I must describe our diggings to you. Our log cabin is situated on a beautiful knoll at the junction of two ravines; indeed, the one in front of us is sufficiently wide to be called a valley. The mountains are very high on all sides, and the sun is generally an hour high before we see it. The diggings are in the ravines, and the gold is found in the bed or channels of the water which passes down them in the wet season—from December until March—when we cannot work in them. However, to avoid being idle, many of the miners are now engaged in throwing up dirt—that is, they scrape all the dirt out of the channel and crevices in the rocks, (nearly always slate and quartz, sometimes blue granite,) and when the water comes, they wash it at their convenience. In collecting the dirt, they are sure to pick up enough to pay their current expenses. Some men living up the ravine, have taken up four and five ounces each, besides what the dirt contained. It must be understood, however, that it requires labor to do it. Large rocks must be removed and a great deal of gravel and sand before you reach the earth which contains the gold. You are certain of one thing that makes the work seem light—the gold is there ready, and requires only to be picked up. The gold is mostly found in crevices in the rocks, commonly called pockets. There are hundreds of ravines near us, in all of which you can find more or less gold. In cleaning out our spring, Dr. Silvers and myself took out forty dollars in two days.

Tom Chapman and his party, four in all, using the rocker, are camped near us, and have averaged more than a hundred dollars a day ever since they have been here—two weeks. Some spots are much richer than others. About eight miles from this, it is a common thing for men to get two and three ounces a day, but they must dig eight or ten feet for it, and run some risk of not getting paid for their labor. Those diggings are nearly exhausted : thousands are collected there, and many are not making their expenses. There is plenty of room for them, if they choose to scatter, for the mines extend over a distance of a thousand miles in length, and between forty and fifty in width. Such are the dry diggings. The wet, or river diggings, come next. Some of them are very rich ; the gold is found in the channel of the river, bars and banks. It is taken from the channel by daming the river and changing its course. New discoveries of mines are being made every day, and hundreds are traveling from one point of the country to another. A great many of these are disappointed, and are too desirous to become suddenly rich, without hard work ; they follow every rumor of large discoveries. Those who are contented enough to remain in one place realize the most, for in almost any place they can make half on ounce a day, with the chances of half a dozen. The difficulty of collecting the gold is a fortunate circumstance, both for the people and the country; it prevents its extravagant expenditure. There are some exceptions, enough to make an abundant harvest for the blackleg gentry; they flourish like the green bay tree; when they break a customer, he goes to the mines, and in a few days returns with a recruited purse. While in Sacramento I saw some tall betting. I expect to hear of their checking the business there, as a city charter has just been adopted by the citizens after two trials. You would be surprised to hear of the few crimes of any kind that are committed here; even a fight is a rare occurrence; as for stealing, it is out of fashion in this country. It is an every-day thing for miners to leave their tents, gold and fixings, for a day or two, without missing anything on their return. I have yet to have the first man pointed out to me as a thief. There is no doubt of there being hundreds in the country, but they have either reformed or are afraid to exercise their skill here. The Lynch code no doubt has its influence—even the gambler plays an honest game. How long such a state of things will last, I cannot imagine. It is either an extraordinary circumstance, or demonstrates that in other places people are governed too much. I have yet to hear of the first murder.

COAL MINES IN THE UNITED STATES.

The papers are teeming with accounts of discoveries of mines of this valuable article, in all parts of the country—on the shores of the Mississippi, in the State of Alabama, in New York, in Massachusetts, and now again in Rhode Island. The Bristol Phœnix, (R. I.,) announces the opening of a vein of anthracite in that town, by the sinking of a well, at the depth of fourteen feet below the surface. There can be no doubt that Rhode Island contains within its limits extensive fields of coal, that will become of the highest importance in the furtherance and support of her manufacturing interests; and coal of a quality equal to any found in the country.

The recent discovery that semi-bituminous coal of the Dauphin Co. (Pa.) mines may be used for fuel in locomotives, gives an additional interest to any information concerning the supply of coal which may be obtained from mines in the United States, as well as the uses to which the various descriptions may be applied. Until the middle of the last century, nearly the whole of the great basin of the Mississippi, the valley of the Ohio, and the western slope of the Alleghany mountains—constituting the great central coal field of America—were partially occupied by the Indians. This vast region was held to be of so little value, that its acquisition did not influence the arrangements made, at various times, by Wm. Penn, and afterwards by the proprietaries. By the treaty of 1768 the latter became possessed of nearly the whole area of the coal land of Pennsylvania for the sum of $10,000, and about that time the presence of coal seems to have first become known. In 1828, the first cargoes from the Alleghany coal fields reached Philadelphia, and it was more than ten years later before it came to be used to any considerable extent in New England, where hundreds of thousands of tons are now used annually. The coal regions of America are, from the explorations which have thus far been made, supposed to be divided into three principal masses; the great central tract, extending from Tuscaloosa, Alabama, to the west of Pennsylvania, and being apparently resumed in New Brunswick and Nova Scotia; the second tract strikes northwestward from Kentucky, crosses the Ohio, and stretches through Illinois to the Mississippi River; a third region, smaller than the others, lies between the three great lakes—Erie, Huron, and Michigan. Competent geologists affirm, that from a comparison of the coal strata of contiguous basins, these are no more than detached parts of a once continuous deposit.

The extent of this enormous coal field is in length from N. E. to S. W. more than 720 miles, and its greatest breadth about 180 miles; its area, upon a moderate calculation, amounts to 63,000 square miles! In addition to these there are several detached troughs of anthracite in Eastern Pennsylvania, which form some of the most remarkable coal tracts in the world. They occupy an area of about 200 square miles. The strata which constitute this vast deposit, comprehend nearly all the known varieties of coal, from the dryest and most compact anthracite to the most fusible and combustible cannel coal. One of the most remarkable features of these coal seams is their prodigious bulk. The great bed of Pittsburg, extending nearly the entire length of the Monongahela River, has been traced through a great elliptic area of nearly 225 miles in its longest diameter, and a maximum breadth of about 100 miles—the superficial extent being 14,000 square miles—the thickness of the bed diminishing gradually from 12 or 14 feet to 2 feet. In 1847, the anthracite coal regions of Pennsylvania furnished 3,000,000 tons, and 11,439 vessels cleared from Philadelphia in that year loaded with the article. The produce of 1848 and 1849 is of course larger.

The bituminous coal area of the United States is 133,132 square miles, or 1-17th part of the whole known. The bituminous coal area of British America is 18,000 square miles, or 1-45th part. Great Britain, 8,139 square miles. Spain, 2,408 square miles, or 1-52d part. France, 1,719 square miles, or 1-118th part, and Belgium 518 square miles, or 1-122d part. The area of the Pennsylvania anthracite coal formations, is put down at 437 square miles; and that of Great Britain and Ireland, anthracite and culm, 3,720 square miles. The anthracite coal of Great Britain and Ireland, however, is not near so valuable an article of fuel as the anthracite coal of Pennsylvania, nor does a given area yield near so much as the latter.

From the above statistics, our readers may form some idea of the vast quantity of fuel which the coal fields of the United States are capable of furnishing in coming time. They are inexhaustible, and their value is beyond computation. The California gold mines sink into insignificance when compared to them. [Express.

THAT KNOCKING IN WESTERN NEW-YORK.

Much has been said of late about the mysterious knockings heard in western New-York. Mr. W. A. Langworthy, of Rochester, one of the Committee appointed to investigate the matter, has written a letter which gives an explanation of the mysterious noises. After setting forth the absurdity of the answers to various questions, he says :—

"By placing the girls on a table, and putting our hands on their feet, the knocking stopped. By tying their dresses around their ancles with cords it also ceased. I may as well mention here, that on all occasions, without one single exception, this knocking was always under their feet, and any statement that you may have seen, incompatible with this, is a base fabrication. When there was knocking on the doors and tables, which communicated a vibration to the hand, those girls were in every case, touching those articles with the back of their dresses. We tried other experiments of a different nature, all of which fastened on our minds conclusively the conviction, that this mysterious rapping was so intimately connected with the persons of these girls, that were they thoroughly examined the ghost would stand out in base relief. But we were men, and as the girls were cornered and very much frightened, we let it go at this, and dismissed them from custody.

"In the evening I made my report to an audience of 1,500 citizens, in accordance with the above facts, and you may imagine it was the last of the ghost in public, as the next evening the meeting broke up in a Philadelphia row, and the ghostly knockers barely escaped with whole skins; yet as the fools are not all dead, these women found plenty of things, looking somewhat like human beings (though I blush to own them) to follow them to their secluded house, on Troup-street, where to this day they keep up nightly knockings, to the no small wonder of a deluded set, and to the great gratification, I apprehend, of another set, who are somewhat notorious on account of the remarkable development of that portion of the cranium lying immediately under the occipital bone."

Seamstress Imigration.—Mr. Sidney Herbert's proposal for a subscription to aid the ill-paid sempstresses of London and neighborhood in emigrating to British colonies, where the presence of virtuous women is a need of civilization, has been responded to by many of the affluent. Upward of £16,000 have been subscribed for the purpose; and a committee of management has been formed, embracing men of all parties, with a view of providing that the funds ultimately raised are properly employed in sending out those only whose characters shall qualify them to be agents of improvement. The necessity of some remedy for the state of suffering entailed on multitudes of women by the present constitution of English society, is seen in the fact, that while in the metropolis alone there are 33,500 women engaged in the business of apparel making, 28,500 of these are under 20 years of age, and many earn no more than from twopence-halfpenny to fourpence a-day, on which they endeavor to subsist. Such is one phase of life in the wealthiest country under heaven!

COINAGE OF THE UNITED STATES.

On the 29th of January, the President sent to the House of Representatives the Report of Mr. Patterson, Director of the Mint, Philadelphia, for 1849. It is dated on the 18th Jan., and informs Congress, that at the principal mint there were coined in 1849, $8,913,266, comprising $7,948,332 in gold, $922,950 in silver, and $41,984 in copper coins—total 9,519,513 pieces. The deposits for coinage amounted to $10,473,724 in gold, and $1,045,259 in silver.

At the New-Orleans branch, $1,646,000 were coined, of which $1,192,000 was silver. The deposits for coinage amounted to $1,125,745 in gold, and $1,321,029 in silver. Upward of $1,200,000 were also coined at Charlotte and Dahlonega.

The deposits at the four mints during the year amounted to $14,609,463, of which $12,243,175 were in gold. The whole coinage of the Union amounted to $11,164,696 Of gold dollars $936,779 have been coined, but no double eagles.

During 1849, the deposits of California gold amounted, at the Philadelphia mint, to $5,481,439 and at the New Orleans do. to $666,080. During the present year (1850) $750,000 in this gold have been deposited at Philadelphia.

The deposits of 1849, to all the mints, were exceeded by those of 1847, when $13,670,896 were deposited at Philadelphia, and $6,253,288 at New-Orleans. The gold of 1847 was chiefly foreign coins left for recoinage; that of 1849 is mostly native gold —an actual increase of the gold currency.

Slavery in Richmond, Va.—Rev. Mr. Storrs, one of the editors of the New York Independent, closes an interesting letter to that journal, from Richmond, Va., in which the following allusion—preceded by complimentary references to the city—is made to slavery, which finds there a strong hold :—

But slavery is there; defended by the masters; endured by the colored people, because sustained and enforced by the bayonet and the gallows. And the slave-trade is there ; with all its brutal incidents, and its horrible issues—the rending of families, the blight of affection, the destruction of hope. And until these cease, from the city and from the State, its progress cannot be rapid, or its prosperity permanent, or its morality pure. Nothing we saw in Richmond tended to relieve the slave system of its terrible aspect. In individual cases there is kindness toward the blacks, a sense of obligation, and a feeling of attachment. There are those who educate their servants in the Scriptures; and who would rather beg than sell them; who revolt with shame and disgust from the slave traffic. But, as a whole, and a unity—the system works evil, continually. It injures the white man as much as the colored. It eats like a cancer into social culture; into Christian enterprise and character; into even outward prosperity. It looks out through all the refinement, the culture and the Christianity of the Capital, as the grinning head on a Corinthian column through the acanthus leaves that inwreath it.

What can be done on one Acre of Ground.—The editor of the Maine Cultivator published a few weeks ago his management of one acre of ground, from which we gather the following results: One-third of an acre in corn usually produced thirty bushels of sound corn for grinding, besides some refuse. This quanity is sufficient for family use, and for fattening one large or two small hogs. From the same ground he produced two or three hundred pumpkins, and his family supply of dry beans. From a bed of six rods square, he usually obtained sixty bushels of onions; these he sold at $1 per bushel, and the amount purchased his flour. Thus, from one-third of an acre, and an onion-bed, he obtained his breadstuffs. The rest of the ground was appropriated to all sorts of vegetables, for summer and winter use; potatoes, beets, parsnips, cabbages, green corn, peas, beans, cucumbers, melons, squashes, &c., with fifty or sixty bushels of beets and carrots for the winter food of a cow. Then he had also a flower garden, raspberries, currants and gooseberries, in great variety, and a few choice apple, pear, plum, cherry, peach and quince trees.

Some reader may call the above a "Yankee trick ;" so it is, and our object in publishing it is to have it repeated all over Yankee land and everywhere else. If a family can be supported from one acre in Maine, the same can be done in every State and country in the Union.

The British Empire.—According to Martin, in his account of the British Colonies, twenty-five written, and various unwritten languages, are spoken throughout this great empire of colonies. There are about 5,000,000 Christians, 50,000,000 Hindoos, 20,000,000 Mahommedans, 10,000,000 Budhists, and millions of other idolaters of various descriptions, in the British foreign possessions. The whole population is estimated at 130,000,000. Of these, not more than 26,000,000 eat flesh abundantly; about 10,000,000 sparingly; 24,000,000 occasionally; and 70,000,000 live principally on vegetables and fish. About 34,000,000 make wheat, oats and barley their principal graminivorous food; 16,000,000 potatoes, pulse, and other vegetables, and 80,000,000 rice, maize, millet, &c. About 10,000,000 drink wine frequently; 25,000,000 malt liquors; 35,000,000 distilled liquors; and 60,000,000 chiefly water.

The Dry Goods Business.—Few persons, says the Journal of Commerce, have any definite idea of the value of dry goods which annually pass through the New-York Custom House into the hands of consumers. The fall trade is about over. The lofts of importers are comparatively empty. The past year has been a prosperous one for those engaged in the foreign trade. Few goods have been sacrificed. It appears that, during the year ending the first of December, the value of silk goods entered for consumption is $13,648,966; of woolen, $9,634,325; of cotton, $8,413,098; of flax, $4,268,826; and of miscellaneous goods, $3,362,219; making a total of $39,316,434. This amount, added to the amount withdrawn from warehouses during the year, ($5,657,895,) gives a grand total of $44,974,329 worth of foreign dry goods taken for consumption. Heavy orders have been given out, and if trade continues undisturbed there will be a larger importation the coming year than for many years past.

A Rare Chance.—A young gentleman, whose real name is "for the present withheld," addresses us a note which awakens all our sympathies, indicating as it does the "provoking and mortifying embarrassments which an accomplished man experiences," when he is out of tin. He says: "I am 28 years of age, five feet eleven inches and a half in height, a figure and a face said to be the model of symmetry and beauty—a gentleman by birth and inheritance, (there was never a mechanic in my family,) educated in a European University, an accomplished musician, a thorough linguist—and utterly incapable of earning a living. I should like to marry into a wealthy family, which, wanting the prestige of birth, would be elevated by an alliance with me. I could make myself generally useful in such a family, by teaching the younger members manners, and accustoming the elder to the easy carriage and grace of well-bred people. There are many wealthy families who have boxes at the opera, who, under my direction, would speedily learn to look as aristocratic and important as they try to persuade themselves they are. Such a family, after a few lessons from me, would pass for well-bred people—in a crowd—and I should make them understand the opera, which now they do not." We regard this as a rare chance.

A New Swindle.—A young German named William Schlacter, was arrested in New-York, recently, on a charge of constructive larceny, growing out of the following facts : Schlacter, on the 14th of January, called on Adele Dumnesney, a young German girl, residing up town, with whom he was previously acquainted, and stated to her that he wished to have a small sum of money, say $10, for present use; that he had a $50 bill himself, but did not wish to change it, and requested her to let him have what money she had, and that he would call on her in a day or two, refund her the $10, and take up his $50 bill. The girl, thinking all was right, gave him $7.50, all the money she had, upon which he handed her a piece of paper, having all the appearance of a neatly engraved bill, and decamped. The girl put it by without examining it, nor did she think of doing so until Tuesday last, when she took it out and looked at it, and to her utter astonishment found that it read as follows :

$50 VIGNETTE : $50
Secured by the pledge of the whole stock of Truth Honor & Fidelity
State of Matrimony : Engraving representing a lady & g'tleman
BANK OF TRUE LOVE.
Fifty. I promise to pay, on acceptance, the sincere homage and never failing devotion of an affectionate heart.

Hams.—The Southern Cultivator notices some hams exhibited at the Georgia State Fair, which were one, two, three, and four years old. The writer says, "The owner refused to divulge his secret, but as we have fortunately become possessed of it, we here give it. Procure some good, clean hickory ashes, have them perfectly dry; draw your meat from the pickle on a dry day; sprinkle the ashes over the meat pretty thick, being careful not to knock off more salt than what must fall off; then hang up your meat as high as possible; smoke it with cool smoke, made by hickory wood; be sure to take it down before the skipper-fly makes his appearance, being generally in this climate the first of March; pack it away on a dry day in casks; 1st, a layer of hams in perfectly dry hickory ashes; 2d, a course of corn cobs, &c.; cover your cask snug and tight, and you may rest easy about your hams."

Lamartine in Turkey.—A French journal gives some particulars of the estate recently bestowed by the Sultan on M. de Lamartine. The domain lies in the immediate vicinity of Smyrna, and is nearly as large as the Isle of Wight, being about fifty-four miles in circumference. It has hitherto belonged only to the crown. The soil is described as wonderfully fertile, like most of the land in the neighborhood of Smyrna, as being well planted with oranges and olives, and as capable of every variety of cultivation. The chateau, built for the residence of an imperial officer, is commodious beyond the usual run of Turkish houses; and under the windows lies a fine lake of more than a mile across, which is described as well stocked with fish. The estate includes five villages. M. de Lamartine, it is said, goes to Asia Minor in the spring, to take possession in person of his territorial gift.

Iron Lighthouse.—A beacon lighthouse has been recently invented, which is said to possess several advantages over those of the usual construction. The tower is to be entirely of iron, if of castings, the thickness of the plates to be quarter inch, and if of boiler iron, an eighth of an inch. The shape is octagonal, and the plates are securely fastened by screws to projecting stiles. The tower is divided into sections, each twelve feet high, which are firmly secured by screws to each other, but in such a manner that they can be easily taken apart for removal The whole structure will make a handsome lighthouse, which will last, be secure from fire, and, if necessary, can be taken down, removed to any other point, and put up again with great facility. Mechanics who have examined the model all agree that the invention must prove a successful one, and we hope soon to see it tested by the erection of such beacons.

Cotton in Africa.—A treaty has just been signed, by which the Danish settlements on the African gold-coast have been ceded to England, and the latter power is now debating the feasibility of raising a supply of cotton there. It is now produced there by the natives for their own use, and in the adjoining kingdom of Dahomey, the culture of cotton from American seed was attempted under the auspices of the late African traveler, John Duncan, in July last. He was furnished with the seed by the British Chamber of Commerce.

Coal in England.—The London Times, speaking of the coal-beds of England, says : "The exhaustion of our coal-beds would be the final and utter catastrophe of our greatness, and England would immediately sink into a third-rate power. It is to coal that we owe everything which is great in our position and history. Our coal fields are the rude foundation of this fair Corinthian pile, and England is as much indebted to them as Egypt to her Nile, Athens to her schools, and Rome to her policy and arms."

The Scientific American is authorized to state, that one of our Gutta Percha manufactures stands ready to lay down, and guaranty its integrity for ten years, a line of perfectly insulated wires covered with Gutta Percha, across the ocean, for a sum not to exceed three millions of dollars, to be completed in twenty months from date of contract, under any forfeiture that may be required. This grand scheme will receive the attention of Congress at an early day. He is ready to lay down a similar line on the underground plan, from the Mississippi to the Pacific, to be completed within three years from the date of contract.

The Woonsocket Patriot says that an antiquarian friend, who has recently been searching the town records of Wrentham, Mass., ascertained that the Indian name of that town was Woollumonuppoag. In the year 1672, the inhabitants petitioned the General Court to be incorporated, and to have the name changed to Wrentham. The same paper says that the Indian name of Sneach's Pond, in that town, was Sneachecunet, for the meaning of which the curious are referred to the Woonsocket antiquarian, S. Chase Newman, Esq.

The Swansea (Eng.) Herald publishes the following : "Last week, a hare, pursued by some greyhounds, after several turns, and being hardly pressed, jumped on the back of a young horse, where she fixed herself astride. The affrighted animal, not being accustomed to such a rider, bounded off at full speed, kicking and plunging, accompanied by the dogs. This continued from four to five minutes, when, choosing a favorable situation, puss hopped off, and very gallantly made her escape."

A traveler in Asia Minor, at a period of distressing drought, found a vase of water under a little shed by the road-side, for the refreshment of the weary traveler. A man in the neighborhood was in the habit of bringing the water from a considerable distance, and filling the vase every morning, and then going to his work. He could have had no motive to do this, but a kind regard for the comfort of weary travelers, for he was never there to receive their thanks, much less their money. This was an example of disinterested benevolence.

In matters of great importance, and which must be done, there is no surer argument of a weak mind than irresolution. To be undetermined where the case is so plain, and the necessity so urgent; to be always intending to lead a new life, but never to find time to set about it; this is as if a man should put off eating, and drinking, and sleeping, from one day and one night to another, till he is starved and destroyed.

The block of stone, contributed by the State of Delaware to the Washington Monument, has been dressed by Messrs. Strothers of Philadelphia. The block, which is of Brandywine Granite, quarried about 15 miles from Wilmington, is four feet square, and weighs a ton. On the top is a handsome bust of Washington, and on the side the word "Delaware," both above and below which are the figures "1849."

It is estimated that $42,000,000 of gold will be mined in California from June, 1849, to June, 1850. To offset this it is calculated that 100,000 persons will arrive there during the same time at a cost of $500 each, or $50,000,000 for the whole—so that the California speculation will be $8,000,000 "over the left."

In an account of the recent expedition in search of Sir John Franklin, it is stated they were eighty days without seeing the sun, and had the thermometer fifty degrees below zero. They served out their rations of fifth proof brandy by chopping it up with a hatchet, it being frozen solid.

Parsnips appear to be nearly the only root good for swine in an uncooked state. Turn a herd of swine into a field containing field beets, ruta bagas, carrots, and parsnips, and the question will very soon be settled which they like best, and which consequently is best for them, the parsnips being wholly devoured before the others are touched.

In London there are 12,000 children regularly under training to crime, 30,000 thieves, 6,000 receivers of stolen goods, 23,000 persons picked up in a state of drunkenness, 50,000 habitual gin-drinkers, and 150,000 of both sexes leading an abandoned life.

Massachusetts has about three millions of dollars invested in school-houses. Mr. Everett it was who said so quaintly, "If you reduce the wages of the schoolmaster, you must raise those of the recruiting sergeant."

Those who can most easily dispense with society, are the most calculated to adorn it; they only are dependent on it who possess no mental resources; for, though they bring nothing to the general mart, like beggars, they are too poor to stay at home.

According to the dimensions of the human frame, the female waist should measure from 27 to 29 inches; but some ladies do not permit themselves to grow beyond 24, while thousands are laced to 22, and some to less than 20 inches. Yellow faces and general debility are the consequences.

Some cute and observing writer has said, that the distinguishing characteristic of the French people was frivolity, amounting to insincerity; of the English, positiveness, amounting to dogmatism; and of the Americans, exaggeration, amounting to ludicrousness.

A lawyer once wrote "rascal" in the hat of a brother lawyer, who, on discovering it, entered a complaint in open Court against the trespasser, who, he said, had not only taken his hat, but had written his own name in it.

At a small but beautiful chapel in the parish of Whitechurch, Little Stanmore, ten miles from London, is placed the organ once belonging to Handel, and on which he performed, being organist to the Chandos family.

In England, travel by railroad is much more safe than by stages; out of 28,000,000 persons traveling on their roads for six months, only 96 were killed, and 5 only of these were killed from causes beyond their own control.

DeRuyter Institute.

The Academic Year of this Institution for 1849–50 will commence the last Wednesday in August, and continue forty-three consecutive weeks, ending the last Wednesday of June, including a recess of ten days for Christmas and New Year holidays. The Year will be divided into three Terms:

The First, commencing August 29, of 14 weeks.
The Second, " December 5, of 15 "
The Third, " March 20, of 14 "

Encouraged by the success of the School under its present Instructors, the friends of the Institute have made liberal additions to its library, cabinet and apparatus, thus furnishing ample facilities for illustrating branches taught in the various departments.

The Literary Department is as heretofore under the supervision of Rev. JAMES R. IRISH, A. M., President, assisted by other able instructors. In this Department, especial attention is given to the lower English Branches. Students are also fitted in the Classics to enter the advanced classes in College.

The Department of Natural Science is conducted by Professor GURDON EVANS. In this, Natural Philosophy, Astronomy, Geology, Natural History, and Chemistry, are taught in a manner of unsurpassed interest With it is connected the Department of Agricultura Science.

The Farmer's Course is thoroughly scientific; embracing the study of the best authors, with daily recitations. During the Winter Term two hours each day will be spent in the Analytical Laboratory, where students will be instructed in the constitution of soils and ashes of plants, with a minute examination of their constituent elements, and the various modes of testing for their presence.

A course of lectures is given during the Term on Practical Farming, explaining the relation of Geology to Agriculture, the Soil, the Plant, and the Animal, and their various relations, the Rotation of Crops, Feeding Animals, Manures, Draining Lands, &c., &c. For further information see Catalogue.

Besides Globes, Maps, &c., for the illustration of Astronomy, a Newtonian Telescope of high magnifying power has recently been added to the apparatus.

During the Summer Term, Botany and Geology receive special attention, illustrated by excursions to localities where these sciences may be studied as seen in nature. A Geological and Mineralogical Cabinet is accessible to the students.

The Mathematical Department is under the instruction of OLIVER B. IRISH, Tutor. It embraces thorough instruction in Arithmetic, and the higher pure and practical Mathematics, with field exercises in Engineering and Surveying.

Elocution, embracing Reading, Declamation, General Oratory, and Writing, receives the special attention of a competent teacher.

The Teacher's Department will, as formerly, be in operation during the Fall Term, and last half of the Winter Term. Particular attention to this is solicited from all who intend to teach district schools.

The Female Department is under the care of Miss SUSANNA M. COON, a graduate of Troy Female Seminary, a lady every way competent for this responsible station.

No efforts will be spared to render the young ladies of this Seminary truly accomplished, as well in the social relations of life, as in the substantial branches of learning and the higher refinements of education. Ample facilities are furnished for pursuing French, Italian, German, Drawing, Painting, Music on the Piano, and Vocal Music.

Information.

Good board in private families from $1 25 to $1 50. Parents from abroad should furnish their children with very little pocket money, as many temptations may thus be avoided. Those who wish may deposit money with either of the teachers, to be disbursed according to order, without extra charge.

Tuition, to be settled in advance, per term, from $3 00 to $5 00. Extras—For Drawing, $1 00; Monochromatic Painting, $3 00; Oil Painting, $5 00; Chemical Experiments, $1 00; Writing, including Stationery, 50c.; Tuition on Piano, $8 00; Use of Instrument, $2 00; in Agricultural Chemistry, including Chemicals, Apparatus, fires, &c., (breakage extra,) $12 00.

N. B. A daily stage leaves the railroad and canal at Chittenango for this place at 4 o'clock P. M.

For further information address the President, J. R. Irish, or Professor Gurdon Evans, DeRuyter, Madison Co., N. Y.

NOTES OF A VOYAGE TO CALIFORNIA.—No. 3.

From letters of Dr. J. D. B. Stillman to his friends in New York.

More about Rio.

Rio Janeiro is near the southern limit of the torrid zone; but, owing to the mountainous character of the country, there is very little extreme heat. The mornings are sultry, but the sea-breeze sets in about eleven o'clock A. M., when it is cool and comfortable. There has been no complaint of sickness, other than is common to the corresponding season at home. The harbor, with the scenery around it, is celebrated all over the world. I hardly know how it could be improved. I have roamed over its mountains, and paddled along its shores, and among its islands, day after day; but their novelty is varied with every day's adventures. The bay, with its hundred islands, and innumerable vessels, seems almost beneath your feet, though of an extent unimagined from the shore, owing to the interruption.

There are many things worthy of note in Rio. Slavery is the conspicuous feature in its social organization. The population is a mixture of the white and black races, in every perceptible gradation; there is no distinction made in this respect; all are treated with equal consideration. Black and white soldiers are mingled, and often commanded by a black officer. The Emperor has around him chiefly Portuguese, though his family physician is a mulatto. The population, under the present order of things, must ultimately become mulatto. From the numerous tatooed faces to be seen in the street, the importation of slaves must be great. On landing, they are the first objects that attract your attention—nearly naked, and laboring at the oars with all their might in the hot sun. They seem, at first view, to comprehend nine-tenths of the population. Farther into the town, you see them bearing burthens of every description on their heads. The town is supplied with water by an acqueduct from the mountains. The water is distributed to several fountains, from whence it is carried in kegs, holding about twelve gallons, on the heads of negroes. It is astonishing with what accuracy they balance these vessels of water, without the least apparent care. When the kegs are empty, they are turned upon their sides, and carried in the same way. No filth is thrown into the streets, or retained in sinks, but is conveyed in the same way to the shore, and thrown into the water. Carts are used, sometimes drawn by negroes, and sometimes by mules.

The Emperor's Palace is a fine building, facing the Plaza, but is much inferior to some of the palaces of our merchant princes. Last Sunday was a great day. By the way, such days are so numerous here, that even Brazilians do not keep the run of them. The troops were under arms, and the Imperial Pair rode through the town in their Coach of State, preceded by nobles and ladies of honor, and followed by about one thousand horse, and all going at full speed. I followed the crowd to the palace, and here a general review of troops took place. The firing of cannon and musketry, the ringing of bells, and the glittering array of the diplomatic corps in their court dress, even to our own Mr. Todd, made us forget that this was Sunday. Three cheers were given, by order of the Commander-in-Chief, for the Emperor, Empress, and State, but such a feeble cry I never heard before from such a crowd.

I was here on the Queen's birth-day, and went to mass with them. It was the most magnificent worship that I ever saw. The imperial palace, though some distance from the private palace, is connected with it by a building thrown across the Ruo Direiter and a range of buildings from this to the chapel. The chapel itself is most gorgeously decorated; every part of the building, from the ceiling to the floor, is occupied with some ornament of painting or gold. We saw the procession moving through the palace, toward the church, and we hastened to secure a place. First came the priests bearing wax candles; then a line of superbly-dressed men in uniform, among whom I recognized the heads of the several departments of State; the Minister of War, especially, was dressed in a coat which an officer told me could not have cost less than one thousand dollars. These all stopped in the way, and then came the Archbishop, with his yellow mitre and crosier, and his robe held by several priests. Then came the Emperor, a manly-looking youngster, but I have seen better looking; his appearance seemed to be his greatest concern, and as he came out into view, he stopped to look about him, and give all an opportunity to know who was the man; then advanced towards the altar, through his body guard in green uniform with lances, and mounted a sort of pedestal with a canopy over it, while all the nobles knelt on the open floor, and amid the thunder of cannon and the gleaming of spears, the Emperor bowed himself in humble prayer. He retired from the chapel in the same formal way. His sword scabbard was of pure gold, and the hilt was studded with diamonds, one of which is said to be valued at £600,000. I saw the effigy of our Saviour bearing his cross, of full size, and made of wax, borne along by a procession, and followed by the Emperor on foot. It was at night, and a long file of priests followed with huge wax candles—the Emperor himself bore one.

The Brazilians are remarkably kind to us wherever we go. Soon after our arrival, we crossed over the bay to the beautiful little villages of St. Domingo and Praya Grande. For several miles beyond, the country presented a continued succession of orange groves, intermingled with bananas, citrons, and limes. At no place were we denied admission, and we rambled on through gardens and groves, helping ourselves to anything we wished; but we had to regret our inability to talk the language. Very few of the beautiful flowers and fruits were known to us. When interrupted in our course by hedges, we would pass through the houses. We came, at length, to the base of a mountain, and here the negroes made signs to intimate that we should not proceed. We saw the tall forests, and brilliant flowers, among which the rhododendron, crowded with large purple blossoms, was the most conspicuous. We followed along a narrow path near the foot of the hill, to a cottage, where a Portuguese told us, in French, that we must not go farther, and we then retraced our steps.

Our first object, when we landed, was to find a place to sleep. The Hotel Pharoux was crowded to overflowing. At the Hotel de l'Univers we obtained a room for six dollars per day, but on account of some ungracious treatment, we took quarters at the Hotel Revot on Ruo do Ouvidor. The hotels are conducted much on the French style, but the mode of swindling practiced in them is purely Brazilian.

There are two places which all foreigners are anxious to visit—Mount Corcovado and the Botanic Gardens. One morning we procured a coach and four mules, with a driver and muleteer, who is a man with immense boots, and patent leather bell-crowned hat—for this we were to pay eight dollars—and off we started for the Garden. Our route lay along the outer edge of the town to Boto-fogo, which is the shore of a bayo lined with charming villas and gardens, and terraced for a carriage road. Near the Sugar Loaf Mountain, the road turns inland, and on either side, for three miles, is one continued succession of beautiful cottages and gardens. On the right, we passed the perpendicular face of Corcovado, and on the left is lake Tagandes. We drove on beyond the garden to an inn, where we ordered dinner, and then entered the garden. This was founded before the independence of Brazil, and contains some large trees, among which are the bread-fruit, the jack-fruit, which nearly resembles it, and palms, in regular rows, with beautiful green trunks terminating at the base in a bulb like a cask, of the color of unpainted wood, and with circles like hoops. Nearly all the valuable productions of the torrid zone are collected here—coffee, which grows profusely everywhere, tea, cloves, cinnamon, pepper, &c. Cascades, fountains, and green-houses—hill, valley and stream—all, are combined to increase the beauty of this celebrated garden.

But to me, the ascent of Corcovado, on a succeeding day, was far more interesting. The road lies along the Aqueduct for several miles, winding among the hills, with a gradual ascent, and affording a series of views at every turn, surpassing all that I ever dreamed of in my most visionary moments. The Aqueduct is a work of no small interest. It was begun some two hundred years ago, and is formed of stone and cement. Every two rods there is an iron gate, with a cup, and steps leading down to the water. The supply is kept up from rivulets and springs, by earthen troughs laid in cement. For nearly two-thirds of the way up the mountain, the road lies through a wild forest, of difficult ascent, where vines of huge dimensions twine themselves, like vast serpents, and send out their branches in every direction. Parasitic plants, of great size and beauty, hang from the trees; one, of the form of a century plant, with a long spike of pink flowers, I detached, but, like nearly all the finest plants of the tropics, it was difficult, if not impossible, to be preserved. Birds are rare, though reptiles and beautiful butterflies are met with at every step; and a small black monkey grinned at us, and was off without farther explanation. The view from the summit will well repay many a weary day of toil; though one of our company, whose indisposition to exercise had made it a wonder why he should have attempted it, said, as he threw himself down on a rock, without looking about him, "It may be very fine, but if all the beautiful views on the earth were centered around this —— rock, I would not come here again." The summit is now, as I write, visible above the clouds, like an index on the sky.

THE CHILD'S PLAYHOUSE.

BY ANN PRESTON.

Who has not been a child, and made
A playhouse 'neath the trees?
And who so old but groweth young
When passing one of these?

I saw one in a cool, green nook,
Anear a cottage wall,
Built cunningly, with many rooms,
And stored with playthings small.

Prompt little hands had laid stone walls,
And swept the mossy floors,
And sticks across the openings laid,
Were gravely called "the doors."

On snowy shelves, which oft would fall,
Were treasures rare, I ween—
The broken "chinas" glistened there,
In blue, and red, and green.

The golden light of childhood's morn,
While gazing, round me stole,
And fragrance, from its far, sweet shores,
Passed breeze-like, o'er my soul.

Once more I trod the green mossed bank,
Where, 'neath a school-house tree,
From tiny acorn cups we drank,
And called it "taking tea."

We held our "meeting" o'er again,
And I was preacher there,
And with mock gravity we wore
Our serious Quaker air.

But those who put on matron airs,
And played the mother then,
The fairest one of all our school,
Now walketh not with men.

Thou too whose dark eyes proudly beamed,
The stateliest of that band,
Mid summer toils, hast gone away
Unto "the silent land."

These mosses still their little cheeks
'Gainst sister mosses lay,
While, of the three who leaned on them,
But I, the weakest, stay.

Oh! earth would be one funeral pyre,
And life a dream of pain,
If beauty did not live for aye,
And God and Love remain.

CHURCH DISCIPLINE.

Farther Remarks on President Mahan's Article.

Suppose that a member of the church commits an offense, and that one or more other members are knowing to the circumstance. Now, if the rule in the 18th chapter of Matthew be followed, it will require each one who knows of the wrong to take the earliest opportunity, and labor to induce the author of the wrong done to correct the same, whatever may be requisite to that end. Some would find earlier, and others later opportunities, to take the matter up. If the case should require the second step, viz., that these individuals should take one or two with them, and in that way make an effort to adjust the matter, some would probably complete that labor while others were attending to the first step, and before others could find it practicable to attend to the case at all. But whenever any one group of persons should have taken this second step of labor, without effecting the object in view, it would be their duty to report the case to the church, and upon their representation, (they being always held responsible for the proof of the charges brought,) the church would be prepared to take the subject up, and inform the accused what things they required of him. If he should comply therewith, he would retain his standing in the church; if not, he would be excommunicated.

Such, I understand, would be the practical working of this law; and such, I suppose, ought to be the discipline of the church in all cases, even where the offender should be required to suffer death for his offense by the civil authorities. But to this view of discipline, President Mahan objects, and argues at some length. As I understand him, his objections, in a practical sense, may be chiefly summed up in the two following:

1st. That it is not effectual as a means of reforming the offender.

2d. That it prevents the church from ridding herself of unworthy and wicked members.

That the rule under consideration would be ineffectual in other than cases of deliberate wickedness, I do not understand President Mahan to hold; though he considers it inapplicable to all such as he denominates public offenses. If, however, it should appear, that treating deliberate offenders according to this rule, before turning them out of the church, would be the most likely way to reform them, before or in the event of their being turned out of the church, the first objection would be obviated.

Let us look at these two ways of dealing with offenders, and consider their natural effects.

In one case, an offense is committed of such a nature as to be called a public offense. But no one goes to the offender to urge him to repentance, and to make restitution. The matter may be the general topic of conversation throughout the church, congregation, and community, and this may be known or unknown to the accused. Be this as it may, no one advises with him touching it. Brethren who have covenanted with him mutually to watch over each other for good, are silent, distant, and cold in their conduct towards him. But a church-meeting takes place, and some one informs the church that such and such things have been or are reported to have been done by such an individual. The church appoints a committee, which investigates the case, and reports that the charges are true—that deliberate wickedness has been committed. The offender, unable to show the contrary, must be excluded at once. No matter what views or feelings he may now appear to have respecting his conduct, nothing but a life of piety out of the church can be taken as evidence of real repentance; nothing but turning him out can sufficiently express the righteous indignation of the church in view of his crime; and the excommunication of the member is consummated. No doubt such a course of treatment would make an individual feel very deeply, unless (which might be as reasonable to suppose) it should, by its abrupt and extraordinary force, annihilate the power to feel. But, allowing that its effect is to produce feeling, the question arises as to what kind of feeling it would probably be. Would the man be apt to feel that his brethren had been under the influence of strong love to him—that they deeply grieved on account of his stumbling or sin—or that they had rather pursued a course more significant of cowardly despite than holy boldness? Who, of all the actors in such a transaction, would be led to exhibit an instance, an illustration, of that soul-impelling, self-prompting solicitude for a brother's welfare, which every one knows brethren ought to possess, and which, if they do possess, will, from its own nature, as certainly and necessarily incline them (without reference to what others may do) to seek the restoration of those who sin, as the laws of gravitation and chemical affinity will attract their kindred objects which lie within their influence. Now, if a member gets into sin, it is natural to suppose, that he has lost his first love, and is in darkness—that he, of course, is not in a situation to recognize the spirit of Christ in the treatment of the church towards him, unless it be very prominently and clearly manifested. While he sees that the church will not suffer sin upon him, he should also have evidence that his brethren long after him and his salvation, with some such feelings as the Saviour had when he looked on Peter with such a look that it dissolved, or, as it were, thawed the chilled and icy fountain of his heart—made him weep bitterly, and, as we have every reason to believe, pour out an abundant flood of tears. But this mode of discipline has nothing in it calculated to produce such relentings. No one will deny that the church, as a whole, and each member individually, ought ardently to wish the reformation and restoration of the offender; or, that such a wish or desire should be indisputably manifest in all that is done. But a decided and ruinous defect in the plan of discipline here in question is, that it does not provide for or even allow of the natural and immediate manifestation of the state of heart and affections most essential to and inseparable from deep and active piety. I am fully convinced, that an individual in the full enjoyment of religion, on being required to vote for or acquiesce in the excommunication of a member before he should be allowed to labor with the offender to make his standing good, would feel that such a requirement was a violation of the nature of pure and undefiled religion, and that it had necessarily the effect to suppress its native promptings; or, in other words, to quench the Spirit of God, when it was burning like a flame in the heart, and shedding its holy light and warmth over the soul, to make it bring forth the fruits of righteousness. But this plan of discipline assumes, that the offender cannot in any way lay the church under obligation to forgive, and retain him as a member, or even justify them in so doing, by any professions of repentance, promises of reformation, or efforts for restitution, within his power. Not only so, but it dashes the offender aside with such abruptness and sternness as must arouse the instinct of self-protection, provoke self-justification, annihilate his confidence in the church as touching its feelings towards him; and, instead of having any thing in it to draw the man back to the church, it must prompt him to congratulate himself as having escaped from or as being thrown out of the reach of a relentless inquisition—an engine of terror. Thus any disposition to labor with the offender as a member of the church, and for his reformation as such while in the church, is choked in its very birth, and forbidden as being wrong; and this, as I understand it, on the ground, among others, that it is dangerous to trust in my pretensions of reform induced by or made under the influence of such a motive as the retaining of one's standing, and that a prolonged course of correct living only, can restore confidence so far as to reinstate the man as a member of the church. If this be so, then the same danger in kind, if not in degree, would make it proportionably improper to present such or other motives to induce the man to reform after excommunication, if he should be susceptible of being influenced by them. So I think, that this plan of discipline goes to discourage effort for the restoration of the offender, and is not in harmony with the principles and nature of Christianity. But suppose that, after a person had been turned out of the church, according to President Mahan's plan, the church as such, or its members as individuals, should make efforts to reclaim him, would he be likely to listen to and comply with their advice? I admit there is reason to believe, that excommunication may operate, if rightly come at, as the means of saving the soul, when nothing else, which men or the ceurch can do, will be of any use, unless in connection with that. But the question here is, whether the way of getting at this step or measure, proposed by President Mahan, is the way to give the measure the most salutary influence, or saving effect. It seems to me that it is not.

How is it with the other plan of discipline, as touching its tendency to reform the offender. Let us look at it? The first notice the offender has of his wrong being taken up, individual brethren call upon him by himself, at different times, and talk with him of his error or sin, and advise him as to what they think he ought to do in the case. He perceives that there has been no concert between those brethren about the matter, but that each has been moved by a principle within himself, which inclined him to do all in his power to correct the wrong, and to reclaim the offender, in the most unostentatious way possible; avoiding the provocation of an unnecessary public notice of the case, and the danger of proceeding on mere report, and at the same time informing the accused of what might be alledged against him; thus affording him opportunity to correct any misrepresentation or mistake which might be abroad on the subject. What a channel this plan affords for the natural flow of pure, single-hearted love and faithfulness! What a gentle but all-subduing power it brings to bear upon the delinquent. It comes, not like the earthquake or tornado, to swallow him up at once, or scatter his severed limbs to the four winds; but it descends or distils upon him like the gentle yet copious vernal shower. It comes to refresh, to fertilize, and give activity to life, if life remains. The man finds himself besieged on all sides, and from all quarters; and wherever he moves, he is made sensible of the presence of a silent, salutary, and all-pervading influence, to turn him from his wicked ways. But suppose the offender is unyielding. Then the power is redoubled, by each of these persons taking one or two more with them, to improve their counsel, witness to the facts developed, and again to try to lead the offender into the way of duty. Thus, as it were, by a compound lever, the united force of so many constitutes a power which, though not irresistible, can only be increased one degree, and that by calling the whole church to combine their strength to effect the object. If it be found necessary to do that, some one or more of the groups of brethren who have taken the subject up should spread the matter before the church. And, when it is done, the offender cannot find even a ground of plausible complaint, that his brethren have acted on incorrect information, or false report, or that they have given an injurious, untimely, or unnecessary notoriety to the subject. His mouth will be closed as to any fault in the proceedings. As, in the nature of things, two or more witnesses are requisite properly to prove a point, a single group of persons who have labored together in a case will possess the requisites to establish the facts in the case. But if, as many have been acting in the case, taking the first and second steps, as is reasonable to suppose, before it is reported, there will be abundant evidence in the case, and intelligence in the church on the subject, so that there will be no need of appointing any committee, but by the mouths of an ample number of well-qualified witnesses, having every word established, the decision of the church as to its requirements upon the offender can be pronounced at once, and the offender informed of the same. If he hears the church, well; and if not, he must be excluded. There is no necessity for this mode of discipline being protracted, lax, over-indulgent, or non-significant of sufficient indignation on the part of the church against sin. When excommunication follows in the course of this plan of discipline, could the rejected member fail to accord to his brethren, or the church, that they had acted upon and acted out Christian principles? And will he not, upon mature reflection, feel the influence of their treatment of him, drawing him back to the church and his violated covenant. Especially, will not such be the effect thereof, if the church parts with him having the right view of the matter, namely, that the good of the offender was one main object looked to in his excommunication? It appears to me, that this plan in respect to working the reformation of the offender, at every step and stage of it, both while the delinquent is under deal in, and after he has been turned out of the church, is incalculably more powerful than that presented by President Mahan. And unless the Scriptures direct to the contrary, I think the greater power of this plan would dictate that it should be universally employed.

But inasmuch as this plan cannot be brought to bear upon persons with whom the church or its members cannot communicate, and as it admits of the possibility of members retaining their standing (on profession repentance and reformation) whatever their offenses may have been, therefore, the second objection above noticed comes up, which is, that it prevents the church from ridding herself of unworthy and wicked members. But I remark, first, on this point, that so far from the church being under obligation to excommunicate her members, when she cannot communicate with them, she has not even the right to do so in any case; first, because she is wholly irresponsible for their conduct, if she cannot reach them; and, secondly, because they have the right of trial, and especially to be heard in their own defense, before they can be excommunicated. The only proper course for the church to take in such cases, is to let the matter entirely alone, until it can reach or communicate with the member. And if the character of a church is not good enough to prevent suspicion arising against her for such a cause, I think all she could do in the way of discipling members who were out of her reach, would be but poor security for her reputation. The case of the member whom President Mahan supposed to come and commune with the church, and then hide himself or go away so soon that the rule in Matthew could not be applied to him, I think is not a supposable case; that is, if the member comes, as President Mahan supposed, it would be perfectly easy to apply the rule to him, for they might take his case in hand on the spot, as a service of ordinary length would be long enough for that. In regard to the other part of this objection—the retaining offending members on their professing to repent, and thus opening a door for wickedness and corruption to shelter itself in the church—as I understand President Mahan to regard it, I remark, that the church is not accountable to be either omniscient or infallible. If all manner of sins may be forgiven unto men, which the church can take cognizance of, (as I suppose it cannot of that against the Holy Ghost,) I ask, why it is not the duty of the church to forgive and retain as members all persons, whatever their offenses have been, who to all practicable extent undo the wrong they have done, and thus show such signs of repentance as the circumstances allow of? Does not God hold every sinner, especially the deliberate sinner, under obligation to immediate repentance? Can the sinner not repent at once? and, if he does, will not God immediately forgive him? God is not obliged to wait for the merit of a long catalogue of good works, although no doubt the repentance requisite to forgiveness is such as will lead to good works. If, therefore, an offending member professes to repent, reforms, and so far as practicable makes restitution at once, professes to feel that God has forgiven him, and asks his brethren to forgive him—ought they not to do so? The condemned criminal in his dungeon, even under the sentence of death, may have the benefit of clergy, because it is thought he may repent, find mercy, and from the gallows pass into the presence and embrace of his God. Now suppose that malefactor to be a member of the church, and that from the time he was apprehended he gave evidence of being penitent, or became so, would not the church be under obligation to allow him to retain his standing during the few hours or days he might have to live? Would the duty of forgiveness, so much insisted on in the Scriptures, allow the church to cut the member off? The church no doubt ought to require offenders to meet fully the demands of the case they may stand in, or go out of the church; but for the church to tell the member that she will not allow him to remain a member on any condition—that she will excommunicate him—does not appear to me to be either scriptural or reasonable. And the more I think of the subject, the more it seems to me that the rule in the 18th chapter of Matthew is perfect as a universal law for discipline in the church.

REMINISCENCE.

It was midnight. Our little village was still, and its inhabitants generally enjoying the slumber and repose so needful to restore wearied nature after the toils of the week, and the anxieties of a revival Sabbath. Nevertheless, feeling the solicitude of a young pastor in a time of intense religious interest among the dear people of his charge, sleep had not yet come to our relief. After the close of the evening meeting, we had enjoyed an unusually protracted season of family devotion, and a most precious time in the closet. On retiring, the duty and privilege of prayer still pressed the heart to pour its silent ejaculations into the open bosom of its God. While thus employed, we heard rap, rap, rap, at the door; on approaching which, and inquiring the cause, the well-known female voice of a neighbor answered, 'My husband wishes you to come and pray with him.'

On entering his house and inquiring, what do you wish Mr. L.? the only reply was agonizing, intense weeping, and a most beseeching shake of the hand. We knelt in solemn prayer, and besought the Lord, for the sake of the dear Redeemer, to calm the turbulent passions, and speak peace to the troubled soul.

The tongue of the convicted man was then lossed. He made full confession of many sins; but the one sin which caused the deepest wound, and seemed altogether unpardonable, was falsehood concerning his religious belief. He said he had for years pretended to be a Universalist, and had often, very often, declared with an oath, that he believed without a doubt that that was the true doctrine of the Bible, when at the same time he knew it was false, and expected to suffer the pangs of eternal despair, unless he repented of thus lying and deceiving his fellow men, and embraced the opposite belief.

It was truly heart-rending to see how poor depraved human nature would oppose the truth and vindicate error amidst the clearest conviction of its awful delusion! But in this case truth triumphed. The heart yielded to its demands. Christ exhibited himself the sinner's friend. The next morning the young disciple set up the altar of God in his family, and himself became a priest to offer daily sacrifice thereon.

THE PERSON OF OUR SAVIOR.

Historians say that Publius Lentilus, being President in the days of Tiberius Cæsar the Emperor, wrote the following epistle to the Senate concerning the person of Jesus Christ.

Conscript Fathers, (Patrus Conscripti)—There has appeared in these our days, a man of great virtue named Jesus Christ, who is yet living amongst us, and of the Gentiles is accepted as a prophet of truth. But his own disciples call him the son of God, he hath raised the dead, and cureth all manner of diseases, he is a man of stature, somewhat tall and comely, with a very reverend countenance, such as the beholders may both love and fear; his hair is of the color of the filbert when fully ripe, plain to his ears, whence downward it is more orient of color, curling and waiving about his shoulders; in the midst of his head is a seam or partition of his hair after the manner of the Nazarites: his forehead is plain and delicate, his face is without spot or wrinkle, beautified with a comely red, his nose and mouth are exactly formed, his beard is of the color of his hair, and thick not of any great length but forked: in reproving he is terrible, in admonishing, courteous; in speaking, very modest and wise; in proportion of body well shaped. None have seen him laugh, but many have seen him weep. A man for his surpassing beauty excelling the children of men."

This epistle or letter of Publius Lentilus is stated to have been taken from the public records at Rome by the Emperor, Napoleon Bonaparte, at the time he rifled that city of so many of its valuable manuscripts. It was written at the time and on the spot where our Savior commenced his ministry.

SUBSTITUTE FOR INFANT BAPTISM.

We clipped the following paragraph, some time ago, out of a well-conducted Baptist journal which we rarely read but with pleasure and profit. It is a portion, if we remember right, of an editorial letter written from Baltimore:—

> "The Baptist cause in Baltimore is evidently gaining in real strength and efficiency. Most of the churches are enjoying an encouraging prosperity. Dr. Fuller has been preaching of late with frequency and point on the peculiarities of our denominational faith and practice, and a spirit of earnest inquiry has been awakened in the city, leading many, like Baptist Noel, to be baptized on the profession of their own faith, instead of relying on the faith of their parents or sponsors. Dr. Fuller, for many years, has followed a practice with reference to children, which is in strict accordance with scriptural example, and secures all the hallowed influences and associations claimed for infant baptism, with few or none of its abuses. The practice to which we allude is 'blessing' children, in imitation of the Saviour. The ceremony is performed either in public at the church, or in private in the family circle; and the services consist of a prayer, and admonitions addressed to the parents on the solemn responsibilities involved in training an immortal soul for God and heaven. If this custom were introduced into our churches generally, it might perhaps modify or abrogate the present mode of infant baptism among our Pedobaptist brethren. We commend it to the attention of pastors of Baptist churches throughout the Union."

It is with no controversial design, that we transfer this interesting item of information to our columns. We will not even inquire—far less can we undertake to decide—whether the adoption of this practice of "blessing" children in the Baptist churches will tend to "abrogate" infant baptism among the Congregationalists and Presbyterians, or to prepare the way for introducing it among those who now reject it. We rejoice in the movement chiefly because it shows—even in a quarter where such a manifestation was least to be expected—a recognition of the great principle that the children of the Church do in some sense belong to the Church, that the lambs of the flock are cared for and carried by the great Shepherd, and that believing parents are to bring their children to Christ and so to train them up in his nurture. All our churches, the Pedobaptist as well as the Baptist, have suffered by the practical neglect of this principle.

Certainly, to those who doubt the propriety of infant baptism, the practice which Dr. Fuller has introduced at Baltimore cannot be too highly commended.

We clipped the foregoing, some weeks ago, from the columns of the Independent, one of the very best of our exchanges; and we now avail ourselves of it as a sort of text, from which to throw out a few hints to our readers upon the duty of laboring for the salvation of their children. Whether Baptists are more prone to neglect this duty than Pedobaptists, is a question which we leave for others to decide. The latter are known to take upon themselves a solemn vow to train their children for God, when they present them for baptism. The former are not supposed to take any other vow than what is implied in their own baptism. It is not unlikely, that the Pedobaptist parent, when reverting to the vow which he took upon himself so solemnly in the presence of the great congregation, may derive from it some stimulation to the performance of his duty. He feels that it would be an awful thing to violate so sacred a pledge. But this does not, in our opinion, give any weight to the Pedobaptist side of the controversy. If it shall appear, upon investigation, that Pedobaptists are more careful to perform their parental duties than Baptists, the true philosophy of it will be found to consist—not in the fact that their children have received baptism, but—in the fact that they have themselves come under a special pledge to perform their parental duties. The plain, common people among them, not being in the habit of discriminating very closely, and having always seen the giving of this pledge associated with the baptism of the child, have become accustomed to view the two as inseparably connected. It is not much wonder, therefore, that they cleave to infant baptism with considerable tenacity. But the pledge given by the parent, and the baptism conferred upon the child, are two distinct things, between which there is no necessary connection. The pledge itself is very well; perhaps Baptists ought to enter into it, as well as Pedobaptists, and in as public a manner. But there can be no necessity for superadding a rite, the application of which is limited by the Head of the Church to believers, in order to awaken a sense of responsibility on the part of parents. We agree with the Independent, that the practice of Dr. Fuller cannot be too highly commended. We should like to see it universally adopted. In our opinion, however, it ought to be a voluntary thing with the parents, whether to present their children for such a ceremony, or not. That it should be obligatory, and indispensable to church fellowship, we are not yet prepared to maintain. That something is needed to awaken a keener sense of parental responsibility, must be evident to every reflecting mind. Great numbers of professors, instead of training up their children in the fear of God, suffer them to grow up, subjected to such influences only as the providence of God may throw around them, independently of their own personal exertions in their behalf. This is a crying sin. It may be, that ministers do not, sufficiently often, make this subject the theme of pulpit discourse. It may be, that some parents sit, year after year, under the ministrations of their pastor, without hearing a word upon the duty of training up children in the nurture and admonition of the Lord. It may be, that the pastor, conscious of the imperfections of his own household, and of the current opinion, that "ministers' and deacons' children are always the worst in the parish," is deterred from the faithful performance of his duty, lest it should be rung in his ears, before the week is out, Physician, heal thyself. But pastors ought not to be easily intimidated. There will always be found people sufficiently ill-natured to deal in such remarks; and the more guilty they feel themselves to be of the sins which he reproves—the more their consciences wince and smart—the more ready will they be to deal in them. Let pastors do their duty, fearlessly, in this respect. The practice of "blessing" little children would furnish very suitable occasions for discourses upon parental responsibility. It would furnish them in such frequency, that the subject would not be forgotten by the people, but they would have it continually before their minds. At the same time, it would have a tendency to render pastors themselves more careful in the government of their own families. For who could stand up to enforce parental duty upon another, without first taking it into serious consideration, whether there was not necessity to "cast the beam out of his own eye?" Certainly, none but a hypocrite. We wish, therefore, that the practice might be adopted.

We do not know that we comprehend, exactly, what the Independent means by saying, "that the children of the church do in some sense belong to the church." We suppose that by "the children of the church" we are to understand the children of church members; and if the meaning is, that they stand in such a relation to the church that the pastor ought to bestow some care upon them, to instruct them in the ways of the Lord, we shall not dissent. We trust that every good pastor feels this duty to be incumbent upon him, and according to his ability discharges it, as he does towards all other unregenerate sinners. But the great lesson, which we would like to impress upon our readers, is this—That Christian parents, AS SUCH, are under solemn obligation to labor for the salvation of their offspring. We do not urge this duty upon the ground of any supposed spiritual connection between their children and the church, but upon the simple ground that they are Christians, and that God has given them children to rear. A Christian is not to live to himself. Every thing he does is to be done for Christ. Has he a child to rear? That child is to be brought up for Christ. Every part of his education, from first to last, is to be managed for Christ. All is to be done in the way that Christ wishes it to be done. "Take this child, and nurse it for me," is as much the language of Christ to every parent, as it was of a heathen princess with regard to Moses. We believe that a Christian ought to make his own family, as far as possible, an illustration or emblem of the church of Christ; otherwise he does not fulfill the end for which God constituted the family compact. Certainly, the end for which He constituted it was not that husband and wife might live merely for one another's gratification, and that their children might be fitted merely for the business of this world. A far higher and holier end was in view. He intended that the husband should seek the salvation of his wife, the wife that of her husband, and that both should labor to train up their children in the nurture and admonition of the Lord. But we shall have more to say upon this subject at another time.

CONSISTENT GLORIFICATION OF SUNDAY AND EASTER.

While perusing a Sermon, a few weeks since, on "Reverence to the Name of Jesus, by the very reverend Thomas Hill Lowe, Dean of Exeter," in the first volume of "Practical Sermons, by Dignitaries and other Clergymen in the United Church of England and Ireland," I met with the following consistent glorification of Sunday and Easter, which I regard as too rich a morceau to withhold from the readers of the Recorder; premising one remark, viz., that if Easter is the "resurrection day," and each weekly return is to be honored as a holy festival—nay, to take the place of the "Sabbath"—why do not the great mass of professing Christians, who observe the weekly festival, religiously honor the anniversary festival? Why reject and repudiate the great "resurrection day"—the resurrection day, par excellance—"the Queen of Days"—the "desirable feast of our salvation?" Certainly, if in the absence of any injunction from on high to celebrate the "resurrection day" weekly, I could deem such a service a duty, much more should I be inclined to regard the particular day of his rising, could that be ascertained from the Scriptures. We have but one yearly birthday festival, Christmns; but one yearly crucifixion day, Good Friday; why not be content with one yearly resurrection day, Easter? Why should we rob God of his holy Sabbath, to substitute a fancied "resurrection day" in its stead; a day which is no where imposed in the Inspired Word, neither is it dignified with the least intimation of being a holy day? It is vain to be wise above the Written Word. But to the extract from the Dean of Exeter:—

> "As the first day of the week, being the day on which our Lord arose from the dead, (?) was by the Apostles, themselves, under the guidance of the Holy Spirit, consecrated and given to the Church for ever to occupy the place of the Jewish Sabbath, (?) so the feast of Easter, being the anniversary of the Resurrection, was from the beginning observed in the Catholic Church throughout the world with peculiar solemnities, and was honored as the 'Queen of Days,' as the 'Festival of Festivals'—as far elevated as the sun is amongst the stars, not only above human feasts, those of earthly origin, but above those which were instituted in honor of CHRIST Himself.' They called it, 'The desirable feast of our salvation, the day of the Resurrection of our LORD JESUS CHRIST, the foundation of our peace, the occasion of our reconciliation, the end of our contentions, the destruction of death, the victory over the devil.' To mark this day with more distinguished honor, and in commmemoration of the inestimable blessings which it brings before us, in each returning year, the CHURCH expressly enjoins all who belong to her communion, to present themselves at Easter at the LORD'S table, and to show their gratitude to HIM, by offering their oblations on His altar, and by liberal donations to the poor. For this is the 'day of joy;' a day, above all others, of rejoicing to mankind, to whom it gives the blessed hope of exchanging this life on earth for a glorious resurrection; a day on which God has set his seal, to assure us of the truth of all his promises; a day on which the Fountain of Divine Love sheds the fullness of its splendor, and which expands the heart of every true believer with the deepest sense of gratitude to GOD, and with love to those who are partakers with him of the same salvation."

Need we be surprised at any perversions of the institutions of the Almighty, among people who are stuffed with such twattle—people who are fed on such husks? Dim, indeed, must be their perceptions of Divine Truth, and lean their souls, who drink at such turbid streams. Need we be surprised to find that they are given over to the delusion, "to believe lies"—that they "pervert the right way of the Lord," and give the title of the holy rest-day of the Great Jehovah to the "ceremony-worship-day" of the idolaters of the Sun—the Dies Solis of the heathen—the Sun-day of modern Christians? Yet even so; and herein is our obligation increased to contend valiantly for the Truth, and to labor, unceasingly, for the restoration of the true Sabbath of the Lord. W. M. F.

CHEAP POSTAGE.

The prospect for cheap postage brightens. It is true that the Post Office Department has declared in favor of a uniform charge of five cents for letters—which is not cheap postage. But the People are in favor of two-cent postage for letters; and all that is necessary to secure their wishes is that they be fully made known at head quarters. Now is the time to send on petitions. Let every friend of the measure see that his duty is done. Mr. Ashmun has already prepared, and attempted to bring before Congress, an "Act to regulate Postage Rates and abolish the Franking Privilege," which, if passed, will accomplish all that is desired in relation to letters, and open the way for a reduction of newspaper postage. The substance of the Act is given below:—

§ 1. Be it enacted, etc., That from and after the first day of July next, the rates of postage upon letters, when prepaid, shall be uniform; and all such letters passing through the mails shall be charged by weight, as follows, viz:

Letters weighing not more than half an ounce, two cents:

—More than half an ounce, and not more than one ounce, four cents:

—More than one ounce, and not more than an ounce and a half, six cents:

—More than an ounce and a half, and not more than two ounces, eight cents:

—And four cents additional for every ounce of greater weight.

—All letters conveyed by mail steamers between Oregon and California, and ports of other parts of the United States, five times the above rates.

—And on all letters which are not prepaid, the postage shall remain as now established by law.

The second section of the Act makes it the duty of the Postmaster General to provide suitable letter-stamps, for the prepayment of postage, of the several denominations of two cents, four cents, six cents, and eight cents, and of such other denominations as he may deem expedient; and to cause them to be furnished and kept for sale in each of the post offices of the United States.

The third section authorizes the Postmaster General, in case the compensation of any Deputy Postmaster shall be reduced below what it is at the present rate, to increase such compensation so far as justice may require.

The fourth section abolishes the franking privilege, except so far as it may have been conferred by Congress upon individuals as a mark of respect and honor, and provides for the payment of Congressional postage, and the postage of the Departments, from the contingent funds.

The fifth and last section provides that if the receipts of the Post Office Department shall be insufficient to pay its expenses, the deficiency shall be paid out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated—the whole expense of the Department not exceeding five millions of dollars annually.

THE HINDOOS.—It is stated that doubts of the truth of their ancient religion are getting common among this people. The Rev. Dr. Rice mentions an incident in this connection. Two natives came to him, and one propounded several interesting questions about Christianity. The following conversation grew out of it:—

"Do you ever pray?" I inquired.

"Yes," he replied.

"To whom?—to idols?"

"No."

"To whom, then, do you pray?" I was much struck with his answer. He said,

"I pray thus:—O thou who madest all worlds, whoever thou art, I adore thee. Give me thy blessing!"

"Did you ever pray in the name of Christ?"

"Yes," he said, "I have sometimes done so, when I have been in trial and affliction."

He seemed to have a secret hope that, at a time when human help was inadequate, Christ might afford the necessary aid.

GERRIT SMITH ON LAND OWNERSHIP.

About one year ago, Gerrit Smith, of Peterboro, N. Y., proposed to make gifts of land and money to five hundred males and five hundred females, inhabitants of the State of New York—the individuals to be selected by committees in the various counties, from the poor, industrious, landless, and temperate portion of the population. The Committee for the County of New York now announce, that, having completed the task of selection assigned to them, they have received from Mr. Smith 75 deeds of land and $750 for the 75 males selected and $3,750 for the 75 females selected, being $50 for each female, and $10 to accompany each deed of land to the males. In his letter accompanying the deeds and money, Mr. Smith expresses a hope that the females will all invest their money in land. He backs up this suggestion by the following remarks—as sensible and Christian-like as they are radical—upon the right of every individual to a portion of the earth which the Lord has given to the children of men:

> "To you who know my heart on this subject, I need not say how deeply I feel, that every person needs to be the admitted owner of a parcel of land. This every person should be, without having to pay for it. But, if a free ownership be withheld, still let there be an ownership, whenever it can be bought. If for no other reason than that the more, who are the admitted owners of land, the sooner will such ownership be acknowledged to be a natural, universal, and inalienable right, I would have every person get a parcel of land, who can get it.
> "Alas, that good men should be so slow to see that the acknowledged right of every generation, and the whole of every generation, to the use of the earth, as well as to the use of the sea, the light, and the air, is necessarily preliminary to that state of universal comfort, and happiness, and holiness, for which good men labor and pray! So vitally important, so indispensable, is this right in my view, that no person who rejects it can get my vote to be a civil ruler or a moral instructor. How long will the people consent to be put off with bribes and toys and deceptions in the place of the acknowledgment of their rights? The governments of the earth, all refuse to acknowledge the right of the people to the soil. And yet the people, stripped though they are of this greatest right, and of this only effectual security for all their rights, sustain and honor these governments! And this they do because their governments help them pay their parsons or their schoolmasters, or bribe them in some other way. Only let the governments of the earth give back to their subjects the rights of which they are robbed; and their subjects will lack neither the ability nor the disposition to take the whole care and bear the whole burden of their schools and churches."

THE MAYOR OF PITTSBURG, PA.

Several weeks ago, we announced the election of Mr. Joseph Barker to the Mayoralty of Pittsburg, while confined in prison, and his subsequent pardon by the Governor. From a letter to the New York Recorder, we learn the circumstances which led to his imprisonment, and his election. It seems that Mr. Barker was in the habit of speaking of the evil character and designs of Popery, from a stand in the Pittsburg Market. Large crowds gathered to hear him—especially of that class of persons who could not be induced to enter a Protestant church. Making extracts from some of the principal theological works of the Papal establishment,—such as "Den's Theology," "Garden of the Soul," and "Poor Man's Catechism,"—he caused many children of the "Holy Mother" to doubt the purity of their faith, the honesty of their priesthood, and the sanctity of their confessional. Alarmed at the rapid spread of heresy, the priesthood began loudly to clamor against "street-preaching." Whereupon Mr. Barker was arrested and tried before Judge Benjamin Patten, for a "nuisance"—1st. in obstructing the street—2d, in using language corrupting to the public morals! During the trial no witness testified that he had ever been annoyed by Barker's meetings. On the other hand, many stated that they had attended his meetings and passed variously through his congregation, but had never met with or seen any obstruction. In defending himself against the second charge, Mr. Barker proposed to introduce the books from which he had read in the Market, to show the nature and occasion of his language. But they were rejected by the Judge. To be brief, the testimony was closed, the speeches made, the law expounded to the jury, Mr. Barker brought in guilty! and sentenced to one year's imprisonment in the county jail, and $250 fine!

"Thus Popery for a time trampled upon 'freedom of speech.' But, while the Papal jubilee was going forward, the Protestant spirit began to move. The masses became aroused—Barker was put up as a candidate for Mayor! The day previous to the election, in compliance with large petitions, from Pittsburg, Philadelphia, and Harrisburg, the Governor pardoned Mr. Barker. On the 8th of January, the combat was brought to the ballot-box. The honest laboring men came by hundreds from the rolling-mills, factories, and shops. All seemed anxious as to the result of the day. The votes canvassed, Mr. Barker was announced duly elected, by a good majority, to the Mayoralty of Pittsburg! The song of jubilee now changed mouths, and Judge Patten had to administer the oath of office to His Honor, Mayor Barker!"

REVIVALS.—We rejoice to learn, that in several of our churches there is at present an unusual degree of thoughtfulness and solemnity. In the Church at Petersburg, as we gather from a business letter, something of a revival exists, and nine persons were recently added by baptism. In the Church at Friendship, Allegany Co., also, as we learn incidentally, a very interesting state of things exists, and it is hoped that some have passed from death unto life.

TEMPERANCE LIFE INSURANCE.—We learn from the Journal of the American Temperance Union, that consultations have been held in this city with reference to the formation of a "Temperance Life Insurance Company." They have such an institution in London, and its results in eight years are every way most beneficial. The Journal says:—

> "The experience of this Company has been, in these eight years, that the number of deaths in that period has been less than half of that, in proportion to numbers, insured in all other companies in the kingdom; while, in this company, the assured suffer no losses from prevalent intemperance. And what is more extraordinary, although the office contains 600 members more than it did a year ago, the deaths during the last half year have been actually only half as many as they were in the same period of last year; being only five out of 3500 policies issued."

It is obvious, from the nature of the case, that in the ordinary mutual companies, the abstinent are insurers for the drinkers, and that both the mutual and the stock companies must be losers just in proportion to the liability of the insured to shorten their days by strong drink; so that a Company could well afford to insure at a lower premium, if all its subjects were strictly bound to total abstinence. The Journal well observes:—

> "Every agent of such a company would, wherever he operated or lectured, be a powerful temperance lecturer—the inducements offered to unite in such an association would all be promotive of the temperance principle, and thus the establishment of such a Company would be, we can easily see, one of the most powerful agents of handing down and increasing the cause for which the temperance men of this nation have so long and earnestly labored."

TRUCKLING TO THE SLAVE POWER.—Not long since, the Columbia (S. C.) Telegraph denounced Godey's Lady's Book because one of its editors, Grace Greenwood, was a contributor to the National Era. Mr. Godey was very prompt to send a conciliatory letter to the South Carolinian editors, in which he says, "I have been publishing the Lady's Book for twenty years, and if in that time one line can be found aspersing in any way Southern institutions, I am willing to fall under your censure." He concludes by assuring the Southern gentleman that "Grace Greenwood's name is withdrawn from the cover, where it was placed nominally as editor, she never having had the least control over the columns." As if to color his dastardly conduct more deeply, he declares that Sartin's Magazine, (a rival work,) is liable to the same censure, and encloses two articles from that work in order to prove the charge of guiltiness. In allusion to this affair, the Christian Inquirer well says:—

> "We do not know what sort of books 'ladies' choose to read, but we are sure no Northern woman, no Yankee girl, no wife, or daughter, or mother, with free blood in her veins, will consent to receive into her house a Magazine which is so faithless to all honorable ideas, in its course, as this. Mr. Godey has chosen his market; let him peddle his wares there to his heart's content. As for the South, that will despise his course no less than the North. The South may love the treason, but it feels only contempt for the traitor. The Northern man, who, for the sake of a few southern dollars, betrays Northern principles, is as sure of receiving the spaniel's reward as he is deserving of it."

ARRIVAL OF MISSIONARIES.—The Missionary Herald states that Messrs. Breath and Coan, with their wives, arrived at Oroomiah, Persia, on the 13th of October, "having to recount nothing but goodness and mercy all the way." Mr. Coan, in speaking of their reception, says: "Long before we reached the city, we were greeted by our brethren here, and by a troop of natives, who came out to welcome us, and escort us into Oroomiah."

SUPERSTITION AND ITS CONSEQUENCES.—Rev. Mr. Williams assigns as the chief reason of the murder of Gov. Amarel, of Macao, the fact that in making roads through the island, the Governor's workmen had disturbed the graves of the dead, and thus destroyed the luck of their families, and exposed them to the malicious pranks of the disturbed spirits thus unceremoniously ejected from their resting places. The number of families thus disturbed amounts to two or three hundred.

To the Editors of the Sabbath Recorder:—

Permit me to make the following supposition and inquiry through the columns of the Recorder; and will you, or some of your correspondents, vouchsafe an answer?

Suppose a Seventh-day Baptist Church to be located in the town of A., and another in the town of B., some forty miles apart. Both churches are members of the same Association. A few members belonging to the church at A., remove to the town of B. For certain reasons they do not see fit to unite with the church at B. Soon difficulties arise between the members belonging to the church at B.; they cannot or will not meet together to worship; whereupon these members of the church at A., together with some that have been excommunicated from the church at B., organize themselves into a church, without the consent or advice of any other church, and then justify themselves in what they have done.

Question—What is the Gospel course for the church at A. to take with the said members of their church?

A FRIEND OF GOOD ORDER.

27th of 1st month, 1850.

Reply.

Such proceedings are utterly subversive good order. The church at A. ought to admonish their members, and to persuade them to withdraw from such an organization, and give no countenance to it. If they will not be admonished, they ought to be excommunicated.

SUNDAY RAILROAD TRAINS.—The Boston Atlas says that a bill to prohibit railroad trains from being run on Sunday, after sunrise or befora sunset, except in cases of "necessity and charity" recently passed the House of Representatives of Massachussetts, after having been amended so as to exclude from the effect of the law, trains carrying people to and from places of worship, trains carrying the mails, and the trains connecting with the steamboats which leave New York on Saturday evening. These exceptions show very cleary how much—or, rather, how little—principle there is in the matter. If it is wrong to run the cars on Sunday, why not forbid it entirely, like consistent men? If it is not wrong, why not leave each company to decide for itself in respect to this as to all other matters of expediency?

STATE OF RELIGION IN NEW YORK.—The N. Y. Recorder says that the pastors of Baptist churches in New York, who attended the Conference last week, represent that their congregations are solemn and thoughtful, that much religious interest is manifested, and that there is a general awakening. In the Olive Branch Church, twelve conversions and eight baptisms were reported. In the Sixth-st. Church, fourteen conversions and six baptisms. In the Stanton-st. Church, six baptisms and twenty to thirty anxious. In the Baptist Tabernacle, eighteen candidates for baptism. From several churches in the vicinity of New York, similar reports were made.

NEW FEATURE OF CHURCH-BUILDING.—The Plymouth Church, in Brooklyn, has recently completed a neat edifice for public worship, capable of seating comfortably two thousand persons. In the rear of the church there is a building containing ten rooms—a Sunday-school room for 300 children, four Bible-class rooms, one conversation room, a lecture room, the pastor's study, and two social-circle parlors, which are furnished like private parlors, with pianos, sofas, &c., and are to be used by the congregation for weekly assemblies, with the pastor, to exchange friendly greetings, and enjoy social intercourse.

DR. DICK.—We learn from the Christian Citizen, that contributions, as a testimonial to this aged and poverty-stricken philosopher, continue to flow in with generous liberality, from all parts of the country. Considerable amounts are acknowledged in that paper. Mr. Burritt has received twenty sets of Dr. Dick's complete works, and he expects a large supply soon, which are to be sold for the benefit of the author. They can be sent at a trifling cost to any persons living on the line of railways.

WATERTOWN, N. Y.—A well-arranged and neatly-printed Directory of the Village of Watertown, comes to us in connection with the New Year's Address of Norman L. Burdick, the Carrier of the Northern New York Journal. From it we learn that Watertown contains an Episcopal, two Presbyterian, two Methodist, one each of Baptist, Universalist and Roman Catholic Churches, with large factories, court buildings, institute for learning, and many common schools. It is rapidly overcoming its great loss by fire last year, and promises, when reached by railroad, to be a very important business location. It was first settled in 1800.

MISSIONARIES IN CHINA.—Mr. Williams states, in a letter dated October 25th, that there has been much sickness among the missionaries of different societies at Shanghai. Two Swedish missionaries recently arrived at Hong-kong; and the (English) Bishop of Hong-kong, accompanied by his associates, was expected very soon. Fifteen different societies are now represented in China.

A FUND FOR BENEVOLENCE.—The munificent sum of £30,000 has lately accrued to the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel in Foreign Parts, being a legacy some time ago bequeathed to it by a citizen of London, dependent upon two or three lives which have now dropped. With the exception of some annuities chargeable upon the above sum, the whole of it is available for the purposes of the Society.

A REBUKE.—Several persons in Ohio petitioned the Legislature to dissolve the Union. The committee made a report, in which they speak in thrilling terms of the blessings and advantages of the Union of these States. The committee recommended the adoption of the following resolutions:—

Resolved, That the memorialists have liberty to withdraw their memorial.

Resolved, by the General Assembly of the State of Ohio, That the Secretary of State cause to be printed an edition of Washington's Farewell Address, and distributed to each school district in the State.

INTOLERANCE.—The Chronicle says that a Jewish Rabbi in the city of London, who keeps an Irish servant, recently found out, to his great astonishment and grief, that whole leaves had been torn out of his Hebrew bibles and other books, and even out of his manuscript works, among which there is one presented to him by the late Duke of Sussex. On examining the servant, she openly admitted that, having made confession to a Catholic priest in London, and having stated to him that she lived with a Jewish Rabbi who studied his Hebrew books day and night, he advised her to destroy them; and she therefore tore out as many pages as she could, and lit the fire with the abnoxious papers. Incredible as this story may appear in a civilized country and age, it is nevertheless true. The Rabbi has dismissed the servant.

General Intelligence.

PROCEEDINGS IN CONGRESS LAST WEEK.

In Senate. SECOND-DAY, Feb. 4.

After petitions and resolutions, and some debate on the order of business, the Census bill was taken up. Mr. Davis, of Mass., who had reported the bill, explained and defended its provisions. Other Senators spoke of the imperfections of statistics usually collected, and proposed various amendments. A long and tedious discussion upon the subject occupied the Senate till the hour of adjournment.

House of Representatives.

Mr. Root's Resolution, offered on the 31st of Dec., came up, viz., "that the Committee on Territories be instructed to report to the House, with as little delay as practicable, a bill or bills providing a Territorial Government or Governments for all that part of the Territory ceded to the United States by Mexico, by the Treaty of Gaudalupe Hidalgo, lying eastward of California, and prohibiting slavery therein." A motion was made to lay it on the table, which prevailed by a vote of 105 to 78.

Mr. Disney introduced resolutions declaring that the people of every separate community, whether they do or do not reside in a territory belonging to the United States, have an inherent right to frame their own domestic laws, and to establish their own local governments, in all cases where the provisions of such laws do not conflict with the provisions and limitations of the Constitution, or the proprietary rights of the General Government—that the Committee on the Judiciary prepare an amendment to the Constitution to this effect—that the will of the people of the District of Columbia of right ought, at all times, to govern the action of Congress in relation to the existence of slavery within its limits. Laid on the table.

Mr. Giddings offered the following:—"Whereas, "We hold these truths to be self-evident—that all men are created equal; that they are endowed by their Creator with life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness; and that Governments are constituted for the purpose of maintaining these rights; therefore, Resolved, That in constituting Governments in any Territory, it is the duty of Congress to secure to all the people thereof, of whatever complexion, the enjoyment of the rights aforesaid." Laid on the table by a vote of 104 to 89.

Mr. W. J. Brown, of Indiana, introduced a bill to reduce the rates of postage. Referred to the Post Office Committee.

In Senate. THIRD-DAY, Feb. 5.

At an early hour an immense crowd filled the chamber, to hear Mr. Clay's expected compromise speech on slavery.

Mr. Cass' resolution on Austria was taken up, and amended, on motion of Mr. Foote, by adding the declaration of sympathy with the Hungarians, and a proposition to give lands to the exiles.

Mr. Soule moved an amendment, inquiring into the expediency of requesting the Executive to intercede with Turkey, in behalf of Kossuth and his companions.

The special order, Mr. Clay's resolutions, then came up, and Mr. Clay rose in their support. After a few words, expressive of self-distrust, and the vital importance of the crisis under which the Union is threatened, he referred to the motives of those who have produced the existing state of agitation. He ascribed it, most correctly, to party spirit, which seeks party interests out of the fearful conflict. He declared that, when he had fulfilled the duty assigned him by his State, his mission in connection with public affairs would be closed forever, so far as his wishes could prevail. His object in these resolutions was merely to present a platform on which both sections of the country could unite. They were, of course, open to amendment, wherever they could, in the judgment of the Senate, be improved. On the first resolution, he agreed that the admission of California, under the circumstances, involved no concession of either party. The second proposed that the advocates of the Wilmot Proviso should yield that "for the sake of peace and good feeling." In return, he proposed to declare two truths, that by law slavery does not exist in New Mexico, and that in our opinion it will not go there. He should be for war, if Congress should interfere with slavery within the States; but out of the States, Congress has power over the whole question. This he argued from the control of the public lands, the sale of which will be promoted by prohibiting slavery. Also from the right of governing the territories, from the treaty-making power; the right to acquire territory includes the right to govern it, &c. The fact that California had unanimously excluded slavery, should satisfy the people of the North that there is no danger elsewhere. On the necessity of a territorial government for New Mexico, he did not see how there could be a doubt. He did think the Supreme Court the best tribunal for the decision of all great questions, and it was better to have the boundaries of Texas determined by agreement than by litigation. He was in favor of paying to Texas, for the adjustment of this question of boundary, an adequate sum, which should be applied to those debts of Texas, for which her customs' revenue had been pledged. Mr. Clay yielded to a motion by Mr. Foote to postpone the further consideration of the subject until to-morrow.

House of Representatives.

Mr. Morton announced the death, in July, of Hon. Alex. Newman, member elect from the Wheeling District of Virginia. He pronounced a brief eulogy upon his character. Resolutions of regret, and to wear crape for thirty days, were passed, when the House adjourned.

In Senate. FOURTH-DAY, Feb. 6.

After the presentation of petitions, Mr. Mangum presented resolutions adopted by a meeting of citizens of Wilmington, N. C., adverse to legislation, by Congress, on the question of slavery, with a few remarks, in which he asserted what he believed to be the rights and the feelings of the South. Mr. Hale moved the non-reception of the resolutions, and proceeded to show that such a course would be consistent with the manner of treating similar documents from the North. The motion was lost.

Mr. Clay concluded his speech in support of his compromise resolutions. In support of the resolution relative to the Federal District, he maintained, that Congress could not abolish slavery there in good faith without consent of the States, but that it might prohibit the slave-trade within the District. Relative to the recapture of fugitive slaves, Mr. Clay contended, that not only every officer, but every man in the community was bound to assist in the arrest, and delivering up, of fugitives from labor, as certainly as fugitives from justice. In reviewing the action of Congress upon various questions of great national interest, he showed very clearly that the South had always had the preponderance of the administration of the Government, if she had not the numerical power. In the acquisition of territory, in particular, the South had ever been the beneficiary. By far the greatest portion of the territory acquired was slave territory. Mr. Clay concluded his remarks by an appeal in behalf of the Union, the termination of which, he thought, would be the extinction of the Republic.

House of Representatives.

The doings in the House were mainly in reference to the purchase of the manuscript of Washington's Farewell Address. Slavery, of course, came in as the staple topic of Southern orators.

In Senate. FIFTH-DAY, Feb. 7.

Mr. Hale presented a memorial from the Society of Friends in Rhode Island, against the admission into the Union of States with the institution of slavery. The question of reception was raised, and a motion to lay that question on the table was lost, by a vote of 25 to 21. The motion to receive was not voted upon, before a message was received from the House announcing its action with reference to the death of Mr. Newman. A tribute to his memory, and the passage of the usual resolutions, occupied the remainder of the day.

House of Representatives.

The Committee on Territories were discharged from the consideration of the Memorial from Ohio, asking for eighty acres of territory acquired from Mexico, to be given to every free negro who will occupy it.

The House then went into Committee of the Whole on the bill limiting the expense for collecting the revenue, the consideration of which occupied the whole day.

In Senate. SIXTH-DAY, Feb. 8.

The Chair stated that the first business before the Senate was the question on reception of memorial of citizens of Delaware and Pennsylvania, asking a peaceful dissolution of the Union. Remarks were made upon the subject by Messrs. Douglass, Hale, Sturgeon, Dawson, Davis, and Seward; but no vote was taken.

Mr. Houston made a speech in favor of the Union, and was followed by several other Senators, after which adjourned over to Second-day.

House of Representatives.

The House was engaged in debating the bill for the collection of the revenue, but no result was arrived at. Adjourned over to Second-day.

THE EXPLOSION IN NEW YORK.

The explosion at the machine shop of A. B. Taylor & Co., in Hague-St., New York, (of which we gave some account last week,) proves to have been more disastrous than was at first supposed. Immediately after the explosion, the authorities employed a large number of men, who were kept at work removing rubbish until Sabbath afternoon, six days, at which time the excavation was completed, the whole ground having been gone over, and the last doubt having given place to certainty. The result is as follows:—

Whole number dead - - - - -	67
Whole number injured - - - -	30
Whole number escaped - - - -	32
Whole number missing - - - -	6
Total - - - - -	136

At the time of writing this, the Coroner's jury is engaged in a thorough investigation of the causes of the explosion. By some it is attributed to the bad construction of the boiler; by others to the negligence of the engineer.

Large collections have been made, and are still being made, to aid the sufferers by the explosion.

The following facts and incidents will give a faint idea of the scenes which followed the sad accident:—

The entire building, which was of brick, and seven stories high, was instantly razed to its foundation. So violent was the explosion, that the windows of the adjacent dwellings were demolished, and doors burst in, though firmly bolted and locked. The concussion was distinctly felt over a circuit of half a mile—resembling an earthquake in the sensation produced.

The mutilated remains of the unfortunate workmen, still quivering with life, were promiscuously strewed among the ruins of the building, while the bodies of others were crushed between the falling floors or impaled by the shattered timbers. One of the most prominent spectacles that caught the eye, was that of a man who had attempted to escape by flight, but who, just as he was making his exit, was caught by the neck between the ends of two timbers, and instantly killed. With the blood gushing from his nostrils, and the clothing stripped from his frozen limbs, he presented a most sickening sight. But his case was less calculated to excite the commiseration of the beholder than that of those who were simply confined within the ruins, and had but to wait the approach of the flames to meet death in a revolting form, without the possibility of relief. The groans of the sufferers, some of whom could be distinctly seen, were truly agonizing.

The conflict between the fire and water was absolutely appalling. The poor victims were heard, now crying to the firemen to throw on water to counteract the growing heat; now to desist, to save them from being deluged and drowned. The case of one young lad in particular, excited peculiar sympathy. He was in the basement of the building. Heavy timbers intervened between him and those who would effect his release, while a huge pile of lumber and rubbish was over his head, in which the flames raged fiercely. If the water was withheld, the fire advanced. If it was thrown on, the unfortunate boy was exposed to be scalded to death by the water which streamed in upon him from above, or to perish from cold. And thus was the war of the elements contested. The boy encouraged the firemen to continue their efforts, and also encouraged those who were confined around him, to keep up their spirits. This he continued to do, till he reported that he was the only survivor. He was taken out alive nineteen hours after the explosion, but subsequently died at the hospital.

Many of the bodies recovered were badly disfigured. The body of one man was brought in so much disfigured that his wife was not able to recognize him by his features, but a pocket-piece, which she found in his pantaloons, identified him without possibility of mistake. On making this discovery, the unhappy wife fainted away upon the corpse of her husband. She was removed in a state of insensibility, and the body placed in the dead house.

TWO WEEKS LATER FROM EUROPE.

By the steamer Europa, advices from Europe have been received to January 26th. The political news is unimportant. The commercial news is quite satisfactory; there has been a rise in cotton, a slight advance in breadstuffs, and U. S. stocks remain unchanged.

By this arrival we learn that the splendid New York packet-ship Hottinguer, Capt. Bursley, has fallen a prey to the fury of the elements, and that a melancholy loss of life attends the disaster. The Hottinguer sailed from Liverpool for New York on the 10th January. She had 290 cabin and steerage passengers, together with the Captain and crew of 30 men and boys, and a very full freight of various descriptions of goods. She had only passed as far as Blackwater Bank, which is off the coast of Wexford, when she struck on one of those dangerous ledges of rock which lie concealed in that quarter. This occurred on the morning of the 13th January. On the occurrence of this mishap, a part of the crew, and all the passengers, were sent ashore. Capt. Bursley and 13 of his men remained on board, determined not to leave the ship while there was the remotest chance of saving her. On the following morning, the 14th, the ship floated off Black Waterbank, and bore away before the wind and struck Arklow Bank, where she afterwards went to pieces, and, sad to relate, Capt. Bursley and twelve of the noble band who determined to be the last on the ship, met a watery grave.

In France, the war against the press continues. The Reforme has been suspended and Le Presse seized. The weather throughout France, especially in the South, has been more rigorous than for many years.

At Rome, it is said that the want of money prevents the Pope from returning to his Capital, and that France has offered funds to his Holiness. The archbishop Bourges is said to be the bearer of this offer made in the name of the French Episcopacy.

A complete reconciliation is said to have taken place between Russia and Turkey—the latter having consented that all those Polish subjects of Russia, who were concerned in the late Hungarian movement, shall be obliged to leave the Turkish dominions. A similar arrangement is on the point of being entered into between Austria and Turkey. The Russian list of persons prescribed, contains the name of Gen. Bem and twelve others; that of Austria begins with Kossuth, and contains thirty-two names. It is announced that Madame Kossuth has joined her husband, she having escaped from Hungary in the disguise of a mendicant. The English Consul at Vienna has discovered a diabolical attempt instigated by the Austrian Government to murder Kossuth.

A large meeting was held in London on the 15th January, relative to the proposed exhibition of the Industry of all Nations. The sum of £12,000 was subscribed, and enthusiastic speeches were made by Lord John Russell and others.

FOUR WEEKS LATER FROM CALIFORNIA.

The Empire City arrived at New York from Chagres on Fifth-day last, bringing 257 passengers, about one and a half millions in gold-dust, and four weeks later intelligence.

The Legislature met Dec. 15, and was organized on the 17th, by the choice of Dr. T. J. WHITE of Sacramento, as Speaker of the Assembly, and E. K. CHAMBERLAIN of San Diego, President pro tem of the Senate. Gov. BURNETT was inaugurated on the 20th, immeditely after which ceremony the Legislature voted viva voce for United States Senators. John C. Freemont and Wm. M. Gwin were declared duly elected; Wm. V. Voorhies of San Francisco has been appointed Secretary of State; J. S. Houston, Controller; Major R. Roman, Treasurer; F. J. C. Kewen, Attorney-General; Chas. J. Whiting, Surveyor-General; S. C. Hastings, Judge of the Supreme Court.

The Message of Governor BURNETT disappoints many of his friends. Many important things are merely slurred over, while not a syllable is uttered upon the subject of Education. The Governor estimates the current expenses of the State for the first year at $500,000. To meet this large sum, the message recommends the immediate imposition of a poll tax, and a tax upon real and personal property, "in proportion to its value." The Governor, also, while he says nothing against Chinese, Knackers, debased Chilenos, Sydney thieves, and other outsiders, coming freely into the State, recommends the exclusion, in toto, of free negroes. He thinks that if allowed to immigrate they will form contracts in the Southern States for one or more years with their masters, and thus be, to all intents and purposes, slaves.

The prospects for gold hunters, for the next season, were considered very flattering. It was thought that a much larger amount would be taken out than was the past year. Gold digging had been mostly suspended for the season, and a great many persons were flocking into the towns. Wages of common laborers were much lower, only from four to six dollars a day being paid. Mechanics, such as carpenters, masons, &c., commanded from $12 to $16 a day. The country is overrun with printers.

Money was worth from 7 to 10 per cent. a month. Lumber was lower—cargo prices from $200 to $275 per M. Bricks in demand at good prices. Lime, $16 a barrel. Flour retailed at $30 a barrel. Mess Pork at $35 to $40. Butter per lb. $1 50. Cheese, $1. Coarse short boots were worth $16 to $32 per pair at retail; while long boots, suitable for San Francisco street navigation, brought from $50 to $96 per pair. Seamen's wages for the rivers and bay, were $100 a month; foreign voyages, $80 to $100.

The Oregon brought to Panama 300 passengers, $1,400,000 in gold on her manifest, and more than that amount in the hands of passengers.

On the morning of the 24th of December, a fire broke out in Dennison's Exchange, San Francisco, and in two hours nearly a million of dollars worth of property was destroyed. The Parker House was among the buildings burned. All the buildings, except the Delmonico Hotel, on Portsmouth square, and all on Washington st., commencing at the "Eldorado" and running to Montgomery st., were burned.

A fire at Stockton, on Sunday night, Dec. 23, destroyed a number of buildings, with property valued at $150,000.

A murder was committed in a gambling-house called the Bella Union, on the morning of the 15th of December, by Reuben Withers of New York City. Arthur C. W. Reynolds was the victim. The body of a sailor, named Thomas Brown, was discovered near the road leading from San Francisco to the Mission, stabbed in 24 places. It was reported at Stockton, that three Americans had been killed in the mines by some Chilians. Considerable excitement prevailed there in consequence, and trouble was feared.

While the Empire City was lying off Chagres, on the 26th, there were in all five steamers at anchor, viz: Empire City, Cherokee, (arrived on the 20th) Falcon, Alabama, and the British steamship Severn, of London.

A REFORMER NOT WHOLLY REFORMED.—One day last week, Mr. Jonathan H. Green, better known as the "Reformed Gambler," arrived at New York from Albany, in custody of officer Smith. He is charged with having obtained goods to the amount of $458, in 1848, from Silas W. Spaulding, of 320 Bleeker street, N. Y., under false pretences. It seems that Green became acquainted with Spaulding, and represented that he had been appointed a secret United States Marshal, employed by the Government for the purpose of detecting counterfeiters in the manufacture of bank bills and coin, and showed a document as his credential under which he acted, and in accordance therewith he proposed to make Mr. Spaulding one of his deputies, and to pay him fifty dollars a month. Spaulding, believing the story of Green, accepted the proposed deputyship, and during this time Green managed to obtain the property and money from Spaulding, under the belief that all was right. But from the subsequent acts of Green, Spaulding became suspicious, and wrote to Mr. R. H. Gillett, the Solicitor to the Secretary's Department, on the 20th of March last, and received an answer that Green had, some time previous, represented that he could be very serviceable to the Government in the detection of counterfeiters of coin. Under this belief, Mr. Gillet recommended him to the confidence of the different United States District Attorneys, for the detection of guilty parties. A short time elapsed, and it was ascertained that Green was humbugging the government; that he did not possess the information that he said he had, and therefore the recommendation was revoked. Green then charged $150 under the head of expenses, which the government paid, and dismissed any further business with him. Notwithstanding this dismissal, he represented to Mr. Spaulding that he was still in the secret employ of the Government, and thus obtained the property. On his arrest, the officer took from his person a bad bill for $500 on the Philadelphia Bank, $20 on the Northern Bank of Kentucky, likewise two canceled $500 Treasury Notes. Justice Mountfort committed the accused to prison for a further hearing.

SHIPWRECK AND LOSS OF LIFE.—The ship L. Z., of and from New York, for Liverpool, with a full cargo of flour, corn, &c., and some passengers, was abandoned at sea, on the 16th of January, in lat. about 38, long. 67 30—she having become water-logged. The passengers and crew were taken off by the barque Marrietta, Venard, to and from Bath, Me., for Havana.

In endeavoring to place the passengers and crew on board the Marietta, one of the boats got swamped, and the third officer of the L. Z., Thomas Dickey, with two passengers, were drowned. The Marrietta, being short of water made sail for the Bermudas. When nearing them, she ran ashore on the Southwestern Reef, and became a total loss.

The New Jersey House of Representatives has passed a General Railroad Law, and sent it to the Senate for consideration. It provides that the act shall "not be so construed as to authorize the construction of any railroad in violation of any valid contract, constitutionally made between the State and any incorporated Company," &c., meaning of course the Camden and Amboy Company; and that any railroad constructed under the bill across the State shall pay the same transit duties the C. & A. Co. now pay—10 cents for every passenger, and 15 cents for every ton of merchandize.

On the 5th inst., there was a fire in the Sing Sing Prison, which injured the hat shop of Watson & Co. $15,000; the hardware shop of Mr. Lewis $15,000; and the carpet shop of Hotchkiss & Smith $50,000. The buildings belonged to the State, and were built at an expense of about $60,000. It is supposed that the building was set on fire by one of the convicts previous to locking up. The shops destroyed by this fire were but lately rebuilt, having been burned down in 1843.

It is said that many farmers of wealth and skill have sold or are selling out lands on the banks of the Hudson at $50 to $100 per acre, moving into Virginia, and there buying choice locations at $7 to $15 per acre for improved estates. It is not unusual for them to employ slave labor in raising corn and market vegetables.

A curling match, for beef and greens, was played on the ice at Hamilton Bay recently, between four bachelors and four married members of the Curling Club. The bachelors beat. This game is a favorite one with the Scotch, and consists in rolling stones on the ice at a mark.

The first report from the Collector of San Francisco has been laid before the Committee of Ways and Means. The Collector commenced the discharge of his duties on November 12th, and the duties received to November 20th, eighteen days, were $113,000; expenses in collecting $10,000. He is paying $29,000 per annum for a building of four rooms in which is transacted the custom house business.

Some persons in Oneida county alledge, that the title of George Clarke to some 10,000 acres of land, near Rome, is invalid. They have formed an association, and call on the Attorney General to inquire whether the Oriskany Patent was not fraudulently procured by the late Gen. Geo. Clarke.

A young man, who was a passenger in the express train of cars from New York to New Haven, when near the Milford station, and while the cars were running at the rate of 30 miles an hour, deliberately walked off the platform, and was instantly killed. He had acted strangely, refusing to give up his ticket, &c.

At a recent meeting of the State Colonization Society in Albany, presided over by Governor Fish, it was stated that the United States Agent had returned from the Republic of Liberia, with most valuable commercial statistics. So important are they considered by our Government, that the Secretary of State is engaged in preparing a commercial treaty with the African Republic.

A fire occurred in Buffalo, on the 5th inst., consuming, before it was subdued, one drug store, three dry goods stores, and one crockery store, situated on Main-st., together with several offices in the upper part of the buildings. The loss is not far from $55,000, which is covered by insurance.

The New Jersey Legislature has been petitioned by the stockholders and creditors of the New Hope and Delaware Bridge Co. to appoint trustees for selling off its property, and also to abolish its banking powers.

Mr. Michael Daicy, of Boston was burned to death on Friday night last by his clothes taking fire while he was in a state of intoxication. Mr. D. was a handcartman between 50 and 60 years of age.

G. Montesquieu, the author of the recent tragedy at Barnum's Hotel, has been indicted for murder in the first degree. Raimond, his brother, has been retained as a witness in the case.

Tuesday, the 19th day of March, has been assigned as the day for commencing the trial of Prof. Webster for the murder of Dr. Geo. Parkman.

The Legislative Assembly of Oregon has adopted a law "establishing a system of Common Schools."

Rev. A. D. Gillette, of Philadelphia, has been called by the Berean church in New York to be the successor of Dr. Dowling.

In Milton, Rock Co., Wis., by Eld. S. Coon, Mr. AUGUSTUS E. CRUMB to Miss CALISTA J. CAMPBELL, all of Milton.

DIED.

In Middletown, R. I., Jan. 26th, of typhoid fever, MARIA E., wife of Thomas Coggeshall, of Newport, and daughter of Hon. Peter Barber, of Middletown. Her remains were buried at Middletown, on the 28th of January, in the presence of an "uncommonly large concourse of persons, drawn together, not by curiosity, but by sympathy." The following "Lines on the Burial of M. E. C.," we copy from the Newport Herald of the Times:—

But three short moons—I saw thee stand,
In youth and health and bridal bloom:
But three short moons—that plighted hand
Lies cold and lifeless in the tomb!

But three short moons—a father's door,
Bright with proud welcome, opened wide:
But three short moons—with tears, once more
It sends thee forth, Heaven's chosen bride!

A few short moons—on yonder slope,
Where, at thy wish, we made thy grave,
And, weeping, laid thee down in hope,
Bright flow'rs shall bloom, and green grass wave.

A few short moons—and God shall cheer
With Heaven's own Spring Death's wintry gloom;
Then thou, wife, sister, daughter dear,
Fair, faided flower, in heaven shall bloom!

In Watson, N. Y., Dec. 13, 1849, CALVIN CLARK, son of Captain Ethan Clark, of Brookfield, Madison Co., in the 44th year of his age. On the day of his death he was engaged in hauling wood to his house, from a short distance. Having gone for a load, and been absent longer than usual, his wife became alarmed, went in search of him, and found him dead. The cause of his death is supposed to have been a fit. He was for many years a professed disciple of the Lord Jesus, and his friends believe that their loss is his eternal gain. The funeral was attended by a large audience, when a sermon was preached from Luke 12: 40, "Be ye also ready, for the Son of Man cometh at an hour when ye think not."

In Hopkinton, R. I., Jan. 15th, ISAAC S., son of Moses B. and Mary A. Lewis, aged 2 years, 11 months, and 17 days.

In Hopkinton, R. I., Jan. 29th, of consumption, Mrs. MARY ANN LEWIS, wife of Moses B. Lewis, aged 47 years. Though she was called to leave a large family, yet the divine grace of God enabled her to submit quietly to the will of God, and die in peace. She was a member of the 3d Seventh-day Baptist church of Hopkinton.

In Hopkinton, R. I., Jan. 29th, of consumption, Mrs. MARY HALL, wife of Moses Hall, aged 74 years. She had been a devoted Christian for nearly forty years, and at the time of her death was a member of the Seventh-day Baptist Church at Rockville.

Mail Line between Boston and New York.

REGULAR MAIL LINE BETWEEN BOSTON AND NEW YORK via Stonington and Providence. Inland route, without ferry, change of cars of baggage! The new steamer C. VANDERBILT, Capt. Joel Stone, and COMMODORE, Capt. William H. Frazee, in connection with the Stonington and Providence and Boston and Providence Railroads, leaving New York daily, Sundays excepted, from Pier No. 2 North River, at 4 o'clock P. M., and Stonington at 8 o'clock P. M. or upon the arrival of the mail train from Boston. These steamers were built expressly for the route, and are in every respect particularly adapted to the navigation of Long Island Sound. The accommodations for passengers are commodious and comfortable—the officers capable and experienced. The route being the shortest and most direct between Boston and New York, passengers are enabled to arrive in ample time for the morning lines of steamboats and railroads running to various points from those cities. The C. VANDERBILT will leave New York Tuesday, Thursday, and Saturday. Leave Stonington Monday, Wednesday, and Friday. The COMMODORE will leave New York Monday, Wednesday, and Friday. Leave Stonington Tuesday, Thursday, and Saturday. For passage, berths, state-rooms or freight, application may be made to the agents on the wharf, and at the office, 10 Battery-place.

Scientific and Practical Agriculture.

HENRY STEPHENS, F. R. S. E., of Edinburgh, the celebrated author of the "BOOK OF THE FARM," and PROF. NORTON, of Yale College, New Haven, are preparing for the Press, a Book to be entitled,

AGRICULTURE—SCIENTIFIC AND PRACTICAL.

It will embrace every subject of importance connected with Agriculture in all its various branches, both Theoretical and Practical. "Science, in as far as it has, up to the present time, been made available to Practice by Experiment, will be treated in its relation to every operation as it occurs in the course of the seasons." The work will be arranged under four distinct heads, representing the seasons, beginning with Winter and ending with Autumn. The following are among the subjects to be treated of in the first and second seasons, including the Introductory, viz:

INITIATION.—On the best of the existing Methods for acquiring a thorough knowledge of Practical Husbandry the Difficulties to be encountered in learning practical husbandry, and on the Means of overcoming them; the different kinds of farming; the persons required to conduct and execute the labor of the farm; the branches of science most applicable to Agriculture: the Institutions of Education best suited to Agricultural science; the evils attending the neglect of landowners and others to learn Practical Agriculture; on observing the details and recording the facts of farming by the Agricultural student.

PRACTICE—WINTER.—On the treatment of farm-horses in Winter; the treatment of the farmer's saddle and harness horse in Winter; the fattening of swine; the treatment of fowls; the rationale of the feeding of animals; on the accommodation of the grain crops in the steading; threshing and winnowing of grain; on the forming of dunghills and composts in Winter; on the construction of liquid-manure tanks and carts; sea-weed as manure; on gaulting or claying the soil.

PRACTICE—SPRING.—Summary of the field operations, and of the weather in Spring; on the advantages of having field-work always in a state of forwardness; on the calving of cows; the milking of cows; the rearing of calves. On the sowing of spring wheat; on drilling up the land; on the sowing of beans, and peas, and tares. On the transplanting of turnip bulbs for producing seed. On the rolling of land. On the sowing of oats, lucerne, and sainfoin. On the lambing of ewes. On cross-ploughing land, and ribbing land for the seed-furrow. On the sowing of grass-seeds and barley. On the turning of dunghills. On the planting of potatoes. On paring and baring the surface. On the farrowing of sows; the hatching of fowls, &c.

The Work will also embrace many important operations not included in the ordinary routine of farming, such as "Judging of Land," "Stocking of a Farm," "Improvement of the Soil," &c., &c.

The contributions by Prof. Norton will add greatly to the value of the book, by adapting it to the Soil, Climate, Growth, &c., of our own Country; and the united labors of two such distinguished men will make this work one of the most complete and valuable to the American farmer, ever issued from the press.

The work will be comprised in about 18 Nos. of 80 pages each, with a steel engraving in every number; besides which it will contain more than 600 wood engravings, in the highest style of the art. It will be handsomely printed on fine paper, and sold at 25 cents a number, or $4 in advance for the eighteen numbers.

The First Number will be issued in the month of January, and the work will be completed in about one year. The first volume, written by Mr. Stephens, is already published in Edinburgh, and the American edition will be printed from the stereotype plates imported for that purpose.

Booksellers and Dealers in Periodicals will be furnished on liberal terms.

Postmasters and others remitting the money for three copies at the above prices, will receive a fourth copy gratis. Remittances will be at the risk of the Publishers, if the mailing of the money is proved—otherwise at the risk of the parties remitting. A postmaster's certificate of the money being duly mailed is always satisfactory evidence to the Publishers.

Miscellaneous.

THE CHOCTAW INDIANS.

A correspondent of the Norristown (Pa.) Herald and Free Press, writing from "Doaksville, Choctaw Nation," under date of Dec. 25, gives a pleasant picture of the rapid progress of civilization among the Choctaws. We copy a few paragraphs.

THEIR GOVERNMENT.

The General Government of the Choctaws is similar in many respects to that of the United States.

The Nation is divided into four Districts, viz: Mushulitubbi, Apakshanubbi, Pushimataha and Chickasaw Districts. Each of these elect one chief, who holds his office four years, and is not eligible for more than two terms in succession.

The powers of the government are divided into three distinct Departments; Legislative, Executive, and Judicial. The legislative power is vested in a General Council, consisting of a Senate and House of Representatives. The Senate is composed of three Senators from each District, making twelve in all, who are elected for two years. The House of Representatives is composed of members chosen every year, at the ratio of one Representative to every thousand citizens. As the population of the Nation, whites excluded, is near 22,000, it has, consequently, about 22 Representatives. No person can be either a Senator or Representative who is not a natural born citizen of the Nation. No bill has the force of a law until passed by a majority of both branches of the General Council, signed by the Speaker and President of their respective bodies, and by the Chiefs. But if the bill be not signed by the Chiefs, it is returned to the House in which it origiuated, with their objections, and it may then become a law by the two-thirds rule. The National Court is composed of one National Judge, with the Supreme Judges of the several districts, whose judgment is final.

THEIR LAWS.

The first act which appears in the statute-book was passed at the first Session of the Council, in 1834, and prohibits the introduction of ardent spirits into the Nation, under the penalty of having it destroyed by the light-horse-men, who are officers filling capacities similar to those filled by Constables in Pennsylvania. By another act, passed in 1845, any person who brings ardent spirits into the Nation, and gives or sells it to any person or persons, and the person or persons be thereby killed, maimed, or injured in any respect, makes himself liable to an action in Court, and fine.

Theft is punished by compelling the offender to return the goods stolen, or pay their value in money, and receive lashes, not exceeding thirty-nine, "on the bare back." Murder and treason are punished with death by shooting. All other criminal offenses are punished by fines and lashes, the former being generally light, and in no case proportionate to the crime; while the latter never exceeds one hundred.

The next act of much importance is one in regard to slaves. It enacts, that if any citizen of the United States, whatever his occupation may be, is found to favor in any way "the principles and notions of the most fatal and destructive doctrines of abolitionism, he shall be compelled to leave the Nation and forever stay out of it." Teaching slaves to read, write, or sing, without the consent of the owner, or allowing them to sit at table with him, is considered sufficient ground to convict such person of "favoring the principles and notions of abolitionism." Any person who trades or carries on trafficking of any nature, with any negro slave, is liable to an indictment in any Court of the Nation. By an act passed in 1836, all white citizens of the United States, wishing to remain in the Nation under the employ of any person, citizen of the Nation, are required to obtain permission in writing from the Chief or United States Agent. Otherwise the employer is liable for any depredation the employee may commit.

The next and most important act is one in respect to education. It was passed in 1842, and established six institutions of learning. Of these, two are male and four female. The same act appropriates $19,800 annually for their support. Of this sum, the male academies receive $6,000 a piece; one of the female seminaries receives $3,000, and the other three $1,600.

By treaty, concluded at Doaksville, in 1837, the Chickasaw tribe agreed to pay the Choctaws $500,000 for the privilege of living in their Nation, the interest of which sum forms the fund out of which these appropriations are made.

THEIR COUNTRY.

By a treaty made and concluded with the United States, at Dancing Rabbit Creek, on the 27th of September, 1830, there was granted to the Choctaws the territory they now possess, and its boundaries assigned. Although there is little of this territory but is susceptible of high cultivation, yet the Choctaws, like the Swedes in their first settlements in Pennsylvania, having a great predilection for the water and fishing, locate near the rivers, creeks and bayous, as a ride through their bottom lands will testify. In traveling, therefore, through the interior, you meet with but few habitations; the table-lands being yet covered with primeval forests, while the far-spreading prairies still bloom in their virgin state. And such must continue to be the aspect of the country, so long as the gun and fishing-tackle are resorted to as furnishing a more honorable subsistence than the science of husbandry. The Choctaws were well apprised of the folly of these pursuits and their degrading tendency by one of their Chiefs, in an oration delivered by him some time since, in which they were urged to "hang up the rifle, and instead of making the woods ring with the report of it, make them resound with the sturdy strokes of the ax." But this part of his exhortation fell upon their minds like moonlight upon a frozen fountain; and it seems that nothing but sheer necessity can ever drive them to cultivate the soil. As, however, in regard to the Choctaws at least, the tenet of Professor Malthus is true, that "population has a tendency to increase more rapidly than the means of subsistence," they must ultimately turn their attention more extensively to agriculture, or die of starvation.

Doaksville, containing about 200 inhabitants, and the largest of the Choctaw villages, is situated upon grounds belonging partly to the Nation and partly to the United States, as the reserve for the Fort Townson Post. It is the seat of Indian traffic for many miles around. Upon every day of the week, Sunday excepted, only because the whites will not trade on this day, may be seen companies of them wending their way to this place, their mules and scrub horses loaded with pelfries, maize, roots, and such things as they can most readily exchange for coffee, sugar, salt, and dry goods.

THE WILD WOMAN OF THE MOUNTAINS.

From the Houston (Texas) Telegraph.

About a year since, an account was published in the Victoria Advocate respecting a strange creature, whose tracks had been discovered on the banks of the Navidad, near Texana. The footmarks of this creature resembled those of a woman, and a report was circulated to the effect that a wild woman had made her retreat in the forests of the Navidad. Within a few weeks several attempts have been made to capture this singular being. Mr. Glascock pursued it for several days with dogs, and at one time approached so near it as to cast a lasso upon its shoulders. It, however, with great adroitness, eluded the snare, and fled to a dense thicket, where it could not be traced. Mr. Glascock states that he was near a small prairie enclosed by the border forests of the river, when the creature emerged from the woods, and ran across the prairie in full view. It was about five feet high, resembling a human being, but covered with hair of reddish brown color. In its hand it held a stick about six feet long, which it flourished from side to side, as if to regulate its motions, and aid it when running at full speed. Its head and neck are covered with very long hair, which streamed backward in the wind. It ran with the speed of a deer, and was soon out of sight. The dogs pursued it, and came so close upon it, at a small creek, that it was compelled to drop its stick, which was taken by its pursuers.

This stick is about six feet long, straight and smooth as if polished with glass. Several other persons have repeatedly seen the creature, and they all concur in representing it as a human being, but so covered with shaggy hair as to resemble an ourang outang. It has frequently approached the houses of the settlers in that neighborhood during the night, and stole various articles—among other things, it carried off a quantity of towels, one or two books, and has also taken several pigs. One of its nests was found in the forest, in which were several napkins, folded up just as they were taken from the house, and a Bible, marked J. J. Wright. A bill for washing was also enclosed in the Bible. The foot-marks of this strange being have often been traced in the bottom of the Navidad, but it has eluded all attempts to capture it. The old settlers in that section say that these foot-marks have been noticed for ten or twelve years, and that several years ago there were other foot-marks, indicating that three of these creatures were in company. Within the last year the foot-marks of only one have been noticed.

DEATH BY FREEZING.

That to be frozen to death must be frightful torture, many would consider certain from their own experience of the effects of cold. But here we fall into the usual error of supposing that the suffering will increase with the energy of the agent, which could only be the case if sensibility remained the same. Intense cold brings on speedy sleep, which fascinates the senses, and fairly beguiles men out of their lives. A friend of Robert Boyle, who was overtaken by the drowsiness while comfortably seated on the side of a sledge, assured him that he had neither power nor inclination to ask for help; and unless his companions had observed his condition, he would have welcomed the snow for his winding-sheet. But the most curious example of the seductive power of cold is to be found in the adventures of the botanical party who, in Cook's first voyage, were caught in a snow-storm on Tierra del Fuego. Dr. Solander, by birth a Swede, and well acquainted with the destructive deceits of a rigorous climate, admonished the company, in defiance of lassitude, to keep moving on. "Whoever," said he, "sits down will sleep—and whoever sleeps will perish."

The doctor spoke as a sage, but he felt as a man. In spite of the remonstrances of those whom he had instructed and alarmed, he was the first to lie down. A black servant, who followed the example, was told he would die, and he replied that to die was all he desired. But the doctor despised his own philosophy; he said he would sleep first, and go on afterwards. Sleep he did for two or three minutes, and would have slept forever, unless his companions had happily succeeded in kindling a fire.

The scene was repeated thousands of times in the retreat from Moscow. "The danger of stopping," says Beaupre, who was on the medical staff, "was universally observed, and generally disregarded." Expostulation was answered by a stupid gaze, or by the request to be allowed to sleep unmolested; for sleep was delicious, and the only suffering was in resisting its call. Mr. Alison, the historian, to try the experiment, sat down in his garden at night when the thermometer had fallen four degrees below zero, and so quickly did the drowsiness come stealing on, that he wondered how a soul of Napoleon's unhappy band had been able to resist the treacherous influence. And doubtless they would all have perished, if the fear of death had not sometimes contended with the luxury of dying. Limbs are sacrificed where life escapes, and such is the obtuseness of feeling, that passengers in the streets of St. Petersburg rely on one another for the friendly warning that their noses are about to precede them to the tomb.

An appearance of intoxication is another common result, and half-frozen people in England have been punished for drunkards—an injustice the more galling, that in their own opinion the state was produced by the very want of their sovereign specific, "a glass of something to keep out the cold." The whole of the effects are readily explained. The contracted force of the cold compresses the vessels, drives the blood into the interior of the body, and the surface, deprived of the life-sustaining fluid, is left torpid or dead. A part of the external circulation takes refuge in the brain, and the congestion of the brain is the cause of the stupor. The celerity of the operation, when not resisted by exercise, may be judged from the circumstance that, in the few instants Dr. Solander slept, his shoes dropped off through the shrinking of his feet. There is little to wonder at in the contradiction between his precepts and his practice. In proportion to the danger which his mind foretold, was the ease with which his vigilance was overpowered and disarmed.

AMERICAN GENTLEMEN.

The following hints, which we take from the Home Journal, are applicable to more places than New York.

A young Englishman, taking a walk in Broadway, with the son of an American to whom he has brought a letter, is an every-day spectacle—yet a spectacle which would, in most cases, answer for a picture of a healthy man taking a walk with an invalid. The frame the of one is fully developed, his chest is broad, his step firm, his look that of a man who could enjoy anything or defend himself from any intrusion upon his rights. The other is pale, flat and narrow chested, undersized, weak-limbed, and looks like a man who could neither eat with a healthy appetite, nor hold his own with any moderate-sized man who should assail him. The average size of the wealthy young men of New York perceptibly dwindles with the number of the same family through whom the property has descended—a man who had a rich grandfather being smaller, usually, than one who had only a rich father. In England it is just the contrary; the better descended a man is, the more care has been taken, commonly, of his boyish health and manly exercises, and the better developed his system and figure. English gentlemen are taller and healthier than English workingmen. American gentleman are diminutive and feeble-looking in comparison with American mechanics and farmers. The difference between the two countries, as to the pleasure of leaving a fortune, is easily estimated, therefore, for it is the difference between a long and healthy gratitude, and a short and diseased one.

JOHN WESLEY.

Few men of modern times have accomplished more than this eminent divine. Few have left a more indelible and extended impression upon the age in which they lived. He was the founder of that Christian sect which has received the name of Methodists, and gave to it a character, which, to a great extent, it retains to this day.

John Wesley was born in Epsworth, England, in the year 1703. His father was a clergyman of the Church of England. Although a man of considerable talent, and of decided piety, it seems that the influence of the mother was much more deeply felt in the family circle. She it was who sowed those seeds in John's mind, early in his childhood, which afterward took deep root, and from which sprang his future eminence. While John was in college, he read Law's "Serious Call." This book, with some others of a similar character, awakened in his mind a strong religious fervor. He earnestly inquired what he should do to be saved, and, as he then hoped, through the influence of the Spirit of God, he became a disciple of Christ, and was adopted into the divine family. In after life, however, it would seem that he dated his conversion at a later period. Soon after he became familiar with the books above alluded to, he, in connection with several other students of the University, formed an association, which met at stated times, for the purpose of religious worship, and for the mutual improvement of its members. Those who belonged to this society—some fifteen in number—were very correct in their habits. They did not live as the rest of the students lived. They were more sober, more exemplary, than the rest. On this account the students, in ridicule called them Methodists. But Wesley and his friends did not care what name they went by. They were more anxious to get to heaven, and to lend their aid to other pilgrims in their journey heavenward, than for anything else. So the name which was given in derision to these praying people came at length to be adopted by the Methodists themselves.

Among the young men of the University, who were associated with Wesley, was the celebrated George Whitefield. Wesley and Whitefield were very intimate while pursuing their studies preparatory to the Christian ministry, and for some time after they commenced preaching. But a breach occurred eventually, which, as in the case of Paul and Barnabas, separated them.

Wesley's was a busy life. In 1735, he commenced his labors in a college which had then recently been established in Georgia. He remained here, however, only a year and nine months. He performed, in preaching from place to place, an almost incredible amount of work. For upward of fifty years, he preached frequently twice, and sometimes four or five times a day, for weeks together. Besides this, he presided with the most minute superintendence over all the public affairs of the rapidly growing community, which looked to him as its head, transacted a great deal of private business, and sent to the press between thirty and forty volumes.

No man knew better than Wesley the importance of small things. His whole financial system was based on weekly penny collections. It was a rule of his preachers never to omit a single preaching appointment, except when the "risk of limb or life" required. He was the first to apply extensively the plan of tract distribution. He wrote, printed, and scattered over the kingdom, placards on almost every topic of morals and religion. In addition to the usual means of grace, he introduced the band meeting, the class meeting, the prayer meeting, the love feast, and the watch night. Not content with his itinerant labors, he called into use the powers of his people by establishing the new departments of local preachers, exhorters, and leaders.

He was perpetually traveling and preaching, studying and writing, translating and abridging, superintending his societies, and applying his great plans. He traveled usually five thousand miles a year, preaching often too in the open air, commencing frequently at five o'clock in the morning. In the midst of all his traveling and preaching, he carried with him the studious habits of the philosopher. No department of human inquiry was omitted by him. "History, poetry and philosophy," said he, "I read on horseback."

After the eightieth year of his age, he visited Holland twice. At the end of his eighty-second, he says, "I am never tired, (such is the goodness of God,) either with writing, preaching, or traveling. He preached under trees which he had planted himself, at Kingswood. He outlived most of his first disciples and preachers, and stood up, mighty in intellect and labors, among the second and third generations of his people. In his later years persecution had subsided; he was everywhere received as a patriarch, and sometimes excited, by his arrival in towns and cities, an interest "such as the presence of the king himself would produce." He attracted the largest assemblies, perhaps, which were congregated for religious instruction, being estimated sometimes at more than thirty thousand.

He at length died, in the eighty-eighth year of his age, and sixty-fifth of his ministry. Nearly one hundred and forty thousand members, upwards of five hundred itinerant, and more than one thousand local preachers, were connected with him when he died.

THE OLD LADY AND THE COBBLER.

Some years ago, the husband of an old lady residing in a country village, happened to die very suddenly, without a will, for the want of which very necessary precaution, his estate would have passed away from his widow, had she not resorted to the following remarkable expedient to avert the loss of his property. She concealed the death of her husband, and prevailed upon an old cobbler, her neighbor, who was somewhat like the deceased, to go to bed at her house, and personate him, in which character it was agreed that he should dictate a will, leaving the widow the estate in question. An attorney was accordingly sent for to prepare the required document; and the widow, on his arrival, seemed to be realizing the greatest affliction at her good man's danger, but forthwith proceeded to ask questions of her pretended, calculated to elicit the answer she expected and desired. The old cobbler, groaning and looking as much like a person going to give up the ghost as possible, feebly answered—"I intend to leave you half of my estate; and I think the poor old shoemaker, who lives over the way, is deserving of the other half, for he has always been a good neighbor." The widow was thunderstruck at the reply, so different from that which she had expected, but dared not negative the old cobbler's will, for fear of losing the whole of the property, while the cunning old rogue in bed, who was himself the old shoemaker living over the way, laughed in his sleeve, and divided with her the fruits of a project which the widow had intended for her own sole benefit. CATTLE FEED.

Hay is the food for cattle during the winter. If they can get hay enough, during the cold season, they do very well. It is not always that the farmer has a sufficiency of this for his stock, and hence it is useful to know the comparative value of other articles which may be used as substitutes for it. It is also more agreeable, and we think more profitable, to mingle other articles with hay. We have prepared from various sources the following table:—

Taking good hay as the standard, 100 lbs. of hay equal 276 lbs. carrots; 300 lbs. ruta baga; 317 lbs. mangold wurtzel; 201 lbs. potatoes; 494 lbs. common turnips.

By calculating 60 lbs. for a bushel of any of the above roots, it will be seen that one ton of hay equals 91 bushels carrots; 100 bushels ruta baga; 106 bushels mangold wurtzel; 67 bushels potatoes; 165 bushels turnips.

From this it will be seen how much fodder you get of each, per acre, compared with good hay.

In regard to straw, experiments have established the following estimate as very near the truth. 100 lbs. of hay equal 272 lbs. new wheat straw; 166 lbs. barley straw; 169 lbs. pea straw; 94 lbs clover hay.

NANTUCKET BOYS.—A few days since a number of boys were amusing themselves by skating on one of the neighboring ponds, when one of the number, a daring little fellow, who was the delight of his companions, suddenly broke through and disappeared. He soon rose to the surface, struggled for life, but in vain, for the ice continually broke at every attempt to gain its surface. The case was desperate; when suddenly a cry was raised among the anxious boys who were witnessing the exertions, "Off with your skates! off with your skates, every one of you, and tie them in a line by the strings!" This was but the work of a moment. "Now down on your stomachs, and keep within reaching distance of each other." The pioneer took the string of skates, and approached as near as was prudent on account of the weakness of the ice, and threw the line of skates to the boy, reserving one end in his hand. It was fortunately caught; the line of prostrate boys, skates and strings, was now perfect, and the order resounded through the line, "Now, haul for your life." This was done, and the noble fellow was rescued, with only a few slight cuts on his face from the ice. [Christian Citizen.

NEW DISCOVERY IN AGRICULTURE.—An extraordinary fact was mentioned the other day at the sitting of the Academy of Science. One of the members stated that the agricultural society of Brest had, upon the proposition of a member of the committee, sown some wheat upon land without any preparation of ploughing or digging, and one of the worst soils possible, and after having merely walked over the ground to press the grain on the surface, had it covered with fresh straw to the thickness of two inches. The product, it is asserted, was much more abundant and much superior in quality to wheat raised from the same seed in the ordinary way. Some ears of corn, the seed of which had been placed upon window glass covered with straw, were also exhibited.

CURE FOR HEADACHE.—A work has recently been published in Paris, by an eminent physician, in which he describes a new remedy for headaches. He uses a mixture of ice and salt, in proportion of one to one-half as a cold mixture, and this he applies, by means of a little purse of silk gauze, with a rim of gutta percha, to limited spots on the forehead or other parts, where rheumatic headaches are felt. It gives instantaneous relief. The skin is subjected to the process from half a minute to one and a half minutes, and is rendered hard and white. It is good in erysipelas and diseases of the skin. AFRICA—Progress of Discovery.—The South African Commercial Advertiser, of Nov. 3, contains an extract of a letter from the Rev. Robert Moffat, announcing the discovery of the Great Inland Lake, so long supposed to exist to the north of the Cape, which is regarded as the grandest geographical discovery of modern times. The discoverers say, in regard to the lake and country through which they passed:—"We cannot tell how broad the lake may be, for we could not see a horizon, except one of water, on the south and west. We traversed through much desert country, and were looking for the lake for 200 miles before we came to it. We traversed about 200 miles along the banks of a large river which runs S. S. E., a beautiful stream, in some parts very like the Clyde, but frequently broader. The water was rising, and seems to come from the north, from melted snows—it is so clear and soft. Two large rivers run into the lake, both from the north. The Batnuana are a numerous tribe—the chief a youth. Many Makoba or Bayeive [which means eaters] fish and float on the river; darker in complexion than Bechuanas, and speaking a language which has a slight klick."

Variety.

The first Life Insurance Company in England was established in 1706. From 1800 to 1810, thirteen additional companies were formed; and there are now ninety-three, many having accumulated assets to the amount of millions. From a late Parliamentary return, it appears that the amount now insured in the kingdom is not less than £132,000,000 sterling, more than six hundred and fifty millions of dollars.

It has been observed that workmen and others who keep the head constantly covered are the soonest bald. Ventilation is necessary to a luxuriant growth of hair. The fact that there are few bald women, and no bald Indians or negroes, and also the fact that only the scalp or the top of the head gets bald, adds probability to the above suggestion.

"Benefit of the clergy" was a privilege formerly allowed, by virtue of which a man convicted of felony or manslaughter, was put to read in a Latin book, of a Gothic black character; and if the ordinary of Newgate said, "Legit ut Clericus," that is, he reads like a clerk, he was only burnt in the hand and set free; otherwise he suffered the punishment of death for his crime.

Recently, in Cincinnati, a bishop and three inferior clergy were very gravely employed in—what? In baptizing four bells! In relating this fact, the Presbyterian verry appositely remarks, that it was never apprized of any intimation in the Gospel, to the effect that the Apostles, or their successors, were to go "into all the world, and"—baptize bells!

Carr, a London waterman, laid a wager that he and a big dog would both leap from the centre arch of Westminster bridge, and land at Lambeth within a minute of each other. He jumped off first, and the dog, not being in the secret, immediately followed, laid hold of his master by the neck, and dragged him on shore, to the amusement of the spectators.

From 1780 to 1800, the Hudson Bay Fur Company is estimated to have made annual profits of about 70 per cent, on stock actually paid, and this although between $600,000 and $1,000,000 was lost by French captures. Between 1800 and 1821 the profit did not average 3½ per cent. It is now about 7 per cent.

It is said there is in San Francisco a former Judge acting as waiter at an eating house, a former Professor in Yale College driving an ox team, and a clergyman tending bar.

The London Illustrated News says, "The growth of the United States is in reality the downfall of Great Britain. All the unhappy circumstances that are of prejudice to us, are a benefit to them."

A Mr. Paine has made a discovery by which water may be decomposed and used as fuel. Scientific savants say this will supersede all other kinds of fuel.

Hood gives a graphic picture of a curious irritable man:—"He lives like a hedgehog rolled up the wrong way, tormenting himself with his prickles."

Of nearly 7000 suicides committed in France the last ten years, three-fourths were unmarried persons. So says a celebrated Paris Physician.

Old Fuller having pondered all the modes of destruction, arrived at the short and decisive conclusion, "None please me."

"A lawyer," said Lord Brougham, in a facetious mood, "is a learned gentleman who rescues your estate from your enemies, and keeps it himself."

DeRuyter Institute.

The Academic Year of this Institution for 1849-50 will commence the last Wednesday in August, and continue forty-three consecutive weeks, ending the last Wednesday of June, including a recess of ten days for Christmas and New Year holidays. The Year will be divided into three Terms:

The First, commencing August 29, of 14 weeks.
The Second, " December 5, of 15 "
The Third, " March 20, of 14 "

Encouraged by the success of the School under its present Instructors, the friends of the Institute have made liberal additions to its library, cabinet, and apparatus, thus furnishing ample facilities for illustrating branches taught in the various departments.

The Literary Department is as heretofore under the supervision of Rev. JAMES R. IRISH, A. M., President, assisted by other able instructors. In this Department, especial attention is given to the lower English Branches. Students are also fitted in the Classics to enter the advanced classes in College.

The Department of Natural Science is conducted by Professor GURDON EVANS. In this, Natural Philosophy, Astronomy, Geology, Natural History, and Chemistry, are taught in a manner of unsurpassed interest With it is connected the Department of Agricultural Science.

The Farmer's Course is thoroughly scientific; embracing the study of the best authors, with daily recitations. During the Winter Term two hours each day will be spent in the Analytical Laboratory, where students will be instructed in the constitution of soils and ashes of plants, with a minute examination of their constituent elements, and the various modes of testing for their presence.

A course of lectures is given during the Term on Practical Farming, explaining the relation of Geology to Agriculture, the Soil, the Plant, and the Animal, and their various relations, the Rotation of Crops, Feeding Animals, Manures, Draining Lands, &c., &c. For further information see Catalogue.

Besides Globes, Maps, &c., for the illustration of Astronomy, a Newtonian Telescope of high magnifying power has recently been added to the apparatus.

During the Summer Term, Botany and Geology receive special attention, illustrated by excursions to localities where these sciences may be studied as seen in nature. A Geological and Mineralogical Cabinet is accessible to the students.

The Mathematical Department is under the instruction of OLIVER B. IRISH, Tutor. It embraces thorough instruction in Arithmetic, and the higher pure and practical Mathematics, with field exercises in Engineering and Surveying.

Elocution, embracing Reading, Declamation, General Oratory, and Writing, receives the special attention of a competent teacher.

The Teacher's Department will, as formerly, be in operation during the Fall Term, and last half of the Winter Term. Particular attention to this is solicited from all who intend to teach district schools.

The Female Department is under the care of Miss SUSANNA M. COON, a graduate of Troy Female Seminary, a lady every way competent for this responsible station.

No efforts will be spared to render the young ladies of this Seminary truly accomplished, as well in the social relations of life, as in the substantial branches of learning and the higher refinements of education. Ample facilities are furnished for pursuing French, Italian, German, Drawing, Painting, Music on the Piano, and Vocal Music.

Information.

Good board in private families from $1 25 to $1 50. Parents from abroad should furnish their children with very little pocket money, as many temptations may thus be avoided. Those who wish may deposit money with either of the teachers, to be disbursed according to order, without extra charge.

Tuition, to be settled in advance, per term, from $3 00 to $5 00. Extras—For Drawing, $1 00; Monochromatic Painting, $3 00; Oil Painting, $5 00; Chemical Experiments, $1 00; Writing, including Stationery, 50c.; Tuition on Piano, $8 00; Use of Instrument, $2 00; in Agricultural Chemistry, including Chemicals, Apparatus, fires, &c., (breakage extra,) $12 00.

N. B. A daily stage leaves the railroad and canal at Chittenango for this place at 4 o'clock P. M.

CENTRAL RAILROAD OF NEW JERSEY.—WINTER ARRANGEMENT—Commencing Thursday, November 1, 1849. The extension of the Railroad from Somerville to White House (10 miles) is open for travel. reducing the staging between the terminus of the Road and Easton to 25 miles. This line leaves New York by steamboat RED JACKET, Pier No. 1 North River, and by New Jersey Railroad, from the foot of Cortland-st., as per schedule below: Leave New York by N. J. R. R. from foot of Cortland-st. at 9 A. M. and 4½ o'clock P. M. By steamboat, Pier No. 1 North River, at 11 o'clock A. M. and 4 P. M. Returning, will leave White House at 3½ A. M. (freight) at 6 20m. A. M. and 1 40m. P. M. North Branch at 4 A. M. (freight) at 6 30m. A. M. and 1 50m. P. M; Somerville at 5 A. M. (freight) at 6 50m. A. M. and 2 5m. P. M.; Bound Brook at 5¼ A. M (freight) at 7 A. M. and 2¼ P. M.; Plainfield at 5¾ A. M. (freight) at 7 25m. A. M. and 2 40m. P. M.; Westfield at 6¼ A. M. (freight) 7¾ A. M. and 3 P. M.; Elizabethtown at 7 A. M. (freight) at 8¼ A. M. and 12¾ P. M.

Stages will be in readiness on the arrival of the cars at White House by the 9 o'clock A. M. train from New York to convey passengers to Easton, Allentown, Wilkesbarre, and Mauch Chunk, Pa., and to Flemington, Lebanon, Clinton, Bricktown, Jugtown, New Germantown, &c., N. J.

On Tuesday, Thursday, and Saturday, to Delaware Water Gap, Strondsburg, Bartonsville, Stanhope, Daleville, Bucktown, Lackawana, Iron Works, &c.

N. B. All baggage at the risk of the owners until delivered into the actual possession of the Agents of the Company, and checks or receipts given therefor.

Boston, via Newport and Fall River.

FOR BOSTON, VIA NEWPORT AND FALL RIVER, by the splendid and superior steamers BAY STATE and EMPIRE STATE, of great strength and speed, particularly adapted to the navigation of Long Island Sound, running in connection with the Fall River and Old Colony Railroad, a distance of 53 miles, to Boston only. Leave Pier No. 3 North River, near the Battery. The steamer EMPIRE STATE, Capt. Comstock, on Tuesdays, Thursdays, and Saturdays, at 4 P. M. The BAY STATE, Capt. Brown, on Mondays, Wednesdays, and Fridays, at 4 P. M. This line is the only one that runs direct for Newport. For freight or passage apply on board, and either to TISDALE BORDEN, 70 Wall-st. or at the office of the Line, at the corner of Washington-st. and Battery-place.

NOTES OF A VOYAGE TO CALIFORNIA.—No. 4.

From letters of Dr. J. D. B. STILLMAN to his friends in New York.

SHIP PACIFIC, at Sea, May 27th, 1849.

I am compelled, from the necessity of the case, to pass over much that was very interesting at Rio, to give an outline of our voyage.

We were ready for sea on the 1st of April; but when the Captain went to the Fort for the "pass-word," to pass the Fort below, he was informed that our papers must be renewed. This caused a detention of two more days; but, on the morning of the 3d, we were early greeted with the sailor's farewell song, as he heaved at the anchor. We were soon floating away from scenes that will ever be memorable to all on board. There had been but little sickness among us, but the climate was so uniformly sultry, that our energies were nearly gone. We had eaten oranges and bananas until they lost their relish, and the scenery so magnificent had grown tiresome, and we were not sorry to be on our way. As we passed the Fort, we were greeted with the boo-ou-ou-ooo from an immense trumpet. The captain raised his little tube, and replied "You are a liar." Now we shall catch it, thought I; but no, that was satisfactory—that was the "pass-word." This and other similar expressions are used. The land breeze in the morning was light, and a small steam-tug towed us down the bay, and before night-fall we saw the granite mountains fade away.

Nothing occurred worthy of note until we were off the Platte River. Here the water became green, as though we were on soundings, and immense numbers of birds covered its surface. We were in the neighborhood of storms, and every preparation was made by our captain for bad weather—the quarter boats were taken in, and storm-sails were rigged. The winds, for the most part, were S. W., and we were unable to keep as near the land as was desirable. It was soon found inexpedient to attempt to pass inside of the Faulkland Islands, and, accordingly, our course was directed to the S. E., to give them a good berth.

April 18th.—We experienced a heavy gale from the S. W., which continued for twenty-four hours in uninterrupted fury. In the onset, it carried away our spanker gaff, and fore-top-gallant back-stay. Fortunately the halliard parted with the stay, or we should have lost our top-mast. All sail was taken in, and the ship lay to with main-spencer and stay-sail. I thought I had seen "blows" at sea, but they were mere child's play to this. There was no laughing at others' fears. About midnight, the howling of the wind became less loud, and, in the morning, we were close hauled, with the wind West, but the waves were running so tremendously that we could make but little headway. You may form an idea of the size of the drifting heaps of water, when you fancy yourself sitting between decks, under the after hatch, and, looking up through the sky-light, see the waves thirty degrees above the quarter-rail, and the davits under water. For two nights there had not been a sleepy eye on board. The captain assures us, that we shall not, probably, have another such a storm. Numerous cape pigeons were flying about us the next day—beautiful black and white spotted birds, about the size of the common dove, and accompanied by the grey petrel, a larger bird—one that I caught measured three feet nine inches across the wings. The famous albatros was seen for the first time to-day. On Thursday we saw the Falkland Islands in the distance, bearing N. W. The air is cold, the thermometer ranging from 35° to 38°; the sea is rough, and covered with large patches of kelp—one species resembles, at a distance, the roots of the common potato, and is called by the sailors, cape potato—the other is long and flat, sometimes palmated, and stretches out over the water for several rods, undulating with the waves, like a vast serpent.

On the 21st the barometer, which had been falling for some time, indicated another gale. The sky was clear, and, as the sun set, the yellow light shone to the zenith—all around looked fair, but the barometer stood at 29.10 inches, and was falling fast. The skipper said that he must believe his barometer, and put everything in readiness before night. The yards were sent down, additional lashings were used to secure the boats and deck-load, and the baggage of the midships, which had suffered much in the last gale, was made fast. True enough, it came at midnight. The increased motion of the ship awoke us; we heard the howling of the wind, and the word of command given with the trumpet, and, by daylight, we were in all the horrors of a storm as violent as the preceding one. Hail and snow continued during the day. Night brought no relief. No one dared to venture on deck, and, all locked below, the situation was unenviable. Our attempts at sleep, to one disinterested, might have been amusing. All the rooms on the lee-side were drenched with water, and two fellow-passengers came to my room on the weather side. One sat against the door, with his feet against the berth; another against the berth with his feet against the door. My room-mate was in his berth, lashed fast, while a friend was in my berth with me, and both of us crowded into a space of thirty inches, and braced in opposite directions, we managed to keep our places. Thus we passed the night. No sonner wuold one fall into a dose, than a sudden "lurch" would rouse him to a sense of his situation, while the lantern hanging from the timbers would show the extent of our deviation from the perpendicular. Sometimes the ship would continue so long on her side, that we feared the next wave would finish her; we would stare into each others' faces like owls; but, as she righted, would relapse again into drowsy indifference. Now and then she would rebound and tremble, as though she had struck a rock; this would be followed by the rushing of water across the deck, and a heavy roll, as the vessel seemed to stagger under the load. Once, during the night, we were disturbed by loud talking and blows in the cabin. One of the passengers was quarreling with a little Malay waiter for his place on the table. It was yielded; but the new occupant, after being twice thrown off on the floor with his bedding, sat down on a trunk, the very personification of despair. The cabin presented an appearance, in the morning, difficult to describe—it was like a scene after a fire. Wearing apparel, books, guns, and bed-clothes, wet, and mingled with broken jars of sweet-meats and bottles of wine, saved to cheer the weary hours on ship-board, strewed the cabin floor—chairs, and one half the crockery on board, were broken. We took our food in our hands, and kept our rooms. The only sail carried were the fore and main top sails in "goose wings," (that is, the sails close-reefed, and the weather end furled, leaving a small corner down,) and a stay-sail.

The following day was calm, but cold and cloudy; the next, the wind was blowing a gale from the N. E., and the ship was run before it with close-reefed top-sails. We again found our situation a very unpleasant one. We suffered less from motion, but more from water. The greatest difficulty was experienced to prevent the ship from "broaching," and the captain stood at the helm himself during the entire day, and gave orders that the passengers should keep below. I chanced to stand on deck, with two or three others, near the cabin door, when a heavy sea came over the quarter, and down the companion way, in a blue sheet. Instantly we were up to our middles in water. I made a rush for the door, and got fast, as did one other—a third was carried down, and for a moment was lost to us, but, as the ship rolled on the other side, he caught the lashings on the after hatch, and we pulled him in; a great amount of water went into the cabin, and we began to feel that our situation was serious. The same sea drenched the men at the wheel, and carried the compass, which, for convenience, had been taken out of the binacle, down to larboard. It was so dark and wet below, that I determined to make another stand above. I must see the magnificent marine view. I kept my hand on the door, to make my escape in haste. A gentleman stood near, and said he would hold on to me, but had hardly stepped on deck when his feet slipped, and he fell across the deck upon his face, and slid like a dead man to the other side, in the water. I did not go on deck again during the gale. As it subsided, the captain came below to cheer us. Another uncomfortable night passed. We were wet and cold, and the confined air, where sixty persons were breathing, made me feverish. I went on deck to procure some water; it was pitchy dark, and raining; my feet slipped, and I returned unsuccessful.

From that time to the first of May we were battling with head winds and storms, not one hundred miles West of Cape Horn. Great numbers of albatros were seen, and with the blubber of a porpoise we caught many of them.

On the 4th, I wrote that we had felt to the full capabilities of endurance the pains of hope deferred. Lat. 58° 19′, long. 73° 3′; course S. W. by S. For two days previous we were lying to in a heavy S. Wester. The captain has been ten times off Cape Horn, but never before saw so much rough weather.

On the 5th, the sun shone out about noon, and an observation was taken. Altitude of the sun 15° 30′. How mournfully it reminded me of the vast distance that intervened between the wanderers and their homes.

Last night, about midnight, the wind died away, and until daylight we were rolling in a dead calm, which was even more disagreeable than a storm. So violent was the rolling, that fears were entertained that it would carry away our masts. Towards morning, a light breeze sprung up from the South, and as soon as we had steering way all was right again. At breakfast, all were in fine spirits; the wind was fair, and there was a prospect that the head winds, which, with the exception of about eighteen hours, had prevailed for the last three weeks, were to be followed by something more favorable. So far it has been all head work.

May 9th.—We were fairly free, lat. 50° 15′, long. 79° 11′. Our gratification on being at liberty from this memorable Cape can be conceived only by those who have been similarly situated. The air is yet cold, but the sea-water is sensibly warmer. Albatros and cape pigeons still follow us in great numbers. The latter we have become very much attached to. They fly around us within reach of a cane, and alight in little fleets close under our side, and, as they fall astern, will return again and drop into the water hard enough to knock their little wits out. They have the utmost confidence in us. A beautiful sight it is to see the little fellows riding the rough sea so fleet and buoyant, with their black heads, spotted coats, and pure white vests. The wind is nearly South this evening, and we are still running before it; but a heavy swell has been making all day from the S. W., showing that a gale has been raging in that direction not long since.

May 12th.—The day was pleasant, and we made but little progress. In the afternoon, a boat was lowered, and a party went off three or four miles, and on the road captured a Portuguese man-of-war, which I have preserved in spirits. I have on the back of my hand an eschar produced by a drop of water falling from it—it burned me quicker than boiling oil, and deeper, though with less pain. The day after, a school of black-fish came near the ship. These are a small species of whale, very active, and more dangerous to boats, the whalers say, than any others. It was proposed to go in pursuit of them. We took a "gig" used for porpoise. After about an hour's trial, we fastened to one of the largest. This was rare sport, to be harnessed, like Neptune, to the monsters of the deep, and going as though the old—"what's-his-name?"—was after us; and, to confess the truth, it seemed a little as though we had "caught a Tartar." The officers had so little confidence in our being able to fasten, that they had not given us the means to kill him or get away. We had no water or food in the boat, and the school were going to windward. As soon as we fastened, we made signal to the ship for help; but this was unnecessary, as they saw with their glasses that we were going without oars, and lowered a boat. In the mean time, we were moving faster than was pleasant away from the ship, and we had enough to do to keep ourselves right side up. Our steed would go down, and turn so quick, that we wished some one else had him; then we would have to spring to it to keep him from rising under us, and sending us where we wished him, All the time we were in the midst of the school, and they would rise and spout all around us. We were afraid that they did not sufficiently respect our persons, and would hit them with an oar, and they would slap water into our faces, and go down—and so we would part. At one time, our whale raised his hogshead-shaped head out of the water, not far from us, and we thought he was going to die, but he settled away, and, to our great relief, went to windward, and soon brought us to the other boat. The second mate was with her, and had brought a harpoon. We passed the line to him, and dropped astern. He threw the iron, but did not fasten—it bent—at the same time a gun was fired at him. He had now two boats in tow, and twenty men. The "gig" gave out, and we escaped! The ship was now almost hull down, and we pulled away heartily, but found a stern chase a long one.

May 19th.—The island of Juan Fernandes was visible, like a small blue cloud in the horizon. After breakfast a boat with sail and eleven men started for it, then distant fifty miles. They had orders not to lose sight of the ship, but they were determined to see the island; and as the wind fell off, they took to their oars, and at three o'clock they lost sight of us. There was no way left them, but to keep on for the island. At night, they were twenty miles distant. They worked until towards morning, when a squall came on, and with their sail they rounded the east end of the island, but could see only the abrupt shores and fearful surf. They coasted along until they saw a light, about 4 o'clock A. M. This proceeded from a ship lying in the harbor, waiting for water—the Brooklyn, for California, ten days before us from N. Y. In the meantime a breeze had sprung up from the N. W., and we had great difficulty in getting to the island. This increased for two days, until it became a gale. We beat about the south side to find the boat. The captain felt sure they were wrecked, and the most gloomy forebodings filled the minds of all on board. We could see no signs of life on the island, and at the close of the third day, as the clouds hung heavy and dark over the mountains, accompanied with mist and rain, nearly all hope of them failed, and the characters of all were discussed, as though they were to be seen no more. That night the wind changed, and we made for the north side. A light was discovered on shore, and a tremendous shout, raised from our decks, expressed the anxiety, now in a great measure relieved. We lay to that night, and in the morning were twenty miles north of the island, when we stood into the harbor with all sail set, and took off the culprits. The captain was much displeased, as were most of the passengers, but I did not regret the opportunity it gave me to see the island.

The only inhabitants there now are an American and five Chilians, with their families. The American is a suspicious character, and rules the others by his superior sagacity and courage. They live in straw huts. There are numerous caves here, cut in the lava, but they are damp and cold—our adventurers spent a night in the one said to have been occupied by Selkirk. Wild horses, asses and goats are numerous, being the descendants of those brought from the continent while this was occupied as a penal colony. The appearance of the island, at the distance of five miles, is dreary enough: it seems but one mass of mountains, some 2000 feet high, and the only accessible place is on the north side, where the longest ravines have united, and slope to the sea, which meets them in a little bay. A large portion of it is naked lava rock, in some places softened by the weather, and continually washing down into the ravines. The round-stone pavement made by the prisoners is buried by this alluvium. The soil is exceedingly productive, and myrtle and peach trees fill the watered parts of the island. The peaches are very fine and large—the ground, in many places, was covered with them in a state of decay. Quinces are very fine, and not unpleasant to the taste. Figs are raised by the settlers, and are said to be fine. Other garden productions are growing wild in great profusion, and Juan Fernandes would not now, notwithstanding it has lost all the delightful romance with which De Foe invested it, make a bad hermitage for one world weary; but for me, I thought,

"Oh, Solitude! where are the charms
That sages have seen in thy face?
Better dwell in the midst of alarms,
Than reign in this horrible place."

An earthquake occurred here in 1835, and a volcano broke out in the sea about a mile from shore. The smaller island is occupied only by goats, and these are in great numbers. It has many acres of table-land, covered with a rank growth of wild oats and grass. Fish are very fine, and so numerous, that, as our Crusoes say, they will bite the fingers when held in the water while fishing. A species of craw-fish, of large size, are taken in any quantity; they are somewhat like lobsters, and we found them very palatable. On leaving the Island, we took the trades, and now, a week after, are in lat. 15°. We expect to see land to-morrow. We saw, while standing off and on for the boat, two sulphur whales; they swam along side of us half of the day, and would wear ship whenever we did, and spout so near us that the water was blown into our faces.

Thursday, May 31st.—I rose early this morning to see the land. The sun had not risen, and the lofty ranges of the Andes were well defined on the sky above the clouds. As the sun rose, they disappeared; but this afternoon the land is nearer, and the light falls better on them, and the scene is—oh, how grand! The vast piles of gilded snow stand out into the very arch of heaven, too magnificent for description. The water has become green, and numerous pelicans are on the surface, flying away to their homes on the mountains.

You would be amused by a representation of the excitement and preparation on board on the approach of land. At noon to-day we were twenty-seven miles from Callao. I shall see the most I can in the time allowed us there. Lima will be our head-quarters.

THE BLIND BOY HAS BEEN AT PLAY, MOTHER.

BY ELIZA COOK.

The blind boy 's been at play, mother,
And merry games we had;
We led him on our way, mother,
And every step was glad.
But when we found a starry flower,
And praised its varied hue,
A tear came trickling down his cheek,
Just like a drop of dew.

We took him to the mill, mother,
Where falling waters made
A rainbow o'er the rill, mother,
As golden sun-rays played.
But when we shouted at the scene,
And hailed the clear blue sky,
He stood quite still upon the bank,
Ank breathed a long, long sigh.

We asked him why he wept, mother,
Whene'er we found the spots,
Where periwinkles crept, mother,
O'er wild forget-me-nots.
"Ah me!" he said, while tears ran down,
As fast as summer showers,
"It is because I cannot see
The sunshine and the flowers."

Oh, that poor sightless boy, mother,
Has taught me I am bless'd;
For I can look with joy, mother,
On all I love the best.
And when I see the dancing stream,
And daisies red and white,
I'll kneel upon the meadow sod,
And thank my God for sight.

1800 AND 1850—THE CONTRAST.

Since the commencement of the present century, not far from two thousand missionaries have been sent forth to different heathen countries, and upwards of seven thousand native assistants have been employed in teaching and preaching the gospel; about four thousand churches have been organized, whose aggregate members amount to very nearly, or quite, two hundred and fifty thousand; and three thousand missionary schools have been established, embracing two hundred and fifty thousand children. And all this where fifty years ago there was not a single school, nor a single scholar; a single church, nor a single convert; a single missionary, nor a single native assistant, to be found!

At the commencement of the present century, it is computed that there were in the whole world about 4,000,000 copies of the Bible; whereas, now there are more than 30,000,000. Then, the Scriptures had been published in less than fifty languages; now, they exist in nearly two hundred languages and dialects! Then, they were accessible in languages spoken by about 200,000,000, now, in tongues and dialects spoken by 500,000,000!

Fifty years ago, not a dollar was given through any of the channels referred to in this review, expressly for the object of sending the living preacher to the heathen; now, considerably more than two millions of dollars is contributed annually to the Foreign Missionary Societies alone!

Within the same period whole islands, and groups of islands, inhabited by the lowest savages in the North and South Pacific, have been christianized; the work of illumination has begun in some of the darkest parts of Africa; China, with its teeming millions, has been thrown open to our labors; India, throughout all its borders, has become fully accessible; while in Turkey, where the government but lately visited with instant death all apostates from the national faith, the principle of religious liberty is now interwoven with the fundamental laws of the Empire!

The past half century has also been marked by such improvements in science and the arts, as are stupendous in themselves, and well adapted, as they are by Providence designed, to be subsidary to the still more stupendous moral and religious enterprise achieved, or in prospect. Fifty years ago we had no steamships traversing either ocean or river; no railroads binding the different sections of our extended country together, and making the inhabitants of its extreme borders next-door neighbors; no telegraphic wires upon which to send living and burning thoughts flying through the air with lightning speed. There has also been going forward a new distribution of political power in the world, so that, at this moment, more than half the population of the globe is subject to Christian governments, and full one half of these fall to Protestant powers! Nor are we yet able to speak of the final results of the late upheavings of the masses in Europe, now temporarily quieted by external pressure; though who can doubt the connection between these widely-extended movements and the ultimate establishment of truth and justice in the world. [Jour. of Missions.

THE SPOILER SPOILED.

Mary, the bloody Queen of England, was a violent persecutor of the Protestants. Having brought to the stake multitudes in England, Scotland, and Wales, she reached forth her hand to vex them of Ireland. She had signed a commission (1558,) authorizing the persecution and the annihilation of all Irish heretics, which was committed for execution to Dr. Cole, a zealous son of Rome. The Doctor immediately starts for Ireland to execute the bloody mandate of the Queen. At Chester, where he is to embark, he communicates to the Mayor the nature of his errand to Ireland, at the same time pointing to a box, which, to use his language, contained "that which shall lash the heretics of Ireland." The good woman in the house where they were, (Elizabeth Edmond,) a friend of the Protestants, who had a brother in Dublin, hearing these words, was not a little troubled. Therefore, watching her opportunity, she opens the box, takes out the commission, and place, in its stead a sheet of paper, in which she had carefully wrapped a pack of cards, with the knave of clubs uppermost. Suspecting nothing, the Doctor, the wind and the weather favoring, next day set sail for Dublin. He immediately appears before the Lord Deputy and the Privy Council, makes his speech, declaring the nature of his mission, and presents his box to the Lord Deputy; on opening which, nothing appears but a pack of cards, the knave of clubs staring his lordship in the face. The Lord Deputy and Council were amazed, and the Doctor was confounded, yet insisted that he had started with a commission, such as he had declared. The Lord Deputy answered, "Let us have another commission, and we will shuffle the cards in the mean time." The Doctor, chagrined, returns to England, appears at court, obtains another commission, but is now detained by unfavorable winds; and while waiting, the Queen is called to her dread account, and thus God preserved the Protestants of Ireland. "Behold, He that keepeth Israel shall neither slumber nor sleep." [Read's History.

BEGINNING OF THE YEAR IN VARIOUS NATIONS.

The Chaldeans' and Egyptians' year was dated from the autumnal equinox. The ecclesiastical year of the Jews began in the spring; but in civil affairs they retain the epoch of the Egyptian year. The year of Romulus commenced in March, and that of Numa in January. The Turks and Arabs date their year from the 16th of July. Dremschild or Gemschild, King of Persia, observed on the day of his public entry into Persepolis, that the sun entered into Aries; and in commemoration of this fortunate event, he ordained the beginning of the year to be removed from the autumnal to the vernal equinox. The Brachmen begin their year with the new moon in April. The Mexicans begin in February, when the leaves begin to grow green. Their year consists of eighteen months, having twenty days in each; the last five are spent in mirth, and no business is suffered to be done, nor even any service in the temples. The Abyssinians have five idle days at the end of their year, which commences on the 26th of August. The American Indians reckon from the first appearance of the moon at the vernal equinox. The Mohammedans begin their year the minute in which the sun enters Aries. The Venetians, Florentines and Pisans in Italy, began the year at the vernal equinox. The French year, during the reign of the Merovingian race, began on the day on which the troops were reviewed, which was the 1st of March. Under the Carlovingians, it began on Christmas day, and under the Capetians on Easter day. The ecclesiastical year begins on the first Sunday in Advent. Charles IX. appointed, in 1564, that the civil year should commence on the 1st of January. The Julian calendar, which was so called from Julius Cæsar, and is the old account of the year, was reformed by Pope Gregory in 1582, which plan was suggested by Lewis Lilio, a Calabrian astronomer. The Dutch and the Protestants in Germany introduced the new style in 1700. The ancient clergy reckoned from the 25th of March, and this method was observed in Britain until the introduction of the new style, A. D. 1752; after which our year commenced on the 1st of January.

ROYAL CURIOSITIES.

The royal palace of Stutgart abounds in curiosities and magnificent works of art of the most eccentric kind. In one of the sleeping apartments is a necessaire, or toilet box, worth at least 5000 guilders, (about 12,500f) and a bed, which was made for Napoleon Bonaparte, which cost 40,000 francs. When you cross the threshold of one of the saloons, a white spaniel springs barking to the door, being moved by clock-work and a spring, Another clock represents a female figure made in porcelain, the full size of life, and in natural colors. The mouth of the figure is open, displaying 12 front teeth, all numbered from 1 to 12. In the morning at 6 o'clock these teeth have dissappeared, and the month is toothless. At seven o'clock, the lady takes a tooth from a box on her right, and places it in her mouth; at 8 she adds another—and thus she continues to add one after another, till at 5 o'clock in the evening all twelve are in. At seven o'clock she takes out one, and thus on, until at six in the morning the jaws are once more toothless. The clock is wound up once in 6 days. A Barometer is so arranged that, when it portends rain, a little man runs out of a house with an open umberalla in his hand, and when it is about to snow, he comes out with a cloak on, and an approaching thunder-storm the little man announces by coming forth with a prayer-book in his hand. These indications take place 12 hours in advance of the impending change. There is also a clock in one of the rooms, representing a little man who takes a pinch of snuff every hour, and sneezes a number of times corresponding with the hour. In the library there is a copy of Buffon's Natural History in 24 volumes folio, which is printed on pure white satin, while the illustrations are embroidered on it in floss silk. There is a saloon in the palace, 50 feet long and 24 feet broad, the floor of which is covered with one mirror, so thick and solid that one can dance on it. This mirror was a present from the emperor Alexander to his sister, the late queen, and cost two millions of silver roubles.

A LONDON BOY.

Upon one of my visits to the various ragged schools in the metropolis, I became much interested in a lad of ten or eleven years of age, with a frank, open countenance, though somewhat dirty, and dressed in a suit of rags. He was reading busily in his testament, and would stop occasionally, and ask such curious questions of his teacher, that I could but smile. His "particular observations" on certain portions of Scripture, if clothed in beautiful language, would do honor to men of education. There was a free-heartedness in him that gleamed out through all his rags and dirt, and I sat down by him to ask some questions.

"Where do you live?" I asked, "and how?"

"I live anywhere I can," he replied, "and almost how I can."

"But," said I, "what is your trade or business? What do you generally do for a living?"

"I am a water-cress boy," he replied, "and get up every morning at two o'clock, and go on foot three or four miles, and sometimes six or eight, into the edge of the city to buy water-cresses. I get a basket of them for a shilling, and by crying them the whole day, generally clear another, which pays my board and lodging."

Just then the superintendant came along; as I took his arm he said:

"The lad you have been talking with comes here every night to learn to read, and although he cannot go to sleep before ten o'clock, and is obliged to be up at two in the morning, yet he is always punctual. Not long since his mother was imprisoned for arrearages in her rent—the sum needed to release her was but ten shillings. Well, this boy almost starved himself, and slept out of doors, to save money out of his scanty earnings to release her from prison."

I went back again and talked with the boy, and in my eyes he was a truer hero than Wellington or Napoleon!

AFFECTING INCIDENT.

Yesterday morning, says the Louisville Courier of Jan. 25, we witnessed a scene that we little believed could be enacted within the borders of Kentucky. The steamer G. W. Kendall was lying at the wharf at the foot of Wall-street, preparing to start for New Orleans. On the forecastle deck stood a group consisting of a master and five or six slaves, including a woman with a child at the breast, who were apparently going to the South. Just as the last bell of the steamer rang out its peal for departure, and the lines were about to be cast loose, the mother was bade to give up her infant, and was told that she must go without it. At this intimation the poor creature became frantic with grief. She caressed the child a moment; then flew to her trunk in which had been packed various little articles of clothing that she had made up for it to wear. These she first pressed fervently to her lips, and then bestowed them upon the child. Her owner then ordered her to follow him, and she mechanically started to obey, but the promptings of nature were too strong within her swelling breast to be resisted, and with loud sobs of grief she turned, embraced her child, and clung to it with the tenacity of despair.

The heart-rending grief of the woman, and her frantic gestures, attracted the attention of persons passing along the levee, and strongly excited the sympathies of many. The owner was asked by a gentleman if he would sell the woman and child. To this he assented, and demanded $650 for them. Upon inquiry, however, it was ascertained that the woman was to be sold down the river, and that the child would be disposed of here. The bystanders volunteered to raise subscriptions to buy the child, and send it with its mother, and several of them proffered $10 a piece. At this juncture Captain Norton, the Captain of the boat, came forward and told the owner of the slaves that he would not take him on his boat, and sent the whole party ashore, and in a few moments the steamer was seen dashing over the falls without them.

BREVITY IS THE SOUL OF WIT.

Under this "heading," we find in a communication to the Boston Traveler, an anecdote worth repeating, for the benefit of prolix preachers. At the recent ordination of Mr. Greely, at Haverbill Corners, New Hampshire, President Lord, of Dartmouth College, preached an able sermon one hour and a half long. The other parts were like unto the sermon—in length, at least—until it came to the address to the people. This was assigned to a venerable patriarch, the Rev. Mr. Sutherland, a Scotch divine in the neighborhood, who observed and sympathized with the excusable weariness of the congregation. He rose and said, with great deliberation, and in a broad Scotch accent: "Brothers and sisters of this church, and brothers and sisters of this congregation—I am to give you a charge; I shall give you a good charge—a charge you will all of you remember. Be of one mind, live in peace with one another. Amen." The result and thrill which ran through the audience as the speaker sat down, proclaimed that his words were like much light concentrated into a flash, and that the shortest speech, if it answers its end, is long enough.

MORE COERCION—THE NEWSBOYS.

In another column will be found a condensed account of a public gathering of the newsboys of this city, held last week, for the purpose of expressing their indignation against certain proceedings which took place in Hope Chapel the week before. We have given it a place, because we consider it in keeping with the object for which our paper was established, to note, from time to time, the various incidents expressive of the state of public feeling in regard to the Sabbath question; and, for the same reason, we choose not to pass it without some remarks.

In regard to the meeting in Hope Chapel, we would say, for the information of our readers abroad, that the movement seems to have originated in the Dutch Church on Washington Square, of which the Rev. Dr. Hutton is pastor. A Circular was sent round, setting forth that it was "matter of deep regret that any branch of the Public Press should violate the laws of our State, and the moral feelings of the Christian Community, by crying papers through our streets every Sabbath;"—that "the corrupting influence to our youth, and the annoyance to those who wish to enjoy the sacred stillness of a Sabbath, have assumed a magnitude that calls loudly for redress;"—and that "to secure a united effort, by all the churches of our city, a Committee had been appointed to invite a delegation from all the churches to attend a meeting to devise the best means of effecting the object." This Circular, signed by the Committee, was sent to all the pastors of the city, as we suppose, and to how many others we do not know. One of them, doubtless through an oversight, found its way to the pastor of the Seventh-day Baptist Church. He did not attend, partly because of other engagements, and partly because he had good reason to think that a free expression of opposition to the whole proceeding would not be tolerated, if it it were attempted. The manner in which he and his colleague were received, or rather rejected, at the so-called Sabbath Convention in Saratoga, a few years ago, and the noisy uproar in the memorable Lord's Day Convention afterwards held in Baltimore, because it was suspected that some Seventh-day Baptists were in the assembly, were too fresh in his recollection to justify the hope that he would be received in Hope Chapel.

How the Hope Chapel meeting resulted, we are not particularly informed. Our religious exchanges have furnished no account of it, and the Sunday papers, which reported the proceedings, we did not see. It has been reported to us, that there were some demonstrations of a mob, in the vicinity of the Chapel, on the night in question. We cannot vouch for the truth of the report, though we should not wonder if the gradually increasing spirit of religious intolerance, on the part of some who "have a zeal of God, but not according to knowledge," should, some day, create an outburst of popular fury. The doctrine of equal rights saturates the very blood and bones of all who are born upon American soil, even of the ragged urchins of our streets; and, notwithstanding the specious claim, so often put forth, of "a right to the stillness of the Sabbath," the unsophisticated newsboy cannot very well see but what he has an equal right to as much noise as may be necessary for the prosecution of what he regards as an honest calling. His religious reprover may tell him, it is true, that his right to make a noise is not a God-given right, and that it is, therefore, unlawful. "But that," says the newsboy, "is not the question at issue between us. It may be just as you say, that I have received no such right from the Almighty; other teachers of religion, however, tell me that I have—that Sunday is as lawfully a working day as any other—that it is the very day upon which God began his work—and that if there is any day upon which I have no right to work, it is the seventh day of the week. I know not which of these views is correct; I have not yet adopted either of them; and what right have you to compel me to adopt yours? If God has given you such a right, I would like to have some strong proof of it. The observer of the seventh day may, for aught I know, plead a God-given right to compel me to keep his day. But, happily, I cannot be compelled to regard either day as holy, except as the strong arm of the civil law shall be brought to bear upon me. You may, possibly, succeed in having me placed under the penalties of that law, but you will never make me feel that you are anything else than a persecutor, if you do. Rather than leave me free to adopt what religious views I choose in regard to the Sabbath, you call in the aid of a civil statute, to compel me to adopt yours. Nothing worse than this, in principle, ever grew out of the union of Church and State in the old world. And, sir, let me tell you, that notwithstanding the civil statute which forbids me to follow my calling on the day you call Sabbath, and which you may, in your persecuting spirit, avail yourself of to put me down, I plant myself upon the broad principle set forth in the Constitution of the Government under which I live, and claim that the rights of men are EQUAL. Your sophistry, sir, has overshot the mark. You have a right to be still on the Sabbath, but you have no right to require it from others. The real question at issue between you and me is—not whether I have a God-given right to cry my papers, and make a noise on the Sabbath-day, but—whether it is not a spirit of outrageous intolerance in you to endeavor to render me obnoxious to the penalty of a civil statute, which, you cannot but know, is opposed to the constitutional principles of our government." In some such manner, we think, the newsboy would incline to express himself.

If the leaders in this movement against the newsboys would forbear all attempts at coercion, and endeavor by a kind spirit of persuasion to bring them within reach of the means of grace, we should not have a word to object. No doubt, the religious instruction of most of them is sadly neglected. But as to compelling them to adopt the religious opinions of a certain portion of the community, we solemnly protest against it. If their Sunday morning cries are actually provoking to the Lord of the Sabbath, let those who think so endeavor to convince them of it by fair argument. Let them follow them, and labor to persuade them to attend the house of God. Let them deal with them in the same spirit of compassion that Christ dealt with lost sinners. And if such efforts are not attended with success, let them then turn into their closets, and pray for them; but let them not disgrace themselves, and the cause of religion too, by driving them up to duty under the lash.

Had we been present at the Hope Chapel, and found a door open for free discussion, we could have told them of a congregation assembling every Sabbath under the noise of carts, the rattling of stages, and the din of all manner of worldly business. We could have told them of the minister standing up to preach, while fish-mongers sounded their horns, and milk-men gave forth their screams, and troops of noisy children were shouting in the street. We could have told them of such annoyances continued throughout the year, without any cessation. We could have told them that that congregation had no redress in the civil law, although other congregations had. And when we had told them this, would they have been ready to pass a vote of censure upon the authors of such annoyances, and to clamor for the aid of the police to put a stop to them? Ah! but "your bull has gored my ox—that alters the case!"

MEETING OF THE NEW-YORK NEWSBOYS.

On Fourth-day of last week, there was a great rally of the young venders of moral, diurnal, and hebdomadal literature in the only public forum of New York City—the Park. The provoking cause of this demonstration was a meeting some days previous in Hope Chapel, where a disposition was manifested, by some persons who professed to be greatly annoyed by the noise, to urge the Police to arrest all newsboys found selling papers on Sunday. This very naturally roused the ire of the boys, and they got up the meeting of which we are speaking—a report of which we copy from the Tribune.

They procured a good platform, hired a band of music, and organized their meeting in a style worthy of old hands at the business. Mr. D. Mahon was voted chairman.

Michael Walsh, Esq., being called upon, made a capital speech, in which he gave the boys the credit a great portion of them deserve, for honesty and industry, for diligence, in rain or shine, in supplying the citizens with mental food, and for business qualifications remarkable in persons of their age and circumstances. He spoke of the right of every honest person to live by honest labor, and bore pretty hard upon the men who had attempted to abridge this right, among the poor newsboys. As might be supposed, he was severe upon people who wear such tender Sunday consciences while their own servants are drudging in the kitchen and the stable to supply their natural and artificial wants.

He was followed by Mr. Edgar Welch, who alluded to the attempt to stop Sunday mails, and showed that if business men could dispatch and receive letters, travel, run their cars and boats, allow their ships to come and go on Sunday, it was hardly fair that they should be so severe upon the poor newsboy, whose supper often depended upon the small profits of his morning labor.

Henry Arcularius, Esq., then came forward. He said he had not been asked to assist at the meeting, but volunteered because he thought the boys deserved encouragement. He complimented them upon their good behaviour, and went on to support their right to labor in their calling. He trusted the people would not countenance the Hope Chapel movement. We did not hear his remarks distinctly, and cannot give a sketch of them.

Mr. D. A. Kane was the next and last speaker. His remarks were of the same character as those preceding him.

At the conclusion of his speech, the boys formed a procession, headed by their band, and marched out of the Park down Broadway.

The resolutions of the meeting were read by T. W. Meighan. They are very long and very strong. We give the substance. They Resolve, that Society owes all, especially the young, a living; that, as at present organized, society is their oppressor, making honest labor less honorable than sensual idleness, punishing misfortune as a crime, and identifying poverty with vice; that the newsboys, many having widowed mothers and helpless sisters to suppport, are up before the dawn in every season, and traverse all day long many weary miles through the streets, unfitly clothed, coarsely fed, exposed to burning suns, drenching storms, and pinching frost, for a yearly pittance which would not buy the first month's outfit of a baby of aristocracy; that the day of rest is no dearer to others than to the newsboy, giving (if he had it) time to think of loving God and his neighbor, and not leaving him unceasingly engaged in a mere struggle for existence; that they will stop selling papers on the Sabbath when the men who desire it cease to patronize papers that are made by Sunday labor, and provide for the newsboys and their families means of support equal to those supplied by their present calling; that a Committee of three be appointed to confer with the Hope Chapel Committee for a settlement of the differences between the boys and the said Chapel meeting; that this Committee be also requested to endeavor to obtain the coöperation of the reverend gentlemen who figured at the gathering in Hope Chapel, in a united effort to insure the passage of a law for the prohibition, on the Sabbath, of carriage driving to church or elsewhere, the prevention of cooking, etc., the entire suppression of church bell ringing, the closing of the gas houses, and the shutting off of the Croton water, as well as for the stoppage of newspaper crying and selling; that clergymen receiving more than $10 per week be requested to pay over the surplus into a general fund to be employed in procuring a good bath for each newsboy every Saturday evening, a clean shirt for the Sabbath, suitable clothes for attending Sunday School, and a compensation equal to that which they would obtain by the sale of newspapers; that thanks be presented to papers and persons for aid in getting up this meeting, &c.; that the resolutions of the meeting be published in all the City papers.

CAPACITY OF THE JORDAN FOR IMMERSION.

Among the numerous puerile subterfuges of the Pedobaptists, to evade the force of the example of going "down into the water," and being "buried with Christ by baptism," it has frequently been assumed, and boldly reiterated, time after time, that the river Jordan is but a "small brook"—an "inconsiderable brook," and "at places almost dry," "not containing sufficient water, at any point, to administer the initiating rite of admission into the Christian church by immersion;" and, consequently, "dipping could not have been performed, but resort must have been had to pouring or sprinkling."

As bandying words on this subject could never settle the controversy, and not wishing to take the crude, contradictory opinions of limited observers and prejudiced partisans, we have refrained from offering any comments on this point, preferring to defer until we should have it in our power to present the evidence of an impartial witness, whose minute exploration of the whole extent of that stream, would qualify him to give its exact dimensions—the length, breadth and depth of every part of it. That witness we now have in Capt. Lynch's "Expedition to the River Jordan, and the Dead Sea," made under the patronage of our Government, and which has been received with unprecedented favor by the public.

It may be necessary, to a correct understanding, by our readers who have not had an opportunity to peruse Capt. Lynch's book, to state, that he started on the "Expedition" with two metallic boats, one made of copper, and the other of galvanized iron, having with him several officers, scientific attachees, ten seamen, several native dignitaries and attendants, and other subordinates; that, after dragging their boats, on trucks drawn by camels, over the country to the sea of Galilee, they set out to navigate that deeply interesting lake, and then entered the Jordan, which they explored throughout its whole length, a distance of two hundred miles, with such careful observation, and minuteness of detail, that there can be no doubt that everything worthy of remark has been faithfully recorded.

The extracts we have made, are dispersed throughout the general account of the progress of exploration, and embrace every reference the author has made to the breadth and depth of these contested, if not consecrated waters. It is also proper to add, that so far from Capt. Lynch desiring to contort any facts to favor the Baptists, (of which no one would think of accusing him,) he is himself, we believe, a Pedobaptists, yet one who, throughout his whole work, gives abundant evidence of being an impartial writer, as well as an intelligent man, and devout Christian.

No one, who has the least regard for his reputation, can, upon the perusal of Capt. Lynch's testimony, have the effrontery to deny the capacity of the Jordan for the immersion of adults, and of thousands at the same instant.

W. M. F.

Extracts from Lynch's Expedition.

At 3.45, we swept out of the lake, (the Sea of Galilee,) course W. by N. Our course varied with the frequent turns of the river (Jordan.) The average breadth about seventy-five feet. The banks rounded, and about thirty feet high. Water ~~clear, and~~ about ten feet deep. p. 173.

We halted at the ruins of an old bridge, now forming obstructions, over which the foaming river rushed like a mountain torrent. The river was about thirty yards wide. p. 174.

River, twenty-five to thirty yards wide; current, two and a half knots; water, clear and sweet. We passed two islands, one of them very small. p. 175.

We accomplished this difficult passage, (Falls of Semakh,) after severe labor, up to our waists in water, for upwards of four hours. p. 178.

River, fifty-five yards wide, and two and a half feet deep. Current, four knots. . . . . At 5.40, the river about sixty yards wide, and current three knots. . . . 5.44, passed a small stream coming in on the right. 5.46, another small stream, same side, 150 yards below. . . . Water clear, eight feet deep, hard bottom. p. 180.

Half a mile below 'Abeidiyeh the river became deeper, with a gentle descent, current three and a half knots. 6.15, passed a small island, covered with grass. p. 181.

Average width of the river to-day, forty yards; depth from two and a half to six feet; descended nine rapids, three of them terrific ones; passed one island. p. 184.

Rode nearly down to where the Yermâk (ancient Hieromax) falls into the Jordan from the east. p. 186.

By swimming across some distance up the stream, one of the men carried over the end of a rope and made it fast around the roots of a bush. . . . In order not to risk the men, I employed some of the most vigorous Arabs in the camp to swim by the side of the boats, and guide them, if possible, clear of danger. p. 189.

At 4.20, passed the mouth of the Yermâk, forty yards wide. Passed an island twelve feet high, covered with grass and weeds. p. 191.

The bridge (Jisr Mejâmiá,) gracefully spans the river at this point. It has one large and three smaller Saracenic arches below, and six smaller ones above them, four on the east, and two on the west side. The river deep, narrow, and impetuous. p. 193.

The river thirty-five yards wide, six feet deep, gravelly bottom; current five knots. . . . 2.41, river very serpentine, five feet deep—water appeared to have fallen two feet within the last day or two.* p. 202.

We descended to-day three large and seven small rapids. We passed one small stream coming in from the south-east, and four small islands. The river averaged forty-five yards in width, four feet deep, and five knots current. p. 203.

Beyond these interruptions, (fearful rapids,) the river flowed broad and deep, yet maintaining much of the features of a torrent. Many islands—some fairy-like, and covered with a luxuriant vegetation; others mere sand bars, and sedimentary deposits, interrupted the course of the river, but were beautiful features in the general monotony of the shores. p. 215.

Here and there a gurgling rivulet poured its tribute of pure water into the now discolored Jordan. p. 217.

In our course to-day, we have passed twelve islands, all, but three, of diminutive size, and noted fourteen tributary streams, ten on the right and four on the left bank. p. 219.

The width of the river was as much as seventy yards, with two knots current, and narrowed again to thirty yards, with six knots current, the depth ranging from two to ten feet. p. 221.

A little barren island divided the stream at the ford, and the current swept by with such rapidity as to render it doubtful whether the passage could be effected. Mr. Bedlow, however, made the attempt, and succeeded in reaching the island, with no greater inconvenience than dripping extremities and a moist saddle. . . . The depth and impetuosity of the river caused us some apprehensions for the safety of our cook, Miestafa, who, being mounted on an ill-favored, scrubby little beast, . . . was in danger of being snatched from us. p. 224.

We have to-day descended ten moderate and six ugly rapids, and passed three tributaries to the Jordan, two quite small, and one of respectable size. Also four large and seventeen small islands. The depth (of the river) has been in proportion to the width and velocity of the stream. At one place the river was eighty yards wide, and only two feet deep. The average width has been fifty-six yards, and the average depth a little more than four feet. p. 238.

The river, forty yards wide and seven feet deep, was flowing at the rate of six knots down a rapid descent, with much drift-wood. We soon passed two islands. p. 252.

At 9.30 P. M. we arrived at "El Meshra," the bathing place of the Christian Pilgrims, after having been fifteen hours in the boats. This ford is consecrated by tradition as the place where the Israelites passed over with the ark of the covenant, and where our blessed Saviour was baptized by John. p. 255.

Tuesday, April 18—At 3 A. M. we were aroused by the intelligence that the Pilgrims were coming. . . . The party, which had disturbed us was the advanced guard of the great body of the Pilgrims. At 5, just at the dawn of day, the last made its appearance, coming over the crest of a high ridge in one tumultuous and eager throng. In all the wild haste of a disorderly rout, Copts and Russians, Poles, Armenians, Greeks, and Syrians, from all parts of Asia, from Europe, Africa, and from far distant America, on they came; men, women, and children, of every age and hue, and in every variety of costume; talking, screaming, shouting, in almost every known language under the sun. Mounted as variously as those who had preceded them; many of the women and children were suspended in baskets, or confined in cages; and with their eyes strained towards the river, heedless of all intervening obstacles, they hurried eagerly forward, and, dismounting in haste, and disrobing with precipitation, rushed down the bank, and threw themselves into the stream. They seemed to be absorbed by one impulsive feeling, and perfectly regardless of the observation of others. Each one plunged himself, or was dipped by another, three times, below the surface, in honor of the Trinity. p. 261.

The Pilgrims descended to the river where the bank gradually slopes. Above and below it is precipitous. The banks must have been always high in places, and the water deep, or the axe-head would not have fallen into the water, and Elisha's miracle been unnecessary to recover it. p. 263.

The river forty yards wide, twelve feet deep, bottom blue mud. p. 266.

The river here fifty yards wide, eleven feet deep. . . . River eighty feet wide, and fast increasing in breadth, seven feet deep. p. 267.

At 3.25, passed the extreme western point, where the river is one hundred and eighty yards wide, and three feet deep, and entered upon the Dead Sea. p. 268.

* The river was in the latter stage of a freshet.

The Bible of Every Land.—The Bagsters of London are bringing out in numbers a book of rare interest and attraction, being specimens of the various languages of the earth, into which the Bible has been translated. In addition to this the work presents a statement of the geographical extent of each language and dialect, together with the elements of the language, and a history of its diffusion. The work is noticed in our foreign papers, but we have not heard of its introduction into this country.

NEW YORK FOR FREEDOM.

After a great deal of debating and maneuvering, the Legislature of New York has agreed upon a set of resolutions in relation to slavery. So far as they go, they are quite satisfactory, expressing the hostility of the people of the State to the continuance of the slave-trade in the District of Columbia, and the extension of human slavery into the new territories of the Union. We copy them, simply remarking, that the vote by which they were adopted was strong enough to convince the South that New York is still for Freedom:—

1. Resolved, That as the Federal Constitution was formed and adopted expressly to secure the blessings of Liberty to the People of the United States and their posterity, therefore the Federal Government ought to relieve itself from all responsibility for the existence or continuance of Slavery or the Slave-Trade wherever it has the constitutional power over those subjects, and our Senators in Congress are hereby instructed, and our Representatives are requested, to use their best efforts to procure the passage of laws that will effectually and forever put an end to the Slave-Trade in the District of Columbia.

2. Resolved, That the determination indicated by the Governors' Messages, and the resolutions of the Legislatures of various of the slave-holding States, and by the Representatives of such States in Congress, to extend Domestic Slavery over the Territory acquired by the late Treaty of Peace with the Republic of Mexico, we feel bound to oppose, by all constitutional means, and, recognizing the constitutional power of Congress to prohibit, by positive enactment, the extension of Slavery into Free Territory, our Senators in Congress are hereby instructed, and our Representatives requested, to use their best efforts to insert such a positive prohibition into any law they may pass for the government of the territory in question.

3. Resolved, That our Senators in Congress be instructed, and our Representatives requested, to resist firmly, and to the utmost of their ability, and by such positive legislation as may be necessary, the extension of Human Slavery or the jurisdiction of Texas, over any part of New Mexico.

4. Resolved, That we have learned with great satisfaction that the people of California have adopted a Constitution which is entirely in accordance with the spirit of the Free Institutions of our country; and our Senators in Congress are hereby instructed, and our Representatives requested, to aid in the passage of such laws as may be necessary to admit that State into the Union.

5. Resolved, That the people of this State are desirous of preserving inviolate the Federal Union, and that they will strenuously oppose all attempts, from whatever source they may emanate, or under whatever pretence they may be made, to effect its dissolution.

LOW ESTIMATE OF INFANT BAPTISM.

A correspondent of the London Patriot gives publicity to a circumstance which recently occurred in Hereford, England, going to show that infant baptism is considered rather as a "non-essential," even by some of those who have been accustomed to practice it. It seems that on Sunday evening, December 16th, Mr. White, the pastor of the Congregational Church at Eignbrook Chapel, announced, at a special meeting, his relinquishment of the doctrine of Pædobaptism. Mr. White attributed this result, not to the perusal either of ancient or modern works on the Baptist argument, but to an examination of the testimony of the early Church on infant regeneration, and especially to the study of the controversy between Drs. Wardlaw and Halley, coinciding with each of these writers in the opinion, that they have reciprocally destroyed each other's theory. Mr. White further professed his willingness to resign his office, in consequence of this alteration of his views, if it seemed good to the church. After deliberate consultation it was, at a subsequent meeting, proposed to the church by Mr. Edmunds, Editor of the Hereford Times, and seconded by Mr. Abbey, (Deacon,) and resolved unanimously—

"That it is the opinion of this church, formed after prayer and examination of the revealed will of God, that the doctrine of infant baptism is not a doctrine of vital importance to salvation, and, therefore, cannot properly be made a test either of membership or ministerial suitability; that belief in the fundamental doctrines of the Gospel can alone properly furnish such a test; that those fundamental doctrines are the following, The Deity and sufficient atonement of Christ; the original and inherent depravity of man; the justification of the sinner on repentance, through faith in the merits of Christ alone; holiness of life, the only sufficient evidence of the genuineness of faith; the inspiration of the Holy Scriptures, and their sufficiency as a rule of faith and practice; and the Deity and work of the Holy Spirit as the producer of sanctification."

The Moravian Welcome of the New Year.—A correspondent of the Biblical Recorder, writing from Salem, North Carolina, describes the introduction of the year 1850 by the Moravians at that place, as follows:

"There was a meeting at 8 o'clock; principally music. They met again at 10 o'clock; the service was conducted in the German language. I was told that it was the reading of the statistical records of the past year. They met again at 11 o'clock; the meeting-house was crowded almost to overflowing. The minister delivered an address from 1 Thess. 5: 23. During the discourse the hour of twelve arrived, and, as is their custom on such occasions, without waiting for the minister to conclude, the band, with a number of instruments, struck up a lively tune; and (the congregation rising) for some time nothing could be heard but the sound of trumpets and other musical instruments, welcoming in the new year. At the conclusion, an appropriate prayer was offered."

Norwegians at the West.—It is estimated that there are fifty thousand Norwegians in Illinois and Wisconsin. They are almost uniformly frugal and industrious, and lead exemplary lives. Rev. Paul Anderson is pastor of a Norwegian Church in Chicago, which consists of one hundred members. In company with one other evangelical minister from Norway, he has organized seven churches; and it is said that there are twenty-five settlements where churches might be organized were there men to take charge of them. In Norway, and also by many Norwegians in this country, Mr. Anderson is regarded as a heretic, because he refuses to receive all "baptized" children into the church at the age of fourteen years, as is the custom in the State Church of Norway.

New Tracts.—The American Sabbath Tract Society has just issued a tract of twenty-four pages, entitled "The Bible Sabbath." It was written by Dr. Wm. M. Fahnestock, of Bordentown, N. J., and is designed, as its title indicates, to furnish a scriptural account of the institution and perpetuity of the weekly Sabbath—the Seventh Day. The Society has also issued, within a few days, a second edition of Mr. Morton's "Vindication of the True Sabbath"—60 pages—which may be found at the Depository, No. 9 Spruce-st.

Sympathy for the Sufferers.—The sympathy of the New York public for the sufferers by the Hague-st. explosion, is deep and substantial. Subscriptions for their relief have been flowing in constantly since the day of the calamity. Up to the close of last week, sixteen thousand six hundred dollars had been received, and this sum will probably swell to twenty or twenty-five thousand dollars in the course of the present week.

Disunion in Massachusetts.—Petitions for the dissolution of the Union were before the Legislature of Massachusetts last week, and occasioned considerable discussion. The matter was disposed of on Sixth-day by a vote giving the petitioners leave to withdraw their petition.

Loss of the Steamer Rhode Island.—The steamer Rhode Island, which formerly run on Long Island Sound, cleared from New York for San Francisco on the 25th of January. When four days out, she encountered a gale, by which she was completely disabled, and left at the mercy of the wind and waves. Nine of the passengers and three of the crew escaped in a boat, and were taken up by a schooner, whence they were transferred to the whaling bark Richmond, which arrived at Providence, R. I., on the 11th inst. They report that three persons were drowned in attempting to reach the boat, one of them supposed to be a Mr. Shewster, whose wife was saved by being placed in the boat. The remaining passengers and crew, 32 in number, were left on board the steamer, which was in a sinking condition, and it is feared that they were lost, although they had one boat, and were cutting away the upper deck to make a raft when last seen.

Funeral of the Unrecognized.—One of the saddest and most impressive scenes we have ever witnessed, says the Independent, was the funeral service at the Tabernacle, on Tuesday morning, Feb. 12, for the unrecognized remains of some six or eight persons who perished in the catastrophe in Hague street. After more than sixty bodies extricated from the ruins had been claimed by their friends, there were eight missing, who were known to have been in the building at the time of the explosion. Of these, the mutilated trunks and fragments of what were supposed to be six different bodies were found, none of which could be identified. These were placed in coffins and decently interred, under the direction of the Common Council, at the Cypress Hills' Cemetery. A vast concourse of people assembled at the Tabernacle to witness the funeral ceremonies. The Mayor and Common Council were in attendance, with scarfs and badges of mourning; the few survivors of the catastrophe, some of whom were sadly mutilated and disfigured, were arranged in the orchestra behind the pulpit, and in full view of the audience: the widows and children of several of the victims, were also present as mourners—some who were denied even the melancholy satisfaction of recognizing in death the forms and features which they last looked upon in life and health!

"With regard to the question of Cheap Postage, I find much that is encouraging. The circular of the New York Postage Association is working admirably in bringing in petitions from all quarters, and all descriptions of people. The number and description of the petitions has already made a sensible impression upon Congress. The House Committee, a majority of which, I am sorry to say, is at present disinclined to go beyond Mr. Collamer's recommendation, of a reduction to five cents, have concluded to suspend their report for a few weeks. They are therefore yet open to the voice of the people. It is safe to say, that petitions enough will carry the measure of two cents postage. And if it fails, it will fail for the want of petitions. At the same time, it must not be disguised that there is great danger that it will fail. People may be assured they will be disappointed if they expect this measure to be easily carried. With the whole weight of official influence against it, with the opposition of a large portion of the South against everything that increases the general intelligence and union of the people, with the cowardice of politicians who are afraid to spend money for anything except war and warlike preparations, and with the vis inertia of the body of Congress, there are obstacles enough to require all the efforts of all the friends of Cheap Postage. Without these efforts we shall again be defeated."

General Intelligence.

PROCEEDINGS IN CONGRESS LAST WEEK.

In Senate. SECOND-DAY, Feb. 11.

The Vice President stated the business before the Senate to be, the motion to receive a petition of the citizens of Delaware and Maryland, asking a peaceable dissolution of the Union. Mr. Chase, having the floor, addressed the Senate in support of the petition. Mr. Cass spoke in opposition to the motion to receive. Mr. Webster made a few remarks in the same strain. He was followed by Messrs. Hale, Wales, Cooper, Clemens, Chase, and Seward. The motion to receive was negatived by a vote of 50 to 3—Messrs. Hale, Chase, and Seward, voting in the affirmative.

The order of the day was taken up, and Mr. Berrien addressed the Senate on the subject of Slavery, its magnitude, the difficulty of disposing of it, &c. His remarks were continued till the hour of adjournment.

House of Representatives.

A motion was pending from last week to lay on the table a petition presented by Mr. Cromwell, from citizens of Ohio, asking Congress to adopt measures for the settlement of international difficulties by arbitration and a Congress of Nations. The motion was negatived by a vote of 100 to 65, and then the subject was laid over for debate.

The resolution of the Senate relative to expense of collecting revenue, was taken up and discussed, but no vote taken.

In Senate. THIRD-DAY, Feb. 12.

Mr. Hale presented the petition of 1,400 women of Dover, N. H., praying that slavery may not be extended to California and New Mexico. A motion to lay the question of reception on the table was rejected—Yeas, 19; Nays, 29.

The special order was resumed, and Mr. Berrien concluded his speech upon the power of Congress to legislate for the Territories.

House of Representatives.

The Senate's resolution limiting the expense of collecting the revenue was taken up, and after considerable debate the following amendment was adopted by a vote of 110 to 75:—

"That the sum of one million for collection of revenue of customs, fifty thousand for warehouses, twenty-five thousand for Texas and Oregon, one hundred thousand for California, and fifty thousand for new business and new districts—in all, one million two hundred and twenty-five thousand dollars, be appropriated for the expense of collecting the revenue for the half of the present fiscal year, ending June 30, 1850, together with such sums in addition as may be received from storage, carriage, drayage, and labor for said half year, and in that proportion for any shorter or longer time, until Congress shall act upon the subject, and that meanwhile the restriction by law upon the amount of salaries in California and Oregon shall be suspended."

The House then went into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and resumed the consideration of the reference of the President's Message on affairs of California and the Territories. Speeches were made by Messrs. Brown, Inge, and Hilliard, but no vote was taken.

In Senate. FOURTH-DAY, Feb. 13.

The petition presented yesterday by Mr. Hale was received without debate, and referred to the Committee on Territories.

Mr. Dickinson, from the Committee on Finance, reported back the House amendment to the Senate's Resolution, suspending for a specified time the act limiting the expenses of collecting the revenue from customs, which, after some slight amendment, was concurred in.

The Vice-President laid before the Senate a message from the President, transmitting an authenticated copy of the Constitution of California, which was ordered printed.

The consideration of Mr. Clay's compromise resolutions was then resumed, and Mr. Davis, of Miss., addressed the Senate at length upon the subject of slavery.

Mr. Foote laid on the table his proposition for a Select Committee of fifteen, to whom all the questions connected with the institution of Slavery shall be referred.

House of Representatives.

The California Constitution was received, and referred to the Committee of the Whole on the State of the Union. Mr. Stanton, of Tennessee, made a lengthy speech, in which he threatened dissolution, and several other terrible things, as the result of the admission of California with her free Constitution.

In Senate. FIFTH-DAY, Feb. 14.

Mr. Dayton presented a memorial of the quarterly meeting of Friends of New Jersey, Delaware, and Maryland, asking the adoption of additional peaceable measures for the suppression of the slave trade. The memorialists represent that the trade, instead of being suppressed, is on the increase. The memorialists had also requested him to repudiate in their behalf all disposition to dissolve the Union.

The consideration of Mr. Clay's resolutions was resumed, and Mr. Davis concluded his remarks.

The subject of the admission of California was then taken up, the question pending being the motion to refer to the Committee on Territories. Remarks were made by several Senators, but no vote taken.

House of Representatives.

The Committee of the Whole took up the annual message of the President, and listened to a speech from Mr. Hilliard, of Alabama, on the subject of slavery, dissolution, &c. Before Mr. Hilliard proceeded with his speech, Preston King made an ineffectual attempt to get the subject of the admission of California before the House, in which angry words passed between several members.

In Senate. SIXTH-DAY, Feb. 15.

Mr. Butler, of South Carolina, lead off in opposition to the admission of California. Messrs. Badger, Webster, and Hale made a few remarks, and the subject was postponed, after which the Senate adjourned over to Second-day.

House of Representatives.

The California question was discussed by Messrs. Root, of Ohio, Welborn, of Ga., and Horace Mann, of Mass. Adj'd over.

Strawberries were growing in the open air at New Orleans, on the 19th January.

GETTING TO CALIFORNIA.

In answer to numerous inquiries on the subject, the editor of the N. Y. Tribune gives the following information as to the best way of getting to California, cost, &c.

The quickest and best route is via Chagres and Panama. Between New York and Chagres there are now the following steamers running:

Howard & Co's Line—Empire City, and Crescent City.

George Law's Line—Ohio, and Georgia.

Howland and Aspinwall's Line—Cherokee, and Philadelphia.

These are all staunch, safe and fast boats, and well commanded. The price of passage by the Howard line is $75 in the steerage, and $90 to $125 in the Cabins. The steerage passage includes mattresses and board. The prices by the Law Line are, state-room berth, $100; standee berth, $90; steerage, $50—also including bedding and board. By the Aspinwall line, After Saloon, 125; Forward Saloon, $100; Lower Cabin, $90. The prices by the Law line are lower than by the others, because these steamers do not go direct.

Cabin Passengers are allowed eight and steerage passengers six cubic feet of baggage, without charge. Freight is taken to some extent at 70 cts. per foot, but the difficulty of getting it across the Isthmus is very great. The cost is about 25 cents per lb.

The transit of the Isthmus is made in two to three days, without much difficulty, at a cost of about $25. Passengers go by the steamer Orus or by canoes to Gorgona or Cruces, and thence on foot or by mules and horses to Panama. At Panama living is moderately cheap, and by hiring a room and living at a restaurant, one can get along for $4 or $2 per week.

The boats on the Pacific, or to be there soon, are as follows:

Howland & Aspinwall's Line—Oregon, Panama, California, Tennessee, Unicorn, and Carolina.

Howard & Son's Line—Sarah Sands, and New Orleans.

M. O. Roberts' Line—Columbus, and Isthmus.

There are also two other steamers soon to be sent round the Horn to join Howard & Son's line.

The prices on the Pacific are the same in all the above steamers: First Cabin, $300; Second Cabin or steerage, $120. Passengers are allowed ten cubic feet of baggage. Freight is taken at $2 per foot.

The Aspinwall steamers are full, on the Pacific side, up to May. The Howard steamers are also full to May, and it is doubtful if a steam passage could be obtained from Panama to San Francisco until after April.

Those who prefer a voyage round the Horn can find at any time fast and substantial vessels at this port about to sail for San Francisco. The time of the voyage ranges from five to six months, and the price is $100 to $300, according to the accommodations. Freight is taken at 65c a 70c per foot. There are some fifty-two vessels, of all sizes, including two steamers, up at this port for California.

The overland journey from Independence, Mo., is slow, tedious, and in some measure dangerous, but cheaper than by the Isthmus or the Horn. Persons wanting information should address some one at St. Louis.

A journey between New York and San Francisco, via the Isthmus of Panama, can be made in 32 to 40 days, and any one wishing to save time should go by that route. The others are very uncertain.

SINGULAR CASE.—The Monticello (N. Y.,) Watchman of Feb. 12, says that a trial for criminal connection took place in Orange county last week, which presented some unusual circumstances. The facts were as follows:—Some twenty years ago, Ebenezer Seeley was married, in Goshen, to Maria Bradner. Both were highly respectable. Afterwards they removed to Elmira, where he became intemperate, and they separated, he returning to Orange, and she remaining in Elmira. About seven years since, she sued for a divorce in the Sixth District, alledging that Seeley had committed adultery. The divorce was obtained through default of the defendant to appear. A few months afterwards, Mrs. Seeley married Elisha O. Crosby, of Elmira, the defendant in this action. The plaintiff contended that the divorce was a nullity, because the Vice Chancellor who granted it had no jurisdiction over a citizen of Orange, where he resided. The jury gave a verdict of $1,000 for the plaintiff. Crosby, the defendant, is in California—was a member of the convention which framed the constitution now before Congress, and is said to be a member of the California Senate.

ALONE IN A STRANGE LAND.—Among the sufferers by the late explosion, visited by Alderman Franklin of New York, is the wife of a man who perished in the ruins; he had recently come to this country from England, where he had possessed some property, which, with his time and influence, was swallowed up in Chartist schemes. He reached New York with a few sovereigns, but before he could obtain a clerkship, for which he was competent, these were expended, and he was obliged to hire himself out as a common laborer at one dollar a day. He has left an intelligent and amiable wife—who resides in Brooklyn, where she has not a solitary acquaintance—and two or three young children. When Alderman Franklin announced his name she exclaimed, "I shall never forget the name of Franklin. The last extended conversation my husband had with me, a few days before his death, was on his return from the Printer's Festival, when he came home full of enthusiasm about Franklin and this free and happy country."

PAINFUL DEPRIVATION.—Alderman Franklin states that the family of one of the workmen killed in Hague-st. consisted of a widow and four children, living in a single, comfortless apartment. One of the children was lying helpless on a rude bed, with a disease of the spine; another was subject to fits of epilepsy, and required the constant care of the mother; the third, a little boy, had just been maimed in his right hand, two of his fingers having been crushed and wrenched off by machinery; and the fourth was an infant. The widowed mother had not a friend or even an acquaintance in the whole City.

ROUTE OF THE ERIE RAILROAD.—The route of the Erie Railroad, at its western end, has been determined upon. The annexed statement will show what changes have been made. The new line goes through the following places: Almond, Bakersbridge, Alfred, Andover, Wellsville, Scio, Phillipsville, Hobbieville, through Van Campon, Creek Valley, Friendship, Cuba; along the valley of Oil Creek to Hinsdale and Olean; thence to Allegany City along the Allegany Rum Valley to Little Valley Creek, where it leaves the old line of the road about 40 miles from Dunkirk, and runs north and north-west through the townships of Mansfield, New Albans, Persia, Dayton, Perrysburg, Havana, Forestville, and Sheriden, to Dunkirk. The old line from Little Valley Creek runs through Cold Spring, Randolph, Rutledge, Omar, and the township of Sheriden. The two lines, at the widest, are 10 or 12 miles apart, the new line being north of the old line. In the township of Sheriden, the most westerly of all, the lines approach within 2 or 3 miles. Of the adopted line, about 70 miles are graded or partly graded.

HOMESTEAD EXEMPTION.—During the last few months, bills have passed as follows:—Maine exempts a Homestead to the value of $500, and in the absence of a Homestead, personal property to that amount. Vermont exempts a Homestead to the value of $500; Iowa and Minesota, 40 acres of land, or a lot; California 320 acres of land, or a lot worth $2,000; Deseret, it is said, secures a home to every family. Georgia, Texas, Michigan, Wisconsin, Pennsyvania, Connecticut, had previously enacted the same. Other states are moving.

SICKNESS AT WHITESBORO SEMINARY.—The Utica Gazette says that about a month since, a typhoidal fever broke out in the Seminary at Whitestown, formerly the Oneida Institute, which became so prevalent and fatal, that the school was broken up. There were about a hundred students, more than half of whom have suffered attacks, which in eight cases proved fatal. The institution is located in a healthy vicinity, and no satisfactory cause can be assigned for this severe outbreak of disease.

CALIFORNIA PUBLIC SPIRIT.—Bayard Taylor, in giving an account of the recent fire at San Francisco, says "that a very few persons, out of the thousands present, did the work of arresting the flames. At the time of the most extreme danger, hundreds of idle spectators refused to lend a hand, unless they were paid enormous wages. Mr. Frank Ward, I am told, offered a dollar a bucket for water, and made use of ten thousand buckets in saving his property. The amount is no doubt exaggerated. All the owners of property worked incessantly, and were assisted by their friends, but at least 5,000 spectators stood idle in the plaza."

THE CLERGYMAN AND THE CLOWN.—It has already been announced, says the Watchman and Reflector, that the Baptist Church at San Francisco have taken Rev. Mr. Wheeler off the hands of the Home Missionary Society, and have voted him a salary of ten thousand dollars per year. This sum sounds large, and some have thought very large for a minister. Nevertheless, there are few ministers here who have not more comforts than that sum would purchase in California. But mark the Californian rate of estimating salaries; a late paper states that the clown at the circus there, receives a salary of twenty thousand dollars.

SUMMARY.

At Fort Madison, Iowa, on the night of Jan. 21st, after a Temperance lecture by Mr. Ross, a mob of about forty persons attacked the Eagle Hotel, where Mr. Ross put up, breaking in the door with bludgeons and billets of wood. They were armed with guns, dirks and pistols. In repelling the assault, C. H. Perry, Esq. was badly wounded in the head—his skull being laid bare by a club. Judge Williams, being present, succeeded in quelling the riot. On the following morning the disturbance was renewed.

Dr. John Richard Jones, of Burlington, N. J., having been out gunning, was killed on Friday afternoon, by the accidental discharge of a gun, which he was handing to a workman, keeping the muzzle in his hands. The trigger caught in a root and caused the discharge. The whole charge entered into the left arm just below the shoulder, passed into the left side, and struck the heart and left lobe of the lungs, causing death in about two hours after the accident.

The new Militia law of the State of New York, which allows persons liable to do military duty, to commute, has been in operation two years, and works quite as well as its friends anticipated. A recent special report from the Adjutant General says, that reports have been received from fifty-two counties. The Treasurers of these fifty-two counties have received, as commutation fines, during the last year, $41,121 32, and there has been expended, $25,808 96.

James Stickney, of Boston, who arrived from California in the Empire City, drowned himself on Monday morning, near that place. He left his home at six o'clock, put his clothes under the Railroad bridge, and was found in six inches of water with his face downward. He had made a fortune in California, and probably committed the deed in a sudden fit of insanity.

In Bahia an epidemic has lately made terrible ravages among the inhabitants. It was of a typhoid character, and attacked all persons, whatever might be their age or sex, indiscriminately. The Bishop had ordered public prayers to be offered up, to stay the scourge, and the Board of Health, on the 12th December, published a long address giving sanatory directions to the people.

A new "Art-Union" has been started in Syracuse, to patronize one of the Home Artists in that city, who has agreed to furnish five original pictures, each worth $100, to be drawn in five different prizes by 100 members at $5 each. The drawings, &c., are to be conducted in the same manner as those of the American Art-Union in this City.

A beautiful silver goblet was recently presented to the Rev. Dr. Raphael, of New York, by the Baltimore Hebrew Congregation. It was a testimonial of their esteem, and high appreciation of his talents as a lecturer on Biblical Poetry.

On the 20th Dec. there arrived at the island of St. Helena, a herm. brig with Casseo, New York, on her stern, and with 330 slaves on board. She was a prize to H. B. M. steamer Cyclop. The Casseo was twice boarded by the officers of the Cyclop. The first time she was allowed to pass unmolested, in consequence of there being an American commander on board, showing American flag, papers, &c., and the hatches being under seal.

A train came over the Erie Railroad the other day, containing forty-nine eight-wheeled cars, all fully loaded with produce, &c. The train was a third of a mile in length, and is probably the longest train ever drawn over a merchandize road. Among the loading were 400 or 500 sheep, and any number of live and dead pigs, flour, whiskey, &c. The business of this road, when it reaches the Lake, will only be limited by its capacity for doing it.

The Coroner's Jury to investigate the causes of the recent fatal explosion in New York, brought in a verdict of censure against Messrs. A. B. Taylor & Co. for using more steam than they were informed the boiler would bear; also, against Messrs. Milligan & Walker, the manufacturers of the boiler, for allowing it to go out of their hands knowing it to be imperfect. They also censure Pease & Murphy for selling the boiler after being exposed for so long a time to the open air.

A letter from a young man of this city, (says the Newark Advertiser,) now in San Francisco, states that $20,000, bills of the Trenton Banking Co., were destroyed by the late fire in a gambling house in that city. The individual who suffered the loss, also had $1,000 in gold in the same place, which wss destroyed. He, however, said that he would make it up soon, and sure enough, in four days he informed the writer that he was as well off as before the fire.

The original manuscript of Washington's Farewell Address was sold by auction at the Exchange in Philadelphia, on the 12th inst. It was started at $500, and was run up to $2,300, at which price it was taken by Rev. Dr. Boardman, who purchased it for a gentleman at a distance. The attendance at the sale was quite large, and the bidding very spirited.

Dr. Wall, of London, has discovered and patented a process for manufacturing steel and iron through the agency of electricity, which promises to cheapen immensely the cost of their production, and at the same time improve the quality of the metal. It has been tested at several of the leading iron furnaces of Maryland and Virginia, with the most satisfactory results.

Mr. G. S. Kimberly, now in California, writes home, recounting the success he has met with in procuring gold from the beds of the rivers, by means of submarine armor. On one occasion he bagged $800 in 5 hours, at the depth of twenty-five feet. In six weeks he had realized the handsome sum of $18,500. He had been offered $5,000 for his armor, and had refused it.

A practical chemist of London, in a letter to one of the journals, referring to the loss of the ship Caleb Grimshaw, says that fire in the hold of a ship can easily be choked out by keeping a barrel of chalk in the hold, connected with a two-gallon bottle of sulphuric acid on the deck. The acid poured on the chalk will generate carbonic acid gas, which will at once extinguish flame.

Two men, known to the police as hotel thieves, named Kanense and Levi Cole, were taken into custody last week, upon a requisition from the Governor of R. I., charged with having robbed the Phœnix Bank of Westerly of $15,000. They were placed in charge of a magistrate of that town for trial.

At Holidaysburg, Pa., a few days ago, several kegs of powder in a house near the summit exploded, tearing the building to atoms and killing Mrs. Adams. Her husband was also injured badly, and has since gone deranged.

Capt. St. John, of the steamboat Oregon, has just made the trip to Havana and back in twelve days traveling time, having remained in Havana one day, and being absent from New York only thirteen days. This is going at a rate that might well astonish slow coaches.

The Havana Diaro of the 26th ult. publishes advices from Rio to the effect that the army of Rosas, to the number of 18,000 men, under the command of Gen. Urquiza, had invaded Paraguay, and that the Paraguayian authorities had surrendered.

The Europa, from Liverpool, brought the enormous number of fifty-four thousand eight hundred and thirty-two letters, of which nearly 18,000 were for New York!

Jenny Lind, the "Northern Nightingale," has made an engagement with Mr. Barnum, of the American Museum, New York, to visit this country during the coming Summer.

A Boston medical writer says that it produces chilblains, chopped skin, inflamed eyes, and colds, to go to the fire suddenly when you are cold.

A colored settlement has been established in Bedford County, Pa., by a large number of emancipated slaves, who have purchased a tract of land for that purpose. It is said they were recently set free by a Baptist clergyman in Virginia, who furnished them with money to buy land and obtain homes in a free State.

Francis Huber was ejected from the cars of the New York and Elizabethtown railroad, by the conductor, N. D. Hart, because he stopped at Newark, and took the next train, and did not buy a new ticket. Hart broke Huber's leg, and Huber has just recovered $5,000 damages.

Mr. Squier, Chargé d'Affaires of the United States to Guatemala, has sent some very extraordinary monuments from the Island of Zapatena, in the Lake of Nicaragua, to the Smithsonian Institution. They consist of two statues; one of which represents a tiger springing upon the back of a sitting figure. Both are carved in black basalt.

At Conway, Mass., on Friday, Mrs. Mary Towne was burned to death by her clothes taking fire. Mrs. T. was 76 years of age... On Saturday, a little daughter of Mr. Geo. Parsons, of Utica, was burned so severely by her clothes taking fire, that she died on Tuesday.

Mr. McDuffie and Mr. Preston of South Carolina, who have been among the most brilliant and commanding politicians of South Carolina since the days of Pinckney, are said to be now in utter and hopeless imbecility and idiocy, from softening of the brain—the disease which terminated the intellectual life of Southey, so long before his physical decease.

The Chickasaw indians have contributed $200 toward the erection of the National Washington Monument. In the Council, before which this matter was difcussed, these red men boasted that their nation never had spilt white men's blood in war, and that they regard the memory of Washington with the same veneration as their white brethren; he was alike the father of both races.

Gov. Trumbull of Conn., has appointed Friday, March 29, as Fast Day. He invites the prayers of the people to God, that He will confirm and render indissoluble our National Union, and frustrate the traitorous designs of all those who conspire its ruin.

A book has lately been published by the American Misson in Syria, which was written by one Dr. Niesbaka, of Damascus, formerly a Greek Catholic, then an infidel. He was converted by reading Keith on the Prophecies. His book is directed against popery, and, it is thought, will produce a great sensation.

The New Orleans Picayune of Jan. 29 says that the steamer Grey Eagle, Captain David R. Muggah, from St. Martinsville, with sugar and molasses, struck a snag in Grand Biver, on saturday, and she sunk in about ten minutes. All on board were saved, but the boat and cargo are a total loss.

Some time since a Committee from the Lowell Brass Band came to New York, and procured $600 worth of California lumps, which will be manufactured into a splendid gold bugle, worth $1,000, to be presented to heir leader.

Of 15,558 persons admitted to the New Orleans Charity Hospital in the year 1849, only 1782 were Americans. All the rest, except 132, whose nativity was unknown, were of foreign birth. The proportion of foreigners to Americans was about 8 to 1.

The directors of the Erie Railroad have issued an address to the stockholders, in which they estimate the income of the road, after it shall have reached Lake Erie, at three millions the first year, and three and a half the second, with a progressive increase thereafter.

James Watson Webb, Esq., Editor of the Courier and Enquirer of this city, has been rejected, by the Senate, as Chargé to Vienna, by a vote of 7 to 34, no Senator from New England voting for him.

The Teachers' Association of common schools have memorialized the Legislature in favor of such a law as will "effectually secure the education of every child in the city of New York.

Passengers for California seem to be as plenty as ever. The steamships Empire City and Cherokee sailed from New York last week, the former taking 385 passengers, and the latter 320.

A British transport ship, bound for Auckland, went ashore near the Cape of Good Hope, on the 19th of June, and forty-seven persons were drowned.

The ship Scotland cleared from Mobile on the 19th ult., for Liverpool, with a cargo of 3,040 bales of Cotton, weighing 1,543,164 bs. and valued at $163,047 92.

☞ On looking over our books, we find that a considerable number of subscribers have not yet paid for the current volume, although it is now nearly three-quarters completed. We beg leave to call the attention of such to our published terms—$2 per year in advance, $2 50 when payment is delayed till the close of the year. These terms will be strictly adhered to. Let those who would save us trouble and themselves money, see that their remittances are made in time—the quicker the better.

Information Wanted.

Information is wanted respecting the residence of the widow NANCY CRANDALL, formerly Nancy West. She had a sister Mary, who was the wife of Col. Zebulon Scrivens, of Grafton, Rensselaer Co., N. Y. If now living, she must be about ninety years of age. Any information of her residence, if living, and, if dead, that of her heirs, communicated to Mr. Tiba Hewitt, (administrator of the estate of widow Mary Scrivens,) Grafton, Rensselaer Co., N. Y., will be thankfully received. [34w3] By request, W. B. MAXSON.

Sabbath Convention.

With Divine Permission, a Convention will be held in Peterboro, N. Y., on Wednesday and Thursday, 27th and 28th days of February next, for the purpose of considering what are the import and obligations of the Sabbath, and what is the proper day and the manner of its observance. The Convention will meet at 11 o'clock A. M. It is expected that it will be attended by persons of other States as well as this.

Mail Line between Boston and New York.

REGULAR MAIL LINE BETWEEN BOSTON AND NEW YORK via Stonington and Providence. Inland route, without ferry, change of cars of baggage! The new steamer C. VANDERBILT, Capt. Joel Stone, and COMMODORE, Capt. William H. Frazee, in connection with the Stonington and Providence and Boston and Providence Railroads, leaving New York daily, Sundays excepted, from Pier No. 2 North River, at 4 o'clock P. M., and Stonington at 8 o'clock P. M. or upon the arrival of the mail train from Boston. These steamers were built expressly for the route, and are in every respect particularly adapted to the navigation of Long Island Sound. The accommodations for passengers are commodious and comfortable—the officers capable and experienced. The route being the shortest and most direct between Boston and New York, passengers are enabled to arrive in ample time for the morning lines of steamboats and railroads running to various points from those cities. The C. VANDERBILT will leave New York Tuesday, Thursday, and Saturday. Leave Stonington Monday, Wednesday, and Friday. The COMMODORE will leave New York Monday, Wednesday, and Friday. Leave Stonington Tuesday, Thursday, and Saturday. For passage, berths, staterooms or freight, application may be made to the agents on the wharf, and at the office, 10 Battery-place.

Sabbath Tracts.

The American Sabbath Tract Society publishes the following tracts, which are for sale at its Depository, No. 9 Spruce st., N. Y., viz:—

No. 4—The Sabbath and Lord's Day—A History of their Observance in the Christian Church. 52 pp.
No. 5—A Christian Caveat to the Old and New Sabbatarians. 4 pp.
No. 6—Twenty Reasons for keeping holy, in each week, the Seventh Day instead of the First Day. 4 pp.
No. 7—Thirty-six Plain Questions, presenting the main points in the Controversy; A Dialogue between a Minister of the Gospel and a Sabbatarian; Counterfeit Coin. 8 pp.
No. 8—The Sabbath Controversy—The True Issue. 4 pp.
No. 9—The Fourth Commandment—False Exposition. 4 pp.
No. 10—The True Sabbath Embraced and Observed. 16 pp.
No. 11—Religious Liberty Endangered by Legislative Enactments. 16 pp.
No. 12—Misuse of the Term Sabbath. 8 pp.

The Society has also published the following works, to which attention is invited:—

A Defense of the Sabbath, in reply to Ward on the Fourth Commandment. By George Carlow. First printed in London, in 1724; reprinted at Stonington, Ct., in 1802; now republished in a revised form. 168 pages.

The Royal Law Contended for. By Edward Stennet. First printed in London, in 1658. 60 pp.

An Appeal for the Restoration of the Lord's Sabbath, in an Address to the Baptists from the Seventh-day Baptist General Conference. 24 pp.

Vindication of the True Sabbath, by J. W. Morton, late Missionary of the Reformed Presbyterian Church. 64 pp.

These tracts will be furnished to those wishing them for distribution or sale, at the rate of 15 pages for one cent. Persons desiring them can have them forwarded by mail or otherwise, on sending their address, with a remittance, to GEORGE B. UTTER, Corresponding Secretary of the American Sabbath Tract Society, No. 9 Spruce-st., New York.

Scientific and Practical Agriculture.

HENRY STEPHENS, F. R. S. E., of Edinburgh, the celebrated author of the "BOOK OF THE FARM," and PROF. NORTON, of Yale College, New Haven, are preparing for the Press, a Book to be entitled,

AGRICULTURE—SCIENTIFIC AND PRACTICAL.

It will embrace every subject of importance connected with Agriculture in all its various branches, both Theoretical and Practical. "Science, in as far as it has, up to the present time, been made available to Practice by Experiment, will be treated in its relation to every operation as it occurs in the course of the seasons." The work will be arranged under four distinct heads, representing the seasons, beginning with Winter and ending with Autumn. The following are among the subjects to be treated of in the first and second seasons, including the Introductory, viz:

INITIATION.—On the best of the existing Methods for acquiring a thorough knowledge of Practical Husbandry the Difficulties to be encountered in learning practical husbandry, and on the Means of overcoming them; the different kinds of farming; the persons required to conduct and execute the labor of the farm; the branches of science most applicable to Agriculture; the Institutions of Education best suited to Agricultural science; the evils attending the neglect of landowners and others to learn Practical Agriculture; on observing the details and recording the facts of farming by the Agricultural student.

PRACTICE—WINTER.—On the treatment of farm-horses in Winter; the treatment of the farmer's saddle and harness horse in Winter; the fattening of swine; the treatment of fowls; the rationale of the feeding of animals; on the accommodation of the grain crops in the steading; threshing and winnowing of grain; on the forming of dunghills and composts in Winter; on the construction of liquid-manure tanks and carts; sea-weed as manure; on gaulting or claying the soil.

PRACTICE—SPRING.—Summary of the field operations, and of the weather in Spring; on the advantages of having field-work always in a state of forwardness; on the calving of cows; the milking of cows; the rearing of calves. On the sowing of spring wheat; on drilling up the land; on the sowing of beans, and peas, and tares. On the transplanting of turnip bulbs for producing seed. On the rolling of land. On the sowing of oats, lucerne, and sainfoin. On the lambing of ewes. On cross-ploughing land, and ribbing land for the seed-furrow. On the sowing of grass-seeds and barley. On the turning of dunghills. On the planting of potatoes. On paring and baring the surface. On the farrowing of sows; the hatching of fowls, &c.

The Work will also embrace many important operations not included in the ordinary routine of farming, such as "Judging of Land," "Stocking of a Farm," "Improvement of the Soil," &c., &c.

The contributions by Prof. Norton will add greatly to the value of the book, by adapting it to the Soil, Climate, Growth, &c., of our own Country; and the united labors of two such distinguished men will make this work one of the most complete and valuable to the American farmer, ever issued from the press.

The work will be comprised in about 18 Nos. of 80 pages each, with a steel engraving in every number; besides which it will contain more than 600 wood engravings, in the highest style of the art. It will be handsomely printed on fine paper, and sold at 25 cents a number, or $4 in advance for the eighteen numbers.

The First Number will be issued in the month of January, and the work will be completed in about one year. The first volume, written by Mr. Stephens, in already published in Edinburgh, and the Americans edition will be printed from the stereotype plates imported for that purpose.

Booksellers and Dealers in Periodicals will be furnished on liberal terms.

Postmasters and others remitting the money for three copies at the above prices, will receive a fourth copy gratis. Remittances will be at the risk of the Publishers, if the mailing of the money is proved—otherwise at the risk of the parties remitting. A postmaster's certificate of the money being duly mailed is always satisfactory evidence to the Publishers.

Miscellaneous.

Mrs. FARNHAM IN CALIFORNIA.

The Evening Post has been favored with the following extract from a private letter received by one of Mrs. Farnham's friends, announcing her safe arrival a San Francisco, after having been run away from at Valparaiso by the captain of the vessel in which she left New York, who had not even the common humanity to leave her young children behind with her, but took them along to California, while the mother was left to follow them as chance or the advice of strangers might dictate. But she found friends and a passage up the coast, arriving at San Francisco only two weeks after the vessel which had deserted her, and found her children safe and well. She writes by the last mail:—

San Francisco, Dec. 30, 1849.

I have been but two days here, but as the mail goes day after to-morrow, I am constrained to write you in the midst of a confusion that quite defies the attempt to say more than that I am here; that I came from Valparaiso on the Louis Phillippe, found the Angelique here a fortnight before me, and all things right. * * * Women are imprisoned here at this season by the horrible condition of the streets. We have to wear men's boots, and shorten our skirts as much as possible. I have been in the street but twice, and each time in that costume. * * Women are more in requisition than gold or any thing else. Those who came out with me had immediately offers of employment at $75 and $100 per month. If there had been five hundred instead of five, they could all have engaged immediately on similar terms. They must be got here in considerable numbers before society can take any shape or assume any character. I hope that while our good brethren at home are bestirring themselves kindly to send out churches and clergymen, they will nat forget that the best of all missionaries to such a population are resolute, virtuous, intelligent women.

One of the chief difficulties that were felt by the women who consulted me was the fear that they should not be protected against rudeness, or perhaps something worse. I reasoned then that it would not be so, but it was difficult to convince by argument. Therefore, let the fact be known, to all who care to know it, that the utmost possible deference and care are show to females; and that any woman, to experience rudeness or insult here, must expose herself much more imprudently than she would to incur the same risk in your cities. No woman need fear to come here who has the sense and energy to take care of herself elsewere; and she will have, in her capacity for any occupation suited to her sex, a better capital than the gold of the mines. If there had 1,000 families sailed last May, they would, all who chose to, be profitably employed this day. Everything is scarcer here than gold.

INTEMPERANCE AND CRIME.

In obedience to Resolutions of the Assembly, W. Edmonds, Esq., Warden of the Tombs, New York, has transmitted such statistical information relative to intemperance, and crimes resulting from it, as he has been enabled to gather from the past year's records of the Institution.

The total number of commitments to the City Prison and its branches during the year 1849, was eighteen thousand and forty-two.

Of this number, four thousand two hundred and seven males, and two thousand seven hundred and forty-eight females, were charged with being "so grossly intoxicated as to amount to a violation of public decency."

Three thousand four hundred and ninety-five persons were committed for assault and battery and for riotous or disorderly conduct; the acts of violence having been perpetrated, in almost every instance, while the offender was in a state of intoxication.

Two thousand two hundred and forty-six vagrants were sent from this establishment to the Penitentiary, each of whom was proven on competent testimony to be a common drunkard or prostitute, and an improper person to be sent to the Alms-House.

Two hundred and thirty-one lunatics were temporarily under the care of the prison Physician—in at least one half of these cases Alcohol had usurped "the throne of reason."

Two hundred and twenty-eight homeless beings who sought the shelter of the prison until otherwise provided for by the Governors of the Alms-House, with but few exceptions, acknowledged their own or their parents' dissipation as the cause of their poverty and degradation.

Thus nearly three-fourths of the entire number of prisoners were committed for offenses or misfortunes palpably and directly caused by the use of intoxicating liquor. Of the remainder, (who were accused of felonies and misdemeanors, embracing in their long catalogue every shape and shade of crime,) a large proportion were driven by the destitution consequent upon dissolute habits, to the commission of robbery, burglary, forgery, larceny, embezzlement and fraud; the more sanguinary and more beastly sins were the more immediate fruits of inebriation.

To farther analyze this gloomy calendar would but prove the correctness of the record of habits of life, from which it appears that about eleven-twelfths of the inmates were, according to their own voluntary confessions, persons of intemperate habits—the balance claiming to be moderate drinkers—for, within the range of my official experience, very few individnals acting on the principle of total abstinence, have been incarcerated in the prison.

The number under sixteen years of age charged with intoxication is small—not more than twenty of both sexes; the great majority of that class being either orphans or the neglected offspring of drunken parents, they were committed as vagrants. Some were sent to the House of Refuge, (under care of the Society for the Reformation of Juvenile Delinquents,) and for many of them, through the kind co-operation of the officers of the Prison Association and other humane persons, situations have been procured with farmers and mechanics in the country, in the hope that a removal from the evil influences of the city, with the acquisition of healthful and honest occupations, might restore them to lives of usefulness and honor.

THE GAINES CASE.

A Boston correspondent of the Buffalo Commercial Advertiser, furnishes the following:—

I see it stated in some of the papers, that a new claimant to the immense estates of "the late Daniel Clarke" (40 years dead) opposes the pretensions of Mrs. Myra Gaines. This is a mistake. The "new claimant," Mrs. Barnes, the wife of an able New Orleans Physician, entered her claim and protest against Mrs. Gaines' demand, more than twelve years ago. I know all the surviving parties in this matter. Mrs. B. is a lady of elegant and attractive exterior, in fact, what is sometimes called "a magnificent woman." She is generally believed to be the daughter of Daniel Clarke, by a French woman to whom he was never married; but she alledges, with some show of truth, that her mother (now deceased) had had a certificate of her legal union to the said Clarke. It is a queer story. The history of Daniel Clarke and his wives, or concubines, would make on interesting novel, without any embellishment. Daniel Clarke emigrated to to this country from Ireland in the latter part of the last century, and settled in New Orleans, as a clerk in a mercantile house. A few years subsequently, he went into partnership with his employers. Fortunes were more easily made in those days than at present, and by his contracts with the United States Government Mr. Clarke grew rich. Anticipating the rise in the value of property in Louisiana as soon as it should come into the possession of the United States, he made extensive purchases of land, especially in and around Bayou Rouge. In the meantime he lived with two or three women, it is believed, illicitly; but the children of two of them alledge that he was privately married to their mothers. In his will, he makes no mention of Myra (Gaines) and leaves only a few hundred dollars to Caroline (Barnes) whom he styles his natural daughter. The bulk of his property was left to his mother and sisters.

He was said to have been connected with Aaron Burr and Blennerhasset in the conspiracy to wrest Louisiana from Spain, and I have seen a pamphlet which he published to exculpate himself from the charge.

CONSEQUENCES OF FRIGHTENING CHILDREN.

A school-mistress, for some trifling offense, most foolishly put a child in a dark cellar for an hour. The child was terrified and cried bitterly. Upon returning to her parents in the evening, she burst into tears and begged that she might not be put into the cellar. The parents thought this extremely odd, and assured her there was no danger of their being guilty of so great an act of cruelty; but it was difficult to pacify her, and when put to bed she passed a restless night. On the following day she had a fever, during which she frequently exclaimed, "Do not put me in the cellar!" The fourth day after, she was taken to Sir Astley Cooper, in a high state of fever with delirium, frequently muttering, "Pray don't put me in the cellar." When Sir Astley inquired the reason, he found that the parents had learnt the punishment to which she had been subjected. He ordered what was likely to relieve her; but she died in a week after this unfeeling conduct.

Another case from the same authority may be here cited. It is the case of a child, ten years of age, who wanted to write her exercise, and to scrape her slate pencil went into the room in the dark to fetch her knife, when one of her school-fellows burst from behind the door to frighten her; she was much terrified, and her head ached. On the following day she became deaf; and, on the next, so much so as not to hear the loudest talking. Sir Astley saw her three months after this had happened, and she continued in the same deplorable state of deafness.

A boy fifteen years of age was admitted an inmate of Dundee Lunatic Asylum, having become imbecile from fright. When twelve years of age he was apprenticed to a light business; and some trifling article being one day missing, he was, along with others, locked up in a dark cellar. The children were much alarmed; and all were let out with the exception of this poor boy, who was detained till past midnight. He became from this time nervous and melancholy, and sank into a state of insensibility from which he will never recover. The missing article was found on the following morning, exculpating the boy from the guilt with which he had been charged. [Glasgow Constitutional.

Strength of Gutta Percha.—A series of interesting experiments have recently been concluded at the Birmingham Waterworks, relative to the strength of gutta percha tubing, with a view to its applicability to the conveyance of water. The experiments were made upon tubes three-quarters of an inch in diameter, and one-eighth thick, of gutta percha. These were attached to the iron main, and subjected for two months to a pressure of 200 feet head of water, without being in the slightest degree deteriorated. In order to ascertain, if possible, the maximum strength of the tubes, they were connected with the Water Company's hydraulic proving pump, the regular load of which is 250 lbs. on the square inch. At this point the tubes were unaffected, and the pump was worked up to 337 lbs.; but, to the astonishment of every one, the tubes still remained perfect. It was then proposed to work the pump up to 500 lbs., but it was found that the lever of the valve would bear no more weight. The utmost power of the hydraulic pump could not burst the tubes.

Improved Planing Machine.—There is now in operation at the shop of Messrs. Van Slyck & Co., Buffalo, a machine of astonishing capacity. It is called Woodbury's Plaining Machine. It dresses lumber with unprecedented facility—turning out its 50,000 feet of flooring per day—taking it into the machine in the rough at one end, and rendering it at the other, ready planed, tongued and grooved for putting down. By hand, after the old-fashioned way of doing this kind of work, one man was thought to do well when he had prepared 200 feet of flooring in one day, ready to be laid. We are informed that the more rapidly the machine is run the more perfectly it renders its work. It has run through 1,000 feet in 11 minutes, and requires the close attention and hard labor of one person to feed it, and another to remove the dressed lumber and load it.

Disaster and Loss of Life in Ireland.—The Cork Examiner gives the particulars connected with the burning of a Branch Workhouse in Killarney, Ireland. The fire burst out about 11 o'clock, when the cries of the wretched inmates from the windows, for assistance to save them from the most terrible of all deaths, were truly appalling. After ladders had been procured, the work of rescue commenced most nobly. Every man vied with his neighbor in his efforts to save life. Protestant and Catholic clergymen, magistrates, physicians, police, and people—all did their duty. But the result was a reported loss of three lives. The most dreadful part of the business, however, remains to be told. The cry of "fire," and the livid glare of the flames, which forced its way into the brewery, (branch house,) awoke the sleeping children. Alarm for parents, friends and relations in the other house made distraction and confusion. They beheld the burning pile from the windows. In their eagerness to go forth, they rushed madly to the doors and windows, but they were locked or fastened. They then sought an unused loft for the purpose of egress, but the rotten planks gave way—twenty-eight females were instantly killed, and as many more frightfully mutilated.

An Indian's Idea of a Mother's Influence.—When residing among the Choctaw Indians, I held a conversation with one of their principal chiefs respecting the successive stages of their progress in the arts and virtues of civilized life; and first among other things, he informed me that at the first start they fell into a great mistake—they sent only their boys to school. They became intelligent men, but they married uneducated and uncivilized wives, and the uniform result was, that the children were all like their mother; and soon the father lost his interest in both wife and children. "And now," said he, "if we could educate only one class of our children, we would choose the girls, for when they become mothers they would educate their sons." This is to the point, and is true. No nation can become fully and permanently civilized and enlightened where the mothers are not, to a good degree, qualified to discharge the duties of the "home work of education."

Singular Discovery.—At a recent meeting of the Archæological Institute in London, an account was read of a singular discovery which was made in pulling down the walls of an old church in Somersetshire. On removing a sculptured figure and niche, a small chamber was found, closed by an oak panel let into the moulding. Within this chamber was a small oaken cup, in which was a mass of dry coagulated blood. The sculpture on the cup showed it to be of older date than the church, and it is presumed that at the destruction of the neighboring priory church of Woodspring, it was preserved by the pious zeal of some individual, and transferred to this church. The priory church was dedicated, as is known, to Thomas-a-Becket, having been founded not long after his murder; and it is therefore suggested as altogether probable, that the blood found was a portion of that of the archbishop and martyr. [Sun.

The Extent of our Country.—It has been computed that the United States have a frontier line of 10,750 miles, a sea-coast of 1,150 miles. One of its rivers is twice as long as the Danube, the largest river in Europe. The Ohio is 600 miles longer than the Rhine, and the noble Hudson has a navigation in the "Empire State" one hundred and twenty miles longer than the Thames. Within Louisiana are bayous and creeks, almost unknown, that would shame, by comparison, the Tiber or Seine. The State of Virginia alone is one-third larger than England. The State of Ohio contains three thousand square miles more than Scotland. The harbor of New York receives vessels that navigate rivers, canals and lakes, to the extent of three thousand miles, equal to the distance from America to Europe. From the capital of Maine to the "Crescent City" is two hundred miles farther than from London to Constantinople, a route that would cross England, Belgium, a part of Prussia, Germany, Austria and Turkey.

Preparation of the Soil for Seeds.—The ground for the reception of fine seeds of vegetables should be broken up in the preceding year, and well manured in autumn, and rendered fine in spring by repeated ploughing and harrowing, or raking. Plough and manure deep, for deep-rooted vegetables; but manure near the surface for all others. Potatoes and Indian corn answer well, and produce large crops in ground newly broken up. Very fine seeds should be sown in a newly-prepared, fresh soil, and covered only a quarter of an inch deep; larger seeds deeper in proportion to their size; and the ground to be immediately trodden hard, or rolled with a heavy roller. This enables the earth to preserve its moisture at its surface, while at the same time the seeds may receive the necessary degree of heat from the sun, and vegetate at once, striking root downwards. Fine seeds, if sown too deep, are liable to perish.

[Kendrick's Orchardist.

A Singulal Request.—Among the petitions recently presented to the Assembly of New York, was one from citizens of Jefferson county, the like of which, it would be difficult to find in the records of any deliberative body. The petitioners ask that lawyers, mechanics, merchants and others may be assessed and taxed upon the knowledge they possess, and exercise in their several callings, as upon so much capital. They maintain that the profits resulting from the possession of knowledge are greater than are derived from actual cash capital, while the burthens of government are thrown exclusively upon the latter. The memorialists, says the Atlas, base their application upon the increased taxation which, it is alleged, must result from the adoption of the Free School Law, in the benefits of which the classes alluded to must largely participate, and the burthens of which they should equally share.

Singular Freak of Nature.—The fable of Iphis and Ianthe, which forms one of the most striking tales in Ovid's Metamorphoses, was probably true after all. Just such a thing has happened in the State of Massachusetts. A petition was recently presented to the Legislature on the part of an individual in the town of Chilmark, stating that he had a child fifteen years old which was born a female [apparently] and christened Rebecca, but that recently it has manifested itself to be of the male sex. He therefore petitions that the name of this androgynous offspring may be changed to William. We are informed that this account is perfectly correct, and that the instance presents one of the most curious cases in physiology. Truth is stranger than fiction. [Boston Cour.

California Indians.—A correspondent of the Salem Register, writing from the Gold Mines on the Yuba River, 286 miles from San Francisco, says:—

"The Indians I have seen in California are the most miserable looking wretches I ever saw; the poorest clad, and the worst featured of any of the human family under the sun. They are a poor, cowardly race of men, living upon roots, nuts and acorns. Game they make but little account of. We have numbers of them around our camp every day. Most generally, they are in a state of nudity; but some of them wear a shirt, while others are dressed as well as any of the miners. We have employed a few of them for a short time. They will do a good day's work, for which we usually give them a quart of flour, a little fine salt, and a pint of sugar. They are just as well satisfied with these, as a Yankee would be with his $14 per day. Some of them will pan out dirt from some deserted claim, and perhaps obtain thereby from four to twelve dollars, which they always spend with us. We sell flour to them for $1 50 per pint, sugar ditto, and salt for $20 per pound. Of this latter article we have a large supply, and have sold the Indians considerable of it. They are very fond of it, and eat it as our Yankee boys and girls would eat confectionery."

Lion Queen Killed.—The folly of playing all manner of strange pranks with lions and tigers, has just been illustrated at Chatham, England, where a young woman, Ellen Bright, accustomed to enter one of the dens of Wombell's traveling menagerie, and there exhibit, to an audience gaping with astonishment, her tricks with a lion and a tiger confined together, has met with a shocking death. On entering the den for the purpose of going through the usual performances with the lion, she struck the tiger with a small whip, when the animal growled; then, after completing a part of the performance, she struck the beast again, when, rearing up, it seized her by the throat, and inflicted frightful injuries with its huge fangs. A keeper immediately rushed to her assistance, and by striking the animal a violent blow on the nose with an iron bar, succeeded in releasing her; but life was nearly extinct. She was immediately attended by a military surgeon who was present, but died in a few minutes, owing to wounds in the neck and chin, and also to the shock, which her system had received from excessive fright. The Coroner's Jury testified their dislike of the practice of allowing persons to perform in a den occupied by wild beasts.

California Gold.—The $190,000 of gold dust brought by Adams & Co.'s Express, in the Empire City, belonged to about two hundred consignees, in all parts of the country. The quantity varied from a few ounces up to $20,000 to each person. It was put up in every variety of packages, from a stocking leg to a pill box. Among the places to which the packages were forwarded were Boston, Worcester, Schenectady, Baltimore, Woburn, Cleveland, Taunton, Cincinnati, Philadelphia, Springfield, Salem, Washington, New Bedford, Bozrahville, Haverhill, Pawtucket, Newton, Lexington, Ky., Providence, West Troy, Bordentown, Cambridgeport, Bristol, Portland, Nantucket, Trenton, Camden, Beverly, Paterson, Stapleton, Hartford, East Haven, Charlestown, Newburyport, Gloucester, Compton, &c., &c., &c. Nearly one-third of the packages were directed to females, the mothers, wives, and sisters of the hardy diggers. These remittances will carry joy into many a family that has been deprived of its head by this California fever. [Tribune.

A Musical Prodigy.—In the neighborhood of Pimlico, England, is a girl seven years old, named Emma Nowell Cruise. Her musical genuis is wonderful. She plays on the piano forte, with firm touch and clear tone, the most difficult and complicated pieces. Besides the works of the best modern composers, she performs the sublime choruses of Handel, Haydn, and Mozart, and the most elaborate preludes of Bach, with perfect ease, regularity and feeling. She not only plays pieces at first sight, but readily transposes them into more difficult keys. In all her performances, she is said to give faithful expression to every phrase. It is only sixteen months since she was taught the first principles, and before she had been six months learning, she played one of Bach's grand jugues on the organ, as a concluding voluntary at one of the metropolitan churches.

A Long Voyage.—The ship Clarendon arrived at New York last week. She left this port in December, 1846, having been absent nearly 38 months. She has visited the following ports, (some of them a number of times,) viz: Liverpool, Batavia, Singapore, Penang, Akyat, Macao, Whampoa, Hong Kong and Amoy. She has gone into port, including her last entry, 23 times, and has sailed 75,492 miles, being nearly equal to 4½ times the circumference of the globe. She has worked down the China sea twice against the S. W. Monsoon, and has made three eastern passages to and from Singapore and Amoy, in the east coast of China, and during her whole voyage, has not lost a man by disease or accident.

Anecdote.—In a note to his life of Chief Justice Mansfield, Lord Campbell tells us that he once heard a judge at Stafford sentencing a prisoner convicted of uttering a forged one pound note, when after having pointed out to him the enormity of the offence, and exhorted him to prepare for another world, the dignitary thus concluded: "And I trust that through the merits and mediation of our blessed Redeemer, you may there experience that mercy which a due regard to the credit of the paper currency of the country forbids you to hope for here,"

DeRuyter Institute.

The Academic Year of this Institution for 1849–50 will commence the last Wednesday in August, and continue forty-three consecutive weeks, ending the last Wednesday of June, including a recess of ten days for Christmas and New Year holidays. The Year will be divided into three Terms:

The First, commencing August 29, of 14 weeks.
The Second, " December 5, of 15 "
The Third, " March 20, of 14 "

Encouraged by the success of the School under its present Instructors, the friends of the Institute have made liberal additions to its library, cabinet, and apparatus, thus furnishing ample facilities for illustrating branches taught in the various departments.

The Literary Department is as heretofore under the supervision of Rev. JAMES R. IRISH, A. M., President, assisted by other able instructors. In this Department, especial attention is given to the lower English Branches. Students are also fitted in the Classics to enter the advanced classes in College.

The Department of Natural Science is conducted by Professor GURDON EVANS. In this, Natural Philosophy, Astronomy, Geology, Natural History, and Chemistry, are taught in a manner of unsurpassed interest With it is connected the Department of Agricultural Science.

The Farmer's Course is thoroughly scientific; embracing the study of the best authors, with daily recitations. During the Winter Term two hours each day will be spent in the Analytical Laboratory, where students will be instructed in the constitution of soils and ashes of plants, with a minute examination of their constituent elements, and the various modes of testing for their presence.

A course of lectures is given during the Term on Practical Farming, explaining the relation of Geology to Agriculture, the Soil, the Plant, and the Animal, and their various relations, the Rotation of Crops, Feeding Animals, Manures, Draining Lands, &c., &c. For further information see Catalogue.

Besides Globes, Maps, &c., for the illustration of Astronomy, a Newtonian Telescope of high magnifying power has recently been added to the apparatus.

During the Summer Term, Botany and Geology receive special attention, illustrated by excursions to localities where these sciences may be studied as seen in nature. A Geological and Mineralogical Cabinet is accessible to the students.

The Mathematical Department is under the instruction of OLIVER B. IRISH, Tutor. It embraces thorough instruction in Arithmetic, and the higher pure and practical Mathematics, with field exercises in Engineering and Surveying.

Elocution, embracing Reading, Declamation, General Oratory, and Writing, receives the special attention of a competent teacher.

The Teacher's Department will, as formerly, be in operation during the Fall Term, and last half of the Winter Term. Particular attention to this is solicited from all who intend to teach district schools.

The Female Department is under the care of Miss SUSANNA M. COON, a graduate of Troy Female Seminary, a lady every way competent for this responsible station.

No efforts will be spared to render the young ladies of this Seminary truly accomplished, as well in the social relations of life, as in the substantial branches of learning and the higher refinements of education. Ample facilities are furnished for pursuing French, Italian, German, Drawing, Painting, Music on the Piano, and Vocal Music.

Information.

Good board in private families from $1 25 to $1 50. Parents from abroad should furnish their children with very little pocket money, as many temptations may thus be avoided. Those who wish may deposit money with either of the teachers, to be disbursed according to order, without extra charge.

Tuition, to be settled in advance, per term, from $3 00 to $5 00. Extras—For Drawing, $1 00; Monochromatic Painting, $3 00; Oil Painting, $5 00; Chemical Experiments, $1 00; Writing, including Stationery, 50c.; Tuition on Piano, $8 00; Use of Instrument, $2 00; in Agricultural Chemistry, including Chemicals, Apparatus, fires, &c., (breakage extra,) $12 00.

N. B. A daily stage leaves the railroad and canal at Chittenango for this place at 4 o'clock P. M.

MORE ABOUT HIRING MINISTERS.

To the Editors of the Sabbath Recorder :—

Did you ever see any poor fellow take a worse flogging than I did? I have been in a great strait betwixt two, whether or not to sit down in silence, and submit with patience to all that stigma and scandal which I think my reviewer has endeavored to heap upon me. But I came to the conclusion, that I ought to be allowed to put in a kind of salvo, at least, seeing he has so very badly misrepresented my language.

He says that I have overlooked his main object entirely, and seized with avidity on some incidentals of his article, to make out that he is a mere hireling; whereas I said not a word about his being a hireling of any sort. And, as to his object, I verily thought I was correct in what I said about that; and I can see it no otherwise yet. I said, "His object appears to be, to set the ministers, all hands, at work in good earnest—to learn the churches to offer good stout salaries to the ministers." Now let us see if such does not appear to be his object. After talking a while about the backwardness and wickedness of the churches, in that they have not promised their ministers a sufficient salary, and likewise something about the origin and cause of all this backwardness, he says, "But no matter what may be the origin of it, it is reasonable to suppose that sound instruction from the pulpit, and faithful pastoral culture, will effect wonders in removing the evil; and the minister's duty is to set about giving this instruction, and bestowing this culture, in the firm persuasion that his labor will not be in vain." Now, if all this, right on the face of his article, is not enough to make any man believe that his object was to set the ministers at work, and to learn the churches to offer good stout salaries to the ministers, I know not what language he could have used to make any one believe that such was his object. Yet does he not stigmatize me most severely, because I understood him just exactly as his language signifies? If indeed he had some other object in view, yet surely I should have taken this to be his most prominent object.

Again, I said, "His main, if not his sole object, appears to be, to push forward a state of things when the people shall be brought to believe that they are bound to support their located minister, without any secular labor on his part, and that they are awfully wicked if they do not do it; and also to bring the ministers into the belief, that it is wrong for them to connect with their ministerial labors any secular business." It is true, he did signify to the ministers that they need not be anxious about their temporal support, since the Lord had promised them that he would sustain them in doing their duty; but I had not the least idea that it was his main object to convince them of that, for I supposed that they knew as much about that as he did; I verily thought that his main object was to convince them that they ought not to connect with their ministerial labors any secular employment, Paul's doctrine and example to the contrary notwithstanding.

But my reviewer says that the passages I have quoted are nothing to my purpose. To which I will only say, that if he will insist that Paul's plain word for it, backed up by his own example, is nothing to the purpose, surely there is no hope of his being reclaimed by any amount of culture.

Again, he says, "Our correspondent has put in a kind of salvo to his general doctrine, by saying, 'After all we advise and admonish the people to look well to the wants and necessities of their located minister, especially if he is poor, and see that he does not suffer for the want of carnal things, for it is the duty of the people to administer of their carnal things to him as well as to other poor saints.'" He then says, "Here, then, we have it; if the minister is poor, if he is on the borders of starvation, if he is obliged to go in rags and tatters, why then carry him something, so that he does not suffer." Now, if this is not a flagrant misrepresentation of my language, I know not what could be. If he could make it out that no man is a poor man until he is on the borders of starvation, and is obliged to go in rags and tatters, then there might be some propriety in his language. But I have known a great many men, and some ministers, who were poor men, yet they had always had a comfortable living, and were never on the borders of starvation. But he, it seems, would fain make the people believe, that I meant for the church to let their minister suffer almost to death before they did any thing to keep him from suffering, which is precisely the opposite of what I said. And what but the most morbid sensitiveness, and sickly perversion of sentiment, could prevent him from seeing it? And then he exclaims, with mighty exultation, "And is it a deacon that writes in such a strain as this?" No, sir, be it known to you, and to all people whom it may concern, that "Deacon Billy" never wrote in such a strain as that. I admonished the people to see that their minister did not suffer; but he would make it appear, that I signified to them to let their minister suffer severely before they did any thing to keep him from suffering, and then carry him a little something, so that he does not quite starve to death. How many of your readers may be just fools enough not to see but that he has done me justice, I know not. Who would have thought that a minister would ever undertake to gain the argument by scandalizing his opponent?

Again, he says, "But, brother Stillman, do you not see that the state of things which your doctrine tends to bring about, is the very state that is calculated to make the minister poor, and keep him so." To which I answer, No, sir, I do not see it so. I think it is your doctrine, if it was carried out, which would unavoidably make the minister poor, and everlastingly keep him so, unless the people give him a good stout salary; and that, I conclude, is just what you wish for, and what you are laboring so hard to bring about. And you seem to think that by and by the Lord will take us in hand and make us so ashamed of ourselves, that we will turn to and promise him a salary that will be amply sufficient. But, as the Lord generally works by means, it is not likely that he will ever make us much ashamed unless some one or more of his ministers can be employed in the business; and I think my reviewer is not much behind in trying to do his part of it.

Again, he says, "We know, therefore, that brother Stillman's scheme is not Gospel." But I can say, with all confidence, that your scheme is not apostolic. How did he know what my scheme is? I had not prescribed any particular scheme about it. The most that I said was negatively, and to show some of my reasons for doubting the propriety of hiring men to preach and pray for us for so much money per annum. I have not told all my reasons; it would take too much time and paper. But one of my reasons is this—I think it has a tendency to produce leanness and barrenness in the church, because it prepares the way for laymen to excuse themselves from doing their appropriate duties; and just as sure as they do that, leanness of soul will follow. Yes, they will say, naturally, just as my reviewer has represented. If any have backslidden, or gone astray, or if any are anxious, or if there be any difficulty in the church, or whatever may be the matter, they will say, Let the minister see to it; it is his business; we cannot attend to it; we have as much as we can do to get the money to pay him for it. We think it would be hard indeed to pay him for doing our duty, and then have to do it ourselves. No, let the minister do it, it is his business—thus packing all the spiritual duties of the church on the minister. The members lose all the spirituality of religion, and the church becomes like a barren fig-tree. I say, is not such the natural tendency of hiring men to preach and pray for us? Now, from all I can learn from the Bible, I do not believe that the Lord ever intended that all the spiritual duties of a church should devolve on one member of the church, the preacher. I think that other people ought to have religion as well as the minister. The Scriptures teach us that God has set in the church diversities of gifts—apostles, prophets, pastors, teachers, helps, governments, &c., all to be occupied in their several spheres, according to the grace given to every man, not according to the grace given to only one man. I think it would be far better for the ministers to go to work to learn the churches that every member ought to improve his gifts in the church among the sick and the anxious, and not leave all such business for the minister to do, and then have to swing his hammer till midnight. If the members of the church could be brought to understand their duty, and have religion enough in their souls to do it, the preacher would have little more to do than saint Paul had when he was making tents, which was to reason in the synagogue every Sabbath day.

But my reviewer says, ironically, "Ah, but the minister must work!" O dear, what a dreadful thing it would be for a minister to soil his delicate fingers with a hoe-handle! I have lived more than four-fifths of a hundred years, and I have made a good many observations as I have passed along, and I think I never saw vital piety show itself more prominently in the church than it did when the minister labored with his hands, endeavoring to live independently, (remembering that it is written in the word of inspiration, "He that will not work, neither shall he eat,") and when the members of the church were exhorting one another, visiting and praying with the sick and dying, encouraging the anxious, not leaving all such business for the minister to do, and when, besides all this, a sufficient number of the brethren would volunteer to go and hoe out all the minister's corn in a day, and again volunteer to mow and rake all the minister's hay in another day, while others would volunteer to buy and carry the minister a barrel of flour, and in the fall of the year volunteer to buy the minister a good fat cow for beef, because he was a poor man, and we would not let him suffer nor go in rags and tatters. And when the brethren were doing his work in the field, the dear old man would come out with tears on his cheeks to express his thanks and gratitude for our kindness; and the more he expressed his gratitude, so much the more we were stimulated to serve him just so again. And again, if the minister wanted to go a journey, the brethren would turn to and give him twenty dollars for spending money. This is the way I was taught in my youth to support the minister, and it was all done by free will offering. Such a state of things in the church as this, I have witnessed in my day. Nay, more, I have seen the time when, if any other of the poor saints became unable to take care of themselves, such of the brethren as were able would take them home to their own houses, and give them just such fare as they themselves had, and when one had kept them two or three months, another good brother would go and take them off his hands; and I have seen the time when there was not less than five or six such poor saints at a time supported by the church in that same way; and my father, although he was quite a poor man, had much of that kind of business, and I do not believe he was any the poorer for it.

And now, if I should prescribe and recommend any thing as a scheme for supporting the minister as well as other poor saints, it would be something like what I have here stated, and I hardly think my reviewer, when he comes to know what my scheme is, would dare to say it is not gospel wise. Why should he condemn my scheme before he knew what it was? I know by experience, that such a method of proceedure as I have described strongly tends to beget love and Christian affection in the church. But supposing our minister, instead of expressing his thankfulness, had addressed us in language similar to that I lately heard from the mouth of a Seventh-day Baptist minister—"Are you doing this because you think you owe it to me? I want none of your help unless you owe it to me, for I will not receive any thing of you as charity." Do you suppose such language as that would not have had a tendency to quench that flame of love that was then glowing in every breast? Or, if he had addressed us in language like this—"Well, brethren, I am glad to see you doing a little in the way of your duty at last, and if you had done as you ought, you would long ago have promised me a salary of four or five hundred dollars at least." Do you suppose that would have stimulated the company to go right off and buy him another barrel of flour? It seems to me that it would not. And what is it, but just such kind of language, that we now hear from some of our ministers? "A soft answer turneth away wrath, but grievous words stir up anger." "Charity never faileth," for love begets love, and love is the essence of piety; and when pure love provokes the church to see that its minister does not suffer, how it instantly provokes the minister to love the church in return, thus provoking one another to love and to good works, and causing pure and undefiled religion to increase and abound in the church. But if the church agree with a man to preach and pray for them a year for five hundred dollars, there is no love begotten by that act; it is only making a bargain; and if the church pay him that amount, there is no more love in the performance of it, than there would be in praying for a piece of property. But I confess that I never understood the gospel in that fashion.

My reviewer says that it is wrong for ministers to connect with their ministerial labors any secular employment; and I must say, that it wounded me to the heart to see that he would treat some of our most worthy and beloved ministers in such a way as to suggest, that they do it because they are afraid that God will not fulfill his promise, or that they betray a lurking suspicion that he will not do it. But if it is wrong for ministers to labor with their hands, it would seem that Paul missed it most shockingly when he and Sylvanus and Timotheus did so for the very purpose of making themselves examples for others. See Thes. 3d chap. This one thing, however, is certain, that if it is wrong for ministers to labor with their hands now, it was wrong for ministers to do so then, and thus you would make the apostles transgressors, and unworthy of imitation. But when the writer in question perceives that we think Paul's doctrine goes hard against him, he then says, "Well, I did not mean that it is wrong for ministers sometimes to go to work to help some feeble church; such as do that, I hold in everlasting honor," says he, "Paul himself did so." Now if that is not a real sophistical come-off, I know not what to call it. For Paul there said not a word about feeble churches; he simply told them to do it to support the weak; and who does not know that ministers generally have weak ones enough in their own families to require all the labor they can do, without helping weak churches? Nay, I think it ought to be the pleasure and delight of the church to turn to and help him support his weak, if he is a poor man. And I know it was the delight of the church to do so when I was young. But take notice, that when I say a poor man, I do not mean a drunken wretch who goes in rags and tatters, and whose wife and children are on the borders of starvation. No, I despise such an idea, come from where it will. I mean a man of small property, that gets a good living by his industry; that is what I mean, and what could prevent him from seeing it?

But again, my reviewer seems to depend chiefly, if not entirely, for the support of his doctrine, upon the words of Saint Paul where he says, "Even so hath the Lord ordained, that they that preach the gospel should live of the gospel." But this, it seems, would not quite prove it, if it had not been for the two words, even so; and even these would not have been quite sufficient, if he had not written them in capital letters, and repeated them pretty often. He says EVEN SO signifies in the same manner; and if the priests did not have a stipulated yearly salary, yet they did have a specified per centage, which amounts to about the same thing. Now let us see for what this per centage was given. It was given them in lieu of their part and proportion of the land of Canaan, and all the rest that they received of the people, was a certain part of their free-will offerings; and if ministers now had as much hard labor to do as the priests and Levites did then, which was to kill and dress thousands and tens of thousands of sheep and oxen, cut wood and make fires, wash dishes and clean house, &c. &c.; I say, if ministers now had to do as much hard work as they did, I think they would begin to be willing that it should be some other how than even so.

Again, at the commencement of his reply, he says that he utterly disclaims the unworthy motive attached to him. But how it is that a man can disclaim a motive as being unworthy, and yet cling to it with so much eagerness, is what I confess I do not exactly understand. Or does he disclaim it merely because I used the words, awed or frightened? Well, if that is what he means, let me ask what would awe or frighten a well-disposed man more effectually to do a thing, than to make him believe that he is awfully wicked if he does not do it? And this is just what he says of the church that does not at the outset promise the minister a sufficient salary. Then pray tell me how it is that he disclaims such a motive.

He next says, "The real motive in writing that article was to induce the ministers to commit themselves to their appropriate work, without cherishing any undue anxiety about salaries." This, he says, I overlooked entirely. In this, however, he was quite mistaken, for I took particular notice of it, and considered it as a very necessary preliminary to the accomplishment of the main object, which I considered to be to get the people into the belief and practice of promising the minister a good stout salary; for he told us, at the commencement, that he believed one great reason why the people were so backward about promising the minister a salary, was that the ministers continued to labor in secular business, and consequently the first thing to be done to bring about the desired object, would be to get the ministers to cease from secular labor; and, to induce them the more readily to do so, he assures them that God will take care for their temporal concerns, about which, at the same time, they knew as much as he did. I do not pretend to say, that the man is not sincere in believing it to be the best way for the minister to do no secular labor, and for the church to give him a good stout salary for his support. But I happened to be of a very different opinion. I think it would be far better, and much more for his health and comfort, (unless he is naturally very lazy,) to labor in some secular business to support his weak children, and perhaps a weakly wife too, and let weak churches take care for themselves as well as they can; for if any man provide not for his own, especially for those of his own house, he hath denied the faith, (ministers not excepted;) and let the members of the church do much of the church's business (which he seems to think belongs exclusively to the minister,) otherwise what would be the use of that diversity of gifts that God has set in the church.

I must take leave of my reviewer, by saying, that I really think he had no cause of trembling for fear that some of his opponents would think he favored their cause. I do not believe that any one of them ever thought that he had done so in the least. I have shown those three articles to two men whom I considered as candid as any in the town, and whom, I supposed, would be as impartial and as free from prejudice in the case as any I could find. One of them told me that he should have drawn the same conclusion from them as I did, and that he did not see how any body could draw any other. The other's judgment I have not obtained; but one only is sufficient for my purpose.

WM. STILLMAN.

THE GENEROUS PLANTER.

The incident which is embodied in this story occurred in Cincinnati some years since, and was then published, but so long a time has passed that few will remember it. I am very sure none of my young readers will.

There is in Cincinnati a large class of freed colored persons, who, having been emancipated in the South and Southwest, have come up there to settle, and very many of them with the sole object in view of making enough money by their labor to redeem some near relation from bondage. We have known of remarkable instances of self-denial and patient labor that have finally been crowned with success, but we cannot recall one of which we have heard, that is so full of romantic interest as the one we are about to relate. Amongst the freed colored persons who were laboring to purchase the freedom of their enslaved friends, there was none so untiring in efforts as Susan Wilson, the heroine of this little story. She was up early and late; and although her occupation was a very laborious one, and not very profitable, yet by unceasing toil and the most rigid self-denial, she managed to lay by a considerable sum of money towards the purchase of her husband, who was still in slavery. Susan had been set free by will at the death of her mistress, whose favorite personal attendant she had been. This lady had owned but few slaves, and they were all in her own employ, so that they had always been comfortable. She had left Susan with her own children, free, but without making any provision for their support—thus showing that she thought the boon of freedom, even in a state of destitution, a sufficient restitution for years of unpaid labor, which she had exacted from her slaves. Whatever Susan thought of the justice of her mistress, she was not slow to avail herself of her freedom; and after long and anxious consultation with her husband, it was agreed that she should make her way to a free State, with her three small children, and by her labor endeavor to get money enough to buy him.

Ben, her husband, was an excellent carpenter, and lived with his master, very near Susan's mistress. He was an intelligent slave, and had always cherished the hope that he should one day be free. There did not seem a very bright prospect of this, when he saw his poor wife with her three little children set out upon their journey to a land of freedom. His heart almost failed him, but still he said to himself, "They must go. If they cannot do anything for me, they will do far better for themselves, in a free State, than they can possibly here, where they will not be thought even as good as slaves." And so they parted. She came to Cincinnati, and had been there about two years, laboring as a washerwoman, when my story commences. Her oldest child, Harry, was a fine stout boy of eleven years; Susan, the next, was a delicate, sickly child of nine; and the youngest a little boy of five. They were none of them old enough to be of much assistance to their mother; yet so great was their interest in the object for which she was laboring, that all were willing and anxious to contribute something toward their father's freedom. Harry could do most. He was, in fact, very useful—bringing and carrying clothes, fetching water, making fires, and everything of the kind that he could do. Then there was a large boarding-house in the neighborhood, where Susan not only got washing from the boarders, but almost enough broken victuals for the support of her and nice-looking, and he had as many customers as he could supply. It would be im-family—thus saving both money and time.

So great were her exertions, that a number of charitable ladies kindly undertook, not only to supply the children with clothes, but made them up for them. Thus the poor woman's earnings were almost all hoarded up for the purchase of her husband.

The children too were as self-denying as their mother. If any kind lady or gentleman gave them a small piece of money for a little service, instead of buying candy and cakes, as most children do, it was brought home and put in a mug where their earnings were kept. Harry, during the season of blackberries, was able to earn a good deal of money. His berries were always fresh possible to tell the little acts of self-denial by which these poor children strove to aid in the purchase of their father. To show how they all felt about it, we must relate one little incident.

One day, a lady, who was pleased with the frank, good-natured face of Ned, the youngest boy, called him in, and gave him half an orange. This was so nice that it created a desire for more. A few days afterward he had a small piece of money given him, and instead of taking it home to put in the mug, he bought two oranges with it. He no sooner had them in his possession, than he began to feel he had done something that his mother and brother and sister would not think very well of. So, instead of running home delighted to show them, he came in softly, and going straight up to his mother, said, "Good gentleman gave me money; I give it to man in shop; he gave me two orange." His mother looked sorrowfully at him, and told him she was sorry he had forgotten his poor father was a slave. And the other children said, "Oh! shame, Ned! to buy oranges with the money for daddy's freedom!" They would not touch a bit of them; and poor little Ned with tears in his eyes sat down in the corner and ate up the oranges by himself, and he was very glad when the last mouthful was gone. He said to his mother that he would never buy any more oranges, but bring the money home for his father.

One day, Harry had been gone to the boarding-house longer than usual for the fragments for the dinner. Presently they saw him coming with a large bundle of clothes, as many as he could carry; and he came panting in, full of some important information.

"Oh! mother," he cried, "there are so many strangers at Mrs. G.'s, and you'll get all the washing for them, for a good gentleman who sent you these says he will ask them. And he was so kind to me, and I told him all about how you were working for father's freedom, and put all your money in a box, and how we put all we could save in a little mug; and he gave me a whole quarter to put in a little mug; and he is coming here, and I am going to show him it's the largest piece we have got yet."

Thus he ran on to his mother, full of his good news, and none of them observed that a gentleman had followed him home, and was now standing near the door, in a very thoughtful mood.

Susan was the first to observe him, and how her heart sunk within her when she discovered the well-known face of her husband's master! He did not know her, and was surprised at her agitation. She sank down on the floor, and was not able to speak. She had not heard one word from her husband since she had left him; and in those two years what might not have happened! The cholera had been very fatal in the South, and he might be dead!

"Ah, master!" at last she cried, "my poor husband, Ben, is he alive?"

"Ben! what Ben? I don't know who your husband is."

"Oh, master! Ben Wilson, your carpenter."

The gentleman was very much agitated, for he had not expected to find his carpenter's wife and children here. But he hastened to relieve the poor woman's anxiety.

"What!" said he, "is my carpenter, Ben, your husband? Oh yes; he's alive and well, and as honest and faithful a fellow as he ever was."

"Thank God!" said the poor woman, "if he's alive, I know he's good."

The slaveholder sat down on the only chair the house afforded, and the poor creatures crowded about him, beseeching him in the most piteous manner to sell the husband and father to them.

"Oh! master, see," said Susan, "I have got almost all the money;" and bringing her box of hoarded savings, she put it down at his feet.

"See!" cried the children, "here is all ours too!" and in his haste little Ned upset the mug, and all the pennies and half-dimes rolled over the floor in every direction.

"Oh, master!" cried the poor wife, "won't you be willing to sell Ben? I know I've not got enough yet; for," she added, proudly, "I know Ben is worth a good price."

"Isn't there almost enough?" said little Susan.

"Do please let daddy be free!" said little Ned.

The planter was speechless. He was deeply touched by the scene before him. He had a heart, and it was touched. He had always believed that when slaves were freed they became lazy and improvident, living by begging and stealth; but here he saw the most untiring industry and rigid economy in a poor woman and three little children, whom he would have supposed scarcely able by all their labor to support themselves, saving a sum that seemed almost incredible. We know just how much he was surprised; for we have seen in all its force this fixed belief of slaveholders, that free colored people are not able to take care of themselves. He sat, looking pale and sad.

"Is master sick?" said Susan.

"Yes, good woman," said he, "sick of myself, sick of slavery, sick of everything."

Poor Susan was bewildered; but the planter, with great effort, calmly added:—"Susan, your husband has been worth more to me than all the money in that box. I have no right to any of it; keep it for yourselves. Your husband is free from this moment. May you be as happy as you deserve to be."

He then darted out of the house.

O how happy was that mother and children. The mother fervently thanked God for his goodness, and the children danced over the floor, knocking over the poor dinner which was set out on the wash-bench into the tub of suds. Harry looked a little sober at this catastrophe; but he quickly remembered the change, and cried, "Never mind; now we can buy some dinner, can't we, mother?"

When their joy had somewhat subsided, they had a nice, comfortable dinner, and there was an orange purchased for the poor, sick, little Susan.

But let us leave this happy family, and follow our planter. Having seen his injustice to one of his slaves, he was not long in perceiving that he had been unjust to all. He had inherited his slaves from his father, who was a simple-minded man, good-natured man, and he had never heard a word of the wrongs of slavery. Even when he went to the North, to one of the Universities, to be educated, he did not hear whispered a word of disapprobation. But he married at the North, and his wife could never be brought to like slavery. Her uneasiness first awakened a suspicion that all was not right. He encouraged her in her efforts to enlighten their slaves, and render their condition more tolerable. He was not very far from a right state of mind when he came to Cincinnati, and it only needed the unexpected meeting with the wife and children of his most valued slave, whose labor had already paid his market value twenty times over—working as slaves never work, and denying themselves every comfort of life, that they might purchase his freedom.

It was enough. He was convinced, and at once decided upon his future course. He immediately returned home, and as soon as he reached his plantation, he declared to all his slaves that they were free. They gave the best evidence that he had been a good master to them by many of them remaining on his place as free laborers, and his rich reward was in witnessing their happiness and contentment.

Among the most joyous was Ben, who soon set out to join his family; and we leave our readers to imagine their meeting, and the comfort they enjoyed as the reward of their labor and self-denial. [Friend of Youth.

DEATH OF MRS. SCUDDER.

A communication from Dr. Scudder, at Madras, respecting the death of his wife, was read at the Monthly Concert in Boston, on the first Sunday in February. She died on the 18th of November last, after an illness of only four days, and what is remarkable, just three days after the death of her son, Mr. Samuel D. Scudder, who was a student in the theological seminary at Brunswick, N. J. Dr. Scudder writes :—

"After we found that her disease was about to terminate fatally, we assembled around her dying couch, and heard her last words. The righteousness of Jehovah Jesus, which had been her joy and support in life, was her only trust in death. She retained her senses nearly or quite to the last, and although very weak, conversed with us until within a few minutes of her departure. The same ardent love for Christ and for dying souls which she exemplified in her life, shone forth brightly during her last hours.

"In respect to herself she remarked, 'I am a poor miserable sinner, full of imperfections. Heaven will be glorious because there will be neither sin nor imperfection there.'

"Just before she died she opened her eyes and exclaimed, with peculiar energy, 'Glorious heaven! glorious salvation!' Soon after this she voluntarily closed her eyes, and sweetly fell asleep in Jesus.

"When gazing upon her, as she lay before me, I exclaimed, 'How many prayers have come out of those lips. She literally prayed her children into the kingdom.'

"And now what shall I say about my own loss? I must sum it all up in one sentence. It is irreparable. * * * Thirty years have we been permitted to travel together, and to labor for the salvation of souls. Now I am left to travel and labor alone, so far as my beloved helpmeet is concerned. But all is well. Christ lives. I told her when dying, that we should not long be separated."

TAKE COURAGE BOYS.

Many a lad, whose courage has quailed at the formidable task of declaiming before his school-fellows, will take courage from the following fact from Daniel Webster's autobiography. It is communicated by a correspondent of the Independent, who states, that while a school boy, under the instruction of Dr. Buckminster, he made tolerable progress in all the branches, but there was one thing he could not do—he could not speak before the school. "Many a piece did I commit to memory, and rehearse in my own room over and over again; but when the day came, when the school collected, when my name was called, and I saw all eyes turned upon my seat, I could not raise myself from it. Sometimes the masters frowned—sometimes they smiled. Mr. Buckminster always pressed and entreated, with the most winning kindness that I would only venture once; but I could not command sufficient resolution, and when the occasion was over I went home and wept bitter tears of mortification." Surely this fact, so unlike what any one would imagine could have been true, who judges by Webster's senatorial and forensic efforts, should encourage every teacher of the young, not to give over at their first and unsuccessful efforts.

"HIRING MINISTERS."

On our outside will be found another article from the pen of Deacon Stillman, upon paying ministers. In the matter at issue between us and him, we have no desire to have the last word, being perfectly satisfied with having the last argument. It is not likely, that a prolonged controversy would serve to modify his views; for one who has lived "more than four-fifths of a hundred years," is not apt to see the force of those arguments which go to invalidate a long-cherished opinion. The hope of benefiting others, who might, peradventure, be influenced by his views, was all that induced us to enter the list with him.

As to the design of "crushing him under foot as quick as possible, in the estimation of our readers, lest he should in some degree retard the progress of our plan," we can assure him that he is quite mistaken. We could better afford to wait for the brief remnant of his warfare to be terminated, if we had any favorite plan, to the accomplishment of which we regarded him as a formidable obstacle, than to undertake "crushing him under foot."

We are sorry that he so pertinaciously insists, notwithstanding our disclaimer, that our object is to set all the pastors at work to learn the churches to give good fat salaries to their ministers. We must have been exceedingly unfortunate in the use of language, if we failed, so completely, to present the idea which was uppermost in our mind. Had we been managing a viva voce controversy, it is not at all unlikely that our "uncircumcised lips" would have blundered, and subjected us to the necessity of making repeated corrections; but we are not apt to miss it so widely with the pen, though we make no pretensions to that of "a ready writer." The prominent object—the all-absorbing object—which we had before us, when writing what has called forth so much censure, was to urge ministers to commit themselves wholly to their appropriate work; and we do not yet believe that we so entirely failed to present it, but what the majority of our readers well enough understood it. We believe that the minister's appropriate work is to preach the gospel—not to follow farming, or mercantile business, or tent-making. At the same time, we believe that he may lawfully engage in any of these occupations, when the church which he is serving is too feeble to give him an entire support, or when laboring in some field where no church has yet been gathered. We also consider, that if a minister's health is such that he cannot confine himself wholly to the labors of the ministry, he may so far vary his pursuits as to preserve his health. Still, his great work is to preach the gospel. And by preaching we do not mean merely going into the pulpit on the Sabbath day, and delivering himself of a speech about an hour long; but we mean studying the Scriptures, family visiting, visiting the sick, and all other duties which have direct reference to the welfare of souls. We wish ministers to give themselves wholly to this work. We wish them to do it without concerning themselves, over-anxiously, whether they will be well paid for it or not. They need not fear but what they will be paid; for he that trusts in the Lord, and does good, shall dwell in the land, and verily he shall be fed. Ps. 27: 2. They may safely leave this with Him who has given them his promise. Our article did say, and we reiterate the sentiment, that some ministers seem to act as if they were afraid to trust this promise, preferring to have something before them more tangible, in the shape of a farm or counting-house. But so did not Paul, although, for the sake of the weak, his own hands did sometimes minister to his necessities. On the other hand, we consider that when a church calls a pastor, it is in duty bound to lay him under obligation to serve its interests. They do so, when they pledge him what will be a sufficient support, without his being obliged to resort to some secular calling to help out the deficiency.

In conclusion, we have only to request our readers to refer to their files, and reperuse carefully what we wrote, and compare the same with the animadversions of our venerable correspondent. So far as our controversy with him is concerned, we are quite willing to let the matter rest here, especially as we cannot turn aside to deal in personalities. The main subject, however, is one which we shall continue to discuss, as circumstances may seem to call for it.

The Anglo Saxon Race.—Mr. Elihu Burritt has one of his telling articles in a late number of the Christian Citizen. He says that the Anglo-Saxon race numbers 60,000,000 of human beings, planted upon all the islands and continents of the earth, and increasing every where by an intense ratio of progression. He estimates, if no great physical revolution supervenes to check its propagation, that in less than 150 years it will number 800,000,000 of souls, all speaking the same language, with the same literature and religion, and exhibiting all its inherent and inalienable characteristics. He concludes with the following glorious vision:—

"Thus the race, by its wonderful self-expansive power of language and blood, is fast occupying, and subduing to its genius, all the continents and islands of the earth. The grandson of many a young man who reads these lines, will probably live to see the day when that race will number its 800,000,000 of human beings. Perhaps they may comprise a hundred nations or distinct governments. Perhaps they may become a grand constellation and commonwealth of Republics, pervaded by the same laws, literature and religion. Their unity, harmony and brotherhood, must be determined by the relations between Great Britain and the United States. Their union will be the union of the two worlds. If they discharge their duty to each other and to mankind, they must become the united heart of the mighty race they represent, feeding its myriad veins with the blood of moral and political life. Upon the state of their fellowship, then, more than upon the union of any two nations on earth, depends the well-being of humanity, the peace and progress of the world."

DOCTORS OF DIVINITY.

The rapid increase of Doctors of Divinity in this country, is a common subject of remark. Scarcely any college, however insignificant, allows its anniversary exercises to pass without awarding the title to one or more of those ministers who have shown themselves particularly friendly, or who have in some other way entitled themselves to favorable notice. If one takes up a report of the meeting of any of the large benevolent societies of the day, or any printed document of such a society, he is confronted by a formidable array of D. D.'s, either as speech makers or honorary members. Indeed, so plenty have these titled dignitaries become, that it is rare to find a minister of any considerable distinction who is not, either willingly or unwillingly, numbered among them. We have been glad, rather than otherwise, to see the number increase so rapidly, because we have hoped and believed, that in this way the evil would eventually work its own cure. In that belief we remain still. Nevertheless, we are quite willing to help forward any measure which gives the least promise of hastening a result so devoutly to be desired. Hence we copy the following document, prepared by a body of ministers residing in Syracuse, N. Y., for which we bespeak candid and serious consideration.

Expose of a College of Evangelical Ministers—Title of D. D.

It was about the middle of the 12th century, that the practice of conferring the honorary title of D. D. on divines commenced. Peter Lombard was the first man thus honored, and this honor was bestowed upon him by the Faculty of Paris.

This practice thence spread to other kindred institutions; and in due time it passed from Roman Catholic to Protestant Universities. In this country the honor is conferred by all our Colleges, large and small, old and young, stable or moving, with or without character, with a single exception, namely, the "venerable Yale," which has opened its eyes and become too wise thus to trifle.

It is given as a title of honorable distinction; but on what just ground it is thus given, is often to the public an inexplicable mystery, as they are incapable of seeing, in many thus honored, any distinguished marks of professional excellence. It is not unfrequently bestowed upon men who have altogether turned aside from their appropriate business, as ministers of Christ.

Now we, the College of Evangelical Ministers of the city of Syracuse, do hereby protest against the whole system; and that, for the following reasons:—

1. It plainly contradicts the teaching of the only Rabbi that we are willing to acknowledge, namely, our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ. He says, "But be ye not called Rabbi, for one is your master, even Christ and all ye are brethren." See Matt. 23: 7, 11. So some of our ripest biblical scholars understand this passage of the Scripture, such as Stuart of Andover, and Barnes of Philadelphia.

2. Its effect on the ministry is evil, and only evil, so far as their spirituality is concerned. Its tendency is to engender and foster feelings the opposite of humility and lowliness of heart, and professional equality; to excite envy and jealousy on the one hand, and pride and superciliousness on the other; to awaken unholy desires for the carnal distinction, and to prompt to improper influences and secret practices in order to obtain it.

3. We object to its source. If we must have ministerial distinctions, let them come from Christ through his church. But this cannot be, because he forbids them. Whence come they, then? They come from the Boards of Trustees of our Colleges, composed of worldly and irreligious, as well as religious men. And what right have they to invade the ministry of Christ, and sit in judgment, and say, who shall, and who shall not be Doctors of Divinity? Who gave them this power? It is a vicious usurpation, exerting a pernicious influence, and ought at once to be resisted by all the friends of Christianity. Like all other corruptors, the conferring source has its price, though this differs in different circumstances. It is an incorporated secular power, which has no soul, and of course no conscience. The degree as a title of distinction originally came from the Papal church, and it is worthy of its parentage. Being from beneath, it is 'earthly, sensual, devilish.' We therefore repudiate it.

We propose to destroy this anti-Christian disparity in the following manner.

Inasmuch as it is impracticable to take away the titles which have been conferred on some of our ministerial brethren, and as the title D. D. means a teacher of divinity, and therefore appropriately designates the profession of all ordained ministers of Christ, we propose to assume and substitute it, as a professional title simply, in the place of the Popish style of Reverend, Right Reverend, Most Reverend, and to recognize each other, and all our ministerial brethren, by no other official title. And should any considerable proportion of the Christian community see fit to unite with us, we shall at once extract the sting from the viper, and thus render it harmless.

We therefore cordially and earnestly invite such co-operation. Henceforth, then, let no minister of Christ be recognized by any other official title than that of Doctor of Divinity, or teacher of the Christian religion.

As our College is composed of Presbyterian, Baptist, Methodist, Congregational, Reformed Dutch, Lutheran and Wesleyan Methodist Doctors of Divinity, we respectfully ask the religious papers generally to publish this communication, and thus subserve the interests of our common Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ.

The above views were unanimously adopted, and ordered to be published in the different denominational religious papers represented as above in this meeting.

SABBATH LECTURER PROPOSED.

Through the columns of the Recorder, I wish to call the attention of the churches of the Eastern Seventh-day Baptist Association, and particularly of the Executive Committee, to the importance of employing a person to labor within the bounds of the Association as a lecturer on the subject of the Sabbath. This course, I think, was recommended by the Association at its last annual session. Owing to the circumstance that no suitable person could readily be obtained, but little has been done in that line. Enough has been done, however, to encourage and stimulate us to increased action, and to warrant a persevering and continued agency. From letters received since returning from Maine, I infer that my visit to that region was not lost. Although the letters were private, yet I think there is no impropriety in my giving a few extracts. One brother writes:—

"I find some of my church a good deal exercised on the subject. One sister, with whom you dined, says she shall never feel right until she fully obeys the fourth commandment. But few who heard you attempt to oppose. Could you spend some time here, I think many more would interest themselves to hear on the subject. I have not preached a whole discourse on the subject, but half the people, and more too, admit what I say on the subject to be right.

"The editor of the Western Christian has the following:—'We adhere to our faith in the Christian Festival, not as coming in the place of the ancient Sabbath, or as deriving authority in any manner from the fourth commandment, but as an independent institution. We would neither give to it the name, nor apply to it the law of the Sabbath, but observe it as a day of social and religious worship and benevolent contribution. The belief that the fourth commandment is still in full force, save that the first day has been substituted for the seventh, is unauthorized. The Scriptures are profundly silent as to any such thing. The law is not amended. If in force, it is as it was at first enacted. If it is in force, we must keep holy the seventh day whatever we may do on the first."

A brother residing at Paris says:—

"Your lecture in this place awakened considerable interest on the Sabbath, and, as is usual, created much opposition and contempt towards those who observe it. Well, the Lord be praised; we have the assurance that his grace shall be sufficient for us, and we may boldly say, 'The Lord is my helper—I will not fear what man can do unto me.' There is a little handful in this region who love the holy Sabbath, and to whom its sacred hours are a delight. Though feeble in numbers, we feel that our feet are planted on the Rock of Ages, and we shall not be moved."

The above extracts show that what little we have done is enough to encourage us to enlarge our operations. And I here take the liberty of suggesting, to the churches and the Executive Committee, the importance of maturing some plan whereby such an agency as I have named may be sustained, if it should be thought advisable. I would also respectfully request, that any one having thoughts to offer on the subject, should communicate the same to me, so that they may be laid before the Executive Committe, or the Association, at their next session.

TEMPERANCE LECTURES—CHURCH ORGANIZED—SABBATH LECTURES.

To the Editors of the Sabbath Recorder:—

Some time ago it came into my heart to visit our brethren residing in Marquette Co., Wisconsin, to learn their condition, and to become familiar with the prospects of some of the new settlements on the frontiers of our nation.

On my way I called at Hamilton, a little village on the Fox River, consisting of about twenty-five houses, all built since last June. Here my soul was stirred within me when I saw how intemperance prevailed, and I resolved on making an attempt to stay its progress. A room was procured in the tavern, and I commenced lecturing upon the subject of temperance on the evening following the New-Year Ball. After the third lecture, a Temperance Society was organized, with between forty and fifty members, some of whom acknowledged that they had been seen to wallow in the ditch.

Leaving Hamilton, I visited our brethren, who live some twelve miles down the river, and to whom I found Bro. J. M. Todd faithfully dispensing the word of life. They were enjoying a revival of religion. The first Sabbath after my arrival, they held a council, and resolved to become organized into a church, which was done on the 4th inst., Bro. J. M. Todd having been appointed to receive, in their behalf, the hand of fellowship. Ten were received by baptism, and twenty-one by letter and otherwise, making in all thirty-one members. It was truly cheering to see with what decision and joy those young converts, accompanied as they were by an interesting assembly, wended their way through the woods to the bank of Fox River, one mile from any dwelling, to follow their Lord into the liquid grave, going 'down into the water,' and coming 'up out of the water.'

Some three weeks previous to my arrival here, a Methodist Presiding Elder, by the name of Wilcox, had taken it upon him to preach a discourse in behalf of the change of the Sabbath. On my arrival I was furnished with a synopsis of his discourse, in replying to which I occupied two evenings, when the house was literally jammed, and much interest was manifested. It appears to me, that the time for God to elevate his holy Sabbath draws nigh. To use the language of a colporteur who stayed at my house a few weeks ago, "The seventh-day people do not know what a commotion there is in the Christian world on that subject."

O. P. Hull.

Western Sunday Schools.—There was a meeting at the Tabernacle, in New York, one evening last week, in behalf of Sunday schools at the West. The house was completely filled, and addresses were delivered by Rev. Dr. Babcock and Rev. Messrs. Chidlaw and Magoon. The eight missionaries of the Society, laboring in Tennessee, Kentucky, Ohio, Michigan, Texas, Iowa, &c., reported that during the past year, assisted by a number of agents employed for brief periods, they have visited and assisted 1,313 Sunday schools, embracing 8,310 teachers, and 59,451 scholars. The greater portion of these schools are new, and most of them have received donations in library and elementary books. The Reports speak of the efficiency, value and permanency of the schools generally, and contain earnest appeals for continued and increased aid. It was stated, that during the past year the schools of New York contributed upwards of $7,000 for their support. At the close of the meeting something more than $2,000 was contributed or subscribed, in furtherance of the objects of the Society.

SUNDAY CRIES OF THE NEWSBOYS.

The recent movement towards the suppression of the Sunday cries of the newsboys in our city, has led the New York Correspondent of the Baptist Register to make some very judicious observations, which, for the benefit of our readers, we transfer to our columns.

"In the security of civil liberty, it is difficult to say how far the laws of a State should go in the suppression of immorality, as well as certain practices which, though not immoral, may yet impinge the rights of others. It is right—I mean civilly right—for one to do as he pleases, provided he does not interfere with the rights of others. He may be ruining himself morally and physically as fast as his habits will permit him, but you have no right in nature or good civil government to arrest him by law; yet it is in keeping with the largest liberty that we shall not smoke a cigar in a public promenade, or poison in any degree a fountain opened for the common use. The privileges of a community and its mere outward morality will depend upon the education and taste to which it is accustomed. But true religion, which cannot be where morality is not, and which is not where morality often is, has the conversion of the soul at heart; and its redemption by the blood of Jesus does not contemplate any antecedent morality a whit more favorably than immorality. But how is it that the energies of many good persons, often discouraged in their personal efforts to bring men to the acknowledgment of faith in Christ, are directed to the establishment of some human laws, by which at best the appearance only of society is improved, the sepulchre whited, but still full of rottenness and dead men's bones.

"As you pass by the establishment of the Tribune of a Sunday all is quiet,—there are no signs of business,—an outward regard is held for the sanctity of the day. But a few steps onward, and you see a crowd of reckless newsboys waiting for the Herald; and upon the arrival of a steamer, the utmost activity is exerted by each carrier as he receives his papers to get upon his route as quick as possible. They resemble a hive of bees. But who will say that the real spiritual interests of the soul, as they are revealed by the New Testament, are better understood and inculcated by the former establishment than by the latter; or that vital, scriptural piety, is more diffused in the Fourierism of one proprietor than in the blackguardism of the other? Now, Christians have chiefly to do with the conversion of the heart, and with direct moral means, to remove those practices which they attempt to remove by the force of law. By this course, the prejudices of the wicked are aroused; for example, the chiming of the Trinity bells must by law be silenced for the same reason that the cry of the newsboy is. A sceptic may complain that he is disturbed by the bells in Christian churches, as much as a church-goer that the announcement of papers for sale disturbs him. The laws of liberty cannot favor either at the expense of the other. The infidel must kindly endure what to him are the greater nuisances of Christianity, and the professor of religion those of infidelity and wickedness, or they must still be placed by the alternative upon a level in a surrender of both practices, for the law is as deaf to a church-bell as to the voice of the news-seller. It would be bad for civil tolerance and the free power of truth were it otherwise. If a State permits what the church styles nuisances, it is best to let them alone, and let the thoughts and energies of every disciple of the Saviour be directed rather to the regeneration of the souls of his fellow creatures. As it respects the duties of the Christian as such, he would find as much to do in a city standing high for its outward morality as in one of an opposite character. It is therefore best to meet the adversary openly by the claims of the gospel upon the soul, and the necessity of repentance. The interferences of human law upon Satan's empire are rather desirable to him than otherwise, and whatever they may be, he does not dread them so much as the divine and all-involving law of spiritual regeneration. If the church govern the State, he will find quite enough to do then as now, from Boston to New Orleans, but his power is weakened when Christ governs the church; and when the great duty of professors is practiced and felt in various ways, by teaching and disciplining the multitude."

Trouble apprehended in China.—A letter from Rev. Mr. Williams, of Canton, China, to the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions, under date of Sept. 27, expresses fears that the repose at present enjoyed in China may soon be interrupted. Among the various occasions of irritation between the Government and foreigners, he mentions the attack of the Portuguese on a Chinese fort, the capture of piratical Chinese junks by the British, and the increase of the opium trade. This trade which has long been a fruitful source of difficulty, is now thriving, and from fifteen to sixteen millions of dollars leave China annually for opium alone. The Government of India is said to be taking steps to increase the supply, and it is estimated that there will be sixty thousand chests, or nearly eight millions of pounds, brought to China in 1850.

Protestants in Hungary.—Dr. Merle d'Aubigné, the author of the "History of the Reformation," states in a recent letter to Dr. Baird, Editor of the American and Foreign Christian Union, that four millions of Protestants are to be found in Hungary. He says that "if the history of Hungary were generally known, the sufferings that have been endured by our brethren in the faith, in that distant country, would perhaps surpass in interest that of the Huguenots under the Valois and Bourbon Monarchs." While American Protestants unite in the welcome which has been rightly extended to a few noble refugees, let them not forget to sympathize with their humble brethren of a kindred faith, who are obliged still to remain in Hungary, and to endure oppression, the weight of which is increased by a religious as well as a political animosity.

Auburn Theological Seminary.—This institution, founded in 1821, has rendered important services. It appears by a late catalogue, that during the 28 years of its history, it has had 598 students in its classes, beside those who are at this time members. Of this number, 51 have died, and about 30 have failed from bad health and other causes to enter the ministry, leaving about 520 who are preaching the everlasting gospel. Many of them are settled in northern and western New York, others in the middle, western, and southern States, and nearly thirty are toiling as foreign missionaries among the heathen.

Minister from Hayti to the Holy See.—It is stated in a French paper, (the Courrier du Havre,) that the Emperor Faustin I. has just dispatched one of the principal members of the Haytien Senate as Envoy Extraordinary of the Emperor of Hayti near the See of Rome. He is sent, it would seem, with a view of obtaining from the holy father the creation of several bishoprics and two archbishoprics in the new empire, and the appointment to one of these bishoprics of the negro Sylvester, an almoner of the emperor, and distinguished, moreover, for his piety and worth.

Revival in Liberia.—The Liberia papers received by the last arrival, contain glowing accounts of revivals of religion at Monrovia, Millsburg, Caldwell, New Virginia, and New Georgia. We judge that nearly two hundred have been added to the churches, but principally to the Methodist churches, among whom the work seems to have begun. From 30 to 40 native Africans have professed conversion.

Selling Liquor on Sunday.—In Maryland, the law against selling liquor on Sunday is very stringent, and the authorities appear to be determined to enforce it. Over fifty indictments were recently disposed of in one day at the City Court of Baltimore. The persons convicted of violating the law were fined from $20 to $40 in each case, and notified that another offense would annul their licenses without the privilege of renewal. Nearly eighty more of the same kind of indictments were to have been disposed of last week.

An American Cardinal.—The President of Mexico announces, in his message, that Pius IX., in order to manifest his gratitude for the lively interest taken in his welfare by the high functionaries of the Republic and its Ecclesiastics, has signified his desire to confer upon some Mexican Bishop the dignity of Cardinal. A Pontifical agent is expected at Mexico, and, if this Cardinal is made, he will be the first dignitary of that sort on this continent.

Turning Baptists.—Rev. Joshua T. Russel, of the O. S. Presbyterian Church, was immersed, on the 18th January, at Jackson, Mississippi, and afterwards ordained as a minister in the Baptist denomination. Rev. Daniel L. Russell, his brother, who made a similar change a few months since, officiated, and delivered the charge on the occasion.

To the Editors of the Sabbath Recorder:—

We would give notice, through the columns of your paper, that there has been a Seventh-day Baptist Church of some thirty members organized in Christiana, Dane Co., Wisconsin. We would also take the liberty to recommend this place to Sabbath-keepers who think of settling in the West. It is as desirable a locality as can be found in the Western Country, and farms can be purchased at a small advance on government prices.

On behalf of the church,
Wm. H. H. Coon, Clerk.

Christiana, Feb. 8th, 1850.

Easy Divorces.—The new Divorce Bill passed the House of Representatives of Massachusetts on Monday. It provides that if any married person shall join any religious community who do not believe in the sanctity of the marriage relation, and shall continue so to live for three consecutive years, the person so deserting shall be deemed divorced by the marriage contract. The provision is said to have reference more especially to the community of Shakers.

Upon this the editor of the Albany Evening Journal remarks, that the Legislatures of some of our sister States have only to move a few steps farther to render the marraige contract a farce. Not a few of them have gone so far already, that it is about as easy to get rid of a wife, as it is to throw off an old coat. It would save a great deal of trouble to gentlemen law-makers, who appear so anxious to multiply cases of divorce, if they would at once enact a law tolerating unrestricted polygamy. That is the end to which we are hastening.

The Pope's Troubles.—Pius IX. has issued an encyclical letter to the faithful. In it, he complains bitterly of the progress of Christian truth. He "cannot refrain from tears" at seeing some Italians so perverse and abandoned, as not to shrink from diffusing "the depraved doctrines of wicked men." He charges those abandoned Italians with having formed a design to draw over the people to the opinions of Protestants. He thinks the first principle of the Protestants—that of free interpretation of the Holy Scriptures by the private judgment of each individual, helps on the "wicked cause." He is alarmed at "the depraved use of the new art of book-making," by which Bibles are scattered broadcast over the land. "Yet more," says his Holiness, "using the resources of Bible Societies, that have been for a long time past condemned by the Holy See, they are not ashamed to circulate translated Bibles, without having taken care to conform to the rules of the church, in the vulgar tongue, profanely altered and perverted in a bad sense, with unheard of impudence, and under a false pretext of religion, and to recommend the reading of them to the faithful people."

New York State Agricultural Society.—At a meeting of the Executive Committee of the New York State Agricultural Society, held at Albany on the 17th of February, a resolution was passed locating the next Fair of the Society at Albany, the ground selected being near the Bull's Head on the Troy Road. A Premium List for 1850 was adopted, and ordered published by the Secretary. The Trial of Plows is to take place at Albany during the 2d week in June, commencing on the 10th day of the month. Competitors are invited from all parts of the world.

Dr. Gutzlaff.—A highly complimentary address, signed by one hundred and sixty-seven Chinese shop-keepers and merchants, was presented to this gentleman on the eve of his departure for England. They tender it "to mark their sense of his genius, ability, and unremitting attention to his duties, since he came to this place." They say, "His official character has been spotless as water, and not a cash even has he received as a bribe. We bear in grateful rememberance the influence he has exercised in turning men to virtue."

Religious Interest.—In a business letter, dated Feb. 19, Eld. C. M. Lewis says:—"I have been attending evening meetings in North Stonington, Conn., for a number of evenings in succession, where I hope much good has been done. I have baptized fourteen who have professed faith in Christ, and the work is yet going on with interest and solemnity."

Permanent Clergy.—Rev. Dr. Spring, of the Brick Church, we believe, has been the longest settled of any of the clergy in New York. In Boston, Rev. Charles Lowell, Unitarian, has been settled 44 years. Rev. Daniel Sharpe, Baptist, 38 years. Rev. Hosea Ballou, Universalist, 32 years. Quite a number of others in that city have occupied the same pulpit 25 years.

Sunday Trains in Massachusetts.—Great efforts have been made in Massachusetts to secure the passage of a law to prevent the running of railroad trains in Sunday, except to carry people to church, and to convey the United States Mail. The Senate knocked the measure in the head by rejecting the bill—ayes 16, noes 19.

Bible-burning in Belgium.—A colporteur in Belgium, whose labors were blessed in six or seven families, appointed a religious meeting in one of them, in which a child was soon after taken with convulsions. The priest was sent for, and made the woman believe that the sickness was a punishment for receiving the colporteur; and discovering the Bible, he took off the lid of the stove, threw in the Bible, covering it with large coals, replaced the lid, and the book was consumed.

Baptists in Wisconsin.—The Watchman of the Prairies says that the General Association of Wisconsin held its annual meeting in Waukesha, Jan. 8. The attendance was good, but was limited by the cold, the uncertain traveling, and the fact that many pastors and churches were engaged in interesting and important meetings at home. The proceedings were spirited and harmonious. Measures were taken to increase efforts in the cause of Home Missions; also to establish a Baptist College in Wisconsin, and to unite with the Baptists of Illinois, Iowa, and Minnesota, in establishing a theological seminary.

General Intelligence.

PROCEEDINGS IN CONGRESS LAST WEEK.

In Senate. SECOND-DAY, Feb. 18.

Mr. Clay presented a petition from a single individual, asking that the first Senator who proposes a dissolution of the Union be expelled from the Senate. Laid on the table.

After some unimportant routine business, the Senate resumed the consideration of the special order, Mr. Clay's Compromise Resolutions. Mr. Downs, of La., having the floor, proceeded with a speech, which occupied, (with slight interruptions by Messrs. Clay and Seward,) the remainder of the day.

House of Representatives.

Mr. Sibly offered a resolution to inquire into the expediency of appropriating aid to Minnesota and Oregon, in the support of a University, which was adopted.

Mr. Doty offered a resolution, and moved the previous question, that the Committee on Territories be instructed to report a bill providing for the admission of California into the Union on an equal footing with the original States; with the boundaries and limits defined in her Constitution. Said bill not to embrace any subject matter outside of California.

This resolution led to a prolonged and successful effort to prevent action. Numerous questions of order were raised, the House was called nearly a dozen times, and the ayes and nays were taken about as many times on motions to adjourn. The time of the House up to about midnight was occupied in this interesting manner, when a motion to adjourn prevailed.

In Senate. THIRD-DAY, Feb. 19.

Mr. Downs concluded his speech on the slavery compromise resolutions, after which the Senate went into executive session.

House of Representatives.

Nothing was done but to listen to a speech of Mr. Venable on the danger of admitting California, and a reply by Mr. Campbell of Ohio.

In Senate. FOURTH-DAY, Feb. 20.

Slavery was again the all-absorbing topic. Messrs. Clemens of Alabama, Cass, Mason, Clay, Davis, Foote, Butler, and Dodge, were the speakers.

House of Representatives.

California and Slavery were discussed by Mr. Bay of Missouri, Thaddeus Stevens of Pa., and Mr. Buel of Mich.

In Senate. FIFTH-DAY, Feb. 21.

Mr. Seward presented the resolutions recently passed by the Legislature of New York upon the subject of slavery and the admission of California into the Union. Laid on the table and ordered to be printed.

Mr. Hamlin's resolution, submitted some time since, calling for information relative to the imprisonment and barbarous treatment of American seamen wrecked on the coast of Japan, was adopted.

Mr. Seward's resolution of inquiry into the propriety of giving some national testimonial to Capt. Cook of the British bark Sarah, was taken up and passed.

The slavery question then came up, and was discussed by Mr. Miller of N. Jersey, until three o'clock, when the Senate adjourned over to Second-day.

House of Representatives.

After some routine business, the order of the day was taken up, and Slavery was discussed by Messrs. Bissell, Winthrop, and Root, until the hour of adjournment.

TWO WEEKS LATER FROM EUROPE.

The steamship America, which sailed from Liverpool on the 9th inst., arrived at Boston on the 25th, with two weeks later intelligence.

Both Houses of Parliament were opened on the 31st ult., when the Queen's Speech was delivered by the Lord Chancellor. Her Majesty laments the death of the Queen Dowager; states that England is at peace with all foreign powers; represents the difficulty between Russia and Turkey as settled; says that the Governments of America and Sweden have coöperated with Great Britain for the repeal of the Navigation Laws; congratulates the people on the improved condition of manufactures and commerce; recommends the improvement of the laws regulating the relations of landlords and tenants in Ireland; and, in conclusion, "hopes and believes that by combining liberty with order—by preserving what is valuable, and amending what is defective—the Legislature will sustain the public institutions, as the abode and shelter of a free and happy people."

Ministers have not yet avowed the line of policy they mean to pursue in regard to the North American Colonies; but it is pretty well understood that, should these Colonies desire to become either independent States, or to annex themselves to the United States of America, no opposition will be offered by Great Britain to their so doing.

One of the most astounding projects of the age, throwing the American prospectus for a Sub-Marine Telegraph from New York to the Isle of Wight into the shade, has just been announced in London—the formation of a railway from Calais to Mooltan, in the midst of India; distance, 3,000 miles; cost, £38,000,000.

The neighborhood of Liverpool has been visited with the most severe storm encountered since 1839. The loss of the S. P. Whitney, of New York, is reported to have occurred in the gale.

Another expedition in search of Sir John Franklin has been resolved upon.

There has been a pretty formidable mob in Paris, growing out of an attempt on the part of the police to cut down certain of the Trees of Liberty planted during the Revolution. A hundred thousand men are said to have been under arms in one day; but matters were soon quieted.

For the hundredth time, "it is stated on authority that the Pope is about to return to Rome almost immediately." It is believed that the Spanish garrison would evacuate Rome on the arrival of his Holiness.

Accounts from the Dardanelles state that the Circassians have gained great advantages over the Russians, on the Ursa, the Russians having been compelled to retreat with great loss.

Advices from Athens to the 10th and 19th, inclusive, state that a serious rupture between the English and Greek Governments had taken place, and that a total suspension of relations existed between the two Governments.

Austria has made a demand for the extradition of some Poles who have taken refuge from the severities following the late Hungarian troubles, within the cantonments of Switzerland. The Swiss government has refused to surrender the refugees, except in cases where it is clearly proved that the refugees have intrigued in politics and otherwise misconducted themslves. In this position the Republic is sustained by the French Government. England will also, it is supposed, sustain the Swiss in their position.

AN EARTHQUAKE IN NICARAGUA.

The National Intelligencer publishes a letter from Mr. Squier, our Chargé to Nicaragua, giving an account of an earthquake which occurred there on the 27th of October last, at 10 o'clock in the morning. He says:

I was roused from sleep by a strong undulatory motion, which was sufficiently violent to move my bed several inches backward and forth on the rough-paved floor, and to throw down books and other articles which had been placed on my table. The tiles of the roof were also rattled together violently, and the beams and rafters cracked like the timbers of a deeply-laden vessel in a heavy sea. The people all rushed from their houses in the greatest alarm, and commenced praying in loud tones. The domestic animals seemed to share the general consternation; the horses struggled as if to loose themselves, and the dogs commenced a simultaneous barking.

The undulating motion lasted nearly a minute, steadily increasing in violence, until suddenly it changed into a rapid vibratory or horizontal motion, which rendered it difficult to stand upright. This lasted about thirty seconds, and was followed as suddenly by a vertical movement, such as one would experience in being rapidly let down a flight of stairs; then declined in violence, but nevertheless seemed to stop abrubtly. The whole lasted but about two minutes, and can be compared to nothing except the rapid movement of a large and loaded railroad car over a bad track, in which there are undulations, horizontal irregularities, and breaks.

No considerable damage was done. Some old walls were thrown down, and in various places around the country, I have observed that rocks were detached and portions of cliffs broken off by the shocks. The thick abode walls of my house were cracked in several places from the top to the bottom. Many other buildings suffered in like manner. The motion which seemed most dangerous to me was that which I have described as horizontal, in which the earth seemed to slip away from beneath my feet.

WISCONSIN.—The Legislature of this State adjourned sine die on the 11th inst. The Senate passed a bill to abolish Capital Punishment, but it was lost in the House, where the enacting clause was stricken out by a vote of 31 to 26. A joint resolution was adopted to instruct the Senators and Representatives in Congress from Wisconsin to oppose Mr Clay's Compromise Resolutions. The following are among the bills passed during the session:—

An Act to provide for the protection of married women in the enjoyment of their own property.

An Act to provide for the incorporation of Orphan Asylums.

An Act to provide for the incorporation of Insurance Companies.

An Act to authorize Free Masons, Odd-Fellows, Sons of Temperance and other similar Societies, to hold property.

A bill to amend the law for the sale of intoxicating drinks. [This bill obviates some difficulties in the former law, while it leaves less opportunity for the vender to escape its penalties.]

In addition to the above, about 200 acts of a private and local character, and memorials to Congress for mail routes, grants of land for Railroads, and to aid in the construction of Plank Roads, and for appropriations for the improvement of harbors at various points on Lake Michigan, &c., were passed.

RHODE ISLAND LEGISLATURE.—The General Assembly of Rhode Island adjourned after a session of six weeks. We learn from the Providence Journal that a good deal of labor, expended upon matters of public importance, was lost, through a disagreement of the two Houses. An important act, consolidating the school system, was thus lost, as were also bills for reorganizing the Militia, and for apppointing a State Auditor. The license law was amended so as to require complainants for its violation to give security for costs of prosecution. An act was passed for the establishment of a Reform School. Resolutions against Slavery, against grog, and flogging in the Navy, and in favor of a National Bureau of Agriculture, were passed.

A MAN MISSING.—Watkin Jones, a Welchman, aged 32, about 5 feet 5 inches high, by occupation a tailor, very strict and regular in his habits, residing at 141 Chrystie-st., N. Y., left his family, a wife and six children, about 4 o'clock on the morning of Sunday, 13th Jan., to take air and exercise, and has not been since heard from by his family. As he was in debilitated health, and laboring under a high degree of excitement, it is feared that something serious has befallen him. Any information relative to him would be gratefully received by his distressed wife, Anne Jones, as above, or his brother, John X. Jones, Novelty Iron Works, New York.

A special agent of the Post Office Department, recently arrested Frederick J. Mills, Post Master at Hogansburgh, Franklin Co., N. Y., charged with having committed sundry depredations upon the U. S. mails. Several letters containing sums of money from ten to one hundred dollars, it is said, have been traced directly to him, as well as the violation of the seals of a large number of other letters with and without articles of value.

REVIVALS.—At Taunton, Mass., the Baptist church has been enjoying a revival for two months, and some twenty have been baptized.

The Baptist churches in the town of Salem, N. J., below Philadelphia, are enjoying a precious revival. The First church has already baptized 17, and each have several more candidates who will soon come forward.

A revival of religion is enjoyed by the Baptist church and society in South Abington, Mass. Some thirty or forty are indulging hope, many of whom are young men, and there is still a company of inquirers.

There is an exceedingly interesting revival in progress in the Baptist church at Ogden, N. Y. Some twenty-five or thirty have been hopefully converted to Christ, and a large number are making the rational and important inquiry, "What must I do to be saved!"

The Congregational society in Taunton, Mass., are enjoying a time of religious interest. It originated in the Sabbath school, and many young men are the subjects of the influence.

THE UNIVERSITY OF ROCHESTER.—The provisional charter of the University of Rochester, says the Democrat, has been received from the Regents. It is as liberal as any which could be obtained. "To comply with its requisitions, $130,000 must be subscribed within two years, $30,000 to be expended in a site and buildings, and $100,000 to be invested as a permanent endowment. The subscription has been commenced in a spirit which promises speedy and complete success. A large and talented senior class, an able faculty, and many attached friends who expect to make Rochester their future home, are looking for a favorable result with the utmost anxiety. Should the subscription list warrant it, the first commencement of the University of Rochester will be held in Rochester next October."

NEW-YORK POST-OFFICE.—There are made up every day 4,480 mails, two thirds of which are made up thrice a day, making more than 7,000 per day. These are deposited in 260 separate locked bags. Two hundred large bags of newspapers are sent daily, and on Wednesday and Thursday 260 extra bags, and on Friday nearly as many more. The average of letters received at and sent from the office every day is about 50,000 or 60,000; of newspapers the number is about 112,000. There are seventy-six clerks, and thirty carriers; six of the former are night clerks, commencing at 6½ P. M., and leaving at 5 A. M. The others remain on duty all day, until half-past four in winter and five in summer, beginning at five A. M. This is exclusive of the Foreign and Pacific mail steamers. We believe that in no other post-office in the world is so much business so promptly performed.

MELANCHOLY AND FATAL ACCIDENT.—While the schooner smack Ocean Queen, Capt. James Rogers, of Waterford, Ct., was off Absecom, N. J., on Friday, Feb. 15, Mr. Jonathan Pember, a son of Mr. Asahel Pember, of New London, was thrown from the boom while in the act of shaking the reefs out of the mainsail, and striking against the davit head, went overboard. A boat was immediately sent to his rescue, and he was brought on board in about five minutes; though the wind was blowing nearly a gale, and the sea running high. Having on an oil-cloth hat, tied under the chin, the young man did not sink, being probably kept above water by the buoyancy of his hat. He was quite dead when taken on board. Mr. Pember was about twenty years of age.

SPEAKING IN AN UNKNOWN TONGUE.—Some forty years since, the family of Dr. Denormandie, formerly of Attleborough, Bucks Co., Pa. received a paper written in a language they did not understand. It was thought nothing of, except as a matter of curiosity, and remained among the family papers until lately, when it happened to be seen by some person who translated it, and, behold! it proved to be a will leaving to the family an immense estate. Dr. Denormandie left three sons, and perhaps other children. Two of his sons went to Kentucky about 1818, where one of them died; the other two, it is believed, are still living.

INFIDEL FRANKNESS.—An infidel in St. Louis has pledged $10 a year to the Sabbath School in that city, not that he cares about the spiritual or moral good of the children, but because it makes them behave better on the Sabbath. A wealthy Universalist, and proprietor of an iron furnace, in Connecticut, who is opposed to all the religious and benevolent operations of the day, gives something annually to the orthodox society in his village, because, he says, it gives his workmen a place to visit on Sunday, and keeps them out of mischief!

SUMMARY.

In the Senate of New York, on the 19th of February, Mr. Carroll, from the Committee to whom was referred the Postage question, made a lengthy report, in which the Committee recommend the adoption by Congress of a rate of postage not exceeding two cents on every half ounce, on all pre-paid letters, for any distance, and four cents if not prepaid—concluding by introducing a joint resolution of instruction to this effect to the Members of Congress.

A letter from Salt Lake City, in the Detroit Tribune, dated October 7, mentions that a party of eighteen emigrants from Michigan were attacked by Indians on the 16th of September. Joseph Warren and Jonathan C. Turner were killed, and several others badly wounded. A number of their animals were also wounded, and their cart with its contents burnt. The loss of the Indians was not known, but from the traces of blood it was thought that a number of them had been either killed or wounded.

The New Brunswick papers speak of the weather there as intensely cold. Two women, named Lindsey and Goodrich, who attempted to cross the river near St. John, were afterwards found upon the ice, frozen to death. They each had bundles with them, and it is supposed that they first became benumbed, and were finally so overcome as to lie down and never rise again.

Seven American mechanics, on their way to California, were lately induced, by an offer of high pay, to stop at Chagres and put up a building. Before the building was completed, six of the number were dead. The seventh took passage home in the Empire City, and breathed his last the moment she dropped her anchor in New York harbor.

The records of the Smithfield market in London, prove that within one hundred years, the average weight of the cattle killed for that market, has nearly doubled, rising from between four and five hundred to between seven and eight hundred, and the greater part of this increase has been in the last forty years.

Miss Rhoda Cook, of Hartford, who departed this life about two weeks since, left by her will about $1,500 for Foreign Missions, and the same amount for Domestic Missions. She also left a legacy of about $1,800 to the First Baptist church in that city, the interest of which is to be appropriated to the benefit of the poor of the church.

Mr. Burke, in his last report from the Patent Office, estimates fifty eggs for the consumption of each individual in the United States, and that each egg is worth half a cent. This will make eleven hundred millions of eggs consumed, and five and a half millions of dollars paid out for them.

The ship South Carolina, from San Francisco, August 8th, arrived at Boston recently. She sailed from New York, Jan. 24th, 1849, and has been one year and twenty-four days on the voyage. She is the first vessel that has returned to an Atlantic port since the golden epidemic broke out.

It is stated that a fever affecting the brain has broken out in Stamford, Ct., and that fifty farmers have already fallen victims to it. A similar disease prevailed thirty-two years ago, and it is alledged that the epidemic originated in the same house on both occasions.

Mr. Sawyer, a member of the Massachusetts Legislature from Berlin, drives the stage from that town to Acton, daily; arrives at Boston at 9 in the morning, delivers his packages and takes his seat in the Legislature, and then drives his stage home again.

Government Printing, bad as it is done, is an enormous item of expense. The aggregate cost, according to the Blue Book, is about $400,000—divided among the Departments as follows: State 11,500; Treasury 13,250; Interior 38,500; Navy 53,400; War 14,500; Post-office 77,800; Congress 182,300.

At McConnellsville, N. Y., on the 6th, George Wilbur and Mr. Nettleson were frolicking together, when Mr. Wilbur playfully snatched a frozen fish from a sleigh near by, and threw it at the other. The fish struck Mr. Nettleson on the neck, killing him instantly.

The Journal of Commerce states that by the aid of the telegraph wires the newspapers at Dubuque, Iowa, are enabled to publish the proceedings of Congress the day after they occur, and the news brought by foreign vessels to New York or Boston, within twenty hours after their arrival.

We learn from the Owensboro' (Ky.) American of the 7th inst., that Andrew H. Brand, the Kentucky Infant, died of pneumonia, a few days since, at the residence of his father, in Davies County, after a short illness. The deceased was in the 16th year of his age, and weighed over 500 pounds.

A tremendous freshet occurred recently in the Tombigbee River. The water rose so high that steamboats ran over plantations, and the telegraphic wires were submerged. It had rained during ten days and nights.

The Quebec Gazette says that at Portneuf, Canada, on Tuesday, the 5th day of February, the thermometer went down to 52 degrees below zero, and that during the entire day it was below 40!

Two young ladies, whose names are given as Miss Almira Fraim and Miss Mary Ward, have become regular students in the Medical Department of the Memphis Institute.

An interesting discovery has been communicated to the Church Missionary Society in London, by one of their agents in Sierra Leone, the Rev. Mr. Koelle. It is that of a written language existing in the interior of West Africa.

The public land movements at Washington affect the price of Land Warrants, and the price is unsettled. The quotation ranges from $120 to $128, with a considerable quantity pressing on the market.

There are said to be in the county of Suffolk, Mass., embracing Boston alone, 48 suits for divorce, now pending before the Supreme Court.

The largest hotel in America has just been completed in Cincinnati, at a cost of $225,000. It will lodge 550 persons.

A machine has been put in operation in Cuba, for the manufacture of cigars. It rolls them so fast, that one machine can give occupation to six men in the way of tipping and clipping them.

The Angelica Reporter says that on Tuesday last, the stage between Hornellsville and Corning, on the Canisteo River, was upset, causing the death of one man, fracturing the skull of another, seriously injuring another, and killing one of the horses.

Charles Nettleton of Webster, Mass., has been convicted at Worcester, on eight indictments, for the violation of the license law—the fines and penalties amounting to $713 65, and the alternative imprisonment to 135 days hard labor in the house of correction. He preferred the latter, and was committed.

The New Orleans Delta records the fact that for many years a settlement of Gipsies has existed at Biloxi, and along the southern coast of the Mississippi. They have subsisted by catching fish and oysters, and maintain, in all respects, their habits of idleness and quietude.

At Hastings, a boy, nine years old, ate two onions from a bottle of pickles, and drank some of the vinegar, which shortly afterwards suffocated him, some of the liquid having got into the windpipe.

Mr. Dickinson will soon bring into the U. S. Senate a bill to abolish copper cents, and to substitute a coin of the size of a half dime, to be composed of silver and copper. The alloy is in preparation at the mint.

Hon. John P. Robinson, in a communication in the Lowell Journal, says that the costs in the suit—Melvin vs. Locks and Canal Co.—a suit which was brought some 17 years ago to recover a little patch of land in Lowell, and which was lately decided in the Supreme Court of the United States in favor of the Company—have amounted to between $30,000 and $40,000!

At the Common Pleas Court, in Northampton, Mass, William Hemingway was asked if guilty or not guilty of stealing a blanket from the County while confined in jail for drunkenness, and replied: "Guilty, but I should like the privilege of showing the blanket to the Court."

The weather throughout this country, during the past winter, has been remarkably mild; but in Europe it has been severe almost beyond a precedent. In France, it is said, the roads have been rendered almost impassable, many flocks of sheep have perished, and the wolves, incapable of procuring food in the forests, have rushed into the villages to satisfy their hunger. Similar reports are made from other parts.

A Life Insurance Company in this city finds the number of deaths among its California risks, SEVENTEEN, instead of 3½, which they should have been according to the tables. This affords some idea of the hazards to life encountered by California Adventurers.

There was a fire in Batavia, N. Y., on Sunday, Feb. 17, by which six or seven buildings, estimated to be worth $50,000, were destroyed.

The recent fire in New Orleans destroyed 30 buildings, most of them large stores. Loss estimated at one million dollars.

☞ On looking over our books, we find that a considerable number of subscribers have not yet paid for the current volume, although it is now nearly three-quarters completed. We beg leave to call the attention of such to our published terms—$2 per year in advance, $2 50 when payment is delayed till the close of the year. These terms will be strictly adhered to. Let those who would save us trouble and themselves money, see that their remittances are made in time—the quicker the better.

Information Wanted.

Information is wanted respecting the residence of the widow NANCY CRANDALL, formerly Nancy West. She had a sister Mary, who was the wife of Col. Zebulon Scrivens, of Grafton, Rensselaer Co., N. Y. If now living, she must be about ninety years of age. Any information of her residence, if living, and, if dead, that of her heirs, communicated to Mr. Tiba Hewitt, (administrator of the estate of widow Mary Scrivens,) Grafton, Rensselaer Co., N. Y., will be thankfully received. [34w3] By request, W. B. MAXSON.

Christian Psalmody—Pocket Edition.

IN compliance with requests from various quarters, the publisher of the New Hymn Book—Christian Psalmody—has issued a second edition, on lighter paper and with smaller margins, by which the bulk and weight of the books are reduced about one-third, rendering them much more convenient for carrying in the pocket. The price is also reduced 12½ cents per copy. Those wishing books, of either edition, can now be supplied. Price of the larger edition from 75 cents to $1 50, according to the style of binding. Price of the smaller edition from 62½ cents to $1 00. Orders should be addressed to Geo. B. Utter, No. 9 Spruce-st., New York.

Medical Notice.

DR. T. A. MAXSON, Botanic Physician, takes this method to inform the friends of Medical Reform, that he is located in Watson, N. Y., one mile east from Beach's Landing. Believing that there are vegetable remedies adapted to the cure of all diseases, he consequently uses no other. Calls attended to without delay. [32m3.] JANUARY, 1850.

Mail Line between Boston and New York.

REGULAR MAIL LINE BETWEEN BOSTON AND NEW YORK via Stonington and Providence. Inland route, without ferry, change of cars of baggage! The new steamer C. VANDERBILT, Capt. Joel Stone, and COMMODORE, Capt. William H. Frazee, in connection with the Stonington and Providence and Boston and Providence Railroads, leaving New York daily, Sundays excepted, from Pier No. 2 North River, at 4 o'clock P. M., and Stonington at 8 o'clock P. M. or upon the arrival of the mail train from Boston. These steamers were built expressly for the route, and are in every respect particularly adapted to the navigation of Long Island Sound. The accommodations for passengers are commodious and comfortable—the officers capable and experienced. The route being the shortest and most direct between Boston and New York, passengers are enabled to arrive in ample time for the morning lines of steamboats and railroads running to various points from those cities. The C. VANDERBILT will leave New York Tuesday, Thursday, and Saturday. Leave Stonington Monday, Wednesday, and Friday. The COMMODORE will leave New York Monday, Wednesday, and Friday. Leave Stonington Tuesday, Thursday, and Saturday. For passage, berths, staterooms or freight, application may be made to the agents on the wharf, and at the office, 10 Battery-place.

- No. 12—Misuse of the Term Sabbath. 8 pp.

The Society has also published the following works, to which attention is invited:—

A Defense of the Sabbath, in reply to Ward on the Fourth Commandment. By George Carlow. First printed in London, in 1724; reprinted at Stonington, Ct., in 1802; now republished in a revised form. 168 pages.

The Royal Law Contended for. By Edward Stennet. First printed in London, in 1653. 60 pp.

An Appeal for the Restoration of the Lord's Sabbath, in an Address to the Baptists from the Seventh-day Baptist General Conference. 24 pp.

Vindication of the True Sabbath, by J. W. Morton, late Missionary of the Reformed Presbyterian Church. 64 pp.

These tracts will be furnished to those wishing them for distribution or sale, at the rate of 15 pages for one cent. Persons desiring them can have them forwarded by mail or otherwise, on sending their address, with a remittance, to GEORGE B. UTTER, Corresponding Secretary of the American Sabbath Tract Society, No. 9 Spruce-st., New York.

Scientific and Practical Agriculture.

HENRY STEPHENS, F. R. S. E., of Edinburgh, the celebrated author of the "BOOK OF THE FARM," and PROF. NORTON, of Yale College, New Haven, are preparing for the Press, a Book to be entitled,

AGRICULTURE—SCIENTIFIC AND PRACTICAL.

It will embrace every subject of importance connected with Agriculture in all its various branches, both Theoretical and Practical. "Science, in as far as it has, up to the present time, been made available to Practice by Experiment, will be treated in its relation to every operation as it occurs in the course of the seasons." The work will be arranged under four distinct heads, representing the seasons, beginning with Winter and ending with Autumn. The following are among the subjects to be treated of in the first and second seasons, including the Introductory, viz:

INITIATION.—On the best of the existing Methods for acquiring a thorough knowledge of Practical Husbandry the Difficulties to be encountered in learning practical husbandry, and on the Means of overcoming them; the different kinds of farming; the persons required to conduct and execute the labor of the farm; the branches of science most applicable to Agriculture; the Institutions of Education best suited to Agricultural science; the evils attending the neglect of landowners and others to learn Practical Agriculture; on observing the details and recording the facts of farming by the Agricultural student.

PRACTICE—WINTER.—On the treatment of farm-horses in Winter; the treatment of the farmer's saddle and harness horse in Winter; the fattening of swine; the treatment of fowls; the rationale of the feeding of animals; on the accommodation of the grain crops in the steading; threshing and winnowing of grain; on the forming of dunghills and composts in Winter; on the construction of liquid-manure tanks and carts; sea-weed as manure; on gaulting or claying the soil.

PRACTICE—SPRING.—Summary of the field operations, and of the weather in Spring; on the advantages of having field-work always in a state of forwardness; on the calving of cows; the milking of cows; the rearing of calves. On the sowing of spring wheat; on drilling up the land; on the sowing of beans, and peas, and tares. On the transplanting of turnip bulbs for producing seed. On the rolling of land. On the sowing of oats, lucerne, and sainfoin. On the lambing of ewes. On cross-ploughing land, and ribbing land for the seed-furrow. On the sowing of grass-seeds and barley. On the turning of dunghills. On the planting of potatoes. On paring and baring the surface. On the farrowing of sows; the hatching of fowls, &c.

The Work will also embrace many important operations not included in the ordinary routine of farming, such as "Judging of Land," "Stocking of a Farm," "Improvement of the Soil," &c., &c.

The contributions by Prof. Norton will add greatly to the value of the book, by adapting it to the Soil, Climate, Growth, &c., of our own Country; and the united labors of two such distinguished men will make this work one of the most complete and valuable to the American farmer, ever issued from the press.

The work will be comprised in about 18 Nos. of 80 pages each, with a steel engraving in every number; besides which it will contain more than 600 wood engravings, in the highest style of the art. It will be handsomely printed on fine paper, and sold at 25 cents a number, or $4 in advance for the eighteen numbers.

The First Number will be issued in the month of January, and the work will be completed in about one year. The first volume, written by Mr. Stephens, is already published in Edinburgh, and the American edition will be printed from the stereotype plates imported for that purpose.

Booksellers and Dealers in Periodicals will be furnished on liberal terms.

Postmasters and others remitting the money for three copies at the above prices, will receive a fourth copy gratis. Remittances will be at the risk of the Publishers, if the mailing of the money is proved—otherwise at the risk of the parties remitting. A postmaster's certificate of the money being duly mailed is always satisfactory evidence to the Publishers.

MOTHER MARGARY.

BY GEORGE S. BURLEIGH.

On a bleak ridge from whose granite edges,
Sloped the rough land to the grizzly north,
And where hemlocks clinging to the hedges,
Like a thinned banditti straggled forth,
In a crouching, wormy-timbered hamlet,
Mother Margary shivered in the cold,
With a tattered robe of faded camlet
On her shoulders, crooked, weak, and old.

Time on her had done his cruel pleasure,
For her face was very dry and thin,
And the records of his growing measure
Lined and cross-lined all her shriveled skin.
Scanty goods to her had been allotted,
Yet her thanks rose oftener than desire,
While her bony fingers, bent and knotted,
Fed with withered twigs the dying fire.

Raw and dreary were the northern winters,
Winds howled pitilessly around her cot,
Or with rude sighs made the jarring splinters
Moan the misery she bemoaned not.
Drifting tempests rattled at her windows,
And hung snow-wreaths round her naked bed,
While the wind-flaws muttered on the cinders,
Till the last spark fluttered and was dead.

Life had fresher hopes when she was younger,
But their dying wrung out no complaints;
Cold and Penury and Neglect and Hunger—
These to Margary were guardian saints.
Of the pearls which one time were the stamens
'Neath the pouting petals of her lips
Only four stood yet, like swarthy Brahmins
Penance parted from all fellowship.

And their clatter told the bead-roll dismal
Of her grim saints as she sat alone;
While the tomb-path opened down the abysmal,
Yet the sunlight through its portals shone.
When she sat her head was prayer-like bending,
When she rose it rose not any more,
Faster seemed her true heart graveward tending,
Than her tired feet, weak and travel-sore.

She was mother of the dead and scattered—
Had been mother of the brave and fair—
But her branches bough by bough were scattered,
Till her torn breast was left dry and bare.
Yet she knew—though sorely desolated—
When the children of the Poor depart,
Their earth-vestures are but sublimated,
So to gather closer in the heart.

With a courage which had never fitted
Words to speak it to the soul it blest,
She endured in silence and unpitied
Woes enough to mar a stouter breast.
Thus was born such holy trust within her,
That the graves of all who had been dear
To a region clearer and serener
Raised her spirit from our chilly sphere.

They were footsteps on her Jacob's Ladder;
Angels to her were the Loves and Hopes
Which had left her purified but sadder,—
And they lured her to the emerald slopes
Of that Heaven, where Anguish never flashes
Her red fire-whip,—happy land, where flowers
Blossom over the volcanic ashes
Of this blighted, blighting world of ours.

All her power was a love of Goodness;
All her wisdom was a mystic faith,
That the rough world's jargoning and rudeness
Turns to music at the gate of death.
So she walked while feeble limbs allowed her,
Knowing well that any stubborn grief
She might meet, would no more than crowd her
To the wall whose opening was Relief.

So she lived, an anchoress of Sorrow,
Lone and peaceful on the rocky slope,
And when burning trials came, would borrow
New fire of them for the lamp of Hope.
When at last her palsied hand in groping
Rattled tremulous at the gated tomb,
Heaven flashed round her joys beyond her hoping,
And her young soul gladdened into bloom.

THE BENEVOLENCE OF GENERAL LAWS.

It happened, in a remote period, that a slater slipped from the roof of a high building, in consequence of a stone of the ridge having given way as he walked upright along it; he fell to the ground, had a leg broken, and was otherwise severely bruised. As he lay in bed, suffering severe pain from his misfortune, he addressed Jupiter in these words: "O Jupiter, thou art a cruel god; for thou hast made me so frail and imperfect a being, that I had not faculties to perceive my danger, nor power to arrest my fall when its occurrence showed how horrible an evil awaited me. It were better for me that I had never been." Jupiter, graciously bending his ear, heard the address, and answered, "of what law of mine dost thou complain?" "Of the law of gravitation," replied the slater; "by its operation, the slip which my foot made upon the stone, which unknown to me was loose, precipitated me to the earth, and crushed my body, never calculated to resist such violence." "I restore thee to thy station on the roof," said Jupiter; "I heal all thy bruises; and to convince thee of my benevolence, I suspend the law of gravitation as to thy body and all that is related to it. Art thou now content?"

The slater, in deep emotion, offered up gratitude, and expressed the profoundest reverence for so just and beneficent a deity. In the very act of doing so he found himself in perfect health, erect upon the ridge of the roof; and rejoicing, gazed around. His wonder at so strange an event having at last abated, he endeavored to walk along the ridge to arrive at the spot which he intended to repair. But the law of gravitation was suspended, and his body did not press upon the roof. There being no pressure, there was no resistance, and his legs moved backward and forward in the air without any progress being made by his body. Alarmed at this occurrence, he stooped, seized his trowel, lifted it full of mortar, and made the motion of throwing it on the slates; but the mortar, freed from the trowel, hung in mid air; the law of gravitation was suspended as to it also. Nearly frantic with terror at such unexpected novelties, he endeavored to descend in order to seek relief; but the law of gravitation was suspended as to his body, and it hung poised at the level of the ridge, like a balloon in the air. He tried to fling himself down, to get rid of the uneasy sensation, but his body floated erect, and would not move downward. In an agony of consternation, he called once more upon Jupiter. The god, ever kind and compassionate, heard his cry, and pitied his distress, and asked, "What evil hath befallen thee now, that thou art not yet content? Have I not suspended at thy request the law which made thee fall? Now thou art safe from bruises and broken limbs; why dost thou still complain?" The slater answered, "In deep humiliation, I acknowledge my ignorance and presumption. Restore me to my couch of pain, but give me back the benefits of the law of gravitation."

"Thy wish is granted."

The slater in a moment lay on his bed of sickness, endured the penalty of the violated law, was restored to health, and again mounted the roof. He thanked Jupiter from the depths of his soul for the law of gravitation, and studied and obeyed it the remainder of his life. [Combe.

A POET'S NOTIONS OF FAME.

Many years ago, says Bernard Barton, I wrote verses for a child's annual, to accompany a print of Doddridge's mother teaching him Bible history from the Dutch tiles round their fire-place. I had clean forgotten both the print and my verses; but some one has sent me a child's penny cotton handkerchief, on which I find a transcript of that identical print, and four of my stanzas printed under it. This handkerchief celebrity tickles me somewhat. Talk of fame; is not this a fame which comes home, not only to "men's business and bosoms," but to children's noses into the bargain! Tom Churchyard, an artist, calls it an indignity, an insult, looks scornfully at it, and says he would cuff any urchin whom he caught blowing his nose on one of his sketches. All this arises from his not knowing the complicated nature and texture of all worldly fame. 'Tis like the image the Babylonish King dreamt of, with its golden head, baser metal lower down, and miry clay for the feet. It will not do to be fastidious; you must take the idol as it is—its gold sconce if you can get it—if not, take the clay feet, or one toe of another foot, and be thankful, and make what you can of it. I write verses to be read; it is a matter of comparative indifference to me whether I am read from a fine bound book on a drawing-room table or spelt over from a penny rag of a kerchief by the child of a peasant or a weaver. So, honor to the cotton-printer, say I, whoever he be; that bit of rag is my patent as a household poet.

THE DIFFERENT COLOR OF THE JEWS.

Although the Jew becomes the subject of every form of government, from the autocracy of Russia to the democracy of America, he retains his theocratic creed. Neither barbarism the most rude, nor civilization the most refined, have succeeded in altering his peculiar countenance; for in the backwoods of the New World, and at the Court of the British sovereign, he is instantly known. Time, that changes all things else, seems to stay his rough hand when he approaches the Jew. Compare his lineaments, sculptured in marble and cast in bronze—for the arch and medal of Titus still exists—with those of the living Jew, and be convinced of his unchangeableness. This permanence of physiognomy is evidently traceable to a supernatural cause, which prevents the usual modification of features, in order to accomplish an important object. Into this it is not our province now to enter, yet we cannot help remarking, that the Jew is a witness, not of one truth, but of many truths. Marvellously does he illustrate the consistency of the original unity of man with the most extensive diversity. His features have been cast in an eternal mould, but his color is dependent on outward causes. Natural law is forbidden to operate on the one, but left to take its course with respect to the other. A fixed physiognomy declares the unity of the people, while their diversity of complexion as distinctly manifests the influence of climate. Every shade of color clothes with its livery the body of the Jew, from the jet black of the Hindoo to the ruddy white of the Saxon. The original inhabitant of Palestine was doubtless dusky-skinned and dark-haired; but the cooler sky and more temperate air of Poland and Germany have substituted a fair complexion and light hair. On the other hand, the scorching sun of India has curled and crisped his hair, and blackened his skin, so that his features alone distinguish him physically from the native Hindoo.

THE AMERICAN SLAVE TRADE.

Mrs. Nancy Cartwright, a very respectable woman, who has lived for many years in New York, was once a slave, under the laws of Congress, at Alexandria. She has purchased her own freedom, and that of several of her children, by her own industry, aided by the kindness of friends; but has been compelled to leave one daughter, a young woman of great personal beauty, still in a state of Slavery. What the results of that condition may be in such cases, may be learned by reading the following letter from the virtuous daughter to her pious mother, in the middle of the 19th century, in the United States:—

ALEXANDRIA, Jan. 25, 1850.

MY DEAR MOTHER:—I take this opportunity of writing you a few lines, to inform you that I am in Bruin's jail, and Aunt Sally and all her children, and Aunt Hagar and all her children; and grandmother is almost crazy. My dear mother, will you please to come on as soon as you can? I expect to go away very shortly. Oh, mother, my dear mother! come now and see your distressed and heart-broken daughter once more. Mother, my dear mother! do not forsake me, for I feel desolate. Please to come now. Your daughter,

EMILY RUSSELL.

P. S.—If you do not come as far as Alexandria, come to Washington, and do what you can.

The case was brought to the notice of the Anti-Slavery Society, and Mr. Harned immediately wrote to Bruin, the slave dealer, to know on what terms Emily and the two families could severally be redeemed. The answer is as follows:

ALEXANDRIA, Jan. 31, 1850.

DEAR SIR:—When I received your letter I had not bought the negroes you spoke of, but since that time I have bought them. All I have to say about the matter is, that we paid very high for the negroes, and cannot afford to sell the girl Emily for less than EIGHTEEN HUNDRED DOLLARS. This may seem a high price to you, but cotton being very high, consequently slaves are high. We have two or three offers for Emily from gentlemen from the South. She is said to be the finest looking woman in the country. As for Hagar and her seven children, we will take $2500 for them. Sally and her four children, we will take for them $2800. You may seem a little surprised at the difference in prices, but the difference in the negroes makes the difference in price. We expect to start south with the negroes on the 8th of February, and if you intend to do anything you had better do it soon.

Yours, respectfully, BRUIN & HILL.
Wm. Harned, Esq., New York.

SINGULAR BOILING SPRING.—One of the most remarkable natural curiosities in the vicinity of Mobile, says the Mobile Herald, is what is called the "Thundering Spring," about twelve miles from the city. The country is considerably elevated above the level of the river, and is mainly of a sandy formation. The spring, or rather its embouchure, is apparently about three or four feet in diameter, and the fluid has an uncertain motion, like the ebullitions on the surface of boiling water—throwing up pure white sand. The remarkable characteristics of it are a low, rumbling, irregular noise, exactly like distant thunder, and a tremulous or nervous motion of the earth, which is also irregular. The ground for many yards in the vicinity of the spring is constantly shaking in this way, leaving an impression of insecurity and extensive hollows beneath the surface. The water issues from the side of the declivity, which presents the appearance for some distance of having sunk several feet below the original surface. The volume of water that issues from it, is not so great as one would suppose without examining the stream as it runs off. This deception originates in the paroxysms of the spring, which casts up huge bubbles mixed with sand that fall back into the basin, without being carried off.

TIME TO CUT TIMBER.

Timber (for building) should be cut early in the fall as possible, especially white pine. When cut in the spring, or after hard frost, it is full of sap, which creates the grub that destroys the lumber. I have seen rafters for buildings, which were cut when full of sap, that were entirely destroyed by the grub. Oak timber should be cut when the leaves are falling. Some mechanics prefer the old moon in February for cutting their oak timber, but then it is full of sap, and the worm will commence its work immediately. I have cut oak timber for wagon spokes in the old of the moon in February, which, before one year, was full of worm holes, and so much decayed, that it was not fit for working. I then cut some in the old of the moon in October, which I let stand for two years, and they were heavier, harder, and tougher, and had not a worm in them. Rail timber should be cut when the sap is down, no matter whether it is split until spring or not. When cut in the spring and lies until fall, it is full of worm holes, which admit the water, and which soon will rot the rail. I have seen fire-wood cut and piled in the spring, which stood for two years, and then it was scarcely worth hauling home. Chestnut should be cut when dry—when the nuts are ripe is a very good time. I have cut all my timber for the last two years in the fall, and I find I have not a third of the rotten wood I used to have when cut in the spring. Farmers do not pay enough attention to the proper time of cutting their timber. Much labor might be saved by cutting it down in the right time.

REWARDS TO INVENTORS.

The Commissioner of Patents, with a view of exciting and rewarding the inventive mechanical genius of the nation, proposes the following rewards:—

One of $10,000 for an invention whereby land can be worked without animals, a Locomotive Plow, or Plow and Harrow combined.

One of $20,000 for the first steamer or other vessel which may make three consecutive trips across the Atlantic at an average speed of not less than 20 miles per hour.

One of $100,000 for the first person who within — years shall render Electricity available as an economical, efficient, and general prime-mover; or who shall within the prescribed period make known the means by which Atmospheric Pressure can be profitably employed in sea-going vessels and land locomotives, as a general propeller, and of fixed machinery; or who develops an explosive or other prime-mover, applicable, energetic and economical as the vapor of water, and whose exciting and transmuting mechanism is less massive and costly than that of the steam engine.

THE LICENSE LAW IN WISCONSIN.—Among the other provisions of the license law of Wisconsin, is one which requires the venders of spirituous liquor to give bonds, with sureties, to respond in damages that can be traced to the sale of liquor by them. Under this law a suit was instituted by one Lovicy Keyser against Joseph Heath and his sureties, and on the part of the plaintiff it was proved that the principal, Heath, sold sometime in the month of October last, liquors at different times to Jacob Keyser, the husband of the plaintiff; that the said husband was attacked with delirium tremens in the month of November, and was the object of great care and attention on the part of his wife, from which care and fatigue she became sick, &c. The defense relied upon certain points, among which was the few number of times that Keyser had obtained liquors of Heath, which would render it impossible for the effects to have resulted from his vending solely, and that Heath and his sureties were only answerable for those effects which could be directly traced to the sales made by Heath, which could be directly traced to the sales made by Heath, which did not exceed ten or twelve times, we believe. The verdict of the Jury was for the plaintiff, $100—the extent of the jurisdiction.

VALUABLE DISCOVERY.—It has been discovered in England, that the golden Sulphuret of Antimony, mixed with India Rubber, and submitted to the action of heat at 280°, in a boiler, under pressure, from four to six hours, will produce what is known as Metallic Rubber, after which the goods will resist the action of extremes of heat or cold, yet retain for an indefinite time a much greater degree of elasticity than those produced by the melting of sulphur with lead mixed with rubber. Fabrics prepared according to this invention can be made to take all the most delicate tints of color, quite free from the odor of sulphur, so objectionable in other modes of vulcanizing. Mixed with gutta percha, images, the entire features of the face, which are capable of being distorted into innumerable and grotesque forms, have been produced. Overcoats have been made by this process, to weigh but twenty-two ounces, and capable of being crammed into the pocket. A single thread of the elastic fabric, no larger than a knitting needle, suspended the weight of fifteen pounds, after being stretched nine times its quiescent length, so strong is the substance after being submitted to the process. It is said to be the most valuable discovery yet made in connection with India Rubber.

CULTURE OF THE CASTOR BEAN.—The Ohio Cultivator expresses strong doubts of the success of this crop in Ohio, and advises farmers "not to make the experiment on a large scale at the first." The plant, the editor says, "naturally belongs to warmer climates that of Ohio," and, he thinks, "will be found to need a longer season than ours, to mature a full crop of seed." He continues:—

"In a few of the Southern counties of Illinois, and in portions of Missouri, the crop has been raised to some extent for a number of years past; but we believe it is not found very profitable; and that region is considerably further south than any part of Ohio.

"About the profitableness of this crop, we are not prepared to say much, but we know that it has been ranked by Illinois farmers among their good products."

NOT ENGAGED, BUT MARRIED.—Some ridiculous mistakes occur among foreigners at times, owing to different meanings applied to the same word in our language. During the absence of a physician of our acquaintance, the other day, a gentleman called to see him, and rang the bell at the door. The summons was answered by a Dutch servant girl, of whom he inquired if the Doctor was in.

"No."

"Was his lady in?"

"Yes."

"Was she engaged?"

The girl looked at him a moment, while a curious expression settled on her features as she replied—

"Why, no, she is already married."

RETURNING GOOD FOR EVIL.—Thomas Haskell, of the West Parish, Gloucester, who is a practical as well as theoretical non-resistant, has posted up in the town of Essex a written notice, saying that if those boys or young men who sought to annoy him by unharnessing his horse several different evenings, (while standing near the Free Church in that town, during meeting-time,) will call upon him in West Gloucester, he will treat them with some good apples, and give them some friendly advice, which will be valuable to them as long as they live!

DEATH OF A HERMIT.—Mr. Bennett, coroner at Wurtsboro, Sullivan county, writes to the Sullivan County Whig, that he has been called to hold an inquest on the body of Nathan Leonard, about 60 years of age, who had for some time lived entirely alone in a rude dwelling near the Pine Kill, in that town, where he was found dead—apparently the victim of intemperance, his habits having been bad, and a jug containing a small remnant of liquor being found near the body. From papers found in his hovel, it appears that he was formerly a minister of the Baptist Church in New Hampshire, of good standing, and once had a wife and family, [Com. Advertiser.

WOODEN BOOKS.—Mr. Vattemare proposes specimens of our forest trees in the form of books. In a collection of the kind at Warsenstein, near Cassel, the back of each volume is formed of the bark of the tree, the sides are constructed of polished pieces of the same stock, and when put together a box is formed, inside of which is stored the fruit, the seed, and leaves, with the moss which grows upon the trunk, and the insects which feed upon the tree. Every volume corresponds in size, and the collection altogether, as may well be imagined, has an excellent effect.

POWER OF LETTERS.—Which three letters in the English alphabet are the most forcible? N R G, (energy.) Which two the most hateful? N V, (envy.) Which two contain the least? M T, (empty.) Which four the most corpulent? O B C T, (obesity.) Which two the most faded? D K, (decay.) Which four have a title of honor? X L N C, (excellency.) Which three the most wearisome? N U E, (ennui.) Which five are a popular doctrine? X P D N C, (expediency.) Which three are a mournful poem? L E G, (elegy.) Which three are a famous city? U T K, (Utica.)

Variety.

Adrian, the coadjutor of Ximines, in the government of Castile, was greatly disturbed by the libels which were circulated concerning them, while Ximines remained perfectly easy. "If," said he, "we take the liberty to act, others will take the liberty to talk and write. When they charge us falsely, we may laugh; when truly, we must amend."

Dr. Gall, of Albany, has, after a great deal of labor, succeeded in manufacturing spectacles with two distinct visions in a single lens. The one vision is for ordinary distances, the other for remote. The improvement has been examined by gentlemen skilled in such matters, and they pronounce it "good."

When the great and good Algernon Sydney was about to be executed, he calmly laid his head upon the block. He was asked by the executioner if he would rise again. "Not till the resurrection—strike on!" was the remarkable reply of Sydney.

So perfect were the Egyptians in the manufacture of perfumes, that some of their ancient ointment, preserved in an alabaster vase in the museum at Alnwick, still retains a very powerful odor, though it must be between 2,000 and 3,000 years old.

China proper has a population amounting fully to 367,000,000, being towards one-third of the inhabitants of our globe.

The estimated value of slaves in the United States is eleven hundred millions of dollars.

The population of Washington is estimated at 27,032; and the number of dwellings at 6,322.

There are fifty-one newspapers published in the Republic of Mexico.

Texas is forty-four times as large as the entire State of Vermont.

It is said that 750 persons now confined in the jails of Ireland are lunatics.

One fourth of the revenue in Great Britain is derived from taxes on drinks and drinking.

To supply London, daily, with milk, 60,000 cows are required, yielding 100,000 gallons.

The Sublime Porte has retained the old custom of proportioning the size of its letters to the rank of the person addressed. One of ordinary size is sent to a private individual, one a little larger to a military one. The recent dispatch under the Sultan's own hand to the Emperor of Austria is said by the Vienna papers to have been more than two feet across, while one to the Czar would have made a comfortable door for a Russian cabin.

An Irish paper gives the following directions for cooking potatoes. Put them in a pot or kettle without a lid, with water just sufficient to cover them. After the water comes nearly to boiling, pour it off, replace it with cold water, into which throw a good portion of salt. After they are boiled, and the water poured off, let them stand on the fire ten or fifteen minutes to dry.

The Gateshead Observer mentions having seen under a glass shade, of the size of a lady's thimble, a steam engine that might have served for a cotton mill in Lilliput. The whole machinery, fly-wheel included, stands upon a two-penny piece, yet so exact is the workmanship, that when a steam pipe is applied, for there is no boiler, the engine is immediately set in motion, and works with admirable precision.

Wordsworth, the poet, has no sense of smell. Once, and once only in his life, the dormant power awakened. It was by a bed of stocks in full bloom, at a house which he inhabited in Dorsetshire, some five and twenty years ago; and he says it was like a vision of Paradise to him; but it lasted only a few minutes, and the faculty has continued torpid from that time.

A letter has been received from the American Chargé d'Affaires, John P. Brown, Esq., at Constantinople, by Mr. Samuel Colt, the inventer of the firearms which bear his name, announcing that the next European steamer would bring out an elegant snuff-box, set in diamonds, of the value of $1,300, designed as an evidence of the very high appreciation of his weapon entertained by Mehemed Ali Pacha, Serosbi of the Army.

In the memorial to Congress in behalf of the establishment of a branch of the U. S. Mint in this city, it is stated that out of $24,153,000 which came into the country in the year 1849, twenty-one millions of it arrived at Boston and New-York, where there is no mint; while Philadelphia, that contains the principal mint in the Union, received only the inconsiderable sum of $256,000.

A paper is about to be established in France, under the direction of two priests, whose object is to popularize the idea that the celibacy of the clergy is an evil, and may be thrown off by common consent, as it is only an ecclesiastical regulation, and not based upon principles of divine right, of faith, or of morality.

In Tuscany, the priests have commenced prosecutions against two printers at Florence, for having printed a translation of the New Testament in Italian. The priests sent officers to the printing offices, to seize the sheets which had been printed.

The entire sum of money raised by the churches of Great Britain, for missionary purposes is about $1,750,000 and by those of America $750,000, making together $2,500,000; a sum only equal to the annual gifts of idolaters at Kalee's temple at Calcutta.

In Michigan there are 228 flouring mills with 568 run of stone, and an aggregate capital invested of $1,496,400. These mills employ 598 hands, and during the season of 1849 manufactured 719,470 barrels of flour.

DeRuyter Institute.

The Academic Year of this Institution for 1849-50 will commence the last Wednesday in August, and continue forty-three consecutive weeks, ending the last Wednesday of June, including a recess of ten days for Christmas and New Year holidays. The Year will be divided into three Terms:

The First, commencing August 29, of 14 weeks,
The Second, " December 5, of 15 "
The Third, " March 20, of 14 "

Encouraged by the success of the School under its present Instructors, the friends of the Institute have made liberal additions to its library, cabinet, and apparatus, thus furnishing ample facilities for illustrating branches taught in the various departments.

The Literary Department is as heretofore under the supervision of Rev. JAMES R. IRISH, A. M., President, assisted by other able instructors. In this Department, especial attention is given to the lower English Branches. Students are also fitted in the Classics to enter the advanced classes in College.

The Department of Natural Science is conducted by Professor GURDON EVANS. In this, Natural Philosophy, Astronomy, Geology, Natural History, and Chemistry, are taught in a manner of unsurpassed interest. With it is connected the Department of Agricultural Science.

The Farmer's Course is thoroughly scientific, embracing the study of the best authors, with daily recitations. During the Winter Term two hours each day will be spent in the Analytical Laboratory, where students will be instructed in the constitution of soils and ashes of plants, with a minute examination of their constituent elements, and the various modes of testing for their presence.

A course of lectures is given during the Term on Practical Farming, explaining the relation of Geology to Agriculture, the Soil, the Plant, and the Animal, and their various relations, the Rotation of Crops, Feeding Animals, Manures, Draining Lands, &c., &c. For further information see Catalogue.

Besides Globes, Maps, &c., for the illustration of Astronomy, a Newtonian Telescope of high magnifying power has recently been added to the apparatus.

During the Summer Term, Botany and Geology receive special attention, illustrated by excursions to localities where these sciences may be studied as seen in nature. A Geological and Mineralogical Cabinet is accessible to the students.

The Mathematical Department is under the instruction of OLIVER B. IRISH, Tutor. It embraces thorough instruction in Arithmetic, and the higher pure and practical Mathematics, with field exercises in Engineering and Surveying.

Elocution, embracing Reading, Declamation, General Oratory, and Writing, receives the special attention of a competent teacher.

The Teacher's Department will, as formerly, be in operation during the Fall Term, and last half of the Winter Term. Particular attention to this is solicited from all who intend to teach district schools.

The Female Department is under the care of Miss SUSANNA M. COON, a graduate of Troy Female Seminary, a lady every way competent for this responsible station.

No efforts will be spared to render the young ladies of this Seminary truly accomplished, as well in the social relations of life, as in the substantial branches of learning and the higher refinements of education. Ample facilities are furnished for pursuing French, Italian, German, Drawing, Painting, Music on the Piano, and Vocal Music.

Information.

Good board in private families from $1 25 to $1 50. Parents from abroad should furnish their children with very little pocket money, as many temptations may thus be avoided. Those who wish may deposit money with either of the teachers, to be disbursed according to order, without extra charge.

Tuition, to be settled in advance, per term, from $3 00 to $5 00. Extras—For Drawing, $1 00; Monochromatic Painting, $3 00; Oil Painting, $5 00; Chemical Experiments, $1 00; Writing, including Stationery, 50c.; Tuition on Piano, $8 00; Use of Instrument, $2 00; in Agricultural Chemistry, including Chemicals, Apparatus, fires, &c., (breakage extra,) $12 00.

N. B. A daily stage leaves the railroad and canal at Chittenango for this place at 4 o'clock P. M.

For further information address the President, J. R. Irish, or Professor Gurdon Evans, DeRuyter, Madison Co., N. Y.

CENTRAL RAILROAD OF NEW JERSEY.—WINTER ARRANGEMENT—Commencing Thursday, November 1, 1849. The extension of the Railroad from Somerville to White House (10 miles) is open for travel, reducing the staging between the terminus of the Road and Easton to 25 miles. This line leaves New York by steamboat RED JACKET, Pier No. 1 North River, and by New Jersey Railroad, from the foot of Cortland-st., as per schedule below: Leave New York by N. J. R. R. from foot of Cortland-st. at 9 A. M. and 4½ o'clock P. M. By steamboat, Pier No. 1 North River, at 11 o'clock A. M. and 4 P. M. Returning, will leave White House at 3½ A. M. (freight) at 6 20m. A. M. and 1 40m. P. M. North Branch at 4 A. M. (freight) at 6 30m. A. M. and 1 50m. P. M; Somerville at 5 A. M. (freight) at 6 50m. A. M. and 2 5m. P. M.; Bound Brook at 5¼ A. M. (freight) at 7 A. M. and 2¼ P. M.; Plainfield at 5¾ A. M. (freight) at 7 25m. A. M. and 2 40m. P. M.; Westfield at 6¼ A. M. (freight) 7¾ A. M. and 3 P. M.; Elizabethtown at 7 A. M. (freight) at 8¼ A. M. and 12¾ P. M.

Stages will be in readiness on the arrival of the cars at White House by the 9 o'clock A. M. train from New York to convey passengers to Easton, Allentown, Wilkesbarre, and Mauch Chunk, Pa., and to Flemington, Lebanon, Clinton, Bricktown, Jugtown, New Germantown, &c., N. J.

On Tuesday, Thursday, and Saturday, to Delaware Water Gap, Strondsburg, Bartonsville, Stanhope, Daleville, Bucktown, Lackawana, Iron Works, &c.

N. B. All baggage at the risk of the owners until delivered into the actual possession of the Agents of the Company, and checks or receipts given therefor.

Boston, via Newport and Fall River.

FOR BOSTON, VIA NEWPORT AND FALL RIVER, by the splendid and superior steamers BAY STATE and EMPIRE STATE, of great strength and speed, particularly adapted to the navigation of Long Island Sound, running in connection with the Fall River and Old Colony Railroad, a distance of 53 miles, to Boston only. Leave Pier No. 3 North River, near the Battery. The steamer EMPIRE STATE, Capt. Comstock, on Tuesdays, Thursdays, and Saturdays, at 4 P. M. The BAY STATE, Capt. Brown, on Mondays, Wednesdays, and Fridays, at 4 P. M. This line is the only one that runs direct for Newport. For freight or passage apply on board, and either to TISDALE BORDEN, 70 Wall-st. or at the office of the Line, at the corner of Washington-st. and Battery-place.

NOTES OF A VOYAGE TO CALIFORNIA.—No. 5.

From letters of Dr. J. D. B. STILLMAN to his friends in New York.

CALLAO, June 6th, 1849.

Our ship sails to-morrow, and I sit down to give you a brief sketch of our visit at this place. We have now been in port five days.

On the morning after our arrival, we took a "shore-boat" and landed at the mole, a curved wharf, to keep off the heavy swell that renders landing on these shores difficult. We wandered around a short time, and found ourselves unexpectedly out of town. The town, you would say, was wretched; the houses are built of unburnt brick, and covered with matting and earth. This is the land of earthquakes, where rain and frost are unknown, or so much so as not to be provided for; and no traces of modern origin are observable around the country where I have been. The market-place is a square, with a few Indian women seated under an umbrella-like-awning, with their fruits and other articles scattered on the ground about them.

The same day, we went to Lima. On our arrival, we called on Mr. Clay, our Charge d'Affaires, where we sat an hour, talking of home and other interesting subjects, and then walked on, and took rooms at the Hotel Morin. We had heard much of the licentiousness of Peru, but you can have no conception of its extent. You may imagine all, when I assure you, that prostitution, here, is no crime, nor does a person lose caste by practicing it. The sickening details I will spare you. I do not wonder that friends should fear for those who visit the Pacific; few return, as they leave them, to their virtuous homes.

Lima is well supplied with fruit of every variety. Women generally tend the markets; and one of the most ludicrous figures that I saw, was a large woman, dressed in lace and silk, serving meat at a stall. No hats are worn by any except the Indians, but a shawl is used instead, which covers the head and most of the face. These are extremely beautiful and costly; it is not an uncommon thing to see a shawl worth $100 on the head of an ordinary woman.

We visited the churches; many of them are costly beyond all conception—perfect museums. The cathedral, here, has an altar thirty feet high of silver, and here is the tomb of Pizarro. The Convent of St. Augustine covers twenty acres. The dwellings are all low, and built of clay and gravel, with dirt roofs; but the walls are whitewashed, or painted with landscapes. Those of the better class are exceedingly tasteful and pleasant. They stand back from the street, and are surrounded by a high wall, with a sort of store-house in front, through which is a heavy gateway, which, being closed, is a strong defense to the whole premises. Carriage or horse enters through this, and is tied to the railing which surrounds the court. The court is paved with small round stones, in figures of sheep's joints, and the walls are always pictured, sometimes beautifully. The house is open, and the front almost entirely of glass. In the door-way hangs a globe lamp, and a table and lounge are in sight, with one or two indolent females, smoking cigars, and blowing the smoke through their noses!

It would take much more time than I now have, to tell you all I have seen; the bridge of Rolla, the wine-presses, San Christoval—a lofty mountain which I ascended, and where I saw the famous Cindor, the palace. In company with Mr. Falls, an American in the service of the Government, I took horse, and visited the hospitals, and then the mounds or pyramids, erected before the fall of the Incas—vast structures of unburnt brick; we rode to the top of one and dismounted. Then we went to "old Callao," and saw how severely wickedness is punished; we saw the bones bleaching in the sun, and moldering in the old vaults. Yesterday a party of several visited the island of San Lorenzo. This forms one of the sea-walls of the harbor, and is more than one thousand feet high. Convicts are kept here, and we landed with a permit. No rain falls on it, but the fogs of winter make the summit verdant; and, in the rich soil, we dug, what was the great object of our visit, the native wild potato. I shall send some home to see if we cannot restore health to the species. Then, after incredible labor, we descended to the opposite shore, and returned and landed at another point, where we visited the burial-place and town of the ancient Peruvians. There I found some interesting relics. Then we fired all our powder and shot away at ducks, pelicans, and other sea-birds, threw those into the boat that fell on land, returned to ship very hungry, and spent the evening in talking of the antiquities of America.

SHIP PACIFIC, at sea, off Cape St. Lucas,
July 15th, 1849.

A few hundred miles more, and this protracted voyage will be brought to a close. The same morning that we left Callao, the steamer arrived from Panama, with the news of communication again opened by steam with San Francisco; but no intelligence did it bring from home—not a paper from the United States. The last news we have, had from the States was up to Feb. 17th. At Juan Fernandes we picked up some of the Cabinet appointments—strange place to go for news!

It was nearly night when our anchor was up, and we stood out for the open sea. Mr. Falls had come out in his boat to see us off, and I really pitied him as he got down to go to his own vessel. He and his assistants, with the exception of one other, were the only Americans there, and as he left, he said he would go and give himself thirty lashes, and put himself in irons; and I confess I felt no small degree of sadness on leaving him. I never shall forget the scenes we witnessed together; the desolate island of San Lorenzo, barren, except at the height of 1280 feet, where the perpetual fogs of winter cause a copious yield of the wild potato, but which was yet as dry as a heap of ashes; with its ancient burial-ground of the aborignes, so dry and impregnated with salt, that bodies, and clothing buried with them, are in a good state of preservation; then its awfully wild south shore, where we journied for hours without water, over burning sand and rugged precipices. With him I had rode in Peruvian style over the mighty remains of the people whom treachery and bigotry have swept from the face of the earth. Together had we stood for a long hour on the summit of their loftiest monument, with feelings too deep for expression, overlooking the entire plain that had witnessed the rise and fall of the Incas' glory, the triumph and death of the bigot Pizarro, where the earthquake had swept a large city into the bosom of the ocean—a land never blessed with rain, where virtue has no preference, and where the curse of God is heard in the frequent rumbling of the pent-up fires of the mountains. With him I had explored the vaults of the ruined city, where the wild dogs and buzzards were feeding on the decaying carcasses of those who were too poor to pay for a Christian burial. Falls wore the gold band on his cap, and the Laama of Peru on his buttons, and we went everywhere, even to the moldering vaults where repose the few remains of the great Pizarro—(we might have bought of the venal priest the balance of his skull for a few dollars.) He now left us to return to his vessel, and we to the bosom of old ocean, to bid an everlasting adieu to this accursed country, where silver is a poor substitute for all that makes a country happy and prosperous.

We shaped our course for the "line," at long. 110°, and the Trades carried us steadily on. June 26th, we crossed, and steered a little more North, to lat. 6°, when a west wind carried us to lat. 16°. The wind then changed to N. W., and we had to stand South of West, but it was light, and some days there was almost a calm. But few incidents enlivened the voyage, now become tedious. Another exhibition of a water-spout gave rise to a great deal of animated discussion, as to whether the water rose from the sea, or fell into it. The result of my own observations was a conviction, that it was impossible for such an amount of water to be raised to such a distance; and all the phenomena were those of falling water. The cloud did not differ, materially, from a common rain cloud, but a spout seemed to shoot off in the form of a curve, contracting as it descended, and the cloud at its base was the fog raised by the stream, falling from such a great height. The spout was a little more watery and dark than the rest, as you will see "streaks" of rain darker than the rest in a common rain cloud. Both cases that I saw were much alike.

Disappointed in spending the Fourth on American soil, great preparations were made to do honor to the day on board. Day-break was announced by the firing of a volley down the main hatch, and a resolute determination, on the part of the more patriotic, not to allow the rest to sleep. At sun-rise all were on deck. The New England Regiment, dressed with black pants, and bright red shirts and belts, and California hats, fired thirteen volleys; at the same time our colors, with all the signals and flags on board, went up to flaunt the skies. Three cheers from all hailed the glorious day. The sea-nymphs only heard the glad shout; no echo was borne to our ears, and we were reminded how far we were from the rest of the world. At 10 o'clock, a drum (made of a keg and the skins of sheep killed on board) and fife, called all hands on deck. One of our company, who had held the rank of Brig. General, was in command of the troops. The New England Regiment, under its commanding officer, was divided into three companies with appropriate leaders. One man was Adjutant and Master Brig. Major. Another, who had formerly held the rank of Brig. Inspector, had been overlooked in the arrangement, and declined to serve in any other capacity than Ass't Surgeon, and so took his place with me in the Colonel's Staff. This Regiment formed on the starboard, and was a very soldier-like corps. Beyond, the Eastbrook Guards, with black California hats and pants, and red shirts with the letters E. G. on the breast, were formed, twelve strong. On the left was the Hartford Brigade—though only ten men, they were allowed to be a brigade, because they were armed with a pair of Colt's large pistols each. Beyond these was a Company, formed of such as were not connected with others; they were well dressed, and well disciplined. As all were reviewed, and making ready to march, the "Ocean Rangers" issued from the fore-castle, dressed in the order of the day, well-armed, and with mustache and imperial in burnt-cork, and under command of an able officer. The whole line presented arms, as they filed by and took their places on the extreme right. After marching down the windward, and up the leeward, preceded by the Captain as President of the day, with the Orator of the day, Reader of the Declaration, and Poet, with the Committee of Arrangements in citizens' dress, they were formed around the after hatch. The band played an appropriate tune, and all thoughts of levity were laid aside. Half a dozen men, with blue shirts, and high-crowned hats, with star on breast, acted the Police, and stood round to keep order. The President announced the Reader. He introduced the reading of the Declaration by some appropriate remarks. After him followed Gen. ——, of Hartford, in a short, but beautiful oration, in which his touching allusions to home and our peculiar situation, brought tears to every eye. Our music, too, was fine. The military dispersed, and some amusement from the Police, who were called into active service by the irregular conduct of one or two, for a while kept up the interest. The rebels were subdued, and order restored. Dinner was served in good style. The balance of the turkey, and pie made from preserved beef, with pastries and sweet potatoes, made us a good meal. The baggage was all removed through the length of the cabin, and room was made for all on board at the table. The cloth was removed, and a tub of punch was brought in; this was a signal for me to retire, and, taking a seat aside, I waited for the Poem. The toasts were disposed of, and a few were beginning to feel the punch, when, as a substitute for the Poem, we were entertained with a satirical relation of the leading events of the voyage. It made considerable mirth, but as the speaker was rather too personal for the occasion, he was interrupted by some, who were so stupified as to forget their own impropriety in the seeming impropriety of others. This broke up the good feeling on the part of a few, and marred the otherwise excellent celebration. At sun-down thirty volleys were fired, and our flags came down. It was a great day to us all, never to be forgotten.

Two days afterward, the wind was still light and ahead. The cry of "Sail, ho!" was made, and a vessel was discovered, too far in advance of us to determine what she was. The Captain was curious to get some information from her log, but when he had suggested going to her, there was quite a storm raised. A few of us, however, resolved to go, and were soon on our way in the "Crusoe," a name given to the boat, since its trip to the Island of Juan Fernandes. Never, during the voyage, had I seen such a storm of abuse, and, as we shoved off, groans only saluted us. The ship was going about four miles per hour. We had seven men, and pulled five oars. One man had got into the boat unbidden, and, to our great mortification, cramped his oar badly, and we fell astern. Cheers now saluted us. We put another man at the oar, and soon got far enough in advance to hoist our sail; but the wind was too much aloft for us, and with it alone we could not keep ahead. We kept four oars out, and pulled away until twelve o'clock. (It was ten before we could discern the vessel we sought.) At this time her hull could be distinguished, but the strength of the party began to fail. It could not be perceived that we were gaining. They were reminded that we were relying too much on the sail—that it was the white ash alone that must be depended upon. A vote was taken upon going or returning. Two declared they were sick, and unfit for the exertion. One, foremost and fearless, said we could not reach her before night. Two of us were urgent for going on. It was decided that we should change every fifteen minutes, and pull for one hour, and if then we did not see reason for continuing, should return. We pulled manfully. At the end of the hour it was not difficult to see that we had gained decidedly. We were now more than half the distance from our own ship, and half of the time we could see neither. The almost vertical sun shone down with fierce heat; the wind died away, until it was nearly calm; now was our time, and we redoubled our exertions. About half past two o'clock, we observed that we were discovered, by seeing the vessel back her topsails. She was a brig, but of what nation we knew not. My little flag was attached to a stick, and mounted in the mouth of a demijohn. As we neared her, we saw her lower a boat; not long after we saw it come, rising and falling. All sickness and head-ache now disappeared. They were soon in hailing distance of us, and they shouted, in a language we could not misunderstand, "What boat is that?" "From the ship Pacific," I replied, "bound for that brig, been out since 8 o'clock this morning, short of water, and nothing to eat." "What brig is that?" "Osceola, from Philadelphia." "Three cheers for the boat from the ship Pacific!" and those California hats went round most heartily. We peaked our oars, and standing up returned the cheers. "Come on," said they, and they pulled away to their vessel like men possessed. It was about 4 P. M. when we came up. The brig's boat got in first, as they had eleven fresh men, and passed the word that we were from the Pacific. Seventy men were on the rail and house, and oh, how they did roar a welcome! They lifted us out of the boat, and crowded around, eager to shake hands with us; and, sore as our hands were, blistered within with the oars, blistered without with the sun, we had to go through with it. We were ushered into the cabin, and nearly smothered with the press. One of the first men I saw was an M. D., to whom I had been introduced at Rio. Each one of us was immediately surrounded by a group of listeners. We told them the flattering news we had learned at Callao—how we had seen gold passed through a crowd in the street, to the amount of several pounds, of so little concern to the owner, that he did not care to watch it; and of a piece passed around the breakfast table, weighing twenty-six ounces. A table was soon spread for us, and we sat down to a dinner such as I never saw before. That dinner was worth all that it cost. Would you like to know what it was? Salt beef, pork, and Irish potatoes! These last were obtained at Chili. While we were discussing this, with coffee, they were discussing the news. We remained about an hour and a half, and again embarked in our own boat, received the three times three cheers for the "Crusoe's crew," returned the compliment, hoisted sail, and run down, with a free wind, for our ship, now a mere speck on the horizon; but she was close on the wind, while we were before it, and we approached her rapidly. They promised to return our visit if they were in sight in the morning. We reached our ship about a half hour after sun-down. All were now eager to know what the vessel was, where she was from, &c., to which inquiries, by concert, we made no reply; but, as soon as we were on board, and the boat secured, we repaired to the captain's cabin, and made our report; then told them all, and delivered letters to those who were most clamorous about our going, for fear we should detain the vessel—which was an impossibility, as our course was directly ahead, and if we failed to reach the brig, we had a free wind to return. We could not, at the lowest estimate, have gone less than thirty miles with oars, without food, and under a vertical sun. A wind sprang up from the west at night, and in the morning the brig could no where be seen.

July 16th.—To-day the Trades, which have been adverse since we first took them, are dying away. Our position yesterday was long. 128° 25', lat. 25° 45'.

It would amuse you to see the various devices resorted to, to consume time. The table under the main hatch is the great workshop, where all sorts of trades are carried on. I have made a sail for my boat, in a style that would not have dishonored a sailmaker. I put the stars on my little flag, and have made various things for my comfort.

July 31st.—For three weeks have we been within six days sail of our destined port, but the winds are always ahead. There is a degree of feverish anxiety that I have not before seen. "How does she head?" is asked all night, and all day long an anxious group stands around the binacle, with mournful looks, as though they were gazing at the face of a dead child. The wind does not "haul." One thing consoles us, our ship is never beaten "on the wind."

On the 19th a sail was discovered from the cross-trees, directly to windward; the next, she was seen from the top; on the 21st, her hull could be seen from the deck. We exchanged signals, but could not distinguish hers. Early the next morning, we were all roused to see the stranger. She carried the flag of Hamburg, and was crowded with passengers. Few more interesting incidents occur on a long voyage, than speaking a ship. Although very early, we were all out. As we dashed along on our converging paths, we gradually approached till we were startled with the short, imperious call from a brazen throat, "Ship ahoy!" "Ahoy!" we echo, equally imperious, and a little shorter. "Where are you bound from?" The question in order would have been, Where are you bound? but this was unnecessary. "From Callao, 42 days, sailed out of New York." "Where are you from?" "Panama, 73 days." "All well?" "All well." We were now so far from her that we could not tell what was said, and three cheers from the crowd on her deck, were responded to by a similar crowd on our deck. Three more for California were answered in a similar manner, and she dropped across our wake, and went to leeward. The next morning we could see her no more. Another vessel was now seen on our lee-bow. It was a small schooner, trying hard to get up to us, with a large ensign of the stars and stripes. We could not afford to lose the time necessary to speak her, and left her out of sight before night. Tuesday last, we were in long. 136°, lat. 26°; here the wind was baffling, and finally died out. The next day, the wind was West of North, and promised well, but at midnight it shifted to the old quarter; we continued, however, on the starboard tack. For the last twenty-four hours, the wind has been more northerly, and to-day our lat. was 34° 49'. We are quite confident of getting in this week. But I cannot realize it yet; so long have we been sailing with the port of our destination far removed, that we cannot make it appear near. It seems an age since we came on board this ship. We have become quite reconciled to privations of physical comforts. We drink our bitter coffee, without milk, with relish; we never grumble, at the salt beef and pork, while we have soft bread and vinegar, and "duff" or pie for desert. We have no variety, for we are short; pepper, butter, and such little delicacies, are forgotten, or return to us only in tantalizing dreams.

Aug. 4th.—We rose early to discover traces of land. The water was more green, and very curious specimens of kelp were frequently met with; one which we found, consisted of a rod, forty feet long, with a hollow ball or knob at one end, and tapering from it to a long lash, the smaller end of which had been attached to the rocks; from the ball, which was filled with air, and floated on the water, grew, by a small pedicel, a tuft of broad leaves, two yards long and four inches wide, with convolute edges. Pieces of wood, and flocks of shags, were watched with intense interest. Very many whales, seals, and small fish, which we had not seen for a long time, were swimming about. Two or three vessels were in sight, one of which we boarded at 2 P. M. It proved to be the bark Jubel, of New Brunswick. From her we had news of our wreck off Cape Horn? Fog shut out the sight of land, and at length night hid from our view the sea—we could hear only the quiet ripple of the water, and the cry of the sea-birds, as we startled them from their repose. We "turned in" early, that we might see the land with the dawn. The morning came, and the "Golden Gate" was before us. A thousand ducks were flying about, and a fine breeze bore us on. As the hills became more distinct, we distinguished innumerable cattle and horses grazing, and the rich green delighted us. We dropped anchor abreast the town in a crowd of ships. The Captain of the Port came on board, and took possession of the ship, and a few minutes after we were all on shore.

Thus ended our long and eventful voyage of 194 days from New York. We have had many difficulties, but have surmounted them all—have lost no life, and had but little sickness.

From the Southern Literary Messenger.

"TO MY DAUGHTER LILY."

BY THE LATE P. P. COOK.

"Six changeful years are gone, Lily,
Since you were born to be
A darling to your mother good,
A happiness to me.
A little shivering, feeble thing
You were to touch and view,
But we could see a promise in
Your baby eyes of blue.

"You fastened on our hearts, Lily,
As day by day wore by,
And beauty grew upon your cheeks
And deepened in your eye;
A year made dimples in your hands,
And plumped your little feet,
And you had learned some merry ways
Which we thought very sweet.

"And when the first sweet word, Lily,
Your wee mouth learned to say,
Your mother kissed it fifty times,
And marked the famous day.
I know not even now, my dear,
If it was quite a word,
But your proud mother surely knew,
For she the sound had heard.

"When you were four years old, Lily,
You were my little friend,
And we had walks and nightly plays,
And talks without an end.
You little ones are sometimes wise,
For you are undefiled,
A grave grown man will start to hear
The strange words of a child.

"When care pressed on our house, Lily,
Pressed with an iron hand—
I hated mankind for the wrong
Which festered in the land—
But when I read your young frank face,
Its meanings, sweet and good,
My charities grew clear again—
I felt my brotherhood.

"And sometimes it would be, Lily,
My faith in God grew cold,
For I saw virtue go in rags,
And vice in cloth of gold;
But, in your innocence, my child,
And in your mother's love,
I learned those lessons of the heart
Which fasten it above.

"At last our cares are gone, Lily,
And peace is back again,
As you have seen the sun shine out
After the gloomy rain;
In the good land where we were born
We may be happy still,
A life of love will bless our home—
The house upon the hill.

"Thanks to your gentle face, Lily!
Its innocence was strong
To keep me constant to the right,
When tempted by the wrong.
The little ones were dear to Him
Who died upon the Rood—
I ask His gentle care for you
And for your mother good."

From the American Messenger.

THE ONLY SON.

Soon after the Rev. Pliny Fisk and Rev. Levi Parsons left their mountain homes in Western Massachusetts, near the close of 1819, as the first American missionaries to Palestine, their young friend, Jonas King, from the same neighborhood, was elected Professor in Amherst College, and proceeded to Paris to pursue the study of Arabic with the celebrated De Sacy. He there became familiar with an American gentleman, then at the head of one of the first commercial houses in Paris, to whose care his correspondence was addressed.

In February, 1822, the lamented Parsons died, and Rev. Mr. Fisk without delay addressed a letter to Mr. King, requesting that he would meet him at Malta, and in the place of Parsons, accompany him as a missionary to Palestine, and fearing delay by waiting the action of the American Board of Missions, he in the same inclosure requested Mr. King's mercantile friend not only to second his invitation, but if possible to raise the sum of $1,500, requisite for his support for three years.

Mr. King, on receiving the letter in the merchant's counting-room, exclaimed:

"This is from my friend Fisk; I beg leave to retire to your private office and read it."

Oppressed with the weight of the proposition it contained, he spent an hour in prayer for divine direction; and hoping to gain further light as to the path of duty from the indications of Providence, sought the merchant's advice. He returned to the counting-room, and asked, with deep solicitude,

"What shall I do?"

Said his friend—"Go."

"But," said he, "what will become of my aged and infirm parents in America?"

"I will be a son to them in your stead," replied his friend.

"Then," said Mr. King, "I go up to Jerusalem, 'not knowing the things that shall befall me there.'"

"Now," said the merchant, "sit down at this desk, and write to my friends, Thomas Waddington, of St. Remey, France; Louis Mertens, of Brussels; Claude Cromlin, of Amsterdam, and John Venning, of St. Petersburgh: state to them the circumstances, and that you are willing to go; tell them I will give one-fifth of the $1,500, and leave it to their decision whether they will join me in filling up the amount."

By the return of the mails it appeared God had put it into the hearts of these gentlemen cheerfully to respond, to the appeal by enclosing each $300, making the sum required; and Mr. King lost no time in preparing for his departure.

A few months previous to this, Mr. King had established the monthly concert of prayer in his own hired upper chamber in Paris. At the first and second meetings, only three were present; at the third, the number was increased to ten; at the fourth, to thirty; and soon after his departure it rose to 300, and this concert is still continued with interest in that city. A large concourse assembled in the Church of the Oratoire to listen to Mr. King's farewell address, and join in commending him to the God of all grace; and he was cheered in a similar manner, on his way, by Christian assemblies at Lyons, Nismes, Montpelier, and Marseilles, where he embarked for Malta, whence he proceeded with Mr. Fisk to Jerusalem; and he is now the well-known, persecuted, but laborious and successful missionary at Athens.

His friend, the merchant, from time to time, wrote to the solitary parents, enclosing some tokens of regard "from their affectionate son;" the next year he returned to America; and early in the spring of 1824 he was at Northampton, about twenty-five miles from the parents, meditating a visit to their humble abode. He applied to the landlord, who furnished him with a wagon, with his little son for a driver; and freighted with a bag of groceries which extended the whole length of the wagon, they set off early in the morning, and after encountering snow-drifts and other obstacles by the way, arrived at the cottage about 2 P. M.

Leaving the lad with the wagon in the street, the gentleman knocked, saying as he entered:

"It is a chill, uncomfortable day, friends; would you be so kind as to allow a stranger to warm himself a little by your fire?"

He was welcomed, and seated between the aged couple, in whom he distinctly recognized the features of Jonas, and who in their turn fixed on him a scrutinizing eye. After a short pause, he said deliberately,

"I once had a friend who said to me, What shall I do?' Said I, 'Go.' 'But what,' said he, 'will become of my aged and infirm parents in America?' I replied, 'I will be a son to them in your stead.' 'Then,' said he, 'I go up to Jerusalem, not knowing the things that shall befall me there.'"

Instantly the aged couple sprang to him, exclaiming, "This is Mr. W——," and almost overwhelmed him with their tears and caresses. "Let us pray," said the father; and they unburdened their hearts at the throne of mercy.

Scarcely were they again seated, when the mother took from the shelf a new quarto Bible, saying she hoped her friend would not blame her for paying ten dollars for it out of the fifty he had sent her a few months previous. "Our old eyes," she said, "could not well read the small print of the other Bible; I told Mr. King I did not believe we could make any better use of the money, or should ever be the poorer for buying a Bible that we could read; and it is a great comfort to us." Their friend expressed his approbation of the purchase, admired the Bible, and before he returned it to the shelf, slipped into it, unperceived, a ten dollar bill; which she afterwards wrote him had been found on the floor when they were reading the Bible, and which she recognized as from the hand of God, having no knowledge by what means the exact amount expended had thus come again into their hands.

After a brief interchange of confidence and affection, she said to her esteemed guest, "I presume, sir, you have not dined, and must be in need of refreshment. I am very sorry we have not a cup of tea to offer you, but we have some nice ham and fresh eggs, which I will immediately prepare." Her friend remarked, "There is a bag in the wagon, containing several articles from 'your son,' and perhaps there may be tea among them."

The bag, with not a little effort, was transferred from the wagon to the cottage floor, and the mother addressed herself to the task of taking out its contents. Among packages of flour, rice, loaf-sugar, coffee, chocolate, raisins, and other articles, each of which she held up with new expressions of delight, as received from one she so much loved, she at length came to a package of four pounds of hyson tea, when she held it out to the father with streaming eyes, saying, "Look here, papa, Jonas is the same dear good boy that he always was; he knew we were out of tea sometimes; he don't forget his poor father and mother." Then, opening a package of Turkey figs, "And is this also," said she, "from Jerusalem? Papa, was there ever such a son as Jonas?" By this time all were overflowing. "Let us pray," said the father; and the exploring of the treasures was suspended, while they again united in thanksgiving to God.

It was not long before the little company were seated at a well-furnished table, refreshed by the gifts of the kind "son," mingling their sympathies, and recounting all the way in which they had been led. While thus conversing, the merchant affectionately asked:

"Do you never regret the sacrifice you have made in giving up your only son to be a missionary?"

The aged father replied:

"God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life; and shall I withhold my only son from obeying the command of our ascended Savior 'Go ye into the world, and preach the gospel to every creature?'"

All present were deeply affected, a tear standing in the eye even of the young driver; they again bowed in prayer; both the father and the merchant led in turn, commending the little company, the absent son, and a sin-ruined world to the God of missions.

The interview was an hour bright with the beams of the Sun of righteousness, amid the dark pilgrimage of life, an oasis in the desert, a season never to be forgotten by any one of the four persons who thus met for the first and the last time on earth.

That young driver, as he afterwards distinctly stated, here first had his mind impressed with the sacredness of the work of foreign missions. He gave his heart to Christ, pursued a thorough course of education, went forth to the heathen, and was no other than HENRY LYMAN, the noble martyr who fell by the side of MUNSON, in 1834, among the bloody Battas of Sumatra.

The aged father, in his will, bequeathed to the merchant, for the purchase of a book in token of his love, the sum of five dollars, which at his death was paid to the widow for the old small-print Bible, which is still possessed as a precious memento. The widow has entered into rest, and the stranger passing a rural graveyard in South Hawley, where the scenery opens in magnificence and beauty, reads on the tombstone of the father his reply just quoted to the question whether he ever regretted the gift to missions of his ONLY SON.

The Sabbath Recorder.

New York, March 7, 1850.

THE SABBATH CONVENTION AT PETERBORO.

Peterboro, N. Y., March 1st, 1850.

As the readers of the Recorder will be looking, with some anxiety, for an account of the Sabbath Convention at Peterboro, I transmit the following. It is, I am conscious, a very imperfect sketch; but a sufficient apology for that will be found in my inability, growing out of recent ill health, to give that attention which was necessary in order to a full report of the speeches made, and in the haste necessary in order to be in time for the mail. Owing to the bad state of the roads, the attendance was not so large as was expected, but those who were present seemed to take a deep interest in the proceedings.

At 11 o'clock, Fourth-day, the Convention was organized—Elder James Bailey, of Genesee, President; Elder N. V. Hull, of Alfred, Vice President; Elder James H. Cochran of Berlin, and Ephraim Maxson of West Edmeston, Secretaries.

The President, on taking the chair, made some very appropriate observations; remarking, that he believed this was the first Convention for Sabbath Reform, where entire freedom could be afforded for discussion. Generally, in such assemblies, the discussion is all on one side; and all opportunity for advancing sentiments foreign to the views of those who are concerned in originating them, is foreclosed. He looked for very important results from a meeting conducted on such liberal principles, and confidently expected that there would be entire harmony of feeling, though there might be difference of views.

The Business Committee reported a series of resolutions, which are subjoined:—

1. Resolved, That the Bible is exclusive authority in all matters of religion.

2. Resolved, That, whilst we learn from the Scriptures, that Marriage and the Sabbath were given to the human family in the beginning; and that, whilst we learn from other portions of the same Scriptures, that Jesus Christ explained both of these institutions, and vindicated both of them from Jewish abuses and perversions; we do not learn, that either Marriage or the Sabbath was abolished.

3. Resolved, That it is not the province of men to abolish, or in any wise change, a law of God; nor was this the province of the Son, who came into the world, not to destroy, but to fulfill, and who testified, that, "till heaven and earth pass, one jot or one tittle shall in no wise pass from the law, till all be fulfilled;" nor can it be true, that with "the Father of Lights is no variableness, neither shadow of turning," if He needs to amend His laws.

4. Resolved, That, notwithstanding the heart of man can, in its atheism and madness, conceive that this world is the offspring of chance, the Sabbath is, nevertheless, a sublime and perpetual monument, both of the existence of God, and of his creation of the world.

5. Resolved, That the Heaven-commanded rest from labor on the Sabbath, affords special opportunities for the private and public worship of God, which it is exceedingly criminal to neglect.

6. Resolved, That whatever propriety there might be in subjecting the first day of the week to a peculiar observance, such observance would not make the first day of the week "the Sabbath of the Lord God."

7. Resolved, That to abolish the observance of the seventh day as the Sabbath, is to abolish the Sabbath.

8. Resolved, That civil penalties for the violation of the Sabbath are to be condemned—not only for the reason that they are incompatible with free conscience and free religion, but, also, for the reason that they prejudice the cause of the Sabbath.

The discussion upon the first resolution, was, of course, all on one side; for what Christian would array himself against the sentiment of it? Valuable and impressive remarks, however, were elicited from the several speakers who participated in the debate.

The next resolution brought out a great deal of warm discussion. I say warm—not angry, however, for the utmost good feeling and forbearance were maintained throughout. The principal speaker in opposition was a Mr. Crozier, of New York, a gentleman of considerable ability, who seemed to have drilled himself in the anti-sabbatarian doctrine most thoroughly. I would be glad to furnish a complete report of his several speeches; but I was not able to take notes, and should fail to do him justice from memory. Suffice it to say, that anti-sabbatarians had in him an able champion. The ground he took was, that the Sabbath had no existence previous to the Exodus of the Israelites; that it was an institution, national, local, and temporary; and that after the resurrection of Christ, it ceased to be of binding obligation. But notwithstanding the ingenuity with which he sustained his position, he was most triumphantly refuted by Bro. J. W. Morton, who, by a thoroughly critical analysis of the fourth commandment, showed, that the Sabbath must of necessity have originated at creation, and that it is of perpetual and universal obligation. Gerrit Smith, Esq., also took part in the debate, and sustained the moral obligation and perpetuity of the Sabbath with great ability. A Mr. Wheaton, of Syracuse, addressed the Convention in opposition to the resolution. The debate was also extensively participated in by other members of the Convention, among whom were Elders N. V. Hull of Alfred, and L. Crandall of Plainfield, N. J., whose remarks were very able and convincing. During the whole debate upon this resolution, the house was well filled, and there seemed to be a disposition, on the part of the audience, to lose nothing of what could be offered on this very important question. After the resolution had been adopted, a protest, prepared by Mr. Crozier, and signed by himself and others, was presented, of which the following is a copy:—

"The undersigned, believing the institution of the Sabbath to be abolished, and believing that the first day of the week is, by the resurrection of Jesus Christ, and by the example of the primitive church, consecrated to rest and religious worship, as a distinct Christian institution, do protest against the foregoing resolution."

The third resolution brought out a good deal of discussion, but was finally adopted by a large majority. It was stoutly opposed by Mr. Crozier, who contended that certain laws had been changed by Christ, and instanced the law of retaliation, as allu ded to in Matt. 5: 28. He was confronted by Mr. Morton, Gerrit Smith, and others, who showed very conclusively, that Christ simply forbids men to take the law of retaliation into their own hands, and did not at all mean to teach that it was wrong for civil government to render equivalent justice to transgressors.

The other resolutions all received their appropriate share of attention. The discussion on some of them took a wide range, but the interest of the audience seemed to be kept alive till the last. Mr. Crozier brought forward his anti-sabbatraianism at every opportunity, and no attempt was made to hinder him from expressing himself freely. Upon the eighth resolution, some discussion arose, Bro. J. W. Morton taking the negative. He said he had no hesitation in saying, that civil government had no right to impose penalties for the non-observance of Sunday, but he was not ready to take the same ground in reference to the Sabbath. To some of the distant readers of the Recorder, who do not understand the position in which Mr. M. stands, it may seem strange that a Sabbatarian should take ground apparently in such opposition to all just notions of religious liberty; but it must be borne in mind, that though a Sabbatarian, he is still a Covenanter, and tenaciously advocates the peculiarities of that people in regard to civil government.

The resolutions being disposed of, the next business which came before the Convention was an Address to the Christian People of the United States, submitted by the Business Committee. This elicited some discussion, and after slight amendments it was adopted by a hearty vote. Of its character the readers of the Recorder will judge for themselves.*

The regular order of business, as presented by the Committee, being brought to a close, Bro. Morton submitted a resolution, which was adopted, protesting against the practice of first-day keepers in denouncing us as Sabbath breakers, as being a breach of the ninth commandment. One in regard to the proper manner of keeping the Sabbath, was also adopted, of which I have no copy.

The Convention then adjourned, after a session of two days, to meet at Berlin, Rensselaer Co., N. Y., on the Thursday preceding the third Sabbath in May next ensuing.

NEWS FROM OUR MISSIONARIES.

By the ship Hosburg, which sailed from Shanghai on [illegible] of November, and arrived at New York last week, we have letters from brethren Carpenter and Wardner to Nov. 2. They were at that time in the enjoyment of good health, and much encouraged in their work. There had been an unusual amount of sickness in Shanghai, Ningpo, and the surrounding country, during the Fall, supposed to have been caused by the great quantity of rain which fell in the Spring and early part of the Summer. The London Mission had lost by death two of its brightest ornaments—Rev. Mr. Southwell and Mrs. Wylie. Several other foreigners had died, and some who were then ill had but little prospect of recovery. Rev. Mr. Lowder, chaplain of the foreign community, was drowned a short time previous, while bathing in the surf near Ningpo. Mr. Tobey, of the Southern Baptist Mission, was about to embark for America, on account of the ill health of his wife. Rev. Mr. Spaulding, of the American Episcopal Mission, who started for home in September, in consequence of declining health, was supposed to have been drowned, together with the officers and crew of the bark Coquette, in which he sailed. This bark left Woosung Sept. 1, for Hong Kong, and a vessel supposed to be her was seen about 200 miles from Hong Kong, on the day before the terrific typhoon of Sept. 13. She probably foundered on that day. Her commander, Capt. Prescott, is believed to have been a native of Portsmouth, N. H., and was highly esteemed by all who knew him.

—Since the above was in type, a letter from Mrs. Carpenter to a friend in this city, has fallen into our hands, from which we are permitted to make the following extract:—

"Thank you for your good wishes. We are all in most excellent health, and have also to thank God for the cheerfulness arising from seeing some little result of our labors. I have told you that our cook has been baptized, and added to our church. Would that you—that all our dear friends—could have seen his cheerful devotedness of himself—could have seen at least the baptismal rite. It took place at five o'clock P. M., in a small canal just outside the city gate. The banks were washed by the tide, just then at its height, where many a Chinaman was busy with his boat, his water-pails, or his burdens of various kinds. Some left their occupations while the rite was performed, and looked on in vacant wonder. Some listened with attention while we sang a native hymn, and prayer was offered to the one true God. Many saw how cheerfully the candidate descended the stone steps—how calmly he sank beneath the wave, and rose again as calmly; not a muscle of his face moved, that I could see; and when Mr. Wardner stepped to the water's edge to give him his hand, there was such a calm, sweet expression on the dripping features as made one feel, that nothing but the peace of God that passeth all understanding, could have so beamed from the countenance of one hitherto known as a heathen and an idolater. Oh, that was a time to make one in love with a missionary's life.

"But do you not think that the course of the mission work in China has been singularly eventful and sad? Soon after our arrival, Rev. Mr. Lowrie was drowned while returning from this place to his station at Ningpo. The following spring, Dr. and Mrs. James were drowned near Hong Kong. A few months after, Mr. Pohlman was drowned on his passage from this place to his station. About a month since, Rev. Mr. Lowder, of this place, was drowned near Ningpo, while bathing. And now it is supposed that Rev. Mr. Spaulding, who sailed for home two months since, is also drowned. The ship was seen near Hong Kong, just as a terrible typhoon arose, which drove it back, and it has not been heard from since. Mr. S. had been for some time in a decline, and was going to America for his health. He had been, perhaps, the most robust looking man among us, and was much esteemed, but we shall see him no more. Besides these six drowned, Mr. Farmer was also buried in the sea, having died near Ceylon, on his way home. We have also had death in our midst. Two weeks since Mr. Southwell, of the London Mission, died of fever, and two days after Mrs. Wylie, of the same Mission. Mrs. Southwell sailed in company with Mrs. Lowder for England a week since. Nearly all the mission families except our own have had sickness this season. Mr. and Mrs. Tobey are also ordered to leave the field on account of her health. Thus you see how trial after trial has come upon the laborers here. Pray for us, that if we too are to be thus tried, we may have grace to sustain us."

WESTERN FARMING.

Many persons residing at the East, amid improvements from one to two hundred years old, suppose that the farmers and new settlers in the Western States must be subjected to deprivations and inconveniences truly revolting to such as have been accustomed to the best improvements of wealthy communities. While residing at the East, I have heard of persons in the West pounding their own wheat and corn in a hollow log, by a large pestal suspended like a well-pole, or having to go ninety miles to mill with an ox team, &c. Inquiries which I have received from eastern friends lead me to conclude that some of my correspondents imagine it to be so now in Illinois. No impression could be more incorrect, as it respects these parts, at least. To give your readers just ideas of these things, and of the circumstances of farmers in general, within the range of my acquaintance in Illinois, I will state a few facts that I have learned by personal intercourse.

Fulton county is thirty-six miles long, and from twenty to thirty wide. So far as I know, there are within the county three steam grist mills, and five water-wheel grist mills. Yet there is a scarcity of mills to accommodate the growing population. Being a river county, it has great facilities for export and import trade. I believe there are five landings, with store-houses, on the Illinois River, within the county. There are seven inland villages of considerable importance as trading posts and mechanics' residences, with a number of other points selected, each with a nucleus for gathering a village population around it. The stores in general are well furnished with all kinds of merchandise, and most of the trades required in a farming population are well represented by ingenious workmen from the Eastern States. Still, there is quite a demand for more mechanic shops. By an Act of the Legislature, our townships have all been named within the last two months, with names selected by a majority of township electors. Ours is named Farmington township. Last year this township, six miles square, had six school districts; two gentlemen called on me to-day with a petition for the formation of the seventh. There are two weekly papers published in the county. There is every probability that the Spoon River will soon have a slack water navigation the length of the county from S. E. to N. W., and a railroad connecting the Illinois and Mississippi rivers, 137 miles above the mouth of the Illinois, as a large amount of stock is already taken for these two objects.

I have already said, that there is a large amount of land yet unsettled. Many persons, unacquainted with the circumstances, are afraid they cannot get timber to fence with, in so large a portion of prairie land. There are but few farms that have prairie and timber land on the same tract. This difficulty is remedied in the following manner. Besides the numerous groves in the interior of the county, there is a belt of heavy timbered land stretching along the Illinois River, with an average breadth of five miles. Farmers who are able, furnish themselves with a lot of this timbered land; others, making a new farm, buy several acres of the timber, and cut it and cart it during the winter; and others will haul a load of grain to the River, and purchase a load of rails for loading home. In these ways, in the course of one winter, they will obtain rails enough to fence a considerable farm. A similar process is gone through in obtaining building timber and lumber. One of my friends who has tried both, says that he would rather make a prairie farm and draw his rails twenty-five miles, than to make a farm in a heavy timbered country, where his rail timber would be all on the ground. It is common for new settlers to hire land the first year. After providing a dwelling, and fencing a part of the farm, it is common to break up twenty, forty, or eighty acres, as the settler's means will permit, and plant or sow it, as his own preference, or the season of the year, may direct. Twenty-five bushels of wheat to the acre, and fifty bushels of corn, is an average crop. Some get thirty-five bushels of wheat, and some seventy-five bushels of corn, to the acre.

Farmers in this vicinity have told me, that they can, single-handed, with a single team, raise one thousand bushels of corn, and three hundred to four hundred bushels of wheat, in one season. The wheat, hauled to market, will bring seventy-five cents per bushel. The surplus corn would fatten thirty-five hogs, worth about two hundred dollars, besides making pork for a family; or, hauled to market, it would bring about two hundred and forty dollars, at thirty cents per bushel. Several farmers in this vicinity have driven two hundred hogs to the slaughter house the present winter, and received twelve hundred dollars in cash for them.

The labor attending this mode of operations is not all hand labor; there is as much contrivance for labor saving here, as in any part of our country. At the pork slaughtering houses, they kill as many as two hundred and fifty head per day. Large crops of corn are raised without taking a hoe into the field. I have seen one man go on a marked furrow and drop corn, while another followed with a light one-horse plough to cover it up. Of course by such a method forty acres are soon planted. A large portion of the wheat harvest is now cut by a machine drawn by four horses, called by some a Harvester, by others a Reaper. With one of these machines, a man and four horses will cut eighteen acres per day. The usual charge is fifty cents per acre. Then a large part of the wheat is threshed in the field. The threshing machines are superior to any I ever saw in any other part of the world. They are so constructed as to thresh and dress the grain fit for the market by a single operation. After passing the grain through the attached fanning mill, it is passed through a square tube into a large box set to receive it, whence it is sacked up for market. Corn is picked with the husks on, and thrown into large rail pens, containing two or three hundred bushels, and with a few boards, or a covering of straw on the top, it never spoils. That which is designed for market, is now threshed without husking. The operation is as follows; A large threshing machine of eight-horse power is furnished with a cylinder having teeth much shorter than for threshing wheat, and a large hopper for the corn in the place of the bench for receiving the wheat sheaves. The man who feeds it is provided with a flat wooden shovel, by which he pushes in the ears of corn, shucks on. It takes six hands to attend it, and will thresh and clean six hundred bushels of corn per day; and, with more attendants and a change of horses, may be made to thresh and clean a thousand bushels per day. The price for threshing wheat is four cents per bushel; for corn, two cents per bushel.

As our climate is highly favorable to out-door labor at all seasons of the year, it is easy to see that such a process as I have described, on a soil so exceedingly rich as a large part of this country is, must soon bring competence and wealth to the hand of industry and economy. Intelligent persons may form some good idea of our climate, when I inform them that the sweet potato, the peach, the plum, and apples of the best varieties, grow as fine, both as to size and flavor, as I ever saw them in the Philadelphia market.

REVIVAL INTELLIGENCE.

Our exchanges continue to bring very cheering notices of what God is doing for his cause in various parts of the country. A few examples will suffice to give an idea of the extent and character of the work which is going on.

The people of Franklin and Meredith, Delaware Co., N. Y., have enjoyed a very interesting revival. Between seventy and eighty have been added to the Methodist people, and fifty-four have united with the West Meredith Baptist church. Twenty-two have united themselves with the church in Franklin, and there are others who will probably connect themseles with the various churches.

A revival has been progressing in North Adams, Mass., which has extended to all the Churches. The Baptists have immersed sixty-seven; the Methodist have received into their class fifty-six; the Congregationalists have propounded to their church twenty-nine, and there are with them many more who are entertaining the hope that their hearts are renewed.

A letter from Ann Arbor, Mich., says that a revival of religion is in progress in that place. About fifty have been converted, and a great many reclaimed. The house is crowded with anxious hearers, and the altar with penitents, every evening. Scarcely a meeting but more or less are converted. The work appears to be increasing in interest.

At Peoria, Ill., the good work is going on. More than fifty have found peace in the Lord, and forty have joined the church on probation.

The Minutes of the Alabama State Convention say, that though many of the letters sent to the Convention did not speak of the state of religion, those that did contained cheering intelligence. Within the bounds of three Associations, over one thousand were added to the churches during the year.

A Methodist preacher on the Fredericksburg Circuit says that the Lord is doing much on that circuit. About seventy souls have lately found peace in believing, and fifty-two of that number have joined the M. E. church, and the good work is still going on.

The St. Louis Presbyterian publishes an account of a revival in M'Kendree College, at Lebanon, Illinois, in which upward of thirty young men have professed conversion, six of whom are sons of ministers.

The results of a revival in Lexington, Va., are thus summed up: "More than 50 cases of hopeful conversion have occurred—of these, 39 have joined the church on examination—and of this number, 20 are gentlemen, and 19 are ladies—six or eight others are now candidates for church-membership. Of the gentlemen received on examination, four are lawyers and six are heads of families. These six have all established family worship."

A Baptist Missionary among the Cherokee Indians, represents a revival in that nation as having resulted in the hopeful conversion of seventy-seven precious souls, and their baptism on a profession of their faith in the atoning Savior. Subsequently, several others of the Cherokees were baptized on a profession of their faith, and the divine influences seemed to be pervading all the stations. At Delaware Town, a meeting of four days was held, and it was computed that not less than twelve or thirteen hundred persons were usually present at the preaching services.

Temperance in Norway.—The February number of the American and Foreign Christian Union states that the temperance cause is making "glorious progress in Norway." A few years ago the Diet passed an act to abolish all the distilleries of the kingdom in ten years. They next imposed a heavy tax on all stills, which broke up the small distilleries. In addition to this, they have employed agents to visit the distillers, with authority to compensate them for losses, if they will abandon the business. This is regarded as only preparatory to an act to sweep away all distilleries from the land.

Decline of an Anti-Mission College.—The Baptist Register says that a few years ago, in consequence of the excitement caused by the converstion of a student in the Free Church Institution in India, an Anti-Mission College was got up upon a magnificent scale, the sum of $150,000 was promised as an endowment, about $16,000 was paid in, and the school went into operation with 700 boys as students. But now the monthly subscription has dwindled down to seven rupees, or about $3.50, most of the teachers have been dismissed, and the college is likely soon to be closed. In the mean time, the schools of the missionaries have been constantly increasing.

House of Refuge in New Jersey.—A bill has passed both Houses of the New Jersey Legislature for the establishment of a House of Refuge for juvenile offenders. It provides for the appointment of three Commissioners to select a suitable site, to be approved by the Governor, for the buildings, at a price not exceeding $6,000, and then the Governor shall appoint three Commissioners to contract for the erection of the buildings, on the most approved plan, at an expense not exceeding $15,000, making the whole amount authorized to be expended for the purpose $21,000.

Revival in Exeter, R. I.—A letter from Eld. John Green, dated Feb. 17, says:—"I have just returned from Exeter, R. I., where I have been laboring between three and four weeks. I never witnessed a more pleasing work of grace. It was very deep and searching; many backsliders were reclaimed, twenty-six were added to the church by baptism, and the work was still going on."

To China via California.—The Louisiana Spectator says, that T. J. Roberts, who has been a missionary to China for fourteen years, delivered an address upon the social and religious condition of the Chinese, on the third ult., at the Baptist church in New Orleans. Mr. Roberts went from Mississippi, and is now on his return to the Celestial Empire, via California.

Such a Missionary!—A Mr. Jones advertises his plantation for sale, in a Southern religious paper, and includes in the advertisement "fifty or sixty servants," which are constantly increasing in value and number. He wishes to sell, he says, as he has a desire to become a Missionary.

Where is thy Brother?—Theodore Parker, in his spirited appeal to the manhood of our people against the everlasting degradation of the African race to an equality with the brute, has this passage:—

"America, where is thy Brother? This is the answer: 'Lo! he is there, in the rice swamps of the South, in her fields teeming with cotton and the luxuriant cane. He was weak, and I seized him; naked, and I bound him; ignorant, poor, and savage, and I overmastered him; I laid on his feeble shoulders my grievous yoke; I have chained him with my fetters, beaten him with my whip; other tyrants had domain over him, but my finger was thicker than their loins; I have branded the mark of my power with red-hot iron upon his human flesh; I am fed with his toil—fat, voluptuous on his sweat, and tears, and blood; I stole the father, stole also the sons, and set them to toil; his wife and daughters are a pleasant spoil to me.'"

Northern Travel.—The Hudson River is now open to Hudson, so that passengers for the North may take steamboat to Hudson, and the railroad thence to Albany. When navigation is fairly open, it is expected that besides the usual number of boats on the River between Albany and New York, two will run daily between Albany and Poughkeepsie, to connect with the Hudson River Railroad and the trains from Albany to Buffalo. By this arrangement passengers may leave New York at 7 o'clock A. M., reach Albany at 1 P. M., and be at Syracuse, Auburn, or Rochester, in time for a late tea. A reduction of the fare from Albany to Buffalo to two cents a mile is contemplated, in order to secure the travel to the central route, which is now being diverted to the Erie Railroad. The fare from New York to Geneva, by the Erie Railroad and a steamboat on the Seneca Lake, is $6¼.

A Duel, almost.—There was much talk at Washington, last week, of a duel between Col. Jefferson Davis, U. S. Senator from Mississippi, and Col. Wm. H. Bissell, a member of the House of Representatives from Illinois. It seems that Mr. Sedden of Virginia, in a speech before the House, put forth a claim, that in the Battle of Buena Vista, a Southern Regiment met and repulsed the enemy in a very critical moment when the Second Illinois Regiment gave way. This claim was denied by Col. Bissell in a speech soon after. Whereupon Col. Davis, the commander of the Southern Regiment in question, sent a challenge to Col. Bissell, which was accepted. The interference of the President and other friends, however led to a rconciliation.

Early Closing of Stores.—There was a great gathering at the Tabernacle in New York, one evening last week, to devise measures for the relief of the 2,000 retail dry-goods clerks in this city, by securing the early closing of stores. Mayor Woodhull presided, and speeches were made by Rev. T. L. Harris, Dr. Sherman, Rev. Mr. Thompson, Dr. Dixon, and John Van Buren. Resolutions were passed setting forth the importance of the measure proposed; and documents were adopted, for the signatures of merchants and citizens, by means of which it is hoped the time of closing stores may eventually be fixed at 7 o'clock in the evening, thus giving the clerks, most of whom are young, an opportunity for improvement, by reading, study, &c.

Dr. Achilli at Liberty.—It is now announced, upon reliable authority, that Dr. Achilli, who has for several months past been imprisoned at Rome on religious grounds, is again at large. The manner of his "escape" is not definitely stated. It is believed, however, that the intervention of the French Government had something to do with it. Dr. Achilli's friends say that the French military was fraudently obtained for his arrest, and that the French government was falsely informed that he was imprisoned for murder and other crimes.

"No Compromise."—A few months ago a slave living about eight miles from Washington, who was owned by a good, pious member of the church—"mother in Israel"—ran away, leaving a wife, who is now in slavery. Wishing to be with his wife, he offered to compromise with his pious mistress, but she rejected his offer after the following spirited manner:—

"February 2d.—When my man Gabriel Campbell pays me the sum of three hundred dollars in cash, and the sum of fifty dollars in jail fees that I paid for him in the District jail, then I will give him his free papers.

Letetia Lanham."

A Rally for Land Reform.—On the evening of March 1st, there was a grand rally of Land Reformers and others at Tammany Hall, N. Y., to respond to the propositions before Congress for free grants of public land to those who will till it. Letters were read from Daniel Webster, Lewis Cass, Wm. H. Seward, Gerrit Smith, Bishop Hughes, and others. Resolutions and an address were adopted, and speeches were made by John Cochrane, Horace Greeley, L. B. Shepherd, T. E. Tomlinson, M. Walsh, T. A. Devyr, W. V. Barr, and R. N. Havens.

Missionary Labor.—Rev. Mr. Dulles, one of the missionaries of the American Board, writes from Madras, under date of Nov. 6, 1849, a very interesting letter, published in the Philadelphia Observer. The Mohammedans, he says, insult and revile the name of Christ in the streets; but there are gratifying signs to encourage to renewed missionary effort. He says:—

"At present a great work is going forward in Madras. It is the revision and re-printing of the whole Scriptures, by a most able committee, and in a most beautiful style. The committee are Mr. Winston, Mr. Spaulding, Mr. Percival, Wesleyan, and Mr. Brotherton, Church Missionary. We do not commonly give away the whole Bible, except to well-known cases; but I could not refuse an old man who applied to me a few days since. He had come from Sadras with salt fish. Once before, I had given him parts of the Scriptures, but this did not satisfy him; and a few days since, when he came to me again, I gave him the whole Bible. He immediately invoked the blessing of Heaven upon me, applied the sacred volume to each cheek, kissed it, and then, clasping it to his bosom, wrapt it in his mantle, and went on his way rejoicing. He is a Roman Catholic, but renounced their errors and seemed hungry for the truth. Beside himself, he says, there is one Christian in Sadras, an East Indian, named John."

General Intelligence.

PROCEEDINGS IN CONGRESS LAST WEEK.

In Senate. SECOND-DAY, Feb. 25.

After some unimportant routine business, the Senate resumed the consideration of Mr. Clay's Resolutions relative to Slavery. Mr. Miller concluded his speech in favor of the immediate admission of California.

Mr. Foote made an effort to get up his resolution, proposing a committee of thirteen to take into consideration all the questions growing out of the institution of Slavery. Several persons expressed themselves in favor of referring the whole subject to a special committee; others expressed doubts whether any good would come from such reference. In the course of remarks, Mr. Foote, of Mississippi, expressed his solemn conviction, that this subject must be compromised during the present week, or that it would be out of their jurisdiction; unless something was done at once, he was perfectly convinced that, before Saturday next, circumstances would occur of a character which he would do nothing more than allude to (!) Mr. Clemens also asserted, that if the discussion was to be continued two weeks longer, it would not be in the power of man to save the Union. The subject was finally postponed, and the Senate adjourned.

House of Representatives.

Mr. Wentworth presented a remonstrance against admitting Deseret into the Union, which, in spite of some objections, was read. It was from Wm. Smith, representing himself as the only surviving brother of Joe Smith, and his successor, and complaining that Brigham Young is the head of an armed body of Mormon assassins; that Orson Hyde set fire to the Nauvoo Temple; that he is acquainted with the names of those appended to the Constitution of Deseret, and knows them to be enemies of the United States; that he has heard them declare, that when they got into the valley of the Salt Lake they would rob and plunder emigrants until they got as much as they lost by Missouri and Illinois; that he knows them to be in favor of a kingly government; and that they have a plurality of wives, and live in adultery, and other hard things. No disposition was made of the memorial.

Mr. Bowdon offered a series of resolutions, asserting that there ought to be a great Railroad, or other thoroughfare, connecting the Atlantic and Pacific Oceans, over the public lands, national in its character; and, as a preparatory measure, that Congress should establish a line of electric telegraph, and military posts, from St. Louis to San Francisco.

The House rejected the petition of a few Abolitionists for a peaceable dissolution of the Union—by a vote of 162 to 8—every Disunionist in his seat voting to reject the petition unconsidered.

In Senate. THIRD-DAY, Feb. 26.

Nothing of general interest was done in the Senate. Adjourned at 2 o'clock for the purpose of attending the funeral of Geo. McNeil, late of New Hampshire.

House of Representatives.

After several motions of no importance, the House listened to a short speech by Mr. Millson, of Va., and then adjourned to attend the funeral of Geo. McNeil.

In Senate. FOURTH-DAY, Feb. 27.

Mr. Seward presented a memorial of citizens of the Valley of the Rio Grande, east of that River, asking for the establishment of a Territorial Government for them. Referred to the Committee on Territories.

Mr. Benton made a speech upon Mr. Clay's Compromise Resolutions, in which he showed that Slavery was abolished throughout every portion of Mexico long prior to our conquests, so that a slave cannot be legally held there until there is some law for so holding him.

Mr. Rusk next took the floor, and proceeded to address the Senate in vindication of the right of Texas to all the territory claimed by her east of the Rio Grande, and in opposition to the third resolution of the series introduced by Mr. Clay, in relation to the boundary of Texas. Without concluding his speech, Mr. Rusk gave way to an adjournment at half past two.

House of Representatives.

Two or three land bills were introduced; also a bill to reduce postage, and one to establish a branch mint in the city of New York.

The House then went into Committee of the Whole, and Mr. Doty presented a bill for the admission of California. Mr. Green gave notice of an amendment establishing the Missouri Compromise line.

The Slavery question was debated at considerable length, on the part of the South by Messrs. Toombs, McLane, Colcock, and others, and on the Northern side by Col. Baker, of Illinois. The Slavery propagandists indulged in their usual strain of bravado and threats of dissolution, and were sharply replied to by Col. Baker.

In Senate. FIFTH-DAY, Feb. 28.

Hon. John Bell, of Tennessee, submitted a plan for the settlement of the Slavery question, which provides for the immediate admission of California, and the erection (with the consent of Texas) of a Slave State out of that portion of the Territory of Texas lying between the Trinity and Colorado Rivers—the cession to the United States of the unappropriated land South of 34°, and between the Colorado and Rio Grande, (said territory ultimately to form a Slave State,) and the cession to the United States of the jurisdiction over all the territory of Texas lying North of 34°. Mr. Bell made a few remarks in support of his proposition, in the course of which he repudiated the Nashville Convention, and said he was willing to trust the question of Slavery in the District of Columbia, and the apprehension of fugitive slaves, to the good faith of Congress.

Mr. Butler asked that Mr. Calhoun's views in regard to Mr. Clay's compromise may be read to the Senate on Second-day.

Mr. Walker, of Wisconsin, submitted an amendment to Mr. Clay's resolutions, recognizing more distinctly the fact that Slavery has been abolished in the territory obtained from Mexico, and can only be introduced there by positive statute.

Mr. Rusk concluded his speech against the Wilmot Proviso.

House of Representatives.

The House had up the President's California Message in Committee of the Whole, and was addressed by Messrs. Conrad, of La., and Parker, of Va. Mr. Conrad admitted that California was justifiable, under the circumstances, in forming a State Government; and, as part of a scheme for settling the slavery question, he would vote for her admission, but not as an isolated proposition.

In Senate. SIXTH-DAY, March 1.

After the transaction of routine business of no general interest, the Senate went into Executive session.

House of Representatives.

The House spent most of the day in Committee of the Whole on private bills.

TWO WEEKS LATER FROM CALIFORNIA.

The steamship Alabama, from Chagres, arrived at New Orleans on the 28th Feb., with sixty-five passengers, and half a million in gold dust. She also brings advices from San Francisco to the 24th of January, being two weeks later than our previous accounts. They were received at Panama by the steamship California.

The City of Sacramento has been overflowed by water. But few spots of land are visible, and the inhabitants are suffering terribly from this dreadful calamity. The loss is estimated at over $1,000,000. Immense herds of cattle and other property have been swept away. While this great flood, however, destroys a great deal of property, it will probably wash out the gold in immense quantities.

A party of Chilians had made an attack upon the Americans at the mines in the vicinity of Stockton, in which two of the assailed were killed, and the others imprisoned, though the latter were afterwards released. This affair created great excitement, and it was supposed that all the Chilians would in consequence be expelled from the mines.

Accounts from the Isthmus state that Mrs. Fremont had recovered from her illness, and, with her husband was about leaving for the United States.

FREEDOM OF THE PUBLIC LANDS.—A meeting of citizens of the towns of West Bloomfield, Lima and Mendon, N. Y., was held at the Brick Meeting-House of North Bloomfield, on Friday, the 22d ult., for the purpose of considering the propositions lately introduced in the United States Senate, to make free grants of public lands to Hungarian refugees and American citizens. The meeting was addressed by Alderman Grieg of Rochester, and by Charles Paulk, Esq., of Honeoye Falls. E. A. Stillman, from the Committee appointed for that purpose at a preliminary meeting, reported a series of resolutions, which were taken up separately, and after discussion of some of the points involved, adopted without a dissenting voice. We copy three of the resolutions:—

Resolved, That the Freedom of the Public Lands, in limited quantities, to actual settlers, is a measure justified by every consideration of right and sound policy, and one the consummation of which ought no longer to be deferred.

Resolved, That the aggregation of large quantities of the Public Lands in the hands of speculators, is a strange anomaly in the policy of a Free Government—equally opposed to the natural rights of man, to the interests of the States, and to the prosperity of the whole country.

Resolved, That the large gifts of land and money, to the houseless citizens of this State, by one of our most extensive landholders, is an example not more remarkable for its singularity, than for the liberality and true republicanism of the act.

"AMERICAN INTOLERANCE IN LIVERPOOL." A paragraph with this heading is going the round of the English press, much to the annoyance of Anglo-Americans. It describes a disturbance created by American captains and mates at a public house. One of these, a Mr. Stowfort, had discovered that there was a man of color in one of the rooms. He chose to take offense at this, entered the room, and cried out, "Come out of this; we will have no negroes here." The Englishmen present resisted the tyranny, and there was a disturbance. The case came before the civil court, and among other things, Mr. Rushton, the respected magistrate, characterized the disturbance as arising from American "prejudices." "Because a man with a colored skin was in an adjoining room, he was to be ejected and maltreated. Such conduct would not be tolerated in England." Mr. Stowfort was fined £5, with the alternative of 42 days' imprisonment.

ONE WAY TO GET HEARERS.—A Burlington (Vt.) paper gives an account of a novel temperance meeting in that town. Mr. Ross, an enthusiastic lecturer on temperance, hired a number of rum-sellers to attend his lecture, promising them 25 cts. each, per hour. They were ranged along on the front seats, a fair mark for the speaker, from whom they bore, with great equanimity, some rough usage, which would have been fatal to any but rum-sellers. Mr. R. spoke for two hours and ten minutes, at the end of which time he paid them each 55 cts., taking their receipts for the same. On a subsequent evening, he lectured again, but his self-denying friends "struck" for an increase of pay—demanding 50 cents an hour—which Mr. R. gave them—thinking, perhaps, that if laborers should be paid in proportion to the work performed, or suffering or hardship endured, they abundantly earned their wages.

ACCIDENT LAST SABBATH.—On Sabbath morning last, at 8½ o'clock, the steamboat Clifton, Capt. Boon, left Salem, N. J., on her first trip to Philadelphia. Just as she reached the wharf at New-Castle, Del., her boiler exploded, instantly killing Charles Foster, of Salem, fireman, and scalding five other persons. A Mr. Gilmer of Philadelphia, and Mr. Massie of Delaware City, were very severely scalded. The cause of the explosion is unknown. At the time of the unfortunate occurrence, the steam-guage showed but a small press of steam, and the boilers were full of water.

THE BIBLE IN CALIFORNIA.—An active agency of the American Bible Society is already engaged in giving wider circulation to the sacred Scriptures in California. A Bible depository is soon to be opened in a Presbyterian church in San Francisco. Among residents speaking the Spanish language, the demand for the Bible is encouraging, and several copies have been sold among them. A society called the San Francisco Bible Society, auxiliary to the American Bible Society, has been formed, and officers have been elected. On this occasion two hundred dollars were subscribed, and several persons were made life members of the society.

MELANCHOLY TERMINATION OF A WEDDING.—Miss Bridget Lynch, who had acted as bridesmaid at the wedding of a friend at a boarding house in Philadelphia, on a recent Sunday evening, was fatally burned by the explosion of a camphene lamp, while going up stairs, accompanied by the bride, to retire. Her light dress was in a full blaze at once; she ran down stairs in her fright, and her appearance in a sheet of flame startled the company below. It was thought she could not recover. The screw being loose, the fluid of the lamp when it was tilted came in contact with the burner, and thus caused the catastrophe.

A TERRIBLE CASE OF DEPRAVITY.—A drunken man named Wm. Finny, residing in a miserable garret in Theatre Alley, N. Y., was arrested for being drunk and disorderly. At the time of the arrest the accused was in company with his mother and two sisters, all of whom were beastly intoxicated, the mother just before having purchased a quart of rum. Finny was taken to the police office, when soon afterwards some persons went to the garret, where they found the old woman dead, she having been smothered by one of her inebriate daughters, who while insensible had prostrated herself across and over the head of her mother.

HOMESTEAD EXEMPTION BILLS.—During the last few months, household exemption bills have passed as follows:—Maine exempts a homestead to the value of $500, and in the absence of a homestead, personal property to that amount. Vermont exempts a homestead to the value of $500; Iowa and Minnesota, 40 acres of land, or a lot; California, 320 acres of land, or a lot worth $2,000; Deseret, it is said, secures a home to every family. Georgia, Texas, Michigan, Wisconsin, Pennsylvania and Connecticut, had previously enacted similar laws.

THE LEARNED PROFESSIONS OF NEW-YORK. There are 1200 lawyers in New York city, of whom 500 only are estimated to have a paying practice. The estimate of the three professions, in the tax lists of the State of New York, is set down as follows: lawyers $600 a year; physicians and surgeons $600; clergymen $340 09. The average income of the clergymen is ascertained; the others, of course, are estimated.

SUMMARY.

Capt. Sutter, the pioneer of California, has signified his intention of presenting two tracts of land, fifty acres each, as glebes to the church (Episcopal) about to be erected at Vernon and Sacramento City. Messrs. Cornwill and Lee, for the erection of of an Episcopal church at the latter place, gave a lot worth $2,000, as also did a Mr. Crosby and Mr. Schoolcraft. An Episcopal church has already been built at Panama.

The case of Moore against the Auburn and Syracuse Railroad Company, has just been tried at the Circuit Court at Auburn. The case excited much interest, as involving the liability of railroads for injuries received by passengers. The plaintiff was scalded and otherwise injured in a collision on this road between Auburn and Syracuse in 1848. The jury returned a verdict of $2,000 for the plaintiff.

The Supreme Court of Massachusetts has granted one divorce on the ground of desertion, the evidence (says the Traveler) proving that the marriage occurred in 1840, and that defendant in 1842 left her husband, and joined the Shakers in Harvard, where she has remained constantly up to the present time, against the consent and wishes of libellant.

A citizen of Galveston has discovered a process for making what is called "Meat Biscuit"—by grating which an excellent soup may be made in a few minutes, and one pound of the biscuit is estimated as an ample three-days' allowance of food for one man. It is a good invention for the purposes of the California diggers.

A gentleman of Baltimore has patented an invention which manufactures Hydro-carbon Gas at fully one-twelfth of the price charged by the Gas Company of that city, as experiments have fully proved. The gas is manufactured of rosin and water, and burns with a clearness and softness far superior to any other light used.

The Vermont Chronicle, published at Windsor, Vt., says that on the morning of the 6th ult., the thermometer fell in that village as low as thirty-five degrees below zero; in Woodstock, thirty-eight, and at Northfield, forty. In New York city, at 7 A. M., it was 16° above zero.

There was a large fire in New Orleans on Saturday, the 16th ult., by which about thirty large stores were destroyed, and the printing office of the Picayune, notwithstanding which the proprietors issued their sheet, as usual, on Sunday morning!

The cholera broke out on board the steamer Dove during her last trip from New Orleans to Camden. When she reached Monroe eight of the passengers had died; of those who landed there, thirteen have since died.

Those in favor of Mr. Clay's Compromise Resolutions were invited to meet at Castle Garden, N. Y., on Monday night of last week. A great concourse of people was present, and among many good sentiments uttered by the speakers, there was a needless amount of vituperation lavished upon those honest, self-sacrificing men, called Abolitionists. There was a warm reponse to Mr. Clay's resolutions.

Capt. Harrison, of the steamship America, reports that his last passage across the Atlantic was the most stormy he ever experienced. All the floats but three on the larboard wheel were carried away, and half on the starboard wheel. The steamer left Liverpool in a heavy gale, and was 17 hours to Holyhead, which usually takes 7, and not being able to discharge her Liverpool pilot, brought him to Boston.

Hon. Elijah Risley of Fredonia, Member of Congress from the Chautauque and Cattaraugus District, fell upon the track of the Erie Railroad at Binghamton, while in pursuit of the cars, one day last week, and received what was supposed at the time to have been a very slight injury in the head, and from the effect of which it was thought he would recover in a day or two. But he has experienced a relapse, and fears are entertained for his life.

Hon. Edward Gilbert, Editor of the Alta California, who was formerly an apprentice and journeyman printer in Albany, which city he left three years ago as a volunteer in Col. Stevenson's Regiment, and has just returned a man of ample property and a Member of Congress, has been invited by a large number of citizens of Albany, without distinction of party, to meet them in a Public Dinner, which he has consented to do.

On Friday last, the remains of another body were found in the ruins of the building in Hague st., which, though much charred and mutilated, were recognized by some part of the apparel still clinging to a portion of them, to be those of John Stafford, aged 17, residing at 126 Delancy st. He was a fine young man, the main support of a widowed mother, with a family of five children beside himself.

The jewelry store of Henry Richards, 71 Market st., Pittsburg, was entered on the 22d ult., and robbed of about eighty gold watches and a considerable amount of jewelry. A reward of $500 is offered for the recovery of the property.

As the train from Philadelphia on the Camden and Amboy Railroad reached White Hill, N. J., on Friday, last, the locomotive boiler exploded, killing James Leward and Martin Fisher, engineers, and severely wounding Mr. Greenleaf, fireman, and a brakeman, whose name we did not learn. The wounded men are not expected to recover. The explosion set a shed and a barn and a sloop's sails on fire.

The Chancellor of New Jersey has granted an injunction against the New Hope and Delaware Bridge Campany, on a bill filed against it by a creditor, and receivers have been appointed to take the property into their own hands, and close up their affairs as an insolvent institution.

Sixty vessels, manned by about 500 men, have left Gloucester, Mass., for George's Banks—an unusual number for this time of the year. Twenty vessels are now on the stocks or contracted for at Essex for the same port, and will be ready for sea about the 1st of July next.

The Cincinnati Nonpareil notices the fact that Mr. David Carr, who recently died in that place, bequeathed the sum of $15,000 to be appropriated for the erection of an asylum for indigent females.

A young girl named Susan Davis has recovered a verdict of $5,400 against her former employer, a Mr. Smedley, a manufacturer of worsted shawls, &c., in Kensington, Philadelphia county. It appears that after she left his employ, he commenced a series of persecutions, and on three occasions had her arrested on the charge of stealing, she being in each instance honorably discharged by the magistrate.

Christian Psalmody—Pocket Edition.

IN compliance with requests from various quarters, the publisher of the New Hymn Book—Christian Psalmody—has issued a second edition, on lighter paper and with smaller margins, by which the bulk and weight of the books are reduced about one-third, rendering them much more convenient for carrying in the pocket. The price is also reduced 12½ cents per copy. Those wishing books, of either edition, can now be supplied. Price of the larger edition from 75 cents to $1 50, according to the style of binding. Price of the smaller edition from 62½ cents to $1 00. Orders should be addressed to Geo. B. Utter, No. 9 Spruce-st., New York.

Factory Establishment for Sale.

THE subscriber will sell the well-known Establishment, called the Bethel Mill, situated in Hopkinton, R. I, consisting of the factory, 60 by 28 feet, two and a half stories high, and a good stone basement room under the whole building; a cloth-house, 16 by 20, one and a half stories; a dye-house, 20 by 30, with suitable kettles; a wash-box, &c.; a small smith-shop for repairing; three dwelling-houses, a barn, and about six acres of land. The buildings are mostly new, the factory and dye-house having been erected in 1848, where one was burnt in that year. A good water privilege of about five feet fall, with a sufficient reservoir to supply the mill through all the drought of summer, being 114 acres, 12 feet deep, averaging from 8 to 10 feet the whole surface.

The present occupants run twenty looms on plaid linseys, and are entitled to its occupancy until the money loaned by them towards its erection (over 3,000 dollars) shall be paid, at a rent of about six hundred and eighty dollars per annum, or otherwise paid in money. It is pleasantly situated, in a good neighborhood, and help easily obtained. About half of the purchase money must be paid within the year, and the purchaser, if he chooses, can let the rest remain to be liquidated by the rent, which will take between six and seven years. It will be a good investment for any one desirous of obtaining such an establishment, or who has money to loan. JACOB D. BABCOCK.

Scientific and Practical Agriculture.

HENRY STEPHENS, F. R. S. E., of Edinburgh, the celebrated author of the "BOOK OF THE FARM," and PROF. NORTON, of Yale College, New Haven, are preparing for the Press, a Book to be entitled,

AGRICULTURE—SCIENTIFIC AND PRACTICAL.

It will embrace every subject of importance connected with Agriculture in all its various branches, both Theoretical and Practical. "Science, in as far as it has, up to the present time, been made available to Practice by Experiment, will be treated in its relation to every operation as it occurs in the course of the seasons." The work will be arranged under four distinct heads, representing the seasons, beginning with Winter and ending with Autumn. The following are among the subjects to be treated of in the first and second seasons, including the Introductory, viz:

INITIATION.—On the best of the existing Methods for acquiring a thorough knowledge of Practical Husbandry, the Difficulties to be encountered in learning practical husbandry, and on the Means of overcoming them; the different kinds of farming; the persons required to conduct and execute the labor of the farm; the branches of science most applicable to Agriculture: the Institutions of Education best suited to Agricultural science; the evils attending the neglect of landowners and others to learn Practical Agriculture; on observing the details and recording the facts of farming by the Agricultural student.

PRACTICE—WINTER.—On the treatment of farm-horses in Winter; the treatment of the farmer's saddle and harness horse in Winter; the fattening of swine; the treatment of fowls; the rationale of the feeding of animals; on the accommodation of the grain crops in the steading; threshing and winnowing of grain; on the forming of dunghills and composts in Winter; on the construction of liquid-manure tanks and carts; sea-weed as manure; on gaulting or claying the soil.

PRACTICE—SPRING.—Summary of the field operations, and of the weather in Spring; on the advantages of having field-work always in a state of forwardness; on the calving of cows; the milking of cows; the rearing of calves. On the sowing of spring wheat; on drilling up the land; on the sowing of beans, and peas, and tares. On the transplanting of turnip bulbs for pro- [illegible] of oats, lucerne, and sainfoin. On the lambing of ewes. On cross-ploughing land, and ribbing land for the seed-furrow. On the sowing of grass-seeds and barley. On the turning of dunghills. On the planting of potatoes. On paring and baring the surface. On the farrowing of sows; the hatching of fowls, &c.

The Work will also embrace many important operations not included in the ordinary routine of farming, such as "Judging of Land," "Stocking of a Farm," "Improvement of the Soil," &c., &c.

The contributions by Prof. Norton will add greatly to the value of the book, by adapting it to the Soil, Climate, Growth, &c., of our own Country; and the united labors of two such distinguished men will make this work one of the most complete and valuable to the American farmer, ever issued from the press.

The work will be comprised in about 18 Nos. of 80 pages each, with a steel engraving in every number; besides which it will contain more than 600 wood engravings, in the highest style of the art. It will be handsomely printed on fine paper, and sold at 25 cents a number, or $4 in advance for the eighteen numbers.

The First Number will be issued in the month of January, and the work will be completed in about one year. The first volume, written by Mr. Stephens, is already published in Edinburgh, and the Americans edition will be printed from the stereotype plates imported for that purpose.

Booksellers and Dealers in Periodicals will be furnished on liberal terms.

Postmasters and others remitting the money for three copies at the above prices, will receive a fourth copy gratis. Remittances will be at the risk of the Publishers, if the mailing of the money is proved—otherwise at the risk of the parties remitting. A postmaster's certificate of the money being duly mailed is always satisfactory evidence to the Publishers.

Miscellaneous.

DISCOVERIES IN THE ARCTIC OCEAN.

Some discoveries have recently been made by the captain of a Sag Harbor whaler, that possess no little interest to the geographer, the naturalist, and in fact the scientific world at large.

Captain Royce for a long time has believed that a new and more profitable whaling ground exists to the north of Bhering's Straits, an opinion he formed from reading the voyages of Capt. Cook, Clark, Beechy, and others. The principal reason which induced him to put away for that ocean, was a remark which he recollected to have read in Beechy's voyages, viz:—"Off here we saw a great many black whales, more than I remember ever to have seen even in Baffin's Bay."

The Captain, describing his voyage, says: "I entered the Arctic Ocean about the middle of July, and cruised from continent to continent, going as high as latitude 70, and saw whales wherever I went, cutting in my last whale on the 23d of August, and returning to Bhering's Straits on the 29th of the same month. On account of powerful currents, thick fogs, and the near vicinity of of land and ice, combined with the imperfection of charts and want of information respecting this region, I found it both difficult and dangerous to get oil, although there was plenty of whales."

During the entire period of his cruise there, no ice was seen; the weather was ordinarily pleasant, so that the men could work in light clothing. In most parts of the ocean there was good anchorage in from fourteen to thirty-five fathoms. During a part of the time the vessel was there she lay at anchor. The first whale was taken at twelve o'clock at night. It was not difficult to whale the whole twenty-four hours, so light was it that at midnight it was easy to read in the cabin. The whales were quite tame, but entirely different from any which Captain Royce had ever before seen or taken. He took three different species, one of the largest yielding two hundred barrels of oil. The first species much resembled the Greenland whale, yielding about one hundred and sixty or one hundred and seventy barrels; the second was a species called Polar whale, a few of which have been taken on the North-west coast; and the third a small whale peculiar to that ocean. The last three whales which were taken yielded over six hundred barrels.

The American coast has been explored, and found to be inhabited. Capt. Royce discovered that the Asiatic coast was also peopled by numerous Indian tribes, and he expresses the opinion that they are well supplied with valuable furs that could be easily purchased. There are no good charts of the Asiatic coast, unless they are in possession of the Russians.

On entering the straits, seven canoes, containing forty men each, were seen crossing from the American to the Asiatic coast. There are three small islands situated in the passage, hence rendering it easy for the dwellers on the American and Asiatic continents to pass and repass.

Capt. Royce did not hold any communication with the Indians, as his vessel was but partially armed, and in one instance the Indians showed that they were disposed to make him a hostile visit when becalmed, but a favorable breeze springing up, soon carried the vessel beyond the region of danger.

FEROCITIES IN HUNGRRY.

Lord Dudley Stuart, in his recent speech in the House of Commons, horrified the House by details from a work written by a Hungarian lady, who was in that country at the time, and was now in England—a book which was about to be published. The following is the passage from Madame Pulazky's work:—

"The sad consequences of this plot manifested themselves everywhere, but nowhere more dreadfully than in the remote mountain district of Zalatuya.

The civil officers of these parts were suddenly surrounded by wildly fanatical Wallachs, arms in hand. In this state of things, about 1,200 faithful servants of their sovereign assembled. They were of all ranks, from the highest to the lowest, old and young, accompanied by their wives and children. All joined in the purpose to proceed together to the town of Enyed, at several hours' distance from Zalatuya, to be sheltered from the wild hordes, which were ready to attack every one who chanced not to be a Wallach, and who wore another than a peasant's coat. It was yet at some distance from Zalatuya when the officers were overtaken by a great troop of armed Wallachs. Not willing to oppose those who pretended to be acting in the name of the monarch, a negotiation was entered upon. Its result was, that the emigrants agreed to deliver up their swords and muskets, under condition that they should not be prevented from freely proceeding to Enyed. Before the disarming was completed the evening had come on.

Several carriages were laden with the arms, and they waited for dawn to continue their journey. In the night the Wallachs was an Austrian officer at Zalatuya, to inquire what they should do with 'their prisoners.' The messenger returned with the laconic reply, 'Put the wretches to death.'

When the peremptory order of murder arrived, the riotous people itself was thunderstruck, and for a long while no one attempted to break the pledge of a free passage. Both parties hesitated for some instants to take any decided step; at last the disarmed set themselves in motion. Slowly the procession advanced until some circumstance, which has never been precisely ascertained, was considered by the Wallachs a signal to attack.

Now followed a horrifying scene. One part of the disarmed were cudgeled to death, others pierced through with pointed mountain sticks. Some hanged on trees were mangled with hay-forks; others thrown into pits were buried under blocks rolled down upon them. Women and maidens were mutilated and murdered in the most dreadful manner.

The slaughter lasted long. Rainbold, a German, the Inspector of Zalatuya, to whom clung his wife and two grown-up daughters, not seeing any possibility of averting their dreadful fate, drew out his double pistol, which, more distrustful than his companions, he had retained, shot down first his two daughters, loaded again, shot his wife, and lastly killed himself. The haste and the excitement in which he achieved this awful deed, rendered his hand uncertain; his mutilated wife survived this horrible catastrophe, and related it. Of 1,200 persons, about 110 remained wounded among the bodies of their comrades. Of these survivors, about 70 or 80, most of them women, one the wife of Judge Császár, bleading from countless wounds, dragged themselves before the gates of the fortress of Gyula Jehárvár (Karisburg); but the commander of this place, which was occupied by Austrian troops, drove the exhausted victims from the gates, where, after having been refused admittance, they had sunk powerless to the ground."

EDUCATION IN WISCONSIN.

The First Annual Report of the State Superintendent of Public Instruction in Wisconsin, has been published, and gives a very lucid statement of the condition of the School System. From it the following interesting items are culled.

In the 29 counties of the State there are 1,430 whole school districts, and 455 parts of districts—some of which have not reported. The whole number of children stated as attending school is 32,147; which is believed to be below the actual number. The average, complete, is calculated at 146 for each town, or 46,574 for the whole State. The whole number of children between 4 and 20 years of age, residing in the State, is reported to be 70,457; of whom 36,168 are boys, and 34,299 girls. The smallest number reported in any town is 26; while the City of Milwaukie is particularly blessed with 3,945. The fullest attendance of schools in proportion to the number of children is in Rock County. The number of children under 4 years of age attending is 268; over, 20,219. The average amount of wages paid to male teachers is $15 22; to females, $6 92. The highest wages paid to teachers is in the town of Southport, Racine Co., where the rate is $40 to males, and $20 to females. The whole valuation of school-houses amounts to $79,810 75 in 134 towns; 189 not reporting under this head. These make an aggregate for the whole State of $180,474. The highest valuation of any school-house is $5,000, (in Southport;) the lowest 75 cents. There are 94 unincorporated private schools reported, with an average attendance of 25 pupils; 2,359 children attending them in all. The number of incorporated Academies reported is two.

The amount of public money received is stated to be $17,313 61. The amount expended for teacher's wages is $12,788; for libraries, $725; for other purposes, $1,054; and balance on hand is $2,541.

The School Fund is estimated at $6,000,000. About $300,000 of the valuation of the School Land so far reported is preëmpted.

The Superintendent recommends the adoption of a system of Normal Schools for Wisconsin, similar to that now practiced in Massachusetts and New York, or to combine the peculiar features of each. He reccomends, also, that the support of the State be given to Teacher's Institutes.

WASHING DAY IN GERMANY.

The Boston Traveler has extracts of a letter from an American lady in Germany to her mother, from which the following account of the washing-day, or washing week, is copied:—

It is one of the chief glories of German house-wives to possess abundance of linen, and for the purpose of displaying their wealth, they put off their washing till all is used up—some three weeks, some six, some half a year, and those who are more affluent have but one a year. Every house contains a "Schwartzyash-hammer," where the dirty clothes are kept hung up on poles or lines in the air. When the drawers and presses are nearly empty, two or three washerwomen are hired, who come at two in the morning, take each a cup of coffee and some bread, which is repeated at the usual breakfast time. In the forenoon they again have bread, with wine or cider; dine at twelve; at three or four they again have a cup of coffee with bread, and then wash till supper at eight. They wash in very large oval tubs, at which four or five can stand at once. So it goes on for some days, according to the number of clothes. The remainder of the week is spent in ironing—sheets, pillow-cases, and all the ungathered clothes are mangled, and towels, stockings, children's handkerchiefs, &c. are only half folded. During the whole week no women in the family can think of any thing but the wash, and by the end of it, some have sore hands (for they use lye) and all are out of humor. When I tell them how much less disturbance our week's wash makes, they acknowledge it is a better way, but they say they fear people would think they had but two shirts apiece, if they washed every week. Another answers that if the Americans wash every week, they can do nothing else, for washing week no one can think of anything besides. It made me think of the old lady who wondered how people could comb their heads every day, when she could hardly bear to [illegible]"

STATISTICS OF COTTON SPINNING.

The reports of the Statistical Bureau of Prussia, show that at the end of the year 1840, there were in operation in Prussia 152 cotton spinning machines, with 160,433 spindles. The number of persons employed was altogether 5,883, of which 1,605 were children under fourteen, and 788 adults above fourteen. The provinces of East and West Prussia, and Posen, posses no cotton spinning factories; in Pomerania, Bradenburg, and the province of Saxony, the number is trifling, being altogether but seven factories, with 5,890 spindles. This branch of industry is concentrated, therefore, in Silesia, Westphalia, and the Rhine provinces. In Silesia, there are in three of its larger factories 30,892 spindles in operation, which employ 1,441 work people. Silesia, has also eight smaller factories, in which 4,632 spindles and 308 hands are employed. In Westphalia there are two large factories with 7,162 spindles and 208 hands (at Eilde and Rouendel, in the circle Hagen.) The remaining ninety-one factories are all very small, and employ altogether only 43,220 spindles, and 440 hands. The forty-one factories in the Rhine province employ 109,547 spindles, and 2,163 hands.

The total number of spindles in operation in the Zollverein is, according to Von Districi, 815,000; of which Saxony owns 531,868, and Prussia 170,433; making a total of 712,301 for these two States alone.

The article concludes by exhibiting a general view of the number of spindles at work in various parts of the world.

THE BLASPHEMER'S DEATH.

There is something so terribly startling, says the Monmouth (Eng.) Nerlin, in the following facts, and so fearfully exemplifying the grievous sin and extreme peril of blaspheming the name of the Eternal, that had we not made minute and careful inquiry, even among the very haunts of those living where the occurrence took place, we should have believed the whole to be an exaggerated rumor of some ordinary and every day casuality, rather than the awfully true narrative of a dreadful judgment.

On the morning of Sunday last, a married woman, residing in the Friars Fields, named Sarah Morgan, was observed with an infant in her arms, was observed with an infant in her arms, near her own house, disputing with a woman named Elizabeth Volan. A quarrel of a very violent character, so far as words went, shortly afterwards ensued, and in reply to an observation made by the woman, Sarah Morgan exclaimed that she hoped God Almighty would strike her blind, deaf, dumb, and stiff, if she did not revenge herself upon her in a particular manner. Almost ditrectly she staggered, let her child fall from her arms to the ground, and would herself apparently have fallen, but that her neighbors immediately assisted her into the house.

From the moment that she was thus mysteriously stricken to the hour of her death, at half-past 1 o'clock on Wednesday morning, the only words she uttered, and just after she was borne in, were, "Lord, have mercy on my poor soul—have mercy on my poor children!" and then her voice failed her, and she became dumb, her sense of hearing was destroyed, her eyes became glassy and sightless, and in about sixty hours from the moment in which she was struck down, Death placed his icy hand upon her, and she became a corpse. This fearful event has produced a painful sensation even among the abandoned creatures of the locality in which it occurred.

PEPPER.

One of the most useful vegetables in the hygenia, says the New Orleans Delta, is red pepper. Especially in warm countries has it been considered invaluable as a stimulant and auxiliary in digestion. Among the Spanish and French races it is used in large quantities, and they invariably enjoy most excellent health. Of late, particularly since the cholera visited our State, our planters have begun to discover the virtues of this vegetable, and mingle large quantities of it with the food of their negroes. Considerable attention has been drawn to the selection and cultivation of the best kinds of pepper. Among those who have appreciated the importance of this vegetable, is that admirable planter and exceedingly practical gentleman, Col. Maunsel White, the proprietor of "Deer Range," commonly known as the Model Sugar Plantation. Col. White has introduced into the State the celebrated Tobasco red pepper, the very strongest of all peppers—of which he has cultivated a large quantity, with a view of supplying his neighbors and diffusing it through the State. The Tobasco pepper yields a small red pod, less than an inch in length, and longitudinal in shape. It is exceedingly hot, and but a small quantity of it is sufficient to pepper a large dish of any food. Owing to its oleaginous character, Col. White found it impossible to preserve it by drying, but by pouring strong vinegar on it after boiling, he has made a sauce or pepper decoction of it, which possesses in a most concentrated and intense form all the qualities of the vegetable. A single drop of this sauce will flavor a whole plate of soup or other food. The use of a decoction like this, particularly in preparing the food for laboring persons, would be found exceedingly beneficial in a relaxing climate like this. Col. White has not had a single case of cholera among his large gang of negroes, since that disease appeared in the State. He attributes this to the free use of this valuable agent.

NEW APPLICATION OF LITHOGRAPHY.

Mr. Ackerman, Lithographer in New-York, is said to have brought to the highest perfection of any one in this country, the method so much talked of in the papers, for a few years past, by which copies of engravings may be multiplied to an almost unlimited extent, at very trifling expense, and without the use of the original plates.

An impression from a steel or copper plate may be taken upon prepared paper. This paper is then laid upon the lithographic stone, and passed through the press a number of times, after having been well moistened. The face of the stone receives the impression, and the paper is then carefully removed. This impression is next deepened by an acid, and darkened by prepared ink, when it is ready for use. From one such impression three thousand copies can be taken before it becomes necessary to renew it. Thus it is only necessary to get one good impression from a plate, and it may be multiplied to any extent. Steel plates, therefore, will no longer be needed, for any softer metal can be used, of sufficient firmness to secure one or two fine impressions, and these may be then used while the original is laid aside.

This is a valuable discovery, not only as a scientific fact, but as a practical art. It renders the durability of engravings almost infinite. It will place within the reach of thousands a copy of any of the costly engravings, at a very small sum comparatively, and furnish new means of improving the public taste.

JUDGE RIGHTEOUS JUDGMENT.

The monthly periodical, called the Christian Union, which is understood to be the organ, in some sense, of the "Evangelical Alliance" in America, has for its leading article in the December number a chapter entitled "Editorial Remarks." The object seems to be to show, that in the advocacy of Christian Union some stronger measures are necessary than the mere excitement of kind feelings and pleasurable emotinns. The writer asks—

"Why is it, that amidst the incessant ebullitions of denominational prejudice and passion, which are manifested in our religious press, it is so difficult to enlist in the cause of Christian Union the earnest, active coöperation of the large majority of our clergy?"

And, a little further on, he affirms—

"No character, indeed, is so popular in our day, as that of a man of earnest, fearless determination, whose opinions on all subjects are made up irrevocably and exhibited recklessly, on all possible occasions. Such a Boanerges will always gain a hearing in the religious world: and whether the result of his bravery be to split a church asunder, or to wound the heart of many a Christian brother, his aim will be attained! popularity will be his reward. A similar course is pursued, whether the object be to establish a paper, to build up a church, or to propagate a sect: a bold avowal and unflinching defense of denominational or individual peculiarities is considered essential to success."

Here are three distinct charges laid against three descriptions of people. The "religious press" is charged with being manifestly characterized by "incessant ebullitions of denominational prejudice and passion." The "large majority of our clergy" are charged with not enlisting in earnest and active support of "the cause of Christian Union." And the body of Christian people in our day, "the religious world," are charged with being most attracted and influenced by the class of preachers "whose opinions are made up irrevocably and exhibited recklessly on all possible occasions."

As being connected with all these classes of people, thus arraigned before the public, we put in the plea of not guilty to all these grievous charges. They are wanton and calumnious accusations, which nothing can properly atone for but a frank and humble retraction. It will not do to alledge the advocacy of different sets of opinions and practices by papers of different denominations, to support the charge of "the incessant ebullitions of denominational prejudice and passion." Neither is the failure of the "Evangelical Alliance" to awaken interest or coöperation among the clergy, any proof of their unwillingness to coöperate in "the cause of Christian Union." The notion of regarding the Alliance as the embodiment of that "cause," is purely ludicrous. Neither must the fact that the people had rather listen to earnest argument with a view to zealous action, than to read or hear vapid homilies on Union, closed with exhortations to nothing, be taken as proof that "the religious world" is chiefly pleased with sectarian opinions "exhibited recklessly on all possible occasions." The "Evangelical Alliance" is like a costly and complicated mill, without the millstones. It has a great many wheels to move, and it makes a great deal of noise when in motion; but it grinds no grist, and it yields no meal. It is a great cost without return. [The Independent.

HOW THE LAWERS GOT THEIR SAINT.—"And now, because I am speaking of pettyfoggers, give me leave, saith 'Notes and Queries,' to tell you a story I met with when I lived in Rome. Goeing with a Romane to see some Antiquityes, he showed me a chapell dedicated to one St. Evona, a lawyer of Brittanie, who he said came to Rome to entreat the Pope to give the lawyers of Brittanie a patron, to which the Pope replied, That he knew of no Saint but what was disposed of to other professions. At which Evona was very sad, and earnestly begged of the Pope to think of one for him. At last the Pope proposed to St. Evona that he should goe round the church of St. John de Latera, blindfold, and after he had said so many Ave Marias, that the first Saint he layed hold of should be his patron, which the good old lawyer willingly undertook; and at the end of his Ave Marias, he stopt at Saint Michael's altar, where he layed hold of the Devill, under St. Michael's feet, and cry'd out, This is our Saint, let him be our Patron. So being unblinded, and seeing what a Patron he had chosen, he went to his lodgings so dejected that in a few months after he died." [Tribune.

FUNERALS IN CALIFORNIA.—A correspondent of the Independent writes from San Francisco thus:—"A funeral here is most heart-rending. A mule or horse cart drives up to the door, generally the same day of the death. Perhaps a few men may be seen hanging round, but frequently no minister is in attendance. A coarse pine box, something in the shape of a coffin, stained black, or a dirty red, is then placed on the cart, containing all that is left of poor humanity. Sometimes a glazed black cloth is thrown over it, and away starts the cart. Not unfrequently the roads are so bad, that all descriptions of urging and whipping the poor animal takes place. The few friends who follow, and attempt to reach the burial ground, at some distance from the city, go straggling all about to pick their way through the mud. They reach the ground after frequently sinking to the knees, and there they find scores of new-made graves, and others in process of being dug. They hastily commit their friend to this most miserable looking piece of earth, and escape from it as soon as possible. Every recollection of the last resting place of husband, freind or brother is most revolting; and the imagination sickens at the thought of the charnel house in California."

BROKEN-HEARTED.—Rev. J. L. Hodge, Pastor of the First Baptist Church, Brooklyn, preached a discourse in which he commented on the recent calamity in Hague-st. Among other affecting incidents, he mentioned the death of Mrs. Gulliver, whose funeral he attended that afternoon. Mrs. G., was an aged lady, and had three grandsons in the building at the time of the explosion. The charred remains of two were brought home, and the third has ever since been hanging between time and eternity in consequence of the injuries received. The old lady was as well as her grandsons when they left the house on Monday morning. She loved them—they were her pride. When the mangled remains of two and the disfigured body of a third were brought home, she could not weep, but sat in the old arm chair, the picture of grief. She continued thus, without giving any external evidence of disease, until Friday morning, when she fell asleep—in death. She died of a broken heart.

GROWING POTATOES.—As 'Spring-time of year is coming,' a correspondent of the N. Y. Tribune sends the following seasonable account of a method whereby (he says) people having very little ground, some leisure, and no fear of a little work occasionally, may grow a very decent bin of potatoes for next Fall or Winter:—

"You procure a cask or sugar hogshead with both heads taken out, and place it over some soil prepared in the usual way. You then plant six or more of your seed potatoes, place the cask over them, covering them with earth as usual, and earth them up well when the vine is of the usual hight for hoeing; you keep earthing till a month or so before digging. The vines will grow in some instances six feet, and at every joint there will be a crop of potatoes, so that in some cases ten-times the usual crop will be procured with less labor and land being occupied."

A STRIKING TERMINATION TO A THRILLING STORY.—We find the following in the New Haven Daily Journal, where it appears as editorial. We therefore conclude that it is undoubtedly authentic:—

"Many of our readers will doubtless remember a beautiful ballad written many years ago, by Mrs. Seba Smith, on the death of a woman who perished in the snow-drifts on the Green Mountains of Vermont. True, however, to the instincts of woman's nature, she tore the covering from her person and wrapped her infant in it. The mother was found locked in the arms of death, but the babe survived. That infant, thus preserved from the snow of the mountain, is now Speaker of the Ohio Senate!"

GRAIN FIELDS OF THE WEST.—James Davis, of Waverly, Ross County, Ohio, cultivates 1,800 acres exclusively in Indian Corn, and has this Winter a corn crib filled which is three miles long, ten feet high, and six feet wide. We presume this is the largest cornfield in the world owned by a single individual. On the great Miami Bottom, near Lawrenceburgh, Ind., about 25 miles below Cincinnati, there is one field seven miles long, by three miles broad, extending in fact to Aurora, which has been regularly planted down to corn for nearly half a century. Although corn is one of the most exhausting crops, no manure is ever used, and the soil is as fertile as ever. The Wabash Valley is also remarkable for the extent of its cornfields. We should be glad to see the statistics of some of the corn-fields on the Illinois prairies.

RELIGIOUS CUSTOM.—There is a custom that has long been prevalent throughout Peru and Chili, which to the stranger is quite imposing. It is this: At nine o'clock in the morning, at noon, and at six in the evening, the great bell of the cathedral is tolled for one minute; during this time all business is suspended, every one takes off his hat, is expected to kneel, cross himself, say his prayers, and the more devout to kiss the pavement. In the streets, shops, private dwellings, and hotels, all business, all motion, all conversation, is suspended, until the great bell ceases to toll; then all is life and activity again; the bugles at the palace gates and the convent bells sound merrily, and business and conversation are resumed at the point where they were dropped.

Variety.

There have been ten operatives married every year from a single boarding-house in Lowell, Mass., during the last five years! The matrimonial thermometer always runs up to ten, in hot or cold weather, and makes that the sticking point. One would suppose it would be an object for many single ladies to become inmates of a house so prolific in double blessedness.

The Rev. Mr. Gannett, of Boston, reckons that each individual averages three hours' conversation daily, at the rate of a hundred words a minute, or twenty pages of an octavo volume in an hour. At this rate we talk a volume of four hundred octavo pages in a week, and fifty-two volumes in a year.

A young man in a machine shop in Rochester, was lately caught in the back of his vest by a revolving shaft, and for a few minutes whirled with great rapidity. Before the machinery could be stopped, he was thrown from the shaft entirely denuded of his clothes.

A conductor on the Utica and Schenectady Railroad was lately robbed at Little Falls of $2,000. The money was subsequently found in the cleft of a rock near that village.

If children's clothes are dipped, after washing, into alum water they will not burn into flame. Thus many fatal accidents may be avoided. A solution of Phosphate of Magnesia will effect the same thing.

A bill has been reported in the Virginia house of delegates appropriating $30,000 per year for the removal of free negroes to Africa.

A new locomotive upon the Utica and Syracuse Railroad on its trial trip, consumed in running time but 54 minutes for the fifty six miles.

It is stated that 25 millions of persons die every year, 2,852 every hour, and 47 every minute.

The entire coinage of the four United States mints up to January was $162,182,400.

DeRuyter Institute.

The Academic Year of this Institution for 1849–50 will commence the last Wednesday in August, and continue forty-three consecutive weeks, ending the last Wednesday of June, including a recess of ten days for Christmas and New Year holidays. The Year will be divided into three Terms:

The First, commencing August 29, of 14 weeks.
The Second, " December 5, of 15 "
The Third, " March 20, of 14 "

Encouraged by the success of the School under its present Instructors, the friends of the Institute have made liberal additions to its library, cabinet, and apparatus, thus furnishing ample facilities for illustrating branches taught in the various departments.

The Literary Department is as heretofore under the supervision of Rev. JAMES R. IRISH, A. M., President, assisted by other able instructors. In this Department, especial attention is given to the lower English Branches. Students are also fitted in the Classics to enter the advanced classes in College.

The Department of Natural Science is conducted by Professor GURDON EVANS. In this, Natural Philosophy, Astronomy, Geology, Natural History, [illegible] Chemistry, are taught in a manner of unsurpassed interest. With it is connected the Department of Agricultural Science.

The Farmer's Course is thoroughly scientific; embracing the study of the best authors, with daily recitations. During the Winter Term two hours each day will be spent in the Analytical Laboratory, where students will be instructed in the constitution of soils and ashes of plants, with a minute examination of their constituent elements, and the various modes of testing for their presence.

A course of lectures is given during the Term on Practical Farming, explaining the relation of Geology to Agriculture, the Soil, the Plant, and the Animal, and their various relations, the Rotation of Crops, Feeding Animals, Manures, Draining Lands, &c., &c. For further information see Catalogue.

Besides Globes, Maps, &c., for the illustration of Astronomy, a Newtonian Telescope of high magnifying power has recently been added to the apparatus.

During the Summer Term, Botany and Geology receive special attention, illustrated by excursions to localities where these sciences may be studied as seen in nature. A Geological and Mineralogical Cabinet is accessible to the students.

The Mathematical Department is under the instruction of OLIVER B. IRISH, Tutor. It embraces thorough instruction in Arithmetic, and the higher pure and practical Mathematics, with field exercises in Engineering and Surveying.

Elocution, embracing Reading, Declamation, General Oratory, and Writing, receives the special attention of a competent teacher.

The Teacher's Department will, as formerly, be in operation during the Fall Term, and last half of the Winter Term. Particular attention to this is solicited from all who intend to teach district schools.

The Female Department is under the care of Miss SUSANNA M. COON, a graduate of Troy Female Seminary, a lady every way competent for this responsible station.

No efforts will be spared to render the young ladies of this Seminary truly accomplished, as well in the social relations of life, as in the substantial branches of learning and the higher refinements of education. Ample facilities are furnished for pursuing French, Italian, German, Drawing, Painting, Music on the Piano, and Vocal Music.

Information.

Good board in private families from $1 25 to $1.50. Parents from abroad should furnish their children with very little pocket money, as many temptations may thus be avoided. Those who wish may deposit money with either of the teachers, to be disbursed according to order, without extra charge.

Tuition, to be settled in advance, per term, from $3 00 to $5 00. Extras—For Drawing, $1 00; Monochromatic Painting, $3 00; Oil Painting, $5 00; Chemical Experiments, $1 00; Writing, including Stationery, 50c.; Tuition on Piano, $8 00; Use of Instrument, $2 00; in Agricultural Chemistry, including Chemicals, Apparatus, fires, &c., (breakage extra,) $12 00.

N. B. A daily stage leaves the railroad and canal at Chittenango for this place at 4 o'clock P. M.

NOTES OF A VOYAGE TO CALIFORNIA.—No. 6.

From letters of Dr. J. D. B. STILLMAN to his friends in New York.

SAN FRANCISCO, Aug. 15th, 1849.

We are now encamped about half a mile from the town, in the "Happy Valley." The sandy shore of the bay is in front of us, and around us are sand-hills, covered with a low growth of evergreen oaks. We have four tents, and though our fare is coarse, we feel better than while on ship-board.

You will hear all sorts of stories from this country; but, in a few words, I will tell you the situation of things here. Provisions and goods of every description are cheaper than in New York. Labor is enormously high, though, from the great number here who have not the means to go to the mines, it is not so high as it has been. I should think the population now was about 5000. More than one half of the houses are made of canvass; and a little house for which our company paid about $300, including the freightage from New York, was sold for $2,250. Freights are very high up the river, and higher still to the mines. There is no law established but the natural law of justice; and yet I never saw a better state of society, where the genial influence of woman is not felt. I have not heard of a theft, or crime of any sort, amenable to the laws at home, since I have been here. Fire-arms are thrown aside as useless, and are said to be given away along the road. Many, who go to the mines, return unsuccessful, and report that the exertion of getting gold is too great. We know that there are some who have come to California, because they had an idea that they were to get rich without effort. I have seen many from the mines, and I can say, safely, that a man of ordinary strength, patience and perseverance, will, as soon as he has learned the art, realize all that a reasonable man could expect. It is our intention to winter at the mines, build a log hut, and lay in provision.

This is a strange climate—no rain, but cold fogs, except at mid-day, when it is very warm. It is said to be much pleasanter in winter, when the warm sun and rains change the whole face of the country.

SACRAMENTO CITY, Sept. 13th.

We staid at the "Happy Valley" until the 10th of September, during which time I was not idle. There was much dysentery there, and towards the last of my stay I had considerable business. But the "El Dorado" was not reached; and, at length, the arrangements of our party being completed, we set sail, in company with another party of six, about 8 o'clock A. M., Sunday. Passing through the crowd of shipping, we stood out for the Island of San Angels, just discoverable through the haze. Then we took the flood tide, and swept on into Pablo Bay. The beautiful straits, which connect with Luison Bay, we nearly missed, and were being borne with a strong wind among the heavy rollers on the flats, when we saw a vessel making for the other shore, and, conjecturing the true state of the case, we saved ourselves the disagreeable necessity of being swamped, trying to beat off, or losing our cargo (about a ton and a half.) The straits of Carquines are exceedingly beautiful, and the new city of Benicia is situated here. It was about three o'clock P. M., when we entered Luison Bay. This is said to be dangerous to small boats.

We overtook a whale boat, with one man, before entering the bay, and I got in with him to assist in the management of his sail. He was a "buck-eye," and his boat was badly rigged, and, altogether, we had a bad time of it; but finally reached the mouth of the Sacramento River about night-fall, the iron boat a little ahead. She made signs to us to go ashore, and we hauled up to go to the same place with her. It was a muddy lee shore, and we could not get far enough into the tules to protect us, and had to get off. We then stood for a small willow island opposite. The iron boat reached it, but we could not manage our sail, and were driven off. It was now so dark that those in the other boat could not see where we were, and thought it safest to remain there till morning. We drifted on up the river, (which is here a mile wide,) a distance of four or five miles, before we could find a place where the boat would lie well. At length we ran into the bushes, and made fast to them. We ate what remained of our provisions, which was not enough for a cayote's supper, and taking a pair of blankets, we laid down on the bottom of the boat. I felt the loss of my bedding, for the wind was piercing cold; but the "buck-eye," as he tucked up the blankets around us, made his laconic prayer, "May the Old Gentleman take good care of us," and before I had thoughts of such a thing, he was snoring well. I slept, too, as well as I could, rocked by the waves, and the dew-drops patting in my face. We arose early, and clambered up the largest bush, to see whether, in the night, we had gone the wrong way, as there are many "mouths." We could see nothing but marsh. We endeavored to return, but the wind was against us, and we feared the other boat might have passed us; so we kept on, and fastened to a brig, anchored in the stream. She had been lying there three weeks, waiting for a favorable wind to get down. We found the Captain sick with fever, deserted by all but two men, and entirely destitute of provisions; a boat had gone down for their relief, but had not returned. We had nothing, not so much as a biscuit, for ourselves. We hoisted sail under the lee of the brig, and stood off. The other boat came up soon after, and I stepped out of the stranger's, wishing him good luck, but no good to his boat.

As we passed on, we got beyond the high winds, and had delightful voyaging through the remainder of the day. We passed many vessels aground, that had started several days before us. The delta of this river is very extensive, and intersected in every way with sluses or arms, which make the way difficult to those unacquainted. We continued on till 2 o'clock P. M., but seeing no vessels, or other signs that the stream was frequented, we stopped to lunch and deliberate. I never saw a more beautiful river. Its banks here were lined with oaks, sycamores, willows, and other trees with which my boyhood was familiar. Hawks, jays and black-birds, cranes, ducks, and other birds of our own land, were frequent, and I could hardly realize, at times, as we floated along, that I was so far from my native river. We went on shore, and I climbed up a sycamore to take a view of the country beyond the river's banks. The timbered belt along the shore was narrow, and beyond this the vast plain was covered, as far as the eye could reach, with tule. There were marks of wolves and Indians, but nothing recent. Satisfied that we were on the wrong way, we pulled back ten miles, and took another arm. We soon came to what we thought was called, par excellence, "The Sluse." For many miles, we saw nothing but bulrushes, about six feet high. At night-fall we came to another fork, and, doubtful which course to take, we hauled up to the shore, where we saw a clump of trees. A dead tree made an open spot, and there we effected a landing with hatchet and lantern. We cleared a place under the vines and bushes, built a large fire, made some coffee, and, by dint of pulling and lifting, we opened a place where we could spread our blankets, and spent a pleasant night—for fatigue makes sleep pleasant any where.

We started early the next morning, and were pleased to find that we were very fortunate in landing there, as there was no other dry ground about us; we were indebted, in the darkness of the night, to accident. About 9 o'clock A. M., we found ourselves again in the main river, below where we left it the day before. We continued on that day up the Sacramento, monotonous, but always beautiful. At sundown we landed, built a fire, and prepared our supper. Soon after, a breeze springing up, we continued on all night, and arrived, all in good order, the next morning at this canvas City. Men, mules, oxen and dust! Bales, boxes, barrels, innumerable, piled every where in the open air! The trees are all standing here—magnificent great oaks—and a crowd of ships are fastened to the trees along the bank. Soon we shall start for the head waters of the Sacramento.

LAWTON'S RANCHO, Sacramento River, Oct. 16th.

We broke our camp at Sacramento City on Sunday, Sept. 16th. Our boat was 24 feet long, 5 feet beam, of iron. She was loaded with two tons of provisions, with our party of six. We stopped for the night about two miles below Vernon. We encamped on a high bluff, where, for the first time, I had a view of the extensive prairie, with its droves of wild cattle and horses. Vernon is the village on the right bank of the Sacramento, at the mouth of the Rio Plumas. Opposite is Fremont. A few tents compose these villages. Here we spent the most of the day, in making inquiries of our route. Accounts were somewhat discouraging of the difficulties of the navigation of the river, but we decided to attempt it. Snags, rapids, and hostile Indians, made the result doubtful. The last boat that had attempted it had a conflict with the Indians, and returned. Above the mouth of the Feather river, we stopped to cook dinner, and wait for two other boats—one a whale boat, the other an iron boat (the Alida) heavily laden, and owned by a company of Ohioans, seven in number. At night we camped ten miles above. Here two men who were passengers on board the whale-boat, and who were to assist at the oar, were sea-sick, and determined to forfeit their passage money, and return, thoroughly disgusted with navigation. The river was very winding and rapid, but beautiful in the extreme. I was constantly reminded of the Mohawk, with its high alluvial banks. Willows, button-wood, and oak, continued to be the prevailing trees. Grapes were numerous and fine; in a few minutes we could pick bushels. As we were now beyond the borders of the settlements, our boats kept close together for protection. Tracks of grizzly bear and elk were seen; few were the traces of men. We traveled in such a way as to avoid the extreme heat of the mid-day sun.

Tuesday, 17th, we encamped for nooning in a dry ravine. I left the place to go down the river a short distance, and became so entangled in the rose-bushes and briars, that I began to despair of ever finding my way out, and but for my sheath-knife it would have been night before I returned. As soon as clear from them, I set them on fire, and the whole thicket was soon roaring and cracking in the flames. It alarmed me some, but I had no idea of the extent of the destruction I was making. We hurried into our boat, and left the spot. In the evening, we saw a grizzly bear scrambling up the steep bank. We landed at the spot; and when the Ohio men came up, we all went into the small thicket in pursuit of him, but he had made good his retreat. Encamped that night on a high bank, among the wild peas, and evidences of "grizzlies," in great plenty, for our quiet repose.

Wednesday, we passed a stream coming in on the right. A wild-cat, seated on the bank, was fired at without success, except in driving it away. Just at night, shot a large bird, which proved to be a golden eagle, measuring over nine feet from tip to tip of wings. We made an early encampment, in order to give time for all to get in before sundown. The following day, the current was less rapid, and considerable progress was made. The "Alida" led, and camped early. One of their riflemen shot a fat doe, about a mile from camp, and we had a good supply of the very best meat. The next day, there were traces of Indians. A thin film of mist extended over the plains, beautiful as meadows. We started about 7 o'clock; about ten o'clock, four Indians stood on the bank, all naked, except that one had a red cap on his head. We spoke to them in Spanish, but they made no reply, nor could we tell whether they were friendly or not. Soon after, we saw great numbers, near a hundred, men and boys, running along, and trying to keep up with the boat. Then the opposite bank was swarming; and among them we distinguished one dressed in Spanish costume, and another old man with a blue shirt, who, from the deference paid him by the others, we concluded was the head chief. His face had a benign aspect, that prepossessed me in his favor; but when we heard him ask, in Spanish, "What do you want here?" we thought there was trouble ahead. We made no reply to the question, but asked him how far it was to the head waters of the river. He replied, "Who knows? I don't." I assure you, I felt "a little kind of unsettled" in my mind. We stopped about noon for dinner, and put all our arms in readiness; and when we started again, every man had his gun by his side. Soon after, we saw two armed Indians walking towards us, on a sandy bar, and talking in a very serious, authoritative tone, but none of us could tell what was meant. The principal spokesman was dressed in a blue shirt and pants, with red sash; the others were naked, and we were soon in the presence of twelve armed Indians. Their weapons were bows and arrows and spears; the arrows and spears were pointed with glass and flint. We made friendly demonstrations to them, and they were soon in confidence. We gave them fish-hooks, and they gave us arrows and grapes, which they call "vaumee." They made an equal distribution of the trifles presented them, with the exception of a long silk scarf, which was the lion's share. Having produced the desired impression with their finery, they stripped themselves of it, and disappeared. We were a little fearful of treachery, and for the first time kept sentry during the night. The night passed quietly, however, nor did we see any more of our new friends.

Friday, we passed two boats, descending the river, discouraged by the difficulties of the way. Encamped two miles below the Indian fishery, where the trains by land stop for water. Here are many Indians, who have frequent intercourse with the whites, and we bought salmon of them. The next morning we stopped at the fishery. Here the "Alida" left us to return. The following day we pursued our way. The fish weir is a strong fence or dam thrown across the river, and so interwoven that fish cannot pass. They opened a place for our boat, and we crowded through, but not without unshipping our rudder, and our consequent drifting down upon the dam in the strength of the current; but by passing a line to the shore, we got off. When we stopped for dinner, the Indians swam the stream, and gathered around us; and when we had done, we tendered to them the remainder, which they devoured with avidity. We encamped late, on a high bank, with an extensive prairie view. The party being indisposed to go on the next day, we spent two nights at this encampment. We made ineffectual attempts to get within rifle shot of some deer. Indians were seen lurking about, but were very shy. The second night we discovered the woods and grass on fire, and the flames approaching us rapidly. We kept a watch till late, but finding the flames traveling less rapidly, we all slept. The tracks of bears that we see so frequently, are truly enormous; one that I saw here measured eight inches in breadth. Here we saw some large oaks—one was nearly twenty-five feet in circumference.

We broke camp early the next day, and worked diligently at the oars, but made slow progress. Rapids are so numerous, that one is scarcely passed before you come upon another. We found it necessary to get out into the water, and tow, every half mile. At one time our boat was carried on to a snag, broadside to the current, and all our efforts to extricate her were for a long time unsuccessful. For several days we had a repetition of these scenes. One day we took some Indians to pilot us, and they were quite serviceable, but there was not "bull-dog" enough about them for such service. They visited our camp; we fired a revolver, and they continued to back off, as the barrels were discharged, until, finally, one began to run, which occasioned no little merriment. We entertained them well, and, when they left us, they gave a general shout. Soon after, we visited one of their villages. The acorns, which are a great article of food with the natives, were now ripe, and they were curing them for winter store. They dry them with the shells off, and pack them in layers, in willow cribs. Grass-seed is used by them, and the regular beat of their flails was heard by us, early and late. Their women are the most wretched objects that I ever looked upon—filthy, disgusting slaves. We bought some salmon and moved on.

Sept. 30th, we arrived at Chico Creek, and went over to a rancho owned by a Mr. Potter, where we hoped to have procured some milk—an article I had not tasted since I left home; but he asked six dollars a gallon, which we thought a pretty round price, even for California. He had fine horses and cattle, and a large number of dependent Indians. Here we learned that the terminus of our journey was about twenty-five miles distant. We returned to camp, moved on about six miles, and encamped again. Two of our company were taken sick, and we were all way-worn. Our encampment was a beautiful one. The distant moutains began to show themselves, and wild geese, deer, and ducks, were very numerous, while we were supplied with a profusion of grapes.

To-day, Oct. 6th, we again started on our way. The scenery on the river has changed entirely. Instead of alluvial banks, the shore is a hard clay, often mixed with pebbles, like conglomerate rock. The bed of the river is growing rocky, and willow and cotton wood (which is a species of willow) skirt the river about half the distance. We made some progress to-day, but lost our afternoon's work. We were nearly through the rapid, when the current got a shear on the boat, and in spite of all we could do, we were thrown broadside on the bar. It was late in the day, and by lighting the boat, and some hard work, we got her into the channel, and drifted down for encampment to where we stopped for dinner. We passed a grizzly bear on the bank, but it was getting dark, and it was mistaken for a horse. We shot a blue heron, and the bear wheeled off into the thicket.

We are now, after three weeks, at Lawton's Rancho, on Deer Creek. No boat has ever before ascended the waters of the Sacramento so far, and I doubt if it is ever attempted again. Here we have bought a wagon and cattle and mules of the overland men, and to-morrow we shall go on by land. Hundreds are coming in daily over the mountains, sick and destitute. They meet only with harpies here to prey upon them, and they are often compelled to sell their teams for food enough to last them down to Sacramento City.

SACRAMENTO CITY, Nov. 9th.

I am once more in the land of the living, and among the abodes of men. * * We had the first rain of the season while encamped at the mouth of Deer Creek. It continued three days, and was cold. Our spirits fell; one and another had chills and fever; but the weather improved, and we set out to continue our journey up the country with the oxen and mules. We crossed the creek, and proceeded about three miles, when it was found that the sick could not endure the riding, and the team was not strong enough for the load, and we returned two miles below our old camp, where the animals could find feed. Our own party of six were in condition to travel; none of the others were. We left their baggage and their mules, and, getting an additional number of oxen, we resumed our journey, two days after. Our progress was slow over the dry roads, and we camped from place to place as we found water and feed for the cattle. One of our men was taken sick, and was placed on the baggage. At every place where water was to be found, were camps, nearly all sick, and sometimes so much so as to be dependent on passers-by for water. Few were well, and the farther we advanced the worse it became. We went as far as the Cotton-wood Creek, where we met with Capt. Haines, who led the "Alida." He had gone back, purchased mules, and entered the mountains three weeks before us. He had left his party along the way sick, and was returning, himself yellow and emaciated. We could rely on his statements implicitly; and though we were within one day's journey of the place of our destination, yet from his representations of the paucity of the country in every thing desirable, even feed necessary to support cattle for a single day—of the impracticability of sustaining ourselves through the winter, and many other reasons which I have not time to mention to-night—(I have an unexpected opportunity to send by a steamer of the 15th)—we turned our teams about, and directed our steps again to this place.

I have not time to dwell on the events of the journey down—through a region differing little from prairie country, except that on the streams there is no grass, tree, or water. The streams we crossed are given on Fremont's map. They do not fail in the dry season, but grow smaller as the dry earth drinks them up. We reached the Feather River, and encamped two nights, as we had gone two days without water or food for cattle. It was on the route of the overland men, and it was no uncommon thing to see a small hillock—with a stick at one end, and the name of some deceased way-farer written thereon, in pencil—for the first rain to level again. They were melancholy spots, those uncoffined graves. We crossed the Yuba, Bear, and other golden streams, and reached this place on the same day that the steamer left San Francisco. I have given you a hurried account of our journey; the details you will be entertained with around the social fire. We went 150 miles farther up the river than Wilkes' party thought the river navigable for boats. We endured much from fatigue, hunger, thirst, and sickness; yet we never reached the gold mines.

On arriving at Sacramento City, I made arrangements to leave my nomad life. Proposals were made me, by two physicians in practice here, to join them in a Hospital, one of which I accepted. We have rented a building for $900 per month, and can fill it with patients at from $10 to $25 per day. It is the only thing of the kind in the place, and there is not another house in town, for the sick, that is weather-proof. The physician whom I have joined has been but three weeks in business, and has cleared $900, with business increasing.

HOW MEN DIE WITHOUT THE BIBLE.—The Rev. Dr. Cox, of Brooklyn, at a late Anniversary of the American Bible Society, stated, with thrilling interest, a private conversation he had with a gentleman of renown, (whose name he would not mention,) just before going to his account.

"As for the Bible," said the sage, "it may be true—I do not know."

"What, then," it was asked, "are your prospects?"

He replied in whispers, which indeed were thunders, "Very dark, very dark."

"But have you no light from the Sun of Righteousness? Have you done justice to the Bible?"

"Perhaps not," he replied; "but it is now too late—too late!"

THE STREAM OF DEATH.

BY E. W. CANNING.

There is a stream, whose narrow tide
The known and unknown worlds divide—
Where all must go;
Its waveless waters, dark and deep,
'Mid sullen silence downward sweep,
With moanless flow.

I saw where, at that dreary flood,
A smiling infant prattling stood,
Whose hour had come;
Untaught of ill, it neared the tide,
Sunk, as to cradled rest, and died
Like going home.

Followed, with languid eye, anon,
A youth, diseased, and pale, and wan;
And there alone,
He gazed upon the leaden stream,
And feared to plunge—I heard a scream,
And he was gone.

And then a form, in manhood's strength,
Came bustling on, till there, at length,
He saw life's bound.
He shrunk, and raised the bitter prayer—
Too late!—his shriek of wild despair,
The waters drowned.

Next stood upon that surgeless shore
A being bowed with many a score
Of toilsome years.
Earth-bound and sad he left the bank,
Back turned his dimming eye, and sunk—
Ah, full of fears.

How bitter must thy waters be,
O Death! How hard a thing, ah me!
It is to die!—
I mused—when to that stream again
Another child of mortal men
With smiles drew nigh!

"'T is the last pang," he calmly said;
"To me, Death, thou hast no dread;
Saviour, I come!
Spread but thine arms on yonder shore—
I see! ye waters bear me o'er!
There is my home!"

HOWARD'S HABITS OF LIVING.

The manner in which the Philanthropist, amid his enormous labors, was preserved from exhaustion and disease, is shown in the following extracts:—

Considering that his health had previously been so delicate, it is not a little astonishing that no fatal effects should have followed his daring intrusion into so many fever-haunted dungeons. In truth, he appeared to bear a charmed life. Whatsoever the danger into which he entered in the cause of the wretched, he came out unscathed. God was about his footsteps. His trust was in Almighty aid, and in the holiness of his own intention; and his Father, the Friend of the Wretched, did not fail him in his hour of need. The secondary reasons for his impunity are also worth considering. Howard ate no flesh—drank no wine nor spirits—bathed in cold water daily—ate little, and that at fixed intervals—retired to bed early—rose early. Such was the programme of his personal course. This regimen enabled him to penetrate fearlessly dungeons into which gaolers and physicians even, dared not follow him. From his youth upward—the lesson of abstinence had no doubt been learnt in his father's puritanical household—his diet had always been of the simplest kind, and as he advanced in years the habit of temperance grew stronger and stronger.

Some details of his way of living while at Warrington have been preserved—which, as they were of a kind with his usual habits, are not unworthy of record in this history. Every morning—though it was then in the depth of winter—he arose at two o'clock precisely, washed, performed his orisons, and then worked at his papers until seven, when he breakfasted and dressed for the day. Punctually at eight he repaired to the printing office to inspect the progress of his sheets through the press. There he remained until one, when the compositors went to dinner. While they were absent, he would walk to his lodgings, and, putting some bread and dried fruit into his pocket, sally out for his customary exercise—generally a stroll in the suburbs of the town—eating, as he trudged along, his hermit fare, and drinking therewith a glass of cold water begged at some cottager's door. This was his only dinner. By the time that the printers returned to the office, he had usually, but not always, wandered back. Sometimes he would call upon a friend in his way, and spend an hour or two in pleasant chat—a recreation he rather liked; for, though anything but a gossip, he had all the social instincts largely developed in his nature. At the press he remained until the men left off their day's toil, and then either retired to his modest lodgings, took a simple dish of tea or coffee, performed his household religious services—a sacred duty, which he never under any circumstances, whether at home or abroad, suffered himself to omit—and retired to rest at an early hour; or, repaired to the residence of the Atkinses, to consult with the future doctor upon any corrections or alterations which might have occurred to him during the day; in which case also he retired at his regular hour.

Beyond the safeguard of this severe and patriarchial regimen, the precautions taken by Howard to repel contagious diseases were very simple at first—such as smelling a phial of vinegar, while in the infected cell, and washing and changing his apparel afterwards; but, in process of time, even these expedients were abandoned as unnecessary. The question of how he preserved himself free from contagion being often pressed upon him, he replied—and his words are eminently note-worthy—"Next to the free goodness and mercy of the Author of my being, Temperance and Cleanliness are my preservatives. Trusting in Divine Providence, and believing myself in the way of my duty, I visit the most noxious cells, and while thus employed, 'I fear no evil.'" And in this belief and fearlessness of ill, he passed all perils—like Shadrach, Meshach, and Abednego of old through the fiery furnace of the Persian King—without a hair of his head being injured. In all ages of the world such has been the defensive armor of heroes and martyrs—such the inspiration and the impulse of all great thoughts and holy deeds!

SILENT INFLUENCINGS.

We do not always understand how powerful these are; if we did, we should be almost afraid to live. When some incident occurs to remind us of it, or some noticeable illustration of it is given in our experience, we are startled for the moment into surprise and awe. Our ordinary life seems wonderful and fearful; it becomes invested upon the instant with an immeasurable responsibility.

A parent lets fall a remark before a thoughtful and sensitive child, which arrests his attention. It may have been merely the tone in which it was uttered, or the peculiar collocation of its words, or some equally insignificant circumstance connected with it which makes him notice it, and the parent has no idea that he has noticed it. He hardly thinks of it, indeed, again, but loses it in the instant rush and press of life. But it sticks for some reason in the child's thoughts, and will not out; and, years after, it is freshly remembered. A whole system of action and belief has sometimes been drawn out of such a remark, and the destiny has been shaped by it.

A man of cultivation and social attractiveness, especially if he hold some position of influence and distinction, as a journalist, a statesman, a professional man, is often little aware—because he has strangely forgotten the days of his own boyhood—how wide and permanent are the influences he leaves upon the society he passes through. What he says, may not be remembered; but what he is, will be. Many think of him with pleasure, and with a secret wish to know him and be guided by him, of whom he does not think at all. And if his life and words consistently show forth the true, generous, high-minded character, he will do much toward training the quick and eager minds about him, to the same high qualities. The memory of his example will repress their inclinations to wrong, and will stimulate to new effort for nobleness of character and largeness of culture. So a beautiful, accomplished and winning woman, is the cynosure of more eyes than she herself knows of, and there are many young and ardent hearts, in her sex and in the other, who love to think of her, to imitate her social manners, to train their thoughts and words into the fashion of hers; whose hope it is, and the star of their desire, some day to win her thought and regard. Even after she has passed away from the earth, the thought of her gentleness and grace and truth of character, may linger like an essence about the thoughts, and with regret for her loss, will mingle the joyful recollection of her excellencies, and the glad hope of meeting her in heaven.

It is a wonderful, intricate, sensitive system—this of human thought and life. The influences that circulate through it are silent as light, and yet binding as gravity. They pass noiselessly into the soul, but they stand there oftentimes more durably than if cut into Egyptian granite. They imbue and characterize the spirit indelibly. It is a fearful thing to live and move—either as influencing or as being influenced—in such a system; and it gives motives to individual watchfulness and holiness, and the continuous exercise of all gracious and kindly affections, which it seems impossible to surpass. OLD PSLAM TUNES.

To forward the favorable reception of such Tunes, two facts as to their original intention must be practically borne in mind. They were sung faster than we usually sing hem, and, what is far better, by a far greater number of voices. It is a great mistake to suppose that the old tunes should be sung in a heavy, drawling style. Our forefathers in the church were cheerful Christians. A psalm of a dozen verses was but short to them. Hence, as well as from other circumstances, it is clear that they sung in a quicker and livelier manner than is commonly conjectured. The Old Hundredth tune is made a dirge in our days; but in theirs it was a joyous and animated canticle.

"All people that on earth do dwell,
Sing to the Lord with cheerful voice."

In like manner, York tune, which is shelved among the dull and obsoleto, was, little more than a century ago, the liveliest and most popular tune of the entire kingdom. But to hear old tunes to advantage they must be sung in old style. Not only must they be sung with decent gravity and cheerful sanctity, but by masses of people, by a multitude of voices, "by all the people together," as the original directions state. Six thousand voices were wont to be heard at St. Paul's Cross; "three or four thousand singing at a time in a church in this city is but a trifle," said the excellent Roger Ascham in a letter from Augsburg, dated the 14th of May, 1551. [Hackett's National Psalmist.

WIRT'S OPINION OF DR. WATTS.

"I bought, the other day," he says, in a letter to his wife, "a copy of Watts' Psalms and Hymns. Do you know that I ever think of the man with such emotions as no human being ever inspires me with? There is a loftiness in his devotion, and an indifference, approaching to contempt, for the praise or censure of the beings of this nether world, which is heroic and sublime. It is so awfully grand, that even old, surly, growling Johnson, with all his high-church pride and arrogance, felt its influence, and scarcely dared to whisper a criticism in his life of Dr. Watts, which is a curiosity in this particular. What a soul of celestial fire, and, at the same time, of dissolving tenderness, was that! How truly did he devote all the faculties of that soul to the contemplation of the glory of God and of the Saviour! He was, indeed, 'ever journeying home to God;' and seems to have stopped half way between earth and heaven, to compose this excellent book. His was a wrapt soul, and I never feel my own worthlessness so forcibly as when I read his compositions, and compare my spirit with his."

The Sabbath Recorder.

New York, March 14, 1850.

THE LATE SABBATH CONVENTION.

Owing to the circumstances under which our sketch of the late Convention at Peterboro was prepared, we had no time for those reflections which the occasion seemed to demand. The Call for the Convention was so liberal and comprehensive, as to embrace not only the observers of the seventh, but those of the first day of the week, and not only the friends, but the enemies of the Sabbath. It was designed to have the meeting conducted on the most catholic principles, to throw open the door for free discussion, and to repudiate that narrowness of spirit which looks only to the triumph of a particular party. Under such circumstances, it was reasonable to expect, that the Convention would be attended by a goodly number of all parties. In this, however, we were disappointed. Our own denomination was respectfully represented; but of other persuasions there was not a man to show his face, otherwise than as a mere spectator, except Mr. Crozier of this city, Mr. Wheaton of Syracuse, and Mr. Stowe, a minister of the village. Why was this? It is true, these brethren defended their respective views most manfully, especially the two first named. As for Bro. Stowe, he seemed not to take very decided ground. The anti-sabbatarians could not have been more ably represented, than they were in Bro. Crozier and Bro. Wheaton; still we should have been better pleased if they had not been left to stand alone. But where were the advocates of the change of the Sabbath? Where were those who have been moving the elements, for the last ten or a dozen years, to bring about the universal sanctification of Sunday? Where were Dr. Edwards and his coadjutors? Not one of them came near us. Where they were, we pretend not to know; but we are certain, that they could not have been uninformed of our convocation. To us it looks as if they were disposed to shrink from the light. Yet they will continue, no doubt, to assert their favorite dogma, with as much effrontery as if it were an unquestionable element of God's truth, and even to invoke the aid of civil law in its behalf. We shall hear of their holding Conventions through the length and breadth of our land, from whose deliberations free discussion will be promptly rejected; and proclaiming, with trumpet blast, that God requires men to keep their Sunday, upon pain of his eternal displeasure. So they will go on, and never will they venture within reach of an argument, till the clamors of the honest common people shall drive them to it. Now we call heaven and earth to witness, that we have not been sparing of efforts to bring these pseudo-reformers to a better sense of propriety. Some years ago, a so-called Sabbath Convention was held in Utica. One of our worthy ministers was present, and, at first, was allowed to participate in the proceedings; but as soon as it was discovered that he was a Seventh-day Baptist, a gag was put upon his mouth. Again, a Convention was assembled at Saratoga. Two Seventh-day Baptist ministers were present, and endeavored to obtain a hearing. But the wire-workers got a resolution passed which effectually shut their mouths. The memorable "Lord's Day Convention" at Baltimore was held. Sabbatarians were there also. But even before they had opened their lips, and while Messrs. Magruder and Lemon, of the order commonly called Campbellites, were expressing some doubts of the propriety of calling the first day of the week the Sabbath, a clamor was raised that the troublesome Seventh-day Baptists were in the assembly; and, if our memory serves us correctly, cries of "put them down" were shouted from all parts of the house. These are specimens of the manner in which we are generally received, when we attempt the introduction of our views. And now a Convention has just come off, at which these very advocates of the first day of the week were perfectly welcome to appear, and express themselves freely; but not one of them ventured to show his head. How much confidence they manifest in the strength of their own views, the public will not be slow to judge. Still we hope the time will come, when they will be shamed into a more liberal course.

We are under the impression, that the late Convention will be found to have produced good results. The influence may not be very extensive, beyond the vicinity where it was held, but we think that the people there must have learned, that there is a strength in the argument for the Bible Sabbath, which they never before dreamed of. Those who have never before been brought into contact with us, are wont to cherish the idea that we are a sort of Judaizing sect, who lay a great deal of stress upon works of righteousness, and make very little account of the Saviour. The manner in which our sentiments are often introduced to their notice by their teachers, who ought to know better, contributes not a little to this impression. What is more common, than for our first-day brethren, when attempting to confute our views, to spend a great deal of time in showing that "by the works of the law no flesh can be justified"—that "Christ is the end of the law for righteousness"—that believers "are not under the law, but under grace," &c.? As if we did not as fully believe these points as they do themselves! Hence the impression with their hearers, that our doctrine in respect to the Sabbath rests upon a denial of these fundamental principles. But the time will come when such dishonorable methods of treating us will be fully exposed. We are not Judiazers; on the contrary, we cling to the cross of Christ as our only hope. But we believe that whosoever transgresseth the law committeth sin (1 John, 3 : 4;) and is Christ the minister of sin? God forbid.

MINUTES OF THE SABBATH CONVENTION,

HELD AT PETERBORO, MADISON CO., N. Y., ON THE 27TH AND 28TH DAYS OF FEBRUARY, 1850.

The Convention assembled in the meeting-house of the "Church of Peterboro," on the fourth day of the week, at 11 o'clock A. M., and was temporarily organized by calling Eld. Eli S. Bailey to the chair.

Prayer was offered by Eld. W. B. Maxson.

Gerrit Smith, T. B. Brown, and James Hubbard, were appointed a Committee to nominate officers for the Convention.

After a brief consultation, the Committee submitted the following nomination, which was adopted by the Convention:—

President—Eld. JAMES BAILEY, of Genesee, N. Y.
Vice-President—Eld. NATHAN V. HULL, of Alfred, N. Y.
Secretaries—Eld. JAMES H. COCHRAN, of Berlin, Rensselaer Co., N. Y., and EPHRAIM MAXSON, of West Edmeston, Otsego Co., N. Y.

On motion, a Committee, consisting of Gerrit Smith, J. W. Morton, and T. B. Brown, was appointed to prepare business for the action of the Convention.

During the absence of the Committee, the Convention was addressed by Eld. Eli S. Bailey, on the authority of Christian practice.

A motion was adopted, extending the privilege of membership to all who might choose to have their names enrolled.

The Business Committee reported a series of resolutions for the action of the Convention. Their report having been accepted, the resolutions were called up in their order for discussion. The first resolution was as follows:—

1. Resolved, That the Bible is exclusive authority in all matters of religion.

Pending the discussion of this resolution, the Convention adjourned for one hour.

AFTERNOON SESSION.

Prayer was offered by Eld. J. R. Irish, of DeRuyter. The first resolution was farther discussed, and adopted.

The second resolution was called up, and after much discussion was adopted, as follows:—

2. Resolved, That, whilst we learn from the Scriptures, that Marriage and the Sabbath were given to the human family in the beginning; and that, whilst we learn from other portions of the same Scriptures, that Jesus Christ explained both of these institutions, and vindicated both of them from Jewish abuses and perversions; we do not learn, that either Marriage or the Sabbath was abolished.

The discussion of this resolution occupied the remainder of the afternoon and evening. During the discussion, various phases were presented by those who participated in it, among whom were Elders Crozier and Morton of New York, Crandall of New Jersey, Timothy Stowe and Gerrit Smith, Esq. of Peterboro, N. V. Hull of Alfred, Varnum Hull of Scott, E. S. Bailey of Brookfield, Mr. C. A. Wheaton of Syracuse, and others.

SECOND DAY—MORNING SESSION.

After prayer, the discussion of the second resolution was resumed, and was brought to a close only at the close of the session.

AFTERNOON SESSION.

Prayer by Eld. Joshua Clarke.

The third resolution reported by the Committee, was taken up for consideration:—

3. Resolved, That it is not the province of men to abolish, or in any wise change, a law of God; nor was this the province of the Son, who came into the world, not to destroy, but to fulfill, and who testified, that, "till heaven and earth pass, one jot or one tittle shall in no wise pass from the law, till all be fulfilled;" nor can it be true, that with "the Father of Lights is no variableness, neither shadow of turning," if He needs to amend His laws.

On motion, this resolution was divided into three separate items, as follows:—

(1.) That it is not the province of men to abolish, or in any wise change, the law of God;

(2.) Nor was this the province of the Son, who came into the world, not to destroy, but to fulfill, and who testified, that, "till heaven and earth pass, one jot or one tittle shall in no wise pass from the law, till all be fulfilled;"

(3.) Nor can it be true, that with the Father of Lights is no variableness, neither shadow turning, if He need to amend His laws.

The first item was adopted without debate or dissent. The second was discussed by Messrs. Smith, Morton, L. Crandall, Crozier, V. Hull, and others, and adopted, a few members voting in the negative. The third was adopted without discussion, but not without some dissenting votes.

The fourth resolution was:—

4. Resolved, That, notwithstanding the heart of man can, in its atheism and madness, conceive that this world is the offspring of chance, the Sabbath is, nevertheless, a sublime and perpetual monument, both of the existence of God, and of his creation of the world.

This resolution was advocated by T. B. Brown, and adopted, with one or two dissenting votes.

The fifth resolution, explained and enforced by G. Smith and L. Crandall, was adopted, nem. con., as follows:—

5. Resolved, That the Heaven-commanded rest from labor on the Sabbath, affords special opportunities for the private and public worship of God, which it is exceedingly criminal to neglect.

Upon the sixth resolution, there was some discussion, which was participated in by N. V. Hull, Irish, Crozier, Wheaton, and others. It was adopted, a few voting against it, as follows:—

6. Resolved, That whatever propriety there might be in subjecting the first day of the week to a peculiar observance, such observance would not make the first day of the week "the Sabbath of the Lord God."

The seventh resolution was the following:

7. Resolved, That to abolish the observance of the seventh day as the Sabbath, is to abolish the Sabbath.

Short addresses, both in favor of and in opposition to the resolution, were made by several speakers. It was nevertheless adopted, a few voting against it.

The eighth, and last, resolution reported by the Business Committee, was adopted, after being advocated by several speakers, and opposed by J. W. Morton, of New York:

8. Resolved, That civil penalties for the violation of the Sabbath are to be condemned—not only for the reason that they are incompatible with free conscience and free religion, but, also, for the reason that they prejudice the cause of the Sabbath.

Adjourned for one hour.

EVENING SESSION.

Prayer was offered by Eld. S. B. Crandall, of Brookfield, Madison Co., N. Y.

The Business Committee submitted for the consideration of the Convention, an Address to the Christians of the United States. This was taken up, and after some slight amendments adopted, as given below.

The following resolution, submitted by Bro. J. W. Morton, was adopted:—

9. Resolved, That those who represent the observers of the seventh day as Sabbath-breakers because they secularize the first day, are, in our judgment, guilty—though perhaps unwittingly—of a flagrant violation of the ninth commandment.

The Convention also adopted the following:—

10. Resolved, That the Sabbath is to be sanctified by a holy resting, all that day, even from such worldly employments and recreations as are lawful on other days, and by spending the whole time in the public and private exercises of God's worship, except as much as is to be taken up in works of necessity and mercy.

It was also voted, that the proceedings of this Convention, with the Resolutions and Address, be forwarded to the Sabbath Recorder, the Christian Contributor, and the Liberty Party Paper, for publication.

Also, that the thanks of this Convention be tendered to the people of Peterboro for their kindness and hospitality towards us during the session.

It was farther Resolved, That this Convention adjourn to meet in Berlin, Rensselaer Co., N. Y., on the fourth and fifth days of the week, May 15 and 16, 1850.

JAMES BAILEY, President.
JAMES H. COCHRAN,
EPHRAIM MAXSON, } Secretaries.

The Address.

To the Christian People of the United States:

DEAR BRETHREN,—The age in which we live is emphatically the age of investigation. Doctrines and systems that were once supposed to be beyond dispute, are now become subjects of the fiercest contention, while nothing can be said to be truly stable, but that which resists all efforts, both human and satanic, to overturn it. How refreshing to the true believer is the thought, that the system of Revealed Truth, with all its doctrines, its promises, its laws, its ordinances, and its everlasting rewards, is one that neither earth nor hell shall shake!

We are of the number of those who rejoice, and will rejoice, at every honest effort to "try the spirits" that are abroad in the earth, by comparing their teachings with those of Infinite Wisdom; and it affords us no small gratification, to find that the multitudes of the sons of Adam, to whom the voice of heavenly wisdom is addressed, have begun at length to realize the importance o hearing that voice for themselves, and of weighing, under a sense of individual responsibility, the important lessons it inculcates.

The doctrines commonly taught on the subject of the Sabbath, are among those which have, for several centuries, been call in question by many, and are especially controverted at this present time. Many of them, we think, we have "weighed in the balances of the sanctuary," and found "wanting." We are aware that, on this subject, most of you feel little uneasiness—little fear of being found in the wrong. But we beseech you not to be too confident of being right. God's commandment is exceeding broad, and perhaps you have not yet examined it in all its length, its breadth, its height, and its depth; nay, it is possible, that few of you have ever been led, in the good Providence of God, to give to this whole subject that careful examination which its importance demands.

The following are a few of the doctrines which have been preached to us, on this subject, and which, after mature deliberation, we have felt constrained to reject:—

1. Some of you have told us, that the first day of the week is the genuine Sabbath of the fourth commandment. We cannot conceive how this can be, inasmuch as this commandment requires the sanctification of "the Sabbath day," or "the day of the rest," which seems to refer to the rest of God on the seventh day of the first week, the "day" of which would be the same day, relatively, in every succeeding week. Besides, the commandment says, that "the Lord blessed and hallowed the seventh day," but affords no such information in regard to any other.

2. Others of you have told us, that the fourth commandment has been changed, and in part abolished; namely, that that part of it which enjoins the rest of the seventh day has been superseded by a new law requiring the sanctification of the first. All we ask is, that you prove what you assert from the Scriptures. Find this rescinding act, and the new law to which you refer, and we will cheerfully bow to their decision. We cannot find them.

3. Others of you tell us, that all God requires of us is, to keep holy the seventh part of our time, and that it is no difference which part we keep. This would do very well, if God had actually made use of this language; but he has not. If he had meant, "Remember the seventh part of your time, to keep it holy," he could, and we think he would, have said so. But he has not said so; therefore we conclude that such was not his meaning. You may think it is no difference which day of the seven we keep; but God has made a difference, by specifying the seventh, and leaving the others out of the question.

4. Others of you have told us, that there was no Sabbath prior to the Exodus of the Israelites, and that it was instituted and first kept in the wilderness. We have sought for the teachings of God's Spirit on this subject, and find, that God "rested the seventh day from all his work which he had made; and God blessed the seventh day, and sanctified it, because in it he had rested (or kept Sabbath) from all his work which God created and made." Genesis, 2 : 2, 3. Now, according to this Scripture, there was a Sabbath before the Exodus, and God himself kept it. Nor can we believe that God "rested" because he was weary, but to afford an example to man, whom he had created in his own image, and who, for that reason, could not but rest in like manner. Besides, we find, in reading the account of the Exodus, that while the rulers of the congregation had forgotten this institution, the common people generally remembered it, and commenced observing it in the wilderness, not only without any special order to do so, but in apparent contradiction to an express command. Exodus, 16 : 19, 20—"And Moses said, let no man leave of it till the morning. Notwithstanding, they hearkened not unto Moses; but some of them left of it until the morning, and it bred worms, and stank; and Moses was wroth with them." Verse 22—"And it came to pass, that on the sixth day they gathered twice as much bread, two omers for one man; and all the rulers of the congregation came and told Moses."

5. Others of you have told us, that the fourth commandment was peculiar to the Jews, was abrogated at the death of Christ, and is no longer law to God's creatures. This would perhaps justify the rejection of the ancient Sabbath, were there any evidence of its truth. But we cannot see how you know that this commandment was peculiar to the Jews. Do you say this, because it was first given to them in a written form? So were the other nine—so was the whole of "the Law, the Prophets, and the Psalms." You admit that blasphemy and murder are sinful, that is, contrary to law; how, then, can you assert that Sabbath-breaking, which is forbidden by the same inspired code, is not a sin in the sight of Heaven? What text of Scripture says so, directly? Or, do you make this assertion on the ground that the Apostle has said, (Colossians 2 : 16, 17,) "Let no man therefore judge you, in meat or in drink, or in respect of an holy day, or of the new moon, or of the Sabbath days; which are a shadow of good things to come: but the body is of Christ?" Is it not evident, that the Apostle is here speaking of Sabbaths which were "a shadow of good things to come," while the body was of Christ? Were there not many Sabbaths given to the ancient church, besides the weekly Sabbath? and is it not almost always spoken of, in the writings of the Evangelists and Apostles, in the singular number? We cannot see how you claim the right to assume, that the weekly Sabbath is, or ever was, "a shadow of good things to come," of which Christ was the substance.

6. Finally, we are told by some of you, that if we keep the Sabbath we reject our Christian liberty. What do you mean by liberty? Do you mean, the right to do what God forbids, and neglect what he commands? Do you mean, absolute independence of Him that made you? What pleasure or profit could you derive from breaking the Sabbath, if you even had a right to do so? Alas! we fear that you who take this ground hate the Sabbath of the Lord, and can not, till your hearts are powerfully stirred by the Holy Ghost, count it "a delight, the holy of the Lord, honorable." The liberty to break the Sabbath—what is it? Most heartily do we beseech God to deliver us from all such liberty!

Brethren, we do invite your serious attention to this subject. However you may boast the strength of your convictions, your conduct always betrays an abiding consciousness of the weakness of your cause. Rarely indeed have we succeeded in persuading any of you to look us in the face, and give a reason of the hope that is in you. There are occasional and honorable exceptions to ~~this~~ rule; but they are like angels' visits, few and far between. Why is this? Are we so contemptibly weak, or so hopelessly profligate, that you consider us beneath respect, or beyond the pale of sympathy? Or are you fearful lest your fine gold may turn to dross, in passing through the fire of controversy? Gird up your loins like men, and meet the discussion of this subject. You may put it off a little farther from you, for the time being, but you cannot stifle it. Why do yon hesitate? If you are on the side of the "Lord of the Sabbath," and he has abolished this institution, or given us another in its place, we tell you, He is able to carry you through, and to cover us with confusion. But if, on the other hand, we are in the right—if we are on the Lord's side—then rest assured, that the strongest among you shall be shorn of his strength, while the Lord alone shall be exalted.

Protests.

☞ A protest to the second resolution was drawn up by H. P. Crozier, of New York, signed by himself and some others, and presented to the Convention, as follows:—

"The undersigned, believing the institution of the Sabbath to be abolished, and believing that the first day of the week is, by the resurrection of Jesus Christ, and by the example of the primitive church, consecrated to rest and religious worship, as a distinct Christian institution, do protest against the foregoing resolution."

Mr. Morton also gave notice that he should protest against the eighth resolution, which he did as follows:—

The undersigned respectfully protests against the adoption of the eighth resolution, as above, for the following reasons:—

1. According to that resolution, the Jews, God's peculiar people, who were restrained from Sabbath-breaking by civil enactments, had, for fifteen hundred years, neither liberty of conscience nor freedom of religion—which I cannot believe.

2. Moses and the elders of Israel did, as civil rulers, apprehend and imprison a man for violating the Sabbath, at a time when no law existed on the subject besides the fourth commandment. See Numbers 15 : 32—36. They seem to have regarded this commandment as a part of the law of the land, and to have enforced it as such. But if civil rulers had a right to enforce this law then, and were empowered to do so by the commandment itself, they ought, it seems to me, to have the same right now; for the Decalogue was in no part—in no sense—Jewish.

3. The sphere and duties of civil government are no where in the Bible definitely pointed out, except in the Mosaic Code, and in the approved examples of those who, from time to time, administered it. Neither that code, nor those examples, can be viewed by this Convention as a rule of legislation; for both do most unequivocally establish the very principle which this resolution so pointedly condemns. See Exodus 31 : 12—16, and Nehemiah 13 : 15—22. Now it seems to me, that we must either take the Bible as it is, or reject it altogether, as a rule of civil legislation. If we reject it, we have nothing left but the conscience of erring man, as affected by the light of nature, which has, at one time or another, sanctioned every enormity done under the sun. I am not prepared to say to the civil magistrate, "Lay aside your Bible, and learn your sphere of action from the light of nature."

4. This resolution seems to lay the blame of Sabbath desecration on the Author of the institution. Having established civil magistrates over the land of Israel, he ordained that they should punish the Sabbath-breaker, which they continued to do for several hundred years. This, says the resolution, "prejudices the cause of the Sabbath." But it was done by divine authority. Who, then, is most to blame, if the Sabbath has fallen into disuse? Did God know that these penalties were prejudicial to the Sabbath cause? or, knowing it, did he intend to kill his own institution?

5. The doctrine, upon which this resolution is evidently founded, that civil government has no right to punish the violators of the first table of the Decalogue, is, in my humble opinion, a mere speculation. It is not taught in the Scriptures. It reflects upon the wisdom and justice of God, as displayed in that only model of civil government to which he has ever affixed the seal of his approbation. It is contrary to sound reason. It both begets and nurtures various kinds of licentiousness, and would, I fear, if carried out, lead to infidelity, if not to atheism.

J. W. MORTON.

WORKS OF VARIOUS MISSIONARY BOARDS.

The Alabama Methodist Conference met in Columbus, Miss., in January. During its session, the Secretary read the following interesting statement of the comparative operations of the different Missionary Boards in the United States. He remarks:—

"The American Board employ 407 missionaries—more than one-half of whom are females—in the foreign field, and their revenue last year was $291,705, received principally from the Congregationalists, New School Presbyterians, and Dutch Reformed, which churches contribute about $100,000 besides for Home missions. The Baptist Missionary Union employ 109 missionaries in the foreign field—at a cost of $115,000, besides $30,000 for Home missions. The Presbyterian Board employ 63 missionaries—12 of them females—in the foreign field: their revenue was $110,209, besides $67,000 for Home missions. The Methodist Episcopal Church, north, has 55 missionaries in the foreign field, and 102 German and Swedish missionaries laboring among the foreign population in the United States, together with other Home missionaries; their revenue is $84,045. The Methodist Episcopal Church, south, has but two mission families in the foreign field; it employs missionaries among the Germans, the Indians, and the blacks in the United States, besides other Home missionaries; its revenue last year was $73,000. It is not necessary to particularize the movements of the smaller sects. Upon examination it will be found, that the churches which support the American Board contributed one dollar per member, the Presbyterian ninety-three cents, the Baptist Union twenty-one cents, the Methodist Episcopal Church, north, not quite thirteen cents, the Methodist Episcopal Church, south, about sixteen cents per member."

VALUE OF RELIGIOUS PAPERS.—A minister in North Carolina, in sending to the Richmond Watchman and Observer the advance subscription for five new subscribers, says that although a goodly number of papers are taken in his congregation, still he wishes that there were more, because he considers them "invaluable helps" to the ministry. The man who reads a religious newspaper regularly, will almost certainly be found a more wakeful, attentive, and thoughtful listener on the Sabbath, than one who does not; and such an one, when objects of benevolence are presented, will as certainly give more than his neighbor who does not subscribe for any paper containing items of religious intelligence. It is a well-established fact, that the great plans of benevolence in which the church is engaged, are almost entirely sustained by the patrons of religious papers.

LICENSE LAW IN MASSACHUSETTS.—A bill is before the Legislature of Massachusetts, which treats the business of licensing liquor-selling very much to our liking. It provides that liquor may be sold in less quantities than 28 gallons, for medicinal and mechanical purposes only, by persons employed by the selectmen of towns and mayors of cities; as many to be appointed and paid for the duty as the public convenience may require. Persons not thus appointed, who shall sell in less quantities than 28 gallons, are to be punished by imprisonment not less than ten nor more than sixty days, and to be fined $20. On a second conviction, they are to be imprisoned for twice the length of time. No licenses to be granted except such as are provided for above.

DEATH OF MISSIONARIES.—Our paper of last week conveyed intelligence of the recent death of two missionaries in China. Several other deaths among missionaries are announced in the English papers. Two of the London Missionary Society's laborers—the oldest and the youngest—have fallen. One of them, Rev. J. H. Schemelen, was 72 years old, and had spent the last twenty years at Kouraggas, in South Africa. The (English) Baptist Missionary Society has also lost two missionaries—Rev. J. Davis of Ceylon, and Rev Joseph Merrick of the African Mission.

ABOLITIONISM IN NORTH CAROLINA.—At a numerous meeting of the citizens of Ogle county, North Carolina, on the 25th ult., a series of resolutions was adopted, the spirit of which is somewhat at variance with the popular voice in that quarter when slavery is spoken of. The first resolution "hails with joy" the admission of California, with a constitution prohibiting slavery and slave traffic within her borders. The second condemns Mr. Clingman, and other of their representatives, for resisting the Wilmot Proviso and other kindred measures. The third extends to their brethren of the Northern States, who have instructed their Senators to resist the introduction of slavery into the new territories, their warmest sympathies, and earnestly hopes that they will persevere and succeed in their good intentions. The fourth comes vigorously down upon Mr. Buchanan for conceding to Texas "a great part of New Mexico, for the purpose of establishing in it domestic slavery." The fifth "frowns down every attempt to dissolve this glorious Confederacy, and will seek to maintain the Union forever in its pristine purity." The sixth solicits the editors of all journals favorable to the cause of liberty, North and South, to notice these proceedings.

EXHIBITION OF LANGUAGES AT ROME.—The Roman Propaganda held the celebrated Exhibition of Languages in Rome on the 14th of January, in spite of the disturbed condition of the times. Fifty-two different discourses were delivered in forty-four different languages, without reckoning the Salutatory in Latin, which was pronounced by Kugan, the East Indian from Agra, and the beautiful concluding oration in Italian, by a favorite little negro from Rio Janeiro, Signor Teodor Ribeira, who had before spoken in Portuguese. The expressive gestures of the pupils, and their peculiar intonations, which more or less betrayed their nationalities, gave an interest to the exhibition, even to those who could not understand a word of what was said.

DISTRIBUTION OF THE LITERATURE FUND.—At a meeting of the Regents of the University, held at Albany, New York, on the 28th day of February, the distribution of $40,000 of the income of the Literature Fund for the last year, was made among the several Academies entitled to participate therein. The Brooklyn Female Seminary received the largest sum, being $767 79. The Albany Female Seminary was second on the list, and received $755 68. Alfred Academy received $620 05; De Ruyter Institute $278 55; Brookfield Academy $222 84; Friendship Academy $70 25; Jefferson County Institute $266 44; Oxford Academy $346 36; Troy Female Seminary $540 11; Whitestown Seminary $472 30.

PETITION FOR PEACE.—The "Peace Congress Committee for the United States," has issued a circular, urging the people of our whole country to sign petitions which have been prepared, asking Congress to act in favor of stipulated arbitration, or a Congress of Nations for the settlement of national difficulties. The Committee also hope to see delegates from every State, Congressional District and town, at the Peace Congress, which is to be held at Frankfort on the Maine, in August next.

SOUTH AFRICAN MISSION.—We learn from the Independent, that advices from South Africa have been received to Sept. 12. Within four or five months three new churches had been formed; and since April, more than twenty had been received to Christian fellowship, and several more were soon to be admitted. It is stated in the Annual Report, that forty-five persons had been admitted to the church during the year. They propose to establish five new stations, which will give them a line of stations extending all along the coast, occupying the most eligible portion of the country.

RELIEF OF THE SUFFERERS.—The Treasurer of the Committee charged with the collection and distribution of funds received for the benefit of sufferers by the recent explosion in New York, announces that the receipts, up to March 6, amount to $26,674 36. This money, after supplying the immediate necessities of the sufferers, is to be invested in such a way that small sums will be paid from time to time until they are able to provide for themselves.

PEW-LETTING AMONG THE METHODISTS.—In the Methodist denomination, the churches are usuallay free; only one Methodist house of worship in New York assigns by vote or leave pews to families. This is so unusual at the West, that a new Methodist church in Cincinnati, where the pews are leased, cannot get a preacher. The Times, in that city, says:—

"The Conference absolutely refuse to assign Union Chapel a minister, nor will any one, a member of the Ohio Annual Conference, preach in the pulpit! What is the reason such deferential respect is paid to the details of church polity, while the weightier matters of the law are forgotten? The rank offense of this people is, not that they are objectionable men and women, morally, religiously, socially, politically, or any thing else—but that they desire to sit in family groups, the husband with the wife, and parents with their children, and to have a pew of their own, a fixed place, around which their natures will cling, as does the heart around the domestic hearth, and with which are connected the most hallowed associations. This congregation are determined to please themselves in the matter, and have purchased and fitted up this place of worship."

General Intelligence.

PROCEEDINGS IN CONGRESS LAST WEEK.

In Senate. SECOND-DAY, March 4.

After the usual routine business, and the presentation of several memorials and petitions, the Senate took up Mr. Clay's Compromise Resolutions. Mr. Calhoun's views upon the subject were read, the substance of which will be found on our fourth page. At the conclusion of his article, it was arranged that Mr. Hamlin, Mr. Wakler and Mr. Webster, should speak upon the subject on three succeeding days. Mr. Hale also gave notice of his intention to reply to what he considered "the Romance of History of the Anti-Slavery Agitation," presented by Mr. Calhoun.

House of Representatives.

Soon after opening, the House took up the President's California Message in Committee of the Whole. Mr. Sackett, of New York, made a strong speech against Slavery and in favor of the admission of California. He was followed by Mr. McWillie, of Mississippi, who said it was not his intention to make a partizan speech; so he made a Slavery speech, the principal point of which was, that unless the people consent to blacken the now free territory of the United States with the curse of human Slavery, the Union ought and will be dissolved. Mr. Van Dyke, of New Jersey, made a speech on the other side of the question.

In Senate. THIRD-DAY, March 5.

Mr. Foote, of Mississippi, rose to make an explanation, and said that he should soon ask the Senate to proceed to the organization of his proposed Committee of Thirteen. In the course of his remaks he alluded to Mr. Calhoun's views in such a way as to call that gentleman up, and a pretty warm discussion was carried on for a half hour.

The Senate then took up the President's California Message, and Mr. Hamlin spoke in favor of admitting California.

House of Representatives.

A Message was received from the President, transmitting correspondence between the Department of State and the British Minister. The purport of this Message is, that Sir Henry Bulwer asks certain privileges for British vessels in our coasting trade, in return for what England has done, and remonstrates against the contemplated increase of duty on iron. Referred to the Committe on Foreign Affairs.

The House then went into Committee of the Whole on the State of the Union, and took up the California Message. Mr. Hall, of Mo., made a speech in favor of admitting California. Mr. Cabell, of Florida, followed in a speech about "matters and things in general," particularly the aggressions upon the South.

In Senate. FOURTH-DAY, March 6.

Mr. Seward presented a petition of citizens of Pennsylvania, asking that Slavery and the slave trade may be prohibited in the territories of the United States. The yeas and nays were taken upon its reception—19 for it, and 18 against it.

Mr. Clay's Compromise Resolutions were taken up, and Mr. Walker addressed the Senate, contending that Slavery does not exist in the recently acquired territories. The subject was laid over before the speech was concluded.

House of Representatives.

Hon. Edward Stanly, of North Carolina, made a speech on the California question, which seems to have created quite an excitement. He announced his intention of voting for the admission of California.

In Senate. FIFTH-DAY, March 7.

The great event in the Senate, was a speech by Mr. Webster on Mr. Clay's Compromise Resolutions. He first reviewed the circumstances which had led to the present difficulty, commencing with the Mexican War, and ending with the application of California for admission as a State. The object of the war with Mexico he considered to be the acquisition of territory. Territory was acquired, but the common expectation that it would be slave territory was disappointed. Mr. Webster then went into a historical consideration of the institution of Slavery. In the early ages it was not justified on the ground that the more intelligent and stronger had a right to domineer over the weaker. Christianity regarded Slavery as a sin, and incompatible with brotherly kindness. When our Government was organized, Slavery was considered as a political evil, and the general expectation was, that the importation of slaves would be suppressed, and the institution would soon die out. Since then, the opposition of the North to Slavery had grown stronger, while the South had become more in favor of it as the raising of cotton had increased. Mr. Webster expressed himself opposed to the organization of any new Slave States, or the acquisition of slave territory. He thought, however, that Texas had been admitted with Slavery—that an irrepealable (natural) law existed, by which, if new States were created out of that territory, they must be Slave States. On the other hand, he thought that Slavery was excluded, by a law of nature, from California and New Mexico; for which reason he would not vote to exclude it from that territory—it would be a re-enactment of the will of God. The North, in Mr. Webster's opinion, ought to give proper aid in the capture and delivering up of fugitive slaves, and on this point he thought the South right, and the North wrong. He expressed his conviction, that during the last twenty years money enough had been subscribed in the North for abolition presses, societies, and lectures, to purchase the freedom of every slave in the land. The idea of a peaceful secession of the South from the Union, Mr. Webster scouted—this great country could not be broken to pieces without convulsion. In conclusion, Mr. Webster paid an eloquent tribute to the value of the Union, and the spirit of patriotism and philanthropy which would maintain it.

House of Representatives.

An interesting discussion took place in relation to printing the Patent Office Report, but no conclusion was arrived at.

The discussion on California took rather a personal turn, and Mr. Hilliard, of Alabama, figured quite largely in it.

In Senate. SIXTH-DAY, March 8.

Mr. Foote attempted to get up Mr. Bell's Compromise Resolutions, for the purpose of having them referred to a Committee of Thirteen, before proposed. Failing in this, the Senate resumed the consideration of Mr. Clay's resolutions, and Mr. Walker concluded his speech. Adjourned to Second-day.

House of Representatives.

The House was engaged on private bills, twelve of which were passed.

TWO WEEKS LATER FROM EUROPE.

The steamer Canada, with two weeks later news from Europe, arrived at New York on Second-day last. A decline in the price of cotton, and an improvement in American provisions, is reported.

The English news is unimportant. There is no political intelligence of moment beyond the fact that Parliament has been engaged during the fortnight in debating the Free-trade policy of Government, and in some alteration of the Irish law of election.

From Ireland the news is not important. The potato was about to be sown extensively this Spring, and the tide of emigration has set in.

There is nothing new from Italy, except an eruption of Mount Vesuvius. The Pope had not returned.

The sentence of death passed on 23 Hungarian officers at and on the 16th of January, has been commuted by Baron Haynau to terms of imprisonment in irons, varying from 15 to 5 years.

A serious collision had taken place between two regiments of infantry at Innspruck, in which 30 men were wounded.

The Refugees have been sent to the Adriatic Provinces of Turkey. The recent attempt to assassinate Kossuth is being investigated by the Turkish Government.

In the settlement of the paltry affair of Greece, the mediation of France has been accepted by Lord Palmerston, and M. Gros has been appointed to carry the good offices of his Government into effect, but it is thought, if England does not moderate her demands, that reconciliation will be improbable. Meanwhile the blockade extended along the whole coast has continued with unabated vigor. Several Greek steamers and small vessels of war, together with a host of merchantmen, have been seized and sent to Malta, Corfu, and other stations.

THE CALIFORNIA NEWS.

The news from California, up to Jan. 15, is now received in detail. Previous to that time, in the diggings, the rains continued without cessation. All the rivers were swollen to an alarming hight, but the miners still continued to work a part of the time.

On the night of the 8th of January, the Yuba River, at its junction with Feather River, rose fifteen feet, flooding about half the town of Yubaville. The inhabitants were moving to a bluff about eight feet higher, which it was supposed would be secure from inundation. No lives were lost.

The Sacramento River has overflowed its banks, both above and below Sacramento City, and in many places, the flood extends nearly the whole breadth of the valley, resembling an immense sea, the course of the river being only marked by the thickets on its banks. Great numbers of horses and cattle have been swept away and drowned. Along the banks of the river many persons were engaged in wood-cutting and charcoal-burning; the flood rose so suddenly that they were obliged to climb into trees and wait for some chance of relief.

Sacramento City was entirely submerged on the night of Jan. 9. The next morning, the water was rising at the rate of an inch per hour, chiefly from the American Fork. The flood on the Yuba had not reached the city.

These unprecedented floods have been occasioned by two or three excessive falls of snow in the mountains, followed by two days of warm summer weather. On Feather River, a fall of snow two feet deep entirely disappeared in one day.

There was a rumor—which it is feared is but too true—that between one and two thousand persons were imprisoned in Sutter's Fort by the water, unable to escape, through want of boats, and with very little means of subsistence.

Owing to the rise in the rivers, there are now three steamers plying between Sacramento City and Yubaville, a distance of about seventy-five miles; fare $15. Provisions were plenty on all the northern rivers. The prices remain about the same as at previous advices.

The "burned district" in San Francisco is now almost entirely built up. The Exchange, El Dorado, and Parker House, are again in operation. The growth of the town in all directions is even more marvelous than heretofore.

The California had on board a million and a half in gold dust, including the sums brought in private hands.

An opposition line of steamships to run between San Francisco and Panama, is about being organized. A meeting was held in that city to consummate the matter, and open books for the subscription of stock, &c.

A sale of water lots in San Francisco came off on the 3d of January, and brought high prices. One-fourth cash, one-fourth in three months, one-fourth in six months, and the balance in nine months. Amount of sale $635,130.

The propeller Hartford arrived safely at San Francisco on the 7th January, 1850, having left New-York on the 24th January, 1849.

Diggers on the banks of the Tuolumne are realizing from four to eight dollars per day.

The following additional particulars of the overflow of the Sacramento, are copied from the Placer Times of Jan. 14:—

We conversed with a passenger who came down in the Senator last evening, to whom we are indebted for the particulars of this calamitous event. When the Senator left, the entire city was under water, boats were navigating the streets, and carrying passengers from the second stories of houses. The only means of getting about was by boats, and every imaginable craft was engaged in navigating the streets. The ridge of high land about two miles in the rear of the city was literally studded with tents, and human beings were mingled with affrighted animals who had also taken refuge upon terra firma. Sutterville was overflowed, but the fort was still dry. Numbers of small tenements had been washed away, and the front of a large brick building, near the new steamboat landing, had fallen in. Dewy's Hotel and the City Hotel were peopled like beehives, and passengers were taken from the second stories in boats. Many of the inhabitants had taken refuge on board the shipping, and some were still living in the upper stories of buildings; but these habitations were insecure. The fees demanded by those having boats were very exorbitant, illustrating the proverb, that "what is one man's meat is another man's poison." But the extent of the calamity does not end here, according to our informant; for the ranches back of the river are also under water. The cattle, horses and mules were lining the river's banks, deep in water, browsing upon the spare herbage yet visible above, presenting a most woful picture of misery. We dread to hear of the loss of many lives and much distress and suffering.

Already, we are informed, lives have been lost, two men having been drowned in the streets of Sacramento by falling from boats. We also understand that Vernon and most of the little towns above are flooded. We shudder at the contemplation of the utter disaster which must be caused by this untimely catastrophe. There is no knowing when the flood will stop, and what further ravages may succeed those which the relentless rush of waters has already occasioned. Hundreds of persons who were prosperous, comfortable and happy, are now deprived of nearly their all, and thrust forth at a moment's warning from their homes.

TWO WEEKS LATER STILL.—The steamer Georgia, from Chagres, arrived at New-York on the 9th, with the mails, and a portion of the passengers, brought by the steamer Panama, which left San Francisco on the 1st February. The trip from San Francisco was performed in 35 days—the quickest on record. The news is not important. The flood at Sacramento City had partially subsided, and it was thought that in a week after the date of the latest advices many establishments would resume business. The general opinion was, that many new bars, formed in the rivers by the recent floods, would amply reward the gold-diggers.

NAVAL REFORM MEETING.—A large meeting of those who desire the abolition of the brutal and degrading system of flogging in the Navy, was held at the Tabernacle in New York one evening last week. Watson G. Haynes, the principal champion of this much-needed reform, made a statement of the extent to which flogging is practiced by Naval Officers, from which it appears that on board the U. S. Frigate Independence, during her last cruise on the Pacific, the enormous number of 44,435 lashes were inflicted. On board the brig Somers, while under command of Capt. McKenzie, the use of the lash was equally popular, as will be seen from the following record of one day's proceedings:—

June 16—Read prayers and punished the following boys with a colt, by order of the captain, viz: Jonas Davis, 9 colt for being noisy; Edward White, 9 do. do.; Horatio Olyphant, 9 do. do.; Thomas Tobin, 12 colt for fighting; John Leverich, 12 do.; John Phelau, 9 colt—skulking; Garney Stevens, 9 colt, do; W. Odell, 9 colt, do; Billinger Scott, 9 colt, do; Peter Graham, 9 colt for swearing.

Mr Haynes was followed by several other speakers, among whom were Horace Greely, Mr. Bergen, and a Mr. Wilson, who was on board the Somers when young Spencer was executed by order of Capt. McKenzie.

SEWING GIRLS IN NEW YORK.—Speaking of the grievous wrongs inflicted upon the poor women of New-York, who obtain a living (or an apology for a living) by plain sewing, the Independent says:—

"An establishment in Broadway, in the neighborhood of Trinity church, keeps a standing advertisement in some of the penny papers, for 50 or 100 shirt makers. Numerous applications are daily made, and almost every applicant is permitted to take a shirt, bosom-piece, or collar, home, upon which to exhibit their capacity and taste of workmanship. Many are returned each day, and more than half, perhaps two-thirds, on some false pretext, are rejected as defective in workmanship, and consequently neither pay nor farther employment is given them. This is the habitual practice of some of these wholesale dealers, and in this way they get large quantities of work done by poor sewing girls for nothing! The truth of this can be demonstrated; yet its heartlessness and wickedness cannot easily be described."

THE ERIE RAILROAD.—The Erie Railroad Company have made contracts for completing the entire line of their road from Hornellsville to Dunkirk on the new line, through the following places: Almond, Bakersbridge, Alfred, Andover, Wellsville, Scio, Philipsville, Hobbieville, through Van Campon Creek Valley, Friendship, Cuba; along the valley of Oil Creek to Hinsdale and Olean; thence to Allegany City, along the Allegany Rum Valley to Little Valley Creek, where it leaves the old line of the road about 40 miles from Dunkirk, and runs north and northwest through the townships of Mansfield, New Albany, Persia, Dayton, Perrysburg, Havana, Forestville, and Sheridan, to Dunkirk. The extension to Hornellsville is to be completed by Sept. 1st., 1850, and the entire line to Dunkirk, on Lake Erie, in April, 1851.

INDIAN OUTRAGES IN TEXAS.—A report was submitted to the Texas Legislature, on the 11th ult., by Mr Kinney of the Senate, and Mr. Williams of the House, Chairman of the Joint Committee on Indian Affairs. From this it appears that during the last year 204 persons were killed, wounded, or carried Into captivity by the Indians. There were many more whose names could not at that time be ascertained by the Committee. The horses and other domestic animals stolen from the Texans during that time, according to the report, amounted in value to $103,277.

STATISTICS OF THE JEWS.—An official publication informs us that there are hardly more than from 4,000,000 to 5,000,000 Jews in the whole world; whereas Buddhism numbers 400,000,000 adepts; Brahmism 200,000,000; Christianity, 230,000,000 to 250,000,000; Mahometanism, from 130,000,000 to 150,000,000; and Fetishism (or pure idolatry,) from 80,000,000 to 100,000,000. The 5,000,000 Jews are thus distributed: There are some 500,000 in Syra and Asiatic Turkey; 250,000 in European Turkey; 600,000 in Morocco and North Africa; 50,000 to 80,000 in West Asia; 100,000 in America; and about 2,000,000 in Europe—viz: 13,000 in England; 1,594 in Belgium; 850 in Sweden and Norway; 6,000 in Denmark; 70,000 in France; 52,000 in the Low Countries; 1,120,000 in Russia (more than one-fifth of the entire race;) 631,000 in Austria and its dependencies; 214,431 in Prussia, 175,000 in the German States; and 4,000 in Italy.

AWFUL DISASTER—30 LIVES LOST.—A telegraphic dispatch, dated Montgomery, Alabama, March 7th, says that the steamer St. Johns was burnt to the water's edge, near Bridgeport, Dallas county, on her upward trip to Montgomery, at 6 o'clock on Tuesday evening. It is supposed that about 30 persons were burnt to death and drowned. The fire was accidental, and the ladies on board, numbering 7 or 8, were lost. Lieut. Rice, of the U. S. A., lost $225,000; several Californians also lost their all. The boat was insured for $20,000. She cost $40,000.

NORMAL SCHOOL IN MICHIGAN.—The State of Michigan has appropriated 25 sections of salt lands, for the establishment and endowment of a Normal School, to be located at Ypsilanti. These lands, the Detroit Tribune says, are valuable, and will readily command a market. The School is to commence about the first of November next. Each county will be permitted to send every year three times as many students as they have representatives in the Legislature. This School will be the first of the kind established west of this State.

SUMMARY.

A National Free Soil Convention has been proposed by some of the papers, but no formal call has been published. At the recent Free Soil Mass Convention at Faneuil Hall, Boston, Dr. Phelps offered a resolution to consider the expediency of calling a National Free Soil Convention, to meet at Washington, or some other suitable place, in June next, to consist of delegates three times as numerous as the Senators and Representatives in Congress.

The steamships Europa and Hermann sailed from New York on the 20th ult., for Europe. The Europa's mails contained 43,089 letters, and the Hermann 23,649; total, 56,736, of which 20,000 were deposited in the Post-Office at 9 o'clock, and were sorted, inclosed in mail-bags, and on board the vessels within 1½ hours.

The peach buds in Ohio (except along the lake shore) have been killed by the winter. In northern Illinois, not only have the buds of the peach been destroyed, but the cold has been so severe as to destroy the trees. In the vicinity of Syracuse, N. Y., the peach and apricot buds are uninjured, and there is a fair prospect of an abundant crop of these fruits.

It is stated that the city of London mercantile committee on postage have presented Mr. Rowland Hill with a check for £10,000 with an intimation that they reserved, till some future opportunity, the pleasure of making a more public presentation of the fruits of their labors on his behalf.

The whole number of New York Volunteers, for the Mexican War, exceeded eleven hundred. They went into the Mexican war, hardy, robust men; but the climate, fatigue, sickness, and the battle-field, have made fearful havoc among them. Less than two hundred are now known to be among the living.

Last year the girls (farmers' daughters) of three counties in Massachusetts turned out straw hats and bonnets valued at $1,646,596. The result is, they have rosy cheeks and money in their purses. That's better than spinning street yarn.

Some opulent men in the John street Methodist society, in New York, have purchased a lot of ground on the corner of Irving Place and Fourteenth street, where they propose to erect a beautiful house of worship. The site cost $18,000.

The Harrodsburg (Ky.) Whig states that Hon. C. A. Wickliffe, who filled the office of Postmaster General under President Tyler, is in imminent danger of becoming blind, a disease having fastened upon his eyes which apparently baffles medical skill.

S. Hosack Mix, Esq., Editor of the Schoharie Patriot, has been prosecuted for libel by Demosthenes Lawyer, County Judge and Surrogate of Schoharie County. The judge considers himself "much injured and damnified" in consequence of certain publications in the Schoharie Patriot aforesaid.

In the list of passengers for California, by a ship which recently sailed from Boston, we find the names of 21 ladies (mostly unmarried) from "away down East" in the State of Maine, who have gone to try their luck in the gold region. We wish these fair adventurers a quick voyage and short courtship.

The journeymen house carpenters of New York held a meeting on the 15th ult., and resolved that they could not afford to work after the 10th inst. for less than $1 75 per day.

A letter from Mr. B. F. Bourne, mate of the schooner John Allyne, dated at Callao, Jan. 8, confirms the previous account of his escape from the Patagonians in the Straits of Magellan, and his safe arrival at Callao in the schooner Hopewell.

As the Disunionists talk of holding a Convention at Nashville in June next, it has been suggested that the friends of the Union in the South, meet in Convention at the same place on the 4th of July next.

Leander M. Cutchin, charged with robbery of the mail, at Salem, Ill., at various times during the last year, has been arrested. He was taken to Springfield, where he is in jail, awaiting an examination.

Died, in San Francisco, on the 27th Jan., Mr. Samuel Pearson, of Troy, N. Y. The deceased was a passenger in the ship Tarolinta, and is the tenth death which has taken place among her list of passengers, since her arrival.

In the Court of Common Pleas at Boston, James Power recovered a verdict for $823 against the Fall River Railroad Company, as owners of a violent dog, which had severely bitten the plaintiff's child.

A gold mine has been found on Ezra Hubbard's land, in Westfield, Mass. The gold is fine, found in small scales, and is said to be plenty.

The President of the United States has nominated Hon. Richard W. Thompson, of Ind., to be Chargé d'Affaires to Austria, in place of Col. James Watson Webb, rejected.

Kentucky refuses to sanction the Nashville Convention. The proposition in the Senate of that State, to send delegates there, was rejected by 9 yeas and 26 nays.

MARRIED,

In Alfred, N. Y.. Feb. 17, by Eld. Spencer Sweet, Mr. NATHANIEL GROVE, of Jerusalem, Yates County, to Miss RHODA SMITH, of Alfred.

At the same time and place, by the same, Mr. JOHN C. SMITH, of Alfred, to Miss OLIVE SCRIVEN, of Andover.

In Hopkinton, R. I., Feb. 18, by Eld. Daniel Coon, Mr. PELEG TUCKER to Mrs. SUSAN ENNIS, both of Charleston.

By the same, March 3d, in Westerly, Mr. WM. LEWIS to Miss ABBY A. PERKINS, both of Westerly.

At the same time and place, by the same, Mr. THOS. H. COLLINS to Miss ELIZABETH LEWIS, all of the above place.

DIED,

In Brookfield, N. Y., on the 25th of February, of dropsy in the chest, Widow LUCY COON, aged 63 years.

In Plainfield, N. J., Feb. 25, of inflammation on the lungs, WILLIAM P. WILLIAMSON, aged 46 years—a worthy member of Society.

At the Mines, in California, Oct. 26th, 1849, of typhus fever, Doct. FREDERICK A. MURPHY, of Newport, R. I.. son of Widow Barbary P. Murphy, aged 37 years, leaving a son 14 years old at the Mines, and a wife and two children at Newport, R. I. The deceased was an exemplary member of the Methodist Society.

In Vernon, Windham Co., Vt., Feb. 28th, SYLVANUS, son of Erastus and Mary E. Harris, aged nineteen months and ten days.

In New London, Ct., on the 5th inst., of dropsy on the brain, ELLEN M., daughter of Peleg L. and Deborah B. Berry, aged one year.

Yet we who o'er our infant's bier
  Now shed the bitter drops like rain,
Hope that a brighter, happier shore,
  Will give her to our arms again.

In Alfred, N. Y., February 10th, HARRIET, daughter of Ezekiel and Clarissa Saunders, aged 7 months and 17 days.

A dew-drop pure, at early dawn,
  Fell glittering from the sky,
But morning's beams absorbed it soon,
  And called it back on high.

So Jesus took sweet Harriet home;
  We feel the heavy rod;
The Lord did give and take away,
  And blessed be our God.

Notice.

The regular meeting of the Board of Directors of the Seventh-day Baptist Publishing Society will take place in New York, on the evening of the 1st day of April next, a 7 o'clock. T. B. STILLMAN, Rec. Sec.

Medical Notice.

DR. T. A. MAXSON, Botanic Physician, takes this method to inform the friends of Medical Reform, that he is located in Watson, N. Y., one mile east from Beach's Landing. Believing that there are vegetable remedies adapted to the cure of all diseases, he consequently uses no other. Calls attended to without delay. [32m3.] JANUARY, 1850.

Christian Psalmody—Pocket Edition.

IN compliance with requests from various quarters, the publisher of the New Hymn Book—Christian Psalmody—has issued a second edition, on lighter paper and with smaller margins, by which the bulk and weight of the books are reduced about one-third, rendering them much more convenient for carrying in the pocket. The price is also reduced 12½ cents per copy. Those wishing books, of either edition, can now be supplied. Price of the larger edition from 75 cents to $1 50, according to the style of binding. Price of the smaller edition from 62½ cents to $1 00. Orders should be addressed to Geo. B. Utter, No. 9 Spruce-st., New York.

Factory Establishment for Sale.

THE subscriber will sell the well-known Establishment, called the Bethel Mill, situated in Hopkinton, R. I., consisting of the factory, 60 by 28 feet, two and a half stories high, and a good stone basement room under the whole building; a cloth-house, 16 by 20, one and a half stories; a dye-house, 20 by 30, with suitable kettles; a wash-box, &c.; a small smith-shop for repairing; three dwelling-houses, a barn, and about six acres of land. The buildings are mostly new, the factory and dye-house having been erected in 1848, where one was burnt in that year. A good water privilege of about five feet fall, with a sufficient reservoir to supply the mill through all the drought of summer, being 114 acres, 12 feet deep, averaging from 8 to 10 feet the whole surface.

The present occupants run twenty looms on plaid linseys, and are entitled to its occupancy until the money loaned by them towards its erection (over 3,000 dollars) shall be paid, at a rent of about six hundred and eighty dollars per annum, or otherwise paid in money. It is pleasantly situated, in a good neighborhood, and help easily obtained. About half of the purchase money must be paid within the year, and the purchaser, if he chooses, can let the rest remain to be liquidated by the rent, which will take between six and seven years. It will be a good investment for any one desirous of obtaining such an establishment, or who has money to loan. JACOB D. BABCOCK.

History of Romanism.

In a large octavo volume of 750 pages, printed in large type, on the finest paper, and embellished with more than fifty engravings, chiefly from Original Designs, and bound in muslin, extra gilt. Price $3. THE HISTORY OF ROMANISM, from its earliest origin to the present time, by the Rev. John Dowling, D. D. A new and enlarged edition, with the Author's last additions, and a Supplement, containing a Sketch of the Life of Pope Pius IX., &c.

The best evidence of the intrinsic value of this remarkably popular work is to be seen in the fact that within the comparatively recent period of its first publication, the extraordinary number of 17,000 copies have been disposed of.

The following is an extract from a letter from the Rev. Dr. Giustiniani, the converted Roman Catholic priest, who is abundantly qualified by education, observation, and extensive study, to testify to the fidelity and value of a "History of Romanism."

"If the reader wishes to be acquainted with the errors of Romanism, he has only to open the pages of Dowling's History. If the reader is anxious to read an epitome of the history of the popes, their ambition; their intrigues; their avariciousness; their tyranny; their superstitions, and their mummeries, he can here find all proved and authenticated by the most accredited authors of the Church of Rome." L. GIUSTINIANI.

"It reflects much credit on the skill, patience, industry, and judgment of the author; he appears very justly to have conceived the idea of a work, which has long been regarded as a desideratum by a large portion of those interested in the great controversy with the Romanists."—Protestant Churchman.

"We think it an able work, comprising the results of extensive reading and research, and well adapted to fill an important chasm in our literature.—Lutheran Obs.

"We regard it as a most important addition to the historical and religious literature of the age. Its contents form a rich storehouse of historical instruction, which should be placed within the reach of every family."—N. Y. Christian Intelligencer.

"It presents a succienct, but sufficiently full, history of the rise, progress, errors, cruelties, and present condition of the Papacy, authenticated by reference to the most undoubted historic sources, related in a spirited, engaging, and impressive style, and arranged in the most lucid manner. It abounds in facts and incidents, and, with its beautiful illustrations, is better adapted to furnish a vivid and impressive portraiture of Romanism as it is, than any other book we know of."—N. Y. Evang.

"The detached portions of Romish history which were every where to be met with, needed to be brought together and presented in systematic order. The reading of one book thus becomes better and cheaper than the reading of many."—Boston Recorder.

"It is written with the ready, popular eloquence, for which the well-known author is distinguished, and cannot fail to arrest attention to the controversy of which it treats. It is a strongly Protestant work, and exhibits the deformities of Popery with great power."—N. Y. Recorder.

"The author appears to have brought to the execution of this great work, unwearied industry, genuine and thorough scholarship, and scrupulous fidelity."

RUFUS BABCOCK, late Pres. of Waterville College.

Miscellaneous.

From Milne's Poetry for the People.

ALMS-GIVING.

When Poverty with mien of shame
The sense of Pity seeks to touch—
Or, bolder, makes the simple claim
That I have nothing, you have much—
Believe not either man or book
That bids you close the opening hand,
And with reproving speech or look
Your first and free intent withstand.

It may be that the tale you hear
Of pressing wants and losses borne,
Is shaped or colored for your ear,
And tatters for the purpose worn;
But surely Poverty has not
A sadder need than this, to wear
A mask still nearer than her lot,
Compassion's scanty food to share.

It may be that you err to give
What will but tempt to further spoil
Those who in low content would live
On theft of others' time and toil;
But sickness may have broke or bent
The active frame or vigorous will;
Or hard occasion may prevent
The exercise of human skill.

It may be that the suppliant's life
Has lain on many an evil way
Of foul delight and brutal strife,
And lawless deeds that shun the day;
But how can any guage of yours
The depth of that temptation try!
What man resists—what man endures—
Is open to one only eye.

Why not believe the homely letter,
That all you give will God restore?
The poor man may deserve it better,
And surely, surely, wants it more;
Let but the rich man do his part,
And whatsoe'er the issue be
To those who ask, his answering heart
Will gain and grow in sympathy.

MR. CALHOUN ON SLAVERY AND THE UNION.

As leader of the southern faction in Congress, Mr. Calhoun's views upon the great question at present agitating the nation, have been looked for with intense interest. Notwithstanding his recent severe illness, from which his entire recovery is still considered doubtful, he attended the Senate on the 4th inst., stated his inability to speak in person, thanked the Senate for the courtesy extended to him in permitting his views to be read, and then requested Mr. Mason to read the speech he had prepared. We copy the report of it furnished for the New York papers.

Mr. Calhoun commenced by asking, What can be done to save the Union? It was necessary, first, to find the cause of danger, before a remedy could be applied. The danger arose, first, from the discontent in all the Southern States, which commenced with the agitation of the Slavery question, and has continued ever since. The next question was, what has caused the disquiet? It resulted from the conviction, on the part of the Southern States, that they could not live in the Union, under the existing state of things, with safety to their honor and interests. He proceeded next to show, by statistics, that the equilibrium of the different sections of the Union has been lost, in consequence of the increase of population in the North. This state of affairs places the control of the Government exclusively in the hands of the North, making them a majority of the States, and a large majority of the population, which would be largely increased by the next census. In addition to this, the newly acquired territory would also add speedily at least five new States to the North, while no additional Territories were progressing in the South. He next proceeded to show that the action of the General Government has been such as to give control to a sectional majority, by which the South has been deprived of its share in the Territories. The first act having such effect was the ordinance of '87, the next the Missouri Compromise, and the last the act by which the South were excluded from Oregon, the result of all which has been to exclude the South from three-fourths of the territory acquired by the Federal Government, giving her one-fourth only. The North had also unsettled the equilibrium between the two sections, by adopting a system of revenue and disbursements which has imposed unequal burdens upon the South to the advantage of the North. The action of Congress, in the next place, had resulted in a concentration of power in the Federal Government, to the manifest disturbing and violation of State Rights. The result of all this series of measures and this course of policy was to give the North an ascendancy in every department of the Government.

He then proceeded to consider the views and feelings of the people of the North relative to the institution of Slavery, which the South felt to be necessary to her social organization, and which, he said, was looked upon with greater or less hostility by the whole North, all the people of which felt bound, at least, to discountenance it, while they of the South felt themselves impelled to defend it. He reviewed the course of the Slavery agitation by the North, commencing with the first battle upon the Right of Petition, and coming down the present day, for the purpose of showing that encroachments upon this point had been continual, gradual, and always successful, until imminent danger to the Union itself had now arisen. He contended that the first organized movement by Abolitionists had continually increased in numbers, importunities and demands, until their work has reached a point which has demanded immediate and earnest efforts for its arrest. What, then, could be done to arrest its progress, and what could save the Union? Disunion would not be effected by a single blow—it was the work of time—for the cords which bind the Union were too numerous to be snapped all at once. One of the many cords which had bound the Union together was the Religious Cord, the sympathy between the associations of various religious denominations of both sections. The first of the cords which snapped was that of the Methodist Episcopal Church. The next, the Division of the Baptists into two opposing sectional parties. The Presbyterian Cord had not altogether given way, although some of its strings were broken—the Episcopalians only, of the four great denominations, remained firm and unbroken. The next great cord which had snapped was that of political party organization, which had held together until recently, when it had been severed by the increased agitation.

Again: how could the Union be saved? It could only be by adopting such measures as will satisfy the Southern States that they can remain in the Union with safety and honor to themselves. It could not be saved by eulogizing the Union, nor by appealing to the memory of Washington; neither was there any thing in the life and example of that distinguished man which could deter the South from seceding. On the contrary, there was much to encourage them to secession, as a remedy for oppression and deprivation of their rights. Mr. Clay's plan, or the plan proposed by the Administration, could not save the Union. The latter was nothing but a modification of the Wilmot Proviso, and still more objectionable than that measure. Its very object was to deprive the South of its rightful participation in the Territories. Looking at the Constitutional question, he contended that the power of legislation for the Territories is vested exclusively in Congress. In this view, the action of the people of California, in forming a Government for themselves, had usurped the power of Congress. Their conduct in this respect was revolutionary and rebellious in its character. He expressed his full conviction that the people of California had been influenced in their action by persons acting under the suggestions and authority of the Executive. He also proceeded with an effort to show that the action of California, and the Executive proposition for her admission into the Union, was in direct violation of all the past action of Congress. What, now, would the Senate do? Much depended upon their action. If they admitted California into the Union they would sanction all she had done. Were Senators prepared, in admitting her, to surrender the Constitution, in view of their oaths to support it? He denied that there was any such State as California—it had no legal existence and could not have, without the sanction of Congress. They could only form a Constitution when Congress had given them leave so to do. There was but one way by which the Union could be saved, and that was by the full and final settlement, upon the principles of justice, of all the questions at issue between the two sections. The South asked for simple justice, less than that she ought not to take. She had no compromise to offer but the Constitution, and could make no surrender or concession. By satisfying the South that she could remain honorably and safely in the Union, and by restoring tranquility, could this be done? Yes, easily—not by the weaker party, for it could not protect itself, but by the stronger. The North had only to do justice, by conceding to the South a participation in the Territories, by doing her duty in causing the arrest and delivery of fugitive slaves, by ceasing the agitation of the Slavery question, and by providing an amendment of the Constitution, such as would restore to the South the power to protect herself, which she possessed before the equilibrium between the sections was destroyed by the action of the Government. Would the North agree to this? Yes, if her love for the Union was half as great as her professions. At all events, the responsibility of saving the Union rested on the North, and not upon the South. The South could not save it by any act of hers, and the North might save it without sacrifice. If this question was not now settled, there was no telling when it would be. If you, said Mr. Calhoun, cannot agree to settle these questions on the principle of justice and duty, say so, and let the States we represent agree to separate, and part in peace. If you are unwilling we should part in peace, then tell us so, and we shall know what to do when you reduce the question to submission or resistance. If you remain silent, you will compel us to infer what you intend. In that case, California will become the test question. If you admit her, under all the difficulties that oppose her admission, you compel us to infer that you intend to exclude us from the whole of the acquired Territories, with the intention of destroying irretrievably the equilibrium between the two sections. We would be mad not to perceive, in that case, that your real objects are, power and aggrandizement, and we would be infatuated not to act accordingly. In conclusion, he repeated, that he had all along endeavored to repel these aggressions of the North, by arresting the agitation, with the intention of saving the Union, if possible, and if not, to save the section where his lot had been cast. Having done his duty, let what would come, he would be free from all responsibility.

THE MANORIAL FARMS.

The Attorney-General, in his report to the Legislature of New York, upon this subject, gives the history of an action commenced by the State, involving the title to a large tract of land in Western New York, known as the Gorham and Phelps tract.

"Massachesetts originally claimed a presumptive title to this tract, and the claim was compromised between Massachusetts and New York. The boundaries of the tract were defined by a joint Commission in 1798. Soon after, Massachusetts sold her interest in this large tract to Phelps and Gorham, who soon conveyed it to Robert Morris, of Philadelphia. About this time, Mr. Williamson, a Scotch gentleman, came to America, and after being naturalized, took a conveyance of the whole tract to himself from Mr. Morris, in secret trust for Sir William Pultney, an alien, and therefore incapable of holding real estate in this country. Williamson was soon after elected a member of the Legislature, and procured the passage of a law "to enable aliens to purchase and hold real estate, within this State." The law was to continue in force three years and three days before it expired. Williamson conveyed the whole tract to Sir William Pultney, for whom he was supposed to have held it previously in secret trust.

"Sir William died in 1805, intestate, leaving Henrietta Laura Pultney, better known as Countess of Bath, his only heir. She died in 1808, without issue, and intestate as to her real estate, leaving Sir John Lowther Johnstone her heir. In 1807, an act was passed by the Legislature explanatory of the act of 1798, securing the estate to the heirs and devises of the aliens, who could "purchase and hold" under that act. Sir John died in 1811, without issue, but it is said that he made a deed of disposition in Scotland, and a will in London, devising this Pultney estate in fee to Ernest Augustus, Duke of Cumberland, Masterton Ure, and Andrew Cathcart (Lord Alloway,) in trust, first to pay and discharge the debts and incumbrances on his estates in Scotland; second to pay and discharge the debts and incumbrances on his English estates; and third, to purchase copyhold estates in Scotland, and directed his trustees to sell the lands and close the trust.

"Nearly half a century has elapsed, and the trust is not yet closed. The lands are still unsold. Of the old trustees, the King of Hanover and Masterton Ure still live and draw from this estate a yearly income of over $400,000. Who are the successors of the other trustees, is unknown. The whole estate is valued at over $2,000,000—three-fourths of which draws an interest of seven per cent annually. The estates have been trebled in value within a few years past by the construction of railroads, canals, &c., yet the owners of it have not contributed a single dollar of the means by which this has been accomplished."

JOHN HOWARD AND THE PIRATES.

At Smyrna, Howard found a vessel bound for Venice, and in her he took his passage. The voyage was long, and would have been tedious had it not been checkered with the greatest perils. Howard had already had several hair-breadth escapes—but none, perhaps, so near as this. Shortly after leaving the port of Moden, in the Morea, where the vessel had put put in for fresh water, they were suddenly borne down upon by a Barbary privateer—the Venitian republic being then at war with Tunis—which fired into them with great fury. For a while the Venition sailors defended themselves with desperate courage, for it was a question of victory or perpetual slavery with them; but their numbers were limited, their arms indifferent, and, altogether, the contest seemed too unequal to last long.

It was the first actual fighting in which Howard had been present; but the imminency of the danger, and the sight of conflict, appealing to the strong combative instincts of his race, he fought on deck with the coolness of a Saxon, and the courage of a knight-templar. Indeed, it was his self-possession which proved the salvation of the crew. There was only one gun of large calibre on board—and of this he assumed the direction—though he had probably never fired a rifle in his life; but in the hour of peril, fighting seemed to come to him—as to most of his countrymen—by inspiration. This gun he rammed almost to the muzzle with nails, spikes and similar charge, and then steadily waiting his opportunity, as the privateeer bore down upon them, with all her crew on deck, apparently expecting to see the Venitians strike their flag—he sent the contents in among them with such murderous effect, that, after a moment or two of consternation, the corsairs hoisted sail, and made off at the best of their speed. Not, however, until the enemy were beaten off, did our countryman know the extent of his danger, for he then learned, that the captain, determined not to fall into the hands of the Tunisians, had made preparation to blow up his vessel as soon as it should have been boarded by the pirates!

AN INCIDENT.

About ten months ago, Mr. John M. Spear, upon one of his usual visits to the Police Court, one morning, noticed among the prisoners a youth who was poorly clad, and for some cause was weeping. The philanthropist sat down by his side, and the following conversation took place:—

"Why are you here, my son?"

"I am accused of selling newspapers, sir, without a license."

"Are you guilty?"

"Yes, sir."

"Have you been arrested before?"

"Yes; twice."

"What for?"

"For selling newspapers."

"Why do you persist in doing it?"

"Because I don't know what else to do to get a living."

"Have you a father?"

"No, sir; my father is dead."

"Is your mother living?"

"My mother is a drunkard; she does not take care of me; I don't know where she is now."

As he uttered these last words, the deep waters of the little fellow's soul burst forth afresh, and he expressed his grief aloud.

"Where do you lodge?" continued the philanthropist.

"Near Union street, sir; I pay ninepence a night for my lodgings in advance, and I buy two plates of beans in the course of the day, for which I pay as much more."

"How do you spend your evenings?"

"I walk about the streets, or go into the auction rooms."

"Why don't you sit down in the house where you lodge, by the fire, and read?"

"Because the woman who keeps the house is very poor. She has no room for me at the fire."

"Would you be willing to go to the country and work, if a place could be obtained for you?"

"Yes, sir; I would be glad to go and work for my living. I don't want to stay in Boston, but I have nobody to get a place for me. I don't want to go down to the jail again."

The philanthropist now spoke to the judge respecting the prisoner.

After some conversation the Judge reduced the fine to one cent and cost, which the philanthropist paid, and then taking the boy by the hand they both left the Court.

Mr. Spear took the boy to his own house and supplied him with food and clothing, and then obtained a good place for him in the country.

Last week, the day before Thanksgiving, the grateful boy for the first time came into the city to see his benefactor. He has been steadily at work in the place which Mr. Spear provided for him, and is still at work there, earning nine dollars a month and his board.

[Chronotype.

Crowded Population.—The greatest crowding of population in a neighborhood, is a district in Liverpool, England, containing a population of 8,000 on 49,000 square yards of ground, being in the proportion of 657,962 to a square mile. The next most crowded district is in the city of Boston, in the United States, a section in ward 8, bounded by Hamilton street, Humphrey Place, Oliver, Battery, March, and Broad streets, and Washington Square, containing 3,131 inhabitants, where the people are crowded upon each other in the ratio of more than 656,000 to the square mile. On this spot in Boston the cholera prevailed most severely during the past season.

IGNORANCE OF MOHAMMEDAN WOMEN.

The London Evangelical Magazine for January, has an interesting letter from a Missionary laboring in the Teloogoo country, in India. The account which he gives in the following passage, of the ignorance and misery of Mohammedan women, is instructive and painful. It is Christianity alone that can ennoble woman, and shed light upon her otherwise dark path:—

"Last Saturday a group of Mohammedan women came to the Bungalow—a class of women who are scarcely ever seen away from their own homes, and to whom access is very difficult. They looked about for some time, when I went out and asked them why they had come to this country. As usual with native women, they asked how many children I had, where they were, why I had left them in another country, &c. They were greatly amused with my little girl, who was nursing her doll by my side. One old woman, whose noble bearing would have graced a mansion, particularly excited my attention, and drew forth my sympathy. I asked her what God she worshiped? "Mohammed," she replied. But I said, "Mohammed is not God; he was only a man; you should worship God." "Ah, my mother," said she, "many, many years have I lived in this jungle, and no one ever told me about God; how then should I know? I eat rice—wear cloth—soon I shall die, and be put in the ground, and what then, I do not know."

OLD ROTHSCHILD.

It was not an unvaried sunshine with this gentleman. There were periods when his gigantic capital seemed likely to be scattered to the four quarters of the globe. He had also other sources of apprehension. Threats of murder were not unfrequent. On one occasion he was waited on by a stranger, who informed him that a plot had been formed to take his life; that the loans which he had made Austria, and his connection with governments adverse to the liberties of Europe, had marked him for assassination; and that the mode by which he was to lose his life was arranged. But though Rothschild smiled outwardly at this and similar threats, they said, who knew him best, that his mind was often troubled by these remembrances, and that they haunted him at moments when he would willingly have forgotten them. Occasionally his fears took a ludicrous form. Two tall mustachioed men were once shown into his counting-house. Mr. Rothschild bowed; the visitors bowed; and their hands wandered first into one pocket, and then into another. To the anxious eye of the millionare, they assumed the form of persons searching for weapons. No time seemed allowed for thought; a ledger, without a moment's warning, was hurled at the intruders; and in a paroxysm of fear, he called for assistance to drive out two customers, who were only feeling in their pockets for letters of introduction. There is no doubt that he dreaded assassination greatly.

"You must be a happy man, Mr. Rothschild," said a gentleman who was sharing the hospitality of his splendid home, as he glanced at the superb appointments of the mansion.

"Happy—me happy!" was the reply. "What! happy; when, just as you are going to dine, you have a letter placed in your hand, saying, 'If you do not send me £500, I will blow your brains out!' Happy—me happy?" And the fact that he frequently slept with loaded pistols by his side, is an indirect evidence of a constant excitement on the subject.

MIRAGE ON THE PRAIRIES.

It appears that the optical illusion so common on some seas, and in the wide sand deserts of Africa, known as the mirage, is sometimes seen on the Western Prairies. The editor of the Chicago Tribune describes the appearance thus:—"One day last week we took the morning train for St. Charles. In order to enjoy the bracing air and the scenery, we chose to stand upon the platform in front of the passenger-car. As the sun came up from the Lake, we observed that objects to the west of us became suddenly elongated vertically. Stacks of hay lifted themselves to an amazing altitude. The story-and-a-half houses on the prairie towered up with all the pretension of five-story palaces. As we approached these objects, they gradually contracted laterally, both from above and below, towards the centre, the upper cone being inverted. Approaching still nearer, the upper cone commenced slowly vanishing from the apex upwards, and at the same time rapidly receded towards the horizon, while the lowest one, the real object, gradually contracted to its natural proportions. In a little while the upper cone had become reduced to the faintest possible line upon the eastern horizon, and as it disappeared entirely, the house once more resumed its usual appearance. We were informed by Mr. Allen, the conductor, that he had often witnessed the same thing while crossing the prairie in the morning."

REMINISCENCE OF DR. PARKMAN.

Dr. Parkman was one of our wealthiest citizens. His property is estimated at about half a million. The Doctor was a large owner of real estate, and had numerous poor tenants, from whom he made his collections himself. He was punctilious in his business habits, but bestowed much charity in an unostentatious way. A politician once stopped him in the street and asked him to subscribe to a fund for firing a salute in honor of some party victory. "Just step with me round the corner," said the Doctor. Taking him up a dirty alley, through a dark door-way, and up three flights of rickety stairs, the Doctor tapped at a door, which was opened by a wretched, pale-faced child. A poor woman, apparently in the last stage of consumption, was sewing upon a shirt. There was no fire in the stove, although it was a cold March day. "Now," said the Doctor, turning to the politician, "here are ten dollars; you may either fire it away in powder, or give it to this poor woman. I won't attempt to bias you." The Doctor darted out of the room and down stairs, leaving the nonplused politician standing by the bedside of the invalid. He did not hesitate long as to the disposition of the money, but handed it to the sufferer, and departed a wiser man.

Aeronautation by Balloons.—The editor of the Scientific Journal in Washington has attacked the persons now at the seat of Government asking for aid to mature their plan of aeronautation by balloons, on the following grounds, viz:—

Nothing can float in the air unless it be 800 times lighter than water; such a body therefore must, of course, carry 800 times less power than might be used in a steamboat. But the utmost power that a steamboat can carry, will not enable it to make the least headway against wind blowing 200 miles an hour. How then is it possible for a body of 800 times less power to make any headway against even a gentle wind blowing three miles an hour?

In navigating the air, we can obtain no fulcrum but the air itself, and that is yielding, and but a small portion of even the power which can be carried would prove effective.

If a body, so comparatively solid as water, causes a loss of power, the loss must be vastly greater in a body 800 times lighter, and exceedingly elastic. When to all this we add 800 times less power than a steamboat, and at the same time bear in mind the further fact, that a steamboat cannot make the least headway against wind blowing 200 miles an hour, the fallacy must be apparent.

Flying of Kites in Canton.—A foreign Missionary thus writes of kite-flying in Canton:—

"The sky is in a universal flutter of kites. I counted this afternoon from my window ninety-three, which were flown at various heights, with great skill. Some represented hawks, and admirably imitated their manœuvres in the air, poising themselves, and sailing and darting; gaudy butterflies floated around; and dragons, formed of a long succession of circular kites, with a fierce head, flew about the sky. The majority were of merely fanciful shape. Loud noises, like a wind instrument, could be heard from them. The most amusing form was that of a huge fish, as it swam through the blue above, moving its tail and fins with a ludicrously natural effect. Those like animals, are also flown in pairs, and made to fight."

Lord Ross's Telescope.—In an English scientific paper it is stated, that the light of the star Sirius, seen through this telescope, a six feet reflector, by the unprotected eye, is insupportable, yet when properly viewed, the star appears as an intense, sharp bead of light. The same authority states some of the difficulties in working in speculum metal, which is as hard as steel, and yet so brittle that a slight blow will shiver it, and so sensitive to changes in temperature, that a little warm water poured on the surface will crack it in all directions. A deviation of one hundred thousandth part of an inch from the parabolic form, would render a reflector of such a size as that of Lord Ross's telescope optically imperfect, and one of a millionth of an inch could be detected.

Night Destitution.—Those who habitually lay their heads upon comfortable pillows, (says the New York Commercial Advertiser,) can scarcely believe that every night hundreds of men and women are wandering houseless about the streets of this great metropolis, without a place to shelter themselves. The Chief of Police reports that during six months preceding last November, 21,620 persons were furnished with lodgings in the various station houses in that city, and what an amount of misery is concentrated in this single fact! And what is the fact in relation to destitution in New York, is true to a greater or less extent in every large city.

Agriculture in Indiana.—According to an estimate made by Mr. Merrill, late President of the State Bank of Indiana, the agricultural products of the State during last year, were: 45,000,000 bushels corn; 8,000,000 bushels wheat; 18,000,000 bushels oats, rye, barley, &c. The average price of wheat was 50 cents per bushel—near a market it being 50 to 70 cents; and remote from ene, 40 cents. The price of corn ranged from 10 to 30 cents, according to situation. Of the 22,400,000 acres of land in the State, it is estimated that 14,200,000 are first rate farming land, 4,450,000 inferior farming land, and 3,750,000 refuse land. 1,300,000 hogs were fattened in the State during the year, of which it is supposed 650,000 were exported.

Father Mathew's Seal.—The editor of the Old Colony Memorial saw a letter from Father Mathew recently. Upon the wax with which the seal of the letter was impressed was the following inscription:

"Drink from the bubbling fountain,
Drink it free;
'Twas good for Sampson,
And 'tis good for thee."

Amount of Tea exported from China.—From July 1, 1848, to July 1, 1849, there was exported from China for the United States, in 37 vessels, 18,672,000 pounds of tea, of the different kinds and qualities. For Great Britain, during the same period, the amount exported was 47,242,700 pounds, in 86 vessels. For all the rest of Europe, only 96,700 pounds were exported, in eight vessels.

Works on China.—The Chinese Repository for August, 1849, gives the titles of 279 works on the Chinese language and on China to be found principally in the English and French languages. Thirteen English periodicals are also enumerated, which are devoted more or less to China, and forty-five works in English and French on Japan, Cochin China, Corea, &c.

Books for the Million!—It is stated that the sales of Webster's Spelling Book have for the last six years averaged one million per annum—and that the total sales now amount to 30,000,000 copies. As the boys who learn the Spelling Book will want the Dictionary, Messrs. Merriams are likely to have their hands full. It is said that in Boston alone, 4,000 copies of the quarto edition of the Dictionary have been sold in about two years.

No man who employs his leisure hours in useful reading and study, can hardly fail of becoming distinguished in his profession or business—while he who spends his time in idleness or self-indulgence, is sure to occupy an inferior position in life.

DeRuyter Institute.

The Academic Year of this Institution for 1849-50 will commence the last Wednesday in August, and continue forty-three consecutive weeks, ending the last Wednesday of June, including a recess of ten days for Christmas and New Year holidays. The Year will be divided into three Terms:

The First, commencing August 29, of 14 weeks.
The Second, " December 5, of 15 "
The Third, " March 20, of 14 "

Encouraged by the success of the School under its present Instructors, the friends of the Institute have made liberal additions to its library, cabinet and apparatus, thus furnishing ample facilities for illustrating branches taught in the various departments.

The Literary Department is as heretofore under the supervision of Rev. JAMES R. IRISH, A. M., President, assisted by other able instructors. In this Department, especial attention is given to the lower English Branches. Students are also fitted in the Classics to enter the advanced classes in College.

The Department of Natural Science is conducted by Professor GURDON EVANS. In this, Natural Philosophy, Astronomy, Geology, Natural History, and Chemistry, are taught in a manner of unsurpassed interest. With it is connected the Department of Agricultural Science.

The Farmer's Course is thoroughly scientific; embracing the study of the best authors, with daily recitations. During the Winter Term two hours each day will be spent in the Analytical Laboratory, where students will be instructed in the constitution of soils and ashes of plants, with a minute examination of their constituent elements, and the various modes of testing for their presence.

A course of lectures is given during the Term on Practical Farming, explaining the relation of Geology to Agriculture, the Soil, the Plant, and the Animal, and their various relations, the Rotation of Crops, Feeding Animals, Manures, Draining Lands, &c., &c. For further information see Catalogue.

Besides Globes. Maps, &c., for the illustration of Astronomy, a Newtonian Telescope of high magnifying power has recently been added to the apparatus.

During the Summer Term, Botany and Geology receive special attention, illustrated by excursions to localities where these sciences may be studied as seen in nature. A Geological and Mineralogical Cabinet is accessible to the students.

The Mathematical Department is under the instruction of OLIVER B. IRISH, Tutor. It embraces thorough instruction in Arithmetic, and the higher pure and practical Mathematics, with field exercises in Engineering and Surveying.

Elocution, embracing Reading, Declamation, General Oratory, and Writing, receives the special attention of a competent teacher.

The Teacher's Department will, as formerly, be in operation during the Fall Term, and last half of the Winter Term. Particular attention to this is solicited from all who intend to teach district schools.

The Female Department is under the care of Miss SUSANNA M. COON, a graduate of Troy Female Seminary, a lady every way competent for this responsible station.

No efforts will be spared to render the young ladies of this Seminary truly accomplished, as well in the social relations of life, as in the substantial branches of learning and the higher refinements of education. Ample facilities are furnished for pursuing French, Italian, German, Drawing, Painting, Music on the Piano, and Vocal Music.

Information.

Good board in private families from $1 25 to $1 50. Parents from abroad should furnish their children with very little pocket money, as many temptations may thus be avoided. Those who wish may deposit money with either of the teachers, to be disbursed according to order, without extra charge.

Tuition, to be settled in advance, per term, from $3 00 to $5 00. Extras—For Drawing, $1 00; Monochromatic Painting, $3 00; Oil Painting, $5 00; Chemical Experiments, $1 00; Writing, including Stationery, 50c.; Tuition on Piano, $8 00; Use of Instrument, $2 00; in Agricultural Chemistry, including Chemicals, Apparatus, fires, &c., (breakage extra,) $12 00.

N. B. A daily stage leaves the railroad and canal at Chittenango for this place at 4 o'clock P. M.

For further information address the President, J. R. Irish, or Professor Gurdon Evans, DeRuyter, Madison Co., N. Y.

NOTES OF A VOYAGE TO CALIFORNIA.—No. 7.

From letters of Dr. J. D. B. STILLMAN to his friends in New York.

SACRAMENTO CITY, Nov. 19th.

* * * I will say a few words about this city. When I passed through here in September, there were not more than half a dozen wooden buildings in the city, with a population of five thousand men. There are now several hundred buildings; yet the great majority of the inhabitants sleep upon the ground, under tents already impregnated with water, and the weather as cold as November at home. The population is much increased, and the place is thronged with miners, who are driven from the mines for want of provisions, which it is difficult to carry, on account of the bad state of the roads. The rains came earlier than usual, and caught them unprepared. As a consequence, thousands will be compelled to leave the mines, and crowd the towns. Building material cannot be obtained fast enough to construct shelters from the storm; many are preparing to winter in their tents, by covering them over with pitch. Thousands will try to winter it through, by living on the supplies already there, and the cattle they have driven across the Plains. Under such circumstances, there must be a great amount of sickness and suffering this winter. There has been so little grass in the valley during the recent dry season, that cattle have died, by thousands, after having crossed the Sierra, many falling by the road, others lying in groups around a pond or sluse, where they had gone for water, and were too weak to get away; and, now that the roads are miry, wagons are often abandoned in the road. Men come down for provisions for companies, and are unable to return.

There is good order here, and but little depression of spirits. All who are settled are getting rich; but, alas! for the unfortunate! You have heard of the "battle of life"—it is a reality here. The fallen are trampled into the earth, and the poor wounded are left to the tender mercies of the earth and sky. No longer ago than last night, I saw a man lying on the ground, unknown, unconscious, uncared for, and dying. To-day, some one, with more humanity than the rest, will have a hole dug for him; some one will furnish an old blanket; he will be rolled up, buried, and his friends, who may be as anxious as any, will never know what has become of him. Money, money, is the all-absorbing passion, and men are here, who would hang their heads at home at the mention of their heartless avarice.

We board at the City Hotel, and pay $24 per week, until our arrangements are complete at the Hospital. We are causing to be erected a building 55 by 35 ft., one and a half stories, with a main hall through, an apothecary's office, consulting room, private wards for eight persons, and dining room, on the first floor, and a main ward on the second floor. These are to be furnished better than any apartments in the city. For the private wards, we shall charge $20 per day, and for the common ward, which will accommodate forty persons, our charge will be $10 per day. For the building, we expect to pay $900 per month, and line it ourselves, which we shall do with muslin and paper—the mode of doing things in this country. We employ a cook at $250 per month, apothecary at $300.

I know that many will inquire my opinion of California. I have thus far said but little, even here. It is not an unpleasant country; and for a residence, with the comforts which one could bring with him from the States, few places would be more desirable than a choice location on the banks of the Sacramento. The greatest drawback is the long dry season. The rains have been frequent since the first of the month, and grass is growing finely. The weather is cool, but we have not yet felt the want of fire. For several days it has been very pleasant, and the roads are quite passable. The spring is said to make a perfect flower-garden of the whole country. Yet there are few who intend to make this country a permanent residence. Many are sending or going for their families, and the society here will be much improved.

So far as making money here is concerned, it is easily done by those who are calculated for it. It will be made just as it is in New York and elsewhere, taking the relative prices of labor as a basis—it may be 75 cents there, it will be $10 here. Too large expectations, and too little knowledge of what they had to encounter, has caused so much disappointment and misfortune. It requires a great degree of determined perseverance, under the most trying circumstances, to ensure success; and then one must have health. Those not thus qualified have succeeded by a fortunate stroke, and the persevering and healthy have failed. One of our passengers, a young man of great refinement, and of a most excellent family in New York, asked me the other day if we could furnish him with employment in the Hospital in any capacity. He had brought out goods, but, for want of energy, had allowed the season to pass, looking for fortune to come to him—but such things do not happen in this country.

A most melancholy instance of the weakness of some young men, when the restraints and support of friends are removed, occurred last evening. A well-dressed young man was seen, very drunk, lying on the ground; and a couple of boys we have with us took him to a shelter, and medical aid was rendered him; but he died and was buried. No one knew him. He had an ounce of gold in his pocket, a note-book, and a Bible. To-day he was recognized, by these relicts, as a young man from Binghamton, N. Y.—the pride of the village, noble, generous, and gifted. He drank, gambled his money away, and drank deeper to drown his trouble. The friends, who had claimed his effects as his administrators, showed his Bible here to-night. It was a miniom edition, with gilt edge and tucks. In one place was a beautiful card, on which was written, "Remember your friend and ——." In another, was a card, worked with worsted, and mounted with silk ribbon, such as we see in ladies' books as ornaments—the motto was, "A sister's prayers go with you." It affected me to tears. What can be expected of such young men, of whom there are too many here, but intemperance and suicide? If you have a friend who is anxious to come to California, and he be not a man of stern virtue, he had better stay at home. There will be an immense amount of gold dug next season, without a doubt, and there will be many going home, discouraged and destitute. A few will go home with higher virtue, and characters formed in the "refiner's fire;" but far the greater number will return, with gold perhaps, but with morals and manners ruined, with habits and feelings that will make them poor members of society. The risk is too great for the reward. I can think of but very few men whom I would advise to come to California.

SACRAMENTO CITY, December 23d.

We are now in our new Hospital. It is, without doubt, the finest building in California. We have just opened, and are not yet complete in our arrangements. It cost, when turned into our hands, $15,000, and still it is no better than a building which, at home, could be erected for $1,000. We pay a rent of $1,500 per month! It is furnished inside with bleached muslin, except the main ward, which is a garret, with half windows. Our private wards are very neat, even for home—the white muslin walls and ceiling doing well for plastered walls; there are no bed-rooms in all California so nice.

We have spent about $2,000, and have not the furniture for a country tavern. To give you an idea of the prices of such things here, I will mention a few items: No. 2 cook-stove, $140; small air-tight stove for hall, $70; pipe for the latter, $90; dining-table, roughly made of Oregon boards, $50; kitchen do., $12; crockery, $125; cots, $20 each;—for pillows, I cut up the tick that I brought out with me, and made a dozen myself, stuffing them with hair from an old matress;—Chinese spreads, per dozen, $96; boards, for shelving, from $8 to $15 each; nails, 25 cents per pound; scales for drug store, $50; drugget for hall and rooms, $2 per yard; chairs $5 each. We bought two sofas from the Bark Croton for $35, and were offered, before we got home again, more money for one of them; and so on.

One thing we had to encourage us in our new enterprise; it was, that we should be doing some good. The public, at home, have no conception of the amount of suffering in the neighborhood of this city. Hundreds are encamped in tents through the rains and storms, scantily supplied with food and covering. Many were driven from the mines for want of a supply of food, and are begging for employment for their subsistence. These are overland men, chiefly ignorant and improvident.

Yesterday there were twenty-five deaths. Many of them were of the best families, and and wealthy at home; here, "none so poor as to do their homage." One of our patients is a noted gambler, whose father is one of the wealthiest men in Kentucky. He has had fever, and was taken with bleeding at the lungs. He was sick in a miserable bunk, surrounded by the companions of his craft, smoking and drinking. His physician, finding that he must die, advised his removal to our Hospital—he will probably die with us. The climate is not bad, however, not worse than "the valley of the Mississippi;" but the sickness springs from exposure and imprudence.

SACRAMENTO CITY, Jan. 11, 1850.

* * * We are witnesses of another great act in the drama of California adventures. Perhaps, before this reaches you, you will be informed of the calamitous flood that is now spreading destruction and death through the valley. Sometimes I laugh, and sometimes I weep, at the strangeness of our situation. We are all—about forty of us—in the upper story of our Hospital; Dr. Morse and myself writing; Dr. Higgins of Kentucky reading Raphael; the cook preparing something for breakfast; others—two or three—quartered with us, talking in an under tone; some asleep, and a few patients raving in delirium; a lone woman, sick and destitute, curtained off in one corner of the room, who lost her husband on the Plains, and supported herself in a tent, by the assistance of a few friends, until water drove her out. She was brought here, with six others, night before last; some are dying on the floor, and two, having died, are wrapped in blankets, and sunk in the dead-room below, where the water is now four feet deep. Dr. Morse pours some brandy into his ink, to give spirit to his letter; and another bottle stands on the table, from which I pour—to quiet the apprehension which mine may waken—laudanum; then we all laugh, and go on as before.

The water is still rising. Tents, houses, boxes, barrels, horses, mules, cattle, are sweeping by with the swollen torrent, that has now spread itself out into a vast sea, extending farther than the eye can reach. There are but few two-story houses; and as the water rose, which it did at the rate of six inches an hour, men were compelled to get outside. To-day there is no first-floor uncovered in the city. But for the vessels in the river, there is no telling what awful scenes would have been witnessed. They are now all crowded with people.

Oh, God! what a night was that of the 9th of January. A warm wind from the south-east, with rain, melted the snow on the Sierra, and the river during the day rose rapidly, and about night began to overflow the levee. We took warning, and cleared our first-floor as fast as we could, (fortunately, our second is a spacious one,) and about 12 o'clock, everything was off the floor that could be injured by water. As the water has risen, we have continued to bring up things, so that we have as yet sustained no great loss, except in the bleached muslin linings and curtains in our nice wards. When our lower story was inaccessible, they would come to us through the upper windows—men begging to be taken in, or bringing some valuables to be kept for them. We would take only the sick, and no sick man was refused. To-day we went out with a boat to find some bedding, but in vain, and came back with a little fuel, of which we had been deprived. All sorts of means are in use to get about—baker's troughs, rafts, and india-rubber beds. To-day the sound of gongs and bells is not heard—the yelling of some man on a roof, or the howling of a dog from the place of his retreat, or the boisterous revelry of the men in boats, who find all they desire to drink floating about them, makes the scene awfully sickening. We see only one or two lights in the second city of California. * * * I think the worst is now over, though the water is gaining on us. The wind may rise, and the waves tear us in pieces—this is my greatest fear. We are in an ocean of water, and a strong wind may make it awful. The Senator carried down the Bay all that it could, and we are in hopes of aid from below, in time.

Sunday 13th. * * * The water has not risen or fallen since the 11th. Yesterday we found it necessary to bury the dead. I spoke a whale-boat that was passing, and, for $40, we got the use of it, and deposited the three bodies on board. Mr. Mulford, who is staying with us and watching the sick, Mr. Cannon the druggist, and myself, with two sailors, started for an island we had discovered with a glass from our window. We could get no coffins, but dug a large grave at the foot of an oak. The two white men, we placed side by side, in blankets, and the black man at the foot. We found a natural cross in digging the grave, formed by a branching root which intersected the pit in both directions. This we erected at the head, and covered the mound with the soft green sod. It was a beautiful day. The meadow-larks and blackbirds were flying about us in great numbers, and along the shores wild geese were feeding on the young grass. It was about a mile from Sutter's Fort.

To-day, two more poor emaciated remains have been deposited below. The weather is cooler, and the water, to-night, is falling a little. The vessels are all crowded with people, and the land in the vicinity of the Fort is crowded with tents, dogs, and cattle. There has been no loss of human life, that I have yet heard of, though it seemed unavoidable. When there are no women or children to provide for, men manage very well to look out for themselves. But cattle have perished in immense numbers.

On my return from visiting a sick man on board the Phœnix, I found one of the patients, a man who came in yesterday, furiously insane. He had got the idea that some one was dealing foul with him, and was determined not to stay. As we sat down to table, he broke a pane of glass, and called out to a boat to take him to the bark "Mousaw," and he would pay them fifty dollars, but they had no time. I went to him to find some solution for so sudden a paroxysm. He had seen the dead carried out, and the dying, and became melancholy, and finally insane. I talked sympathizingly with him, and won his confidence. He said, after looking in my face for a long time, that I had an honest face, and he wished he could put confidence in me, but there were strange things going on in this house. He spoke of his wife and children in Hudson—said he should never see them again—he was sure that he was to die. As I turned from him, he took my hand in both of his, and begged me, as I had a wife I loved, to be his friend. He would end his own life, but in that case the insurance on it would be forfeited, and his wife would thus lose the benefit of all that was valuable in him. He begged me for a cup of tea, with some poisonous drug in it. He pressed my hand to his lips, and wept bitterly. I have seen the most melancholy cases of insanity here, and have seen the poor unfortunate tied hand and foot and carried out of town, and left on a heap of brush to perish. My watch is about up. It is two hours past midnight. I have given my new friend half a grain of morphine, and he is quiet.

January 14th.—My portfolio arrived this afternoon by the last trip of the india-rubber bed. The water has begun to fall. * * * I have been reading passages of your last letter to our monomaniac. What fond memories they woke in his sinking soul! He wept, he pressed my hands, and hung upon my neck. He is an altered man. He has found one who can sympathize with his misfortune; and from a suicide, he is converted into a happy, contented man. How he implored me, last night, as I had a wife I loved, to drug him to death, and so give his wife the benefit of his life insurance; he would do it himself, but then his insurance would be lost. I pointed him to-day to the glowing sky; his soul caught a ray of hope. I told him of a season of plenty coming. "Stillman," he would say, "you have an honest face, but oh, my God!" and then he would bury his face in his hands. He is poor, and we take him without hope of reward, except the gratification of doing good.

* * * To those who have no loved ones at home, the life here is not unpleasant. It does not differ much from that of soldiers in active service; without their discipline and experience, we "go it blind." One would hardly believe it possible, that men could do and dare so much as the Californians do, from wet, cold, hunger, and sickness. Our home-cradled men do not know how much they can endure.

January 23d.—The water has left our floor, though it still surrounds the house. We found four barrels of pork, one of beef, and a case of wine, left on our premises for us to take care of, worth about $200.

SACRAMENTO CITY, Jan. 25th.

* * * I have not yet seen the season of flowers in California; but I think I can hazard this opinion of the country, so far as I have seen it, that it has but one redeeming feature. The summers are fiercely hot by day, from the want of moisture to take up the excess of free heat, and the whole valley is as glowing as a brick-kiln—so dry and hot, that the very lizzards and insects cannot be found, except on the streams; and from June to November, there is no green thing on the plains to be seen—(except it be yourself, as you humbly look inward and downward.) In the mean time, pestilence is walking abroad, and wasting at noon-day. Men insist that this climate is not so very unhealthy, and I have been myself persuaded so; but observation and bitter experience have satisfied me to the contrary. Of the 20,000, who came over the Plains, and traversed almost the breadth of the continent, through every exposure of hunger, fatigue, and climate, and crossed the Sierra with arms strong and hearts resolute, one-tenth, it is estimated, have found graves in this valley. The natives themselves are sinking away before a pestilence for which they know no remedy. I have seen them shaking with an ague fit, in real Anglo-Saxon style, and have traveled over very many of their depopulated towns. The coast is equally unpleasant; the temperature varying from 20° to 40° each day, from noon till four o'clock P. M., when cold fogs sweep with a strong wind through every "crack and cranny" of your tenement. When at length rain does fall, and lays the dust, and clears the blue haze that is spread perpetually between you and the mountains you would look upon, it comes in earnest. Winter is begun; it is rain, mud, and a little sunshine, but mud you will always have in plenty—if it is not always on hand, it will pretty surely be found on foot. At length the whole vast valley is innundated with the swollen and bloated river, sweeping, in its drunken riot, every thing in its course, until it converts the prairie into an ocean. Such is the valley of the Sacramento; San Joaquin is no better; and even the charming little valley of San Jose is said to be inundated. It would seem that in the maidenhood of the world, this State of California had sold its virtue for gold. It is a great place to get money, if one keeps his health, is judicious and industrious; but woe to him who falls sick by the way! * *

Our city is almost deserted. Business is at a complete stand, and will remain so until the roads again open, when the business to be done will be enormous. The sick, who have the means, have chiefly left for "dry diggings." * * * * *

Pine lumber will be cheap for firewood here, before fall. There is no calculating for these markets. Lumber has fallen from $600 to less than $100 per thousand this winter. The knowing ones will buy what must be sold, and somebody loses. Iron boats, if taken to a proper market, will always be in demand. The Novelty Association sold their little eleven-feet boat for $150, just before the flood, and then $500 could not buy it. I could have sold 100 of them at that price. The most of the boats are sacrificed at San Francisco. They are too small for the passage up the bay, and are sold to get rid of them. Boats, to come out here and be the most generally useful, should not be less than 14 feet long. That memorable boat that was owned by the New England Company, and bore us through so many adventures by sea, and through the rapids of the Sacramento—never was there so admirable a boat. Over the ocean's wave and river's snag, she triumphed—bruised, battered, yet unbroken. We at last sold her for some jaded oxen—honest, hard-working countrymen of ours—Spot, Bright, Brandy, Polk and Dallas, Lion, Dave, Bill, and some more. I had a hand in driving them, too; gee, Bill—haw, Dave, &c.; but I could not beat the poor beasts that had survived the journey over the Plains; and "Old Bright," if the flood has spared him, feels a heap of gratitude for the defense I made on his behalf, when a nautical man in our company belabored him unmercifully for inability to clamber up the steep bank of the Yuba with him on his back, and a wagon at his heels, and for the ability which he used, as any sensible creature would have done, to throw the son of Neptune into his own element.

A GRAMMARIAN'S FANCY.—Dr. Willis, an old grammarian, who wrote upwards of a hundred years ago, in noticing the significant roots of the English language, gives various examples. The words formed upon st, always denote strength, analagous to the Latin sto, as stand, stay, staff, stop, stout, steady, stake, stamp, stately, &c. Words beginning with str, intimate violent force and energy, as strive, strength, stripe, strike, stress, struggle, stride, strip, &c. Thr implies forcible motion, as throw, throb, threaten, thraldom, &c. Wr, obliquity or distortion, as wry, wrack, wrest, wreath, wrestle, wring, wrong, wrangle, wrath, &c. Sw, silent agitation or lateral motion, as sway, swing, swerve, swim, sweep, &c. Sl, a gentle fall or less observable motion, as slide, slip, sly, slit, slow, slack, slink. Sp, dissipation or expansion, as spread, sprout, sprinkle, spit, spill, spring. Terminations in ash, indicate something acting nimbly and sharply, as crash, dash, gash, rash, flash, lash, slash. Terminations in ush, something acting more obtusely and dully, as crush, brush, hush, blush, gush. The most that can be argued from some specimens, we imagine, is this, that the analogies of sound have had some influence on the formation of words.

THE WANING MOON.

BY WM. C. BRYANT.

I've watched too late; the morn is near;
  One look at God's broad, silent sky;
Oh, hopes and wishes vainly dear,
  How in your very strength ye die!

Even while your glow is on the cheek,
  And scarce the high pursuit began,
The heart grows faint, the hand grows weak,
  The task of life is left undone.

See, where, upon the horizon's brim,
  Lies the still cloud in gloomy bars,
The waning moon, all pale and dim,
  Sails up amid the eternal stars.

Late in a flood of tender light,
  She floated through the etherial blue,
A softer sun, that shone all night
  Upon the gathering beads of dew.

And still thou wanest, pallid moon;
  The encroaching shadow grows apace;
Heaven's everlasting watches soon
  Shall see thee blotted from thy place.

Oh, Night's dethroned and crownless queen!
  Well may thy sad, expiring ray
Be shed on those whose eyes have seen
  Hope's glorious visions fade away.

Shine then for forms that once were bright,
  Far sages in the mind's eclipse,
For those whose words were spells of might,
  But falter now on stammering lips.

In thy decaying beam there lies
  Full many a grave on hill and plain,
Of those who closed their dying eyes
  In grief that they had lived in vain.

Another night, and thou among
  The spheres of heaven shall cease to shine,
All rayless in the glittering throng
  Whose lustre late was quenched in thine.

Yet soon a new and tender light
  From out thy darkened orb shall beam,
And broaden till it shine all night
  On glistening dew and glimmering stream.

COLPORTAGE IN NORTHERN NEW YORK.

Two students of the Union Theological Seminary, New York, have been engaged recently in colporteur labors in the Northern part of the State. The destitution of portions of Northern New-York, as shown by the report which these colporteurs make, is equal to that of the Valley of the Mississippi. An extract from this report cannot fail to enlist the sympathy and interest of the reader:—

By far the most interesting portion of our field lay in the more destitute and secluded districts. We met the people of one of these remote districts in their school-house, ene Sunday evening. It was well filled, and the people appeared much interested in our remarks. On the following day, we went among them with our books. You can hardly conceive the cordiality with which we were received. Having taken dinner at a poor man's house, we asked him what we should pay him. Looking up, as if surprised, he replied, "Come and board with me for a week, and you shall be free." Men left their work, and came in from the fields as they saw us coming, to examine our books. We could seldom leave a house without stopping at least two hours. Each, furnished with a book, seemed intent upon devouring its contents before we left the house. Thus, surrounded by a hungry family, we have sat an hour in silence, with nothing to interrupt the stillness but the busy lips of children, and the hasty turn of a leaf. At length the father would say, "We want your books; but I have no money." It was no small satisfaction, under such circumstances, for us to lend a volume, to feed the hungry mind. Returning through the neighborhood the next day, the people anxiously inquired what had been our success, and invoked God's blessing upon us.

Such are the days that cheer the heart of the colporteur, and fill him with enthusiasm in the discharge of his duty. But each day is by no means equally replete with interest. Yet, though we have traveled all day over a dreary plain, sweltering beneath a burning sun, and finding but here and there a few scattered log-cabins, the homes of poverty and misery; and again have climbed rugged hills, where spiritual dearth seemed to reign unbroken, where there was no heart to buy a religious book, or taste to read one, and where few could even be persuaded to look at one; we never lay down at night, without feeling that we had been richly paid for the labors of the day. Here the heart-broken wife and mother opened to us all her grief; here the inquiring spirit would listen to our words with tender emotions; and here an unfortunate family, upon whom God had laid a heavy hand, seemed to be waiting for some one to administer a word of consolation. The satisfaction of relieving a burdened spirit, and thus preparing the way for the page of spiritual truth, was very great.

A part of our time was spent in searching out destitute families scattered among the hills and mountains, some of them at least five miles from any stated preaching. Although we found many of them were very poor and often ignorant, yet most of them were tender on the subject of religion, and we saw many bright examples of piety, to whom a religious book was indeed a luxury.

GOLDEN ENVELOPS.

A touching incident is related in the last number of the Christian Union, of a poor servant girl in England, who had attended the ragged schools and received spiritual, as well as intellectual benefit from them, and who, one evening, at the close of the school, put into the rector's hand, much to his surprise, a note containing a half sovereign, i. e. a gold piece of the value of $2¼. Her entire wages were only $40 a year. She offered this as a thanksgiving tribute to God for the blessing she had received from the schools, very modestly and beautifully remarking, that it was not much, "But, sir, I have wrapt it up in an earnest prayer, and with many tears." Here is indeed a most rare and beautiful envelop. Would that our offerings, as we lay them upon God's altar, were more generally enclosed in such golden envelops, "an earnest prayer and many tears." Sweet child, thou shalt be recompensed at the resurrection of the just.

CONSCIENCE AND THE CROW-BAR.

The following incident in the history of a dying man, is used by Dr. Cheever, in his article on Retribution, as illustrative of the power of conscience and of memory:—

Persons drawing near to death not unfrequently remember the minutest incidents of childhood, or things of later life long utterly forgotten. And solemn and awful it is to see with what tenacity and power the minute recollections of guilt cling to the soul.

I knew a rich old man dying, who suddenly sent to a poor widow the price of an iron crow-bar, of which he had defrauded her many years before. A mountain of iron lays not so heavy on the earth, as the remembrance of one sin on a guilty man's conscience, when nearing the passage into the eternal world. No human being beheld the transfer of that iron bar from the possession of that poor widow into the possession of that rich man. It might have been at first a simple act of borrowing, with the intention to return still deferred, till the iron bar become inventoried, as it were, as a fixture of the rich man's own. But conscience and the memory glide not over life so superficially as men might wish, in their selfish, careless disregard of what belongs to others. Conscience and the memory came to the dying man's bedside, and asked him what he would do now with the poor widow's crow-bar, and the soul was compelled to its decision. But if there be such minuteness of recollection, and such power of conscience in little things, in all schemes of fraud and injustice, planned in whatever apparent security. Security? There is an omnipresent conscience, and an all-recording memory, that constitute not only a security, but a certainty of retribution for your guilt, an assurance infallible for its knowledge and discovery; but there can be no possibility of security against it; there is an assurance infallible for its knowledge and discovery, in your own being; but there is no possibility of concealment, there is no such thing as success in guilt or an escape from its consequences. Even if you could keep it from the knowledge of others, you do not keep the key of your own memory; you are not the master of its possessions, to confine them or bid them forth at your will. You may shut the chest, in which you think to keep buried in the caves of memory your secret sins; you may lock it, and throw away the key; but conscience will wrench it open, and scatter its letters of shame to the eye of the universe. It may be a safe against all the ordinary fires of human investigation, and even providential discovery; but put it into the fires of conscience, and it shrivels like a scroll. Or if it were even possible that the fires of conscience could not touch it, then there are the fires of the Last Day.

ANECDOTE OF CHALMERS.

A person well known in Glasgow for superior talent and scientific attainments, but withal for a tinge of scepticism in religion, was met by an old companion hurrying to the Tron Church, while the bells were ringing for the afternoon service.

"Come," said his friend, "and hear Chalmers."

"I shall do no such thing," was the reply. "Do you think I would trouble myself to hear a madman?"

"You had better judge for yourself by coming for once." And, taking his arm, they were both speedily seated in the densely crowded church. What was the astonishment of the sceptical gentleman, when the Doctor gave out for his text—

"I am not mad, most noble Festus; but speak the words of truth and soberness."

He felt that his false judgment of the preacher was rebuked, as it were, by a voice from heaven; and the sermon which he heard, the object of which was to fix the charge of madness where it ought to be fixed, on those who, believing in a future world, continue to live without God and without hope, while it was shown that truth and soberness were only with those who act according to their belief and profession of the gospel, was admirably fitted for deepening the impression made by the text, and for removing the flimsy arguments of "philosophy falsely so called." From that day forth, the gentleman became a constant hearer of Dr. Chalmers, a confirmed believer in the doctrines, and a steady performer of the duties of the Christian faith.

It occasionally happened, about this time, that Prof. Young, of the Greek chair in the University, a man of great learning and genius, of singular metaphysical acumen, was led to the Tron Church from his unbounded admiration of Dr. Chalmers, and nothing could more strongly mark the power of the preacher's eloquence, than the effect it produced upon that distinguished individual. His massive countenance at first became radiant with intellectual delight; then, as the Doctor warmed in his discourse, it swelled out under intense excitement. His lips, which "Peter's Letters" describe as having the firmness of a blacksmith's vice, were puffed out and drawn in with prodigious force and velocity, till at length, fairly overpowered by the magic influence of the preacher, he threw his head backwards, his expansive chest heaved, till the termination of a thrilling paragraph, which afforded the congregation a momentary breathing time, allowed him to remove and clear his spectacles, in preparation for another burst of eloquence. [Church Magazine.

A man's genius is always in the beginning of life as much unknown to himself as to others; and it is only after frequent trials, attended with success, that he dares think himself equal to the undertakings in which those who have succeeded have fixed the admiration of mankind.

The Sabbath Recorder.

New York, March 21, 1850.

CIVIL POWER IN THINGS SACRED.

Our readers have, no doubt, paid some attention to a document embodied in the proceedings of the late Peterboro Convention, as published in the Recorder of last week, purporting to be a "protest" against the resolution of that body which condemned civil penalties for the violation of the Sabbath. We have always entertained views different from those set forth in the protest, and notwithstanding the unpleasantness of disagreeing with a brother who loves the Sabbath as well as Mr. Morton does, we shall proceed to state them. We do so, however, more for the sake of eliciting farther inquiry, than with any view of disputation. If we are wrong on this point, it is high time that we were set right.

We hold—

1st. That the great purpose for which the Jews were separated from the rest of mankind, and constituted a peculiar nation, was that they might attend to the work of foreshadowing the Messiah.

2d. That God became their political Head—their King—in such a sense as He never did to any other nation. By the Shekinah, He resided among them, as a King dwells among his people. The Tabernacle was his palace; the Ark was his throne. Exod. 29: 43—46.

3d. That, as the atonement of Christ has respect to the moral law, so, in order to foreshadow him, two things were necessary—(1.) a lively and glowing representation of divine justice as calling for the death of the sinner, and (2.) a representation of the propitiatory sacrifice which satisfies divine justice. The first of these was given in the civil penalties which were inflicted for a breach of the Decalogue. The transgressor died without mercy, when convicted by two or three witnesses. The second was given by the sacrificial offerings of that dispensation, particularly by the bullock and goat of the sin-offering on the great day of atonement, when blood was sprinkled by the High-Priest upon the mercy-seat, beneath which the tables of the law were deposited. Lev. 16.

4th. That there was, therefore, a necessity for the infliction of civil penalties for breaches of the Decalogue among the Jews, which does not exist among any other people, and, from the nature of the case, can no longer exist, Christ having come and offered the great atonement.

5th. That God's having given the Jewish nation authority to punish breaches of the Decalogue, and that for a special purpose, which was fulfilled in the death of Christ, does not, by any means, prove that other nations have such authority.

6th. That if the fact that the Jewish nation was authorized, and expressly commanded, to punish with civil penalties the violation of the Decalogue, proves that other nations are authorized to do so, it also proves that they are authorized to inflict the same kind of penalties that the Jews did. Hence the Sabbath-breaker, the blasphemer, the idolater, the disobedient to parents, must all be put to death.

7th. That it is the province of civil governments, now, to punish men for such acts as are a violation of rights mutually equal. The murderer should be punished, because his neighbor has the same right to life as himself. The thief should be punished, because his neighbor has the same right to his property that he himself has. But the Sabbath-breaker invades the rights of no other person. His Sabbath-breaking does not hinder his neighbor from Sabbath-keeping. His idolatry does not hinder his neighbor from worshiping the true God.

Some of the inferences, which Bro. Morton has made the eighth resolution responsible for, do not appear to us to be well founded. He says, "According to that resolution, the Jews, God's peculiar people, who were restrained from Sabbath-breaking by civil enactments, had, for fifteen hundred years, neither liberty of conscience, nor freedom of religion."

We suggest, that as God dwelt among that people, as a king amongst his subjects, there was always opportunity to consult Him, and obtain his decision with regard to such acts as might be supposed to be violations of the law. Hence the final decision was always marked by infallibility. There was no possibility of there being any mistake. The man who was found gathering sticks on the Sabbath day, (Num. 15: 32,) was shut up in ward, in order that the final decision of God might be obtained upon his case. The rulers seem to have been in doubt—not whether the Sabbath breaker should be put to death, for that had been commanded already, (Exod. 31: 15,) but, whether his conduct could be construed as an actual and wilful breach of the law. And who does not see, that there are likely to arise thousands of cases, in which it would be difficult for fallible men to decide whether they were breaches of the law of the Sabbath or not? Some would have one opinion, and some another; and, in the absence of a divine oracle, such as the Israelites had in the tabernacle, (Exod. 29: 42,) and in the absence of inspired prophets to pronounce an infallible decision, we hold that it would be impossible for the civil magistrate to exercise a coercive power, without infringing upon liberty of conscience. If we had among us inspired prophets, as the Israelites had, or if we had a tabernacle of witness to resort to, and obtain an infallible decision, the case would be different. But these we have not. And when a civil magistrate undertakes to compel us to keep holy what he thinks is the Sabbath-day, we cannot help thinking that he is a fallible mortal like ourselves, and that, on that very account, he invades our liberty of conscience. When we are sure that God commands, we count it no invasion; for we acknowledge him as Lord of the conscience.

Mr. Morton says, "The Decalogue was in no part—in no sense—Jewish." If he means, by this, that the duties it enjoins are binding alike upon all men, and not upon the Jews merely, we fully agree with him. But we hold that, besides the moral obligation under which the Jews were held to the Decalogue, in common with all the rest of mankind, they were held under a peculiar, covenant obligation. The Ten Commandments are expressly called "the tables of the covenant." Heb. 9: 4. They were the basis of that covenant which God entered into with the Israelites, when He brought them under a pledge to give strict adherence to that system of religion which He was about to enjoin upon them by Moses, and which He then proceeded to enjoin in the Levitical law. Because they were the basis of that covenant, penalties, to be inflicted by the civil magistrate, were annexed; and as the covenant has "waxed old and vanished away," the penalties have vanished with it. The moral obligation of the Decalogue still remains; but we hold that we are under no such covenant obligation to it as the Jews were. We acknowledge no other covenant obligation to it, except what is imposed upon us in that "new and better covenant," confirmed by the blood of Christ, which guaranties no authority to the civil magistrate to enforce its duties.

We are no better "prepared," than Bro. Morton, "to say to the civil magistrate, Lay aside your Bible, and learn your sphere of action from the light of nature." We believe that the Bible is a very important help to the civil magistrate. But we believe that the Bible, properly understood, inculcates the great principle for which we contend, viz., that the rights of men, in civil government, are mutually equal. "All things whatsoever ye would that men should do to you, do ye even so to them," is a principle just as applicable in government affairs, as in private intercourse. But we leave the subject here, for the present, hoping that if we are wrong we may be set right.

SEVENTH-DAY BAPTIST CHAPEL IN SHANGHAI.

The members of our denomination are aware, that our missionaries have, for more than a year past, been preaching to the Chinese, "in their own language, the wonderful works of God." The place where they hold their Sabbath exercises, is a room in their own house, which, though large enough to accommodate all who attend, is in such a secluded part of the city, that the prospect of gathering in any considerable number of hearers, is by no means flattering. Good policy requires that a more eligible place be secured, if possible. A very desirable lot is offered for sale, and our missionaries are anxious to secure it, and to be furnished with the means of erecting upon it, at as early a day as practicable, a good substantial chapel. The Board cordially approves the plan, and the Corresponding Secretary has encouraged Bro. Carpenter to secure the lot, if he can do so at a reasonable price, of which there appears to be no doubt. It is estimated that the lot can be bought, and a comfortable chapel built, for about thirty-five hundred dollars. If it were judged best to put up a more commodious edifice, five thousand dollars, it is supposed, would cover the entire expense. It will be recollected, that a Circular appeared in the Recorder of Jan. 10, proposing to raise the requisite amount, by subscription, in sums of fifty and one hundred dollars each. One brother pledged himself to be one of ten to raise the sum of $500 to purchase the lot, and one of thirty to raise the sum of three thousand dollars to build the chapel, or one of fifty to raise $5,000 for the same purpose. As yet only one other brother has responded to the appeal.

That our brethren may understand that we are in earnest, and mean not to abandon the project till it is carried through, I now make another appeal to those of our denomination whom God has constituted stewards of his bounty, and entreat them to ponder prayerfully, whether they can make a safer and better investment of their money, than by contributing to place our China mission upon a more enlarged and permanent footing. I would suggest, that each pastor in our denomination immediately set about seeing what can be accomplished in the church to which he ministers, and let the whole matter be carried through as quickly as possible. Where there is no pastor or regular minister, let some leading brother, who has the cause of missions at heart, undertake it. I would farther suggest, as there may be some churches which do not contain members who are able to give so large a sum as fifty dollars, that they allow their pastor to pledge the amount in his own name, and then proceed to raise the amount in smaller subscriptions. I transcribe the resolution adopted by the Board at its last quarterly meeting, and hope that we shall be able to announce, before long, that the subscription is entirely filled:—

"Resolved, That the Corresponding Secretary be instructed to open a subscription to raise $3,500, to purchase a lot and build a Chapel in Shanghai, in sums of $50 each."

"THOU SHALT NOT KILL."

Copied for the Sabbath Recorder from a Lecture delivered at Shiloh, N. J., Feb. 13, 1850.

The sixth commandment says, "Thou shalt not kill," and is evidently intended to guard human life against violence—to render it a sacred thing, which is not to be touched but by Him whose gift it is, and who has a right to resume it at his pleasure. It is justly understood to forbid suicide, and for this plain reason, that we have not absolute power over our own life, but are bound to employ it for the ends for which it was bestowed, till the gift is resumed by the giver. We know of no circumstances that will justify self-murder. Neither disgust of life, which can only exist in an ungrateful mind; nor severe affliction, which, coming from the hands of the Deity, it is our duty to bear with patience; nor the apprehension of evil, which may not befall us, and to which, if it come, we are bound to submit without a murmur—can be plead in justification of suicide. We are not to commit violence against the image of God, in the persons of our fellow men, nor in our own person. We are not to rob the society to which we belong, or any part of it, of the service which any of its members might do it, neither are we to rob it of what we might do. We are not to send our fellow man prematurely out of the world, neither are we to send ourselves out, but we are bound to wait with patience all the days of our appointed time.

The great prohibition in this command is murder. As to the manner in which it is committed, whether a person do it himself, or employ another; whether he do it by force, or fraud, or color of justice; accusing falsely, or taking any undue advantage; these make but little difference in the guilt, farther than that the most artful and studied way is generally the worst. Not only the outward act of murder is prohibited, but all the causes which lead to it. If a person does not directly design the death of another, yet if he designedly does what he knows or suspects may probably occasion it, he is, in proportion to such knowledge, guilty. Nay, if he is only negligent in matters which may affect human life, or meddles with them when he has cause to think that he understands them not, he is far from innocent.

The spirit of the precept I have quoted, plainly interdicts all callings, occupations, and practices, which are injurious to the health or safety of the community, or which may tend to shorten the lives of individuals, such as the manufacture or sale of articles of food or beverage, which we have reason to believe will be abused to the hurt or death of our fellow creatures. In like manner, all incompetent practice of the medical art, all competing trials of speed in steamboats, all pugilistic combats, and whatever goes to wound, cripple, or maim the body, and thus endanger life, comes fairly within the range of this sixth commandment.

You will all, probably, agree with me in saying, that, to contribute in any manner toward taking away the life of a fellow creature, immediately, is criminal; and, is it not criminal to contribute, willfully and knowingly, to the shortening of it? Is it no violation of the spirit of that law which prohibits suicide, to shorten the period of our lives by indulging an unnatural and depraved appetite? Shall the man who voluntarily makes use of a beverage which, in many instances, renders a great part of his life not only useless to himself, but worse than useless, both to himself and to the society in which he lives, be called innocent? Or, shall that man be held guiltless, who, with a knowledge of the effects which they produce, continue the occupation of making or vending alcoholic liquors, to be used as a beverage by his fellows?

That these liquors, when used as a daily drink, do shorten the lives of those who thus use them, admits not of dispute. The testimony of hundreds of the most learned and able physicians and physiologists of the age, abundantly prove that fact, and the point is as firmly settled as any other physiological question that depends upon the same kind of evidence, viz. the experience and observation of practical physicians. Dr. Cheyney, of Dublin, after thirty years of medical practice, observation, and experience, gives the following opinion:—"Let ten young men begin, at twenty years of age, to use but one glass of only two ounces a day, and never increase the quantity, nine out of ten of these men will shorten life, on an average, more than ten years." We might produce the testimony of hundreds of the most enlightened medical men of the present day to the same effect. But let us take the half of this number for moderate drinking, and say farther, that drunkenness shortens life fifteen years. Suppose that there are in the United States twenty-five moderate drinkers to one drunkard, and that there are three hundred thousand drunkards; alcohol would cut off more than forty millions of years of human life, equal to twenty years each of two millions of men. And this, in ordinary times, without any special sickness, and under the operation of only the ordinary causes of mortality. In seasons of special sickness, and prevalent epidemics, the number might be greatly increased. Intemperance of any kind, but especially in the use of distilled liquors, has been, it is stated, a more productive cause of cholera than any other, and indeed than all others. Reports from India, Moscow and St. Petersburg in Russia, London, Paris, Canada, and different parts of the United States, corroborate the assertion, that this disease fastens its deadly grasp on the class of men who use intoxicating liquors.

When such facts are taken into consideration, it must be evident to all who are acquainted with them, that the number of deaths occasioned by the drinking of such liquor must be exceedingly great. Men, therefore, who, with a knowledge of these facts, continue to drink it, to sell it, to manufacture it, or rent buildings for the sale of it, are guilty of aiding in the destruction of their fellow men. They are, undoubtedly, guilty of a flagrant violation of the spirit of this sixth article of the Decalogue, which says, "Thou shalt do no murder." They, certainly, are not guiltless, if, as I have previously endeavored to show, the command not to take away our own life, binds us to avoid, not only direct suicide, but every thing that has a tendency to bring our own lives, or the lives of our fellow men, to an untimely close.

ANTI-SLAVERY PETITIONS.

The subject of Slavery is now prominently before the people and the Congress of the United States. Everywhere the question is being discussed, whether the cruel and arbitrary laws to reclaim alledged fugitives from Slavery shall be enforced—whether Slavery and the slave-trade shall be abolished in the District of Columbia—and whether Slavery shall be excluded from the New Territories? This is the time for the Friends of Freedom to be on the alert, and make known their opinions and their wishes. They ought now to speak out—in their school districts and town gatherings—through their local papers and by their petitions—in favor of the dumb and down-trodden slaves. The Executive Committee of the American and Foreign Anti-Slavery Society are bestirring themselves to make the most of the present exigency. They have prepared, and caused to be circulated throughout the country, forms of Petition upon the subjects most prominent before the nation. These Petitions ought to receive the signature of every friend of the slave, and be forwarded to Congress in such numbers that their influence will be felt. We copy them below, and hope that in each neighborhood to which they come some one will be found ready to canvass for signitures.

Petitions.

To Secure to alledged Fugitives the Right of Trial by Jury.

To the Congress of the United States:

The undersigned, citizens and electors of the State of , residing in , in the county of , respectfully request that provision be made by law, that whenever a person shall be arrested as a fugitive slave, in any State other than that in which he is alledged to be held to service, he shall not be delivered to the claimant or his agent except on the finding of a Jury that he is the slave of the claimant.

For the Repeal of all Laws enacted or adopted by Congress for the support of Slavery in the District of Columbia.

To the Congress of the United States:

The nndersigned, citizens and electors of the State of , residing in , in the county of , respectfully pray for the repeal of all laws and parts of laws adopted or enacted by Congress, by which Slavery or the slave-trade is authorized or sanctioned in the City of Washington or the District of Columbia; and that, in the event of their non-repeal, the seat of the National Government may be removed to some more suitable location.

Against the Admission of more Slave States into the Union.

To the Congress of the United States:

The undersigned, citizens and electors of the State of , residing in , in the county of , respectfully pray that no State be hereafter admitted into the Union, unless the Constitution of such State shall expressly prohibit the existence of Slavery within its limits.

For the Establishment and Protection of Freedom in the Territories of the United States.

To the Congress of the United States:

The undersigned, citizens and electors of the State of , residing in , in the county of , respectfully pray that Slavery and the slave-trade may be expressly prohibited by act of Congress in all the Territories of the United States.

SCENE AT A BETHEL CHAPEL.

At the "Floating Church of our Saviour," moored on the East River side of New York, a solemn and impressive scene occurred on a recent Sunday. It seems that Capt. David Cook, of the bark Sarah, and Capt. Hoxie, of the ill-fated Caleb Grimshaw, met there, and sat beside each other on the same seat. It is usual for the officiating Chaplain to read the notes requesting prayers for God's protection and preservation of sailors bound to sea, and of those just returned in safety, desiring to thank God in his sanctuary for His merciful guardianship and interposition in their behalf, in preserving them from the dangers to which they have been exposed on their last voyage. Among these latter, read on this occasion, was one to the following effect:—

"Capt. Wm. Hoxie, of the ship Caleb Grimshaw, on behalf of himself, wife, and child, and his passengers, officers, and crew, desires to return thanks to Almighty God, in His house, for His merciful interposition in rescuing them from an awful death, after many of them had been eleven days exposed to conflagration on their burning ship at sea."

The Chaplain, Rev. R. C. C. Parker, then delivered a discourse, suited to the occasion, from the text, "The voice of the Lord is upon the waters." As the circumstances connected with the burning of the Grimshaw, and the saving of the passengers by the Sarah, were portrayed, the excitement of the congregation, a large part of whom were seamen, became intense. There was scarcely a dry eye in the house during the delivery of the latter part of the discourse, and the preacher was himself so affected that several times his utterance seemed to be choked.

After the benediction, it was proposed that a Bible be presented, in the name of the congregation, to each one of the officers and crew of the bark Sarah, and contributions for the object were accordingly deposited in a box appropriated to such purposes. Then, by request, Mr. Braine, the consignee of the Sarah, and Capt. Hoxie, conducted Capt. Cook to the door of the Church, where all, on retiring, had an opportunity to take him by the hand, and express to him their thanks for his noble conduct.

New Mode of Catching Slaves.—A letter to the editor of the "True Wesleyan," says that on the last Sunday in February, a local preacher of the Methodist Episcopal Church, named Mayhew, gave out an appointment to preach near Antrim, Guernsey Co., Ohio, and a large concourse assembled to hear him.

"After the sermon, he deliberately walked from the stand to the outskirts of the congregation, and laid hold of a colored sister in the church, who had a child of her own in her arms, and proceeded to draw a rope from his pocket, to tie her, claiming at the same time that she was a fugitive slave of one of his neighbors, and saying that he was sent after her, and took this plan to find her, in order to secure the reward of $75 offered for her. Upon remonstrance by some of the bystanders, he played the bravado, by displaying sundry revolvers and bowie knives from his pockets, and stated, that if any one would dare to interfere, they would feel the effects of them; then he deliberately put her in his buggy, tied her, and drove off. The woman is a widow, who has resided in the country for several years."

Congress is just now importuned by the South to pass more stringent laws for the reclaiming of fugitive slaves; and distinguished statesmen have gone so far as to assert, that it is the duty of every good citizen to aid in the work. Contemplate the business, as it is exhibited in the above paragraph, and determine what course you will pursue.

Reprisals by Virginia.—Gov. Floyd, of Va., has recently sent a message to the Legislature of that State on occasion of the refusal of the Governor of Ohio to surrender a free negro charged with a criminal offense—that offense being, as we believe, the incitement of slaves to obtain freedom in the natural way. Gov. F. goes for reprisals on the States which offend in this way. He says:—

"I am of the opinion, that a system of taxation under the License Law can be so arranged as to transfer entirely the trade from those States, which have trampled under foot the Constitution of the United States, to those which are still willing to abide by its compromises and recognize our rights under it. This would be a peaceful and efficient remedy, doubly recommended to us, because it is under our own exclusive control, and the work of our own authorities. We now tax a tin pedlar ten dollars a year, while a clock pedlar has to pay fifty. The venders of all articles manufactured in the recusant States could be taxed one hundred per cent., and the vender be required to show where the articles were made. Pains and penalties could be easily attached to any evasion of the law, which would ensure the due enforcement of it. The details could be made to embrace live stock and the products of the soil."

Revival at Little Compton, R. I.—Rev. R. Donkersley writes to the editor of Zion's Herald, an interesting account of what he calls one of the most powerful revivals of religion which for many years has been witnessed by any of the New England churches. He says:—

"So far as we can ascertain from the reports of the pastors of the Congregational and Methodist churches, there have been nearly if not quite 200 conversions. The population of Little Compton is about 1,400 souls. These churches may perhaps claim the oversight of 900 of the entire population, the eastern part of the town being under other pastoral care. Of this 900, about 200 already belonged to the churches in question, so that the conversions are about two-sevenths of the entire non-professing part of the inhabitants! There is scarcely a family in the western part of the town in which this gracious influence has not been seen and felt. During our recent visit we rambled from house to house; and into whatever house we entered, we met with the cheering intelligence that parents, sons, or daughters, had become 'reconciled to God.'"

"Vain Amusements," &c.—The following resolution was passed by a Convention recently held at Beloit, Wis. It is as timely as it is strong. Do the churches by whose representatives it was adopted, keep free from its censures, by keeping free from the "fairs" which have been so popular in some sections?

"Resolved, That we regard the attendance of members of our churches at dancing parties, theaters, or circuses, or their engaging in lotteries or other games of chance, as immoralities, and manifest violations of our covenant, which forbids us to engage in 'vain amusements,' and requires us to 'renounce the ways of sin.'"

Instruction of Slaves in Kentucky.—At a late meeting of the Chickasaw Presbytery, Ky., a committee previously appointed made a report on the religious instruction of the colored population. The report indicates a higher sense of obligation on this subject, than is to be found in some of the slave States. It says that the slaves are "entitled" to religious instruction. That they need it, is thus asserted, "The majority of them have the most stupid and debasing views (we had almost said no views) of moral duties and religious obligation." The writers of the report say, "We wish the slaves to have what we believe to be the most scriptural character of religious instruction, and the most edifying forms of religious worship, and we feel bound to give it to them."

Puseyistic Mummery.—The English Church and State Gazette says, that in Margaret-street Chapel, London, a very reprehensible species of mummery took place at a midnight service on Christmas eve. "A procession, we understand, of the congregation, paraded round the chapel; as midnight struck on the clock, a gas star suddenly shot forth, on which all the people knelt down and sang, 'Hail, Star of Bethlehem!'"

Emigration of Canadians to the United States.—The Rev. Arthur Chiniquy, the great Canadian Apostle of Temperance, having recently been on a tour through the United States, has addressed a letter to the Melanges Religieux, in which he says:—

"I do not exaggerate, when I say, that there are no less than 200,000 Canadians in the United States; and unless efficient means are taken to stop this frightful emigration, before ten years two hundred thousand more of our compatriots will have carried to the American Union their arms, their intelligence, and their hearts. It is no part of my present plan to examine the causes of this deplorable emigration; but it must be always true, that when a people, en masse, quit a country, it is because that unfortunate country is struck with some hideous plague—is devoured by some cancer. God has placed in the heart of man a love for his country, and when a man turns his back upon his country, and with the eye moistened by tears bids it an eternal adieu, it is because something essential has been wanting to him in that country. It is because he has wanted bread, room, or just liberties. I leave others to say which of the three has been deficient in Canada. All that I can assure is, that in the United States these three essential elements of the life of nations are to be found in abundance."

Singular Effect of Music upon Martin Luther.—D'Aubigné, in his History of the Reformation, gives the following narration concerning the effects of music upon Luther. The incident took place while he was in a convent. He was himself a good musician, and exceedingly fond of the art:—

"One day, overcome with sadness, he shut himself in his cell; and, for several days and nights he suffered no one to approach him. One of his friends, Lucas Edemberger, uneasy about him, took with him some young boys, choral singers, and went and knocked at the door of his cell. No one opened or answered. Edemberger broke open the door, and found Luther stretched upon the floor, without any signs of life. His friend tried in vain to recall his senses. Then the choristers began to sing a sweet hymn. Their clear voices acted like a charm upon the poor monk, to whom music had always been a source of delight, and by degrees his consciousness returned."

Faithfulness Rewarded.—When the Cholera was raging in St. Louis, Bishop Hawks, of Christ Church, was noted for his faithfulness in attending upon the sick and dying. His parishioners, being desirous of furnishing some abiding testimonial of their admiration and esteem for his self-denying labors, have sent him a purse containing about three thousand dollars, which, they say, was "contributed with the view to aid in procuring a suitable residence for yourself, and one who, seeming to be endued with more than her wonted strength in those days of trouble, by her works of charity and love, and the exhibition of her Christian faith, has approved herself to be indeed 'an help meet' for you."

Return of Missionary Families.—The ship Montreal, from the Sandwich Islands, arrived at New Bedford last week, bringing, as passengers, Mrs. Richards, widow of the late Rev. Wm. Richards, and two daughters, Mr. Paris and two children, Mr. C. B. Andrews, the eldest son and daughter of Mr. Clark, eldest son of Mr. Hitchcock, eldest son of Mr. Alexander, also the two eldest daughters of Mrs. Chamberlain.

Persecution for Printing the New Testament.—A statement appeared a few weeks since, that nine thousand copies of the New Testament, printed at Florence, had been seized by officers of the Government. The case has been recently tried, and the Averni, a paper of Lausanne, states that Mr. Binelli, the printer, is condemned to pay a fine of fifty crowns, (or dollars,) and the copies seized are confiscated, notwithstanding an eloquent defense pronounced by Counsellor Marri.

Methodist Chapels in England.—The Wesleyan Times states that the gross value of the chapel property in England amounts to near eighty millions of money, all of which is made over to the Wesleyan Conference; and, what is of great importance to the Conference, they are not liable for any of the enormous debts owing on the chapels.

Honor to Ohio.—A law has passed the lower house of the Ohio Legislature, and will pass the Senate, it is said, making it a penal offense in any person to interfere for the purpose of affording any aid in the arrest, or detection, or surrender of fugitive slaves.

Missionaries.—Rev. John V. N. Talmage and his wife sailed from this port, last week, in the ship Tartar, for Amoy, China, under the care of the American Board. They received their instructions from Rev. Dr. Anderson, Secretary of the Board, on the previous Sunday evening.

Travel on the Hudson.—The Hudson River is again open to Albany. It closed on the 26th of December, and opened on the 9th of March, making 73 days that navigation was interrupted. Most of the boats are already in motion—among them the Isaac Newton and Oregon, which form a line not surpassed, for regularity, elegance, or comfort, by any line of steamers running from New-York.

PROCEEDINGS IN CONGRESS LAST WEEK.

In Senate. SECOND-DAY, March 11.

After disposing of routine business, the President's California Message was taken up, and Wm. H. Seward, of New York, having the floor, addressed the Senate. Upon his individual judgment, and as an instructed representative of the State of New York, Mr. Seward was in favor of the immediate and unconditional admission of California. He reviewed the objections which had been raised to her admission, and showed that they were not sufficient to justify rejection. He then set forth his reasons for believing that California ought to be admitted. The increase of population in the United States, he thought, would give us two hundred millions in one hundred years, extending from the Atlantic to the Pacific. The unity of this empire seemed to him vastly important; but there is no probability of its being secured if California is rejected, for in that case she will have every inducement to organize as an independent State, with a government of her own. In relation to the claim, that the admission of California shall be attended by a compromise of the slavery question, Mr. Seward was very decided; he was opposed to any such compromise, in any and every form which had been proposed. Legislative compromises were all radically wrong, involving a surrender of the exercise of judgment, and the right to reconsider in future the decisions of the present; a mere usurpation, as to future legislators. What was he to give up in this compromise? Some portion of human rights, some portion of liberty in one region, for liberty in another region. But California brings gold as well as freedom. He was, then, to surrender some portion of human freedom for the mixed consideration of liberty, gold, and power on the Pacific coast. But he was opposed to this compromise in particular, because of the inequality and incongruity of the interest to be compromised. California must come in, whether Slavery stands or falls in the District of Columbia, New Mexico, California, or even in the Slave States. Mr. Seward concluded by expressing his confidence, that the Union is in no danger from the consummation of the measure proposed.

House of Representatives.

A resolution was introduced to appropriate $3,000 for the purchase of food and ammunition for the suffering Sioux Indians on St. Peter's River.

The resolutions of New York, declaring that the General Government ought to relieve itself from slavery and the slave-trade, were presented.

The California Message then came up. Mr. Stanton, of Kentucky, made a pro-slavery speech, and was followed by Mr. Fowler, of Massachusetts, on the other side.

In Senate. THIRD-DAY, March 12.

The Senate had under consideration a resolution referring all the Slavery resolutions and compromises to a Select Committee. Nothing done towards selecting the Committee.

Mr. Turney made a speech upon Mr. Clay's Compromise Resolutions, taking extreme southern ground.

House of Representatives.

The Report of the Commissioner of Patents was taken under consideration, and a vote passed to print 50,000 copies of the mechanical portion, and 100,000 copies of the agricultural portion.

The Slavery question was then discussed by Messrs. Gorman of Indiana, Brown of Mississippi, Butler of Connecticut, and others.

In Senate. FOURTH-DAY, March 13.

Mr. Foote's motion for the appointment of a Select Committee on the Slavery question was under consideration all day, and remarks upon it were made by several Senators.

House of Representatives.

A Memorial of the Senators and Representatives of California, with an authentic copy of the Constitution of that State, was presented by Mr. Boyd, of Kentucky, and laid on the table.

Mr. Thompson, of Pennsylvania, reported a bill to establish an additional District Court in the eastern part of Texas, and asked to have it put on its passage, contending that its immediate adoption was absolutely essential to the administration of justice in Texas, &c. This scheme looked very harmless at first; but some of the Anti-Slavery men consider it a cunning scheme to obtain indirectly the sanction of Congress to the extension of the jurisdiction of Texas and Slavery considerably beyond the proper limits of that already large State. The bill was finally referred to the Committee of the Whole on the State of the Union.

In Senate. FIFTH-DAY, March 14.

Mr. Seward presented petitions from citizens of New York, asking for the passage of a law granting fugitive slaves a trial by jury. A motion to table the question of their reception was lost, 14 to 27.

Mr. Douglass concluded a speech he began yesterday, and declared himself in favor of the admission of California, independent of all other questions.

Mr. Foote's motion for a Select Committee was taken up, and Mr. Cass concluded his speech, mainly in reply to Mr. Calhoun.

House of Representatives.

The House had the California question under consideration, as usual, and was addressed by Mr. Hebard, of Vermont, and Mr. Morse, of Louisiana—the former in defense of Freedom, and the latter of Slavery. Mr. Morse declared himself in favor of dissolution unless Congress will consent to establish Slavery on so much of the territory of the United States as lies South of 36° 30′.

In Senate. SIXTH-DAY, March 15.

Mr. Chase presented a memorial in relation to the establishment of a line of telegraph across the Continent, and through Behring's Straits, to connect with Europe. Referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. Walker introduced a bill for the survey of a route for the construction of a railroad to the Pacific. Read twice and referred to the Committee on Roads and Canals. All papers in relation to this enterprise were referred to the same Committee.

The census bill was taken up, but before any action was had upon it, the Senate adjourned over to Second-day.

House of Representatives.

The House spent most of the day on private bills. The only one of general interest passed, was that to refund the fine of four hundred dollars, with interest from 1800, imposed on Dr. Thomas Cooper (deceased) under the Sedition Law.

PROPERTY OF MARRIED WOMEN.—The following act was passed during the session of the last Legislature in Wisconsin. A similar law was passed by the New-York Legislature in March, '48. Its provisions are highly important, and, in the course of years, will work a material change in the rights of property and the credit system:—

SEC. 1. The real estate, and the rents, issues, and profits thereof, of any female now married, shall not be subject to the disposal of her husband, but shall be her sole and separate property, as if she were a single female.

SEC. 2. The real and personal property of any female who may hereafter marry, and which she shall own at the time of marriage, and the rents, issues, and profits thereof, shall not be subject to the disposal of her husband, nor be liable for his debts, and shall continue her sole and separate property.

SEC. 3. Any married female may receive by inheritance, or by gift, grant, devise, or bequest, from any person other than her husband, and hold to her sole and separate use, and convey and devise, real and personal property, and any interest or estate therein, and the rents, issues, and profits, in the same manner and with like effect, as if she were unmarried, and the same shall not be subject to the disposal of her husband nor be liable for his debts.

INDEPENDENCE OF LIBERIA.—The Legislature of Ohio, last month, passed the following resolution in favor of the acknowledgment of the Independence of Liberia by the United States, which the Senate has referred to its Committee on Foreign Relations:—

Whereas, the colored emigrants from the United States, who have been settled on the Coast of Africa by the agency of the American Colonization Society, are now organized into an independent Republic, and have been acknowledged as such by England and France; and whereas, the influence exerted by the Colony in promoting civilization in Africa has been very beneficial, and promises extensive usefulness; and whereas, intelligent colored men in the United States are unwilling to emigrate to Liberia until its Independence shall be acknowledged by the United State; therefore, Resolved, by the General Assembly of the State of Ohio, That our Senators in Congress are hereby instructed, and our Representatives in Congress requested, to use their influence to induce the General Government to acknowledge the Independence of the Republic of Liberia; that they also be requested to use all honorable means to induce the free blacks of the United States to emigrate to that country.

PREMIUMS ON CALIFORNIA TICKETS.—A correspondent of the New York Tribune says that persons purchasing tickets by the steamers for California, at second-hand, cannot go through with them. "I saw yesterday a man at the office of Messrs. Howland & Aspinwall, who had purchased and paid a large premium for a ticket sold to a party who was prevented from going out, and he was told (as have been all others who applied there for information) that he would be stopped at Panama. The party was told that the number of his ticket would be sent on to the agent at Panama, and the holder not allowed to go on board the ship unless he could prove himself to be the original purchaser. This plan has been adopted by the Messrs. Howland & Aspinwall, to prevent the imposition practiced upon persons by charging a premium for tickets, and also put a stop to ticket speculations. Persons wishing therefore to go safely should, avoid buying second-hand tickets unless they are transferred on the books of the company with their consent, which I understand is never withheld where the original purchaser cannot go, and wishes, for that reason, to dispose of his ticket—but such transfer is not made at all if one dollar of premium is received by the seller in any shape or way."

TWENTY-FIVE LIVES LOST ON THE ICE.—The Dutch journals relate the following terrible accident from the giving way of ice in Holland:—Some days since, some of the inhabitants of Haaren, in the eastern part of Hanoverian Freisland, amounting to twenty-five, went on the river Ems, with a view of diverting themselves by skating. The river at this part is rather broad. They had scarcely commenced their diversion, when a part of the ice gave way, and five of them disappeared; the others hastened to their assistance, when they unfortunately met the same fate. The whole of the bodies were afterwards recovered, quite dead.

THE GOLD FUROR IN IOWA.—The Burlington (Iowa) Gazette thinks the California emigration from that State for the present year will more than double that of last year. It says that at least one hundred will go from that town alone, and from two to three hundred from the county. Several of the most skillful and substantial mechanics of Burlington are among the number preparing to leave. The Gazette adds: One reason, probably, why the furor prevails among us to such an extent is, that with scarcely an exception all who left last Spring—about 100—have written back encouragingly.

BATHS FOR THE POOR.—Mr. Joseph Hambro, a Jew banker of London, who lately died, left by his will 800,000 rix dollars (570,000f.) to the City of Copenhagen, his native place, for the establishment of charitable institutions, but subject to the condition that his son, Mr. Charles Hambro, at present chief of the bank, should enjoy the interest of the capital during his life. Mr. Charles Hambro, a short time ago, proposed to the municipality of Copenhagen to give up the life interest, provided that it would undertake to build two bath and washhouses for the poor, as in England. The municipality has just accepted the generous offer.

A LIBERTY-LOVING LEGISLATURE.—On the 25th ult., when the consideration of the Constitutional Convention was before the Michigan House, Julius Movius, a Christian Jew, moved to strike out from the clause specifying who shall be entitled to vote for Delegates, the words "person entitled to vote at that election," and insert "Every free male inhabitant, of the age of twenty-one years, who has resided in this State six months next preceding said election, and who is an actual resident of the State on that day;" which, on motion of Mr. Britain, was indefinitely postponed, by a vote of 47 to 16.

DEPOPULATION BY CHOLERA.—The Natchez Free Trader, of the 17th ult., announces the entire depopulation of the thriving village of Trinity, in Louisiana, about thirty miles distant from Natchez, by the ravages of Cholera. There were ten or twelve physicians called to the place, but they were hardly able to save one patient. A Mr. Snyder had 25 or 30 boarders, all of whom died, that did not leave the place. Mr. Snyder staid and took care of them until the last one died, then descended to the mouth of Red River, and he too died on the steamer Cincinnati, going to Natchez.

A CELESTIAL STRANGER.—Capt. Perkins, recently arrived from Porto Cabello, reports that on Feb. 12, in lat. 14° 40′ and lon. 64° 58′, at 8 o'clock, P. M., he observed a luminous appearance in the heavens resembling a large ball of fire, about ten feet in diameter. It appeared in the West, moving eastward, rather slowly, and was in sight a little more than a minute. It appeared to travel about ten degrees high, and during its continuance the heavens were illumined with a brightness nearly equal to that of noon-day. When disappearing it broke into a thousand fragments. [Tribune.

SUDDEN DEATH AND SINGULAR CAUSE.—About one year ago, a small boy less than eight years of age, while sitting in church during divine service, was taken out of a seat where he was in company with boys of his age, and placed in another seat, as he had, probably been giggling or whispering. In reseating him, the sexton "chocked him down" upon the seat so as to injure his spine. His neck has, for the past year been growing crooked, and at times he has had fits of strangulation in his throat, which have frequently nearly carried him off. He has often been almost unable to breathe. A few mornings since, in one of these fits he was strangled to death. [Albany Knickerbocker.

PEACE MOVEMENTS.—A meeting of the Massachusetts Peace Society was held in Boston one evening last week, for the purpose of appointing delegates to the Peace Congress to be held at Frankfort-on-the-Main, in August next; Gov. Briggs presided. Addresses were made by Rev. Messrs. Stone, Brooks, and Allen, and by Messrs. Blanchard, Walker, Greele, and Burritt. Charles Summer and John Tappan were appointed delegates at large from the State to the proposed Peace Congress of Nations. A series of resolutions was adopted, expressing gratification in the result of the Congress at Paris, and responding to the call for that proposed in Germany; recommending the appointment (additional) of one delegate from each Congressional District, and of delegates from the colleges, cities, and great religious bodies. Deacon Greele made an extremely happy allusion to the good omen of the fact, that the chair was held by the commander-in-chief of the military forces of Massachusetts; and Mr. Burritt fired a broadside of statistics, summing up a calculation that but one cent (the world over) was now appropriated for missionary purposes for every five dollars expended for purposes of war, by the terse climax, "MILLIONS FOR MARS, BUT MITES FOR THE MESSIAH!" [Independent.

FIRE AND LOSS OF LIFE AT A CAMP MEETING.—A correspondent of the Western Watchman, giving an account of the meeting of the Black River Association, Missouri, which was held in camp, says:—"The Association closed its business on Monday evening; and the brethren intended to protract the meeting several days, had it not been for the great calamity that followed. Towards morning, the people were suddenly awakened by the alarm of fire, which caught in one of the camps, from a candle left burning. The wind was high; and so far had the fire advanced before any one awoke, that in ten minutes a row of camps, one hundred and twenty feet long, were in flames. Two negro girls, belonging to brother William Williams, were burnt to death in his camp before they could be rescued! The property consumed in the fire has been estimated at about $1,300. Many lost all their clothing."

The Long Island Railroad Company has failed, and a Receiver of the road and all the assets of the Company has been appointed. In February of this year, a debt of $150,000 came due, and the Company being unable to pay it, made a mortgage of the road to the amount of $500,000, to secure the entire debt of the Company, and under this mortgage issued bonds, due in 1870, in exchange for outstanding bonds. One bond-holder declined exchanging thus, sued the Company, recovered judgment, and was determined to carry the matter on to a forced sale. Hence the appointment of a Receiver for the purpose of protecting the rights of all creditors.

Dr. Mott, of New York, in order to remove a large tumor from the inside of a man's nose, cut the flesh from the eye to the mouth, dissected the flesh from the bone, and laid it on the other side of the face, when he sawed out a piece of the bone. and removed the tumor. The patient is doing well, and the face will be but slightly disfigured by the operation.

Three persons were lately convicted in New York of highway robbery, in which but eighty cents were obtained. They were sentenced to 10 years and 6 months, 10 years and 4 months, and 10 years and 2 months, imprisonment, respectively, making in the aggregate 31 years!—or nearly one year's imprisonment for every two and a half cents!

M. Verbeyst, the most celebrated book collector in Europe, or perhaps in the world, has just died at Brussels, at an advanced age. He had founded a very curious establishment, consisting of a house of several stories, and as high as a church, and disposed so as to contain about 300,000 volumes, arranged according to their subjects.

SUMMARY.

A very fine lot of American bacon has just been received by Messrs. Stewart & Cockburn, of Harrington st. Liverpool, says the Mercury. The bacon is what is called by the trade "long middles," very handsomely cut, without the hams, and entirely free from bone. Two of the sides weigh about 200 weight each, and the quality is equal to any English-fed bacon. It has been inspected by several persons in the trade, who pronounce it to be the finest American bacon ever imported.

A correspondent of the Lowell Advertiser, writing from Washington, states that Mr. Nathaniel Greene, after eighteen years' service as Postmaster of Boston, has within a few days closed his account of millions with the Post-Office Department, and upon a final settlement received a check for $700, and the thanks of the head of the Department for the faithful discharge of his duties and prompt settlement of his accounts.

According to the circular of T. H. Benton, the Superintendent of Public Instruction, the sum of $17,027 88 has been apportioned to the counties of Iowa for the year 1850, out of the permanent school fund of the State. This sum is nearly two-thirds larger than that distributed last year.

A letter from Dr. Chancey, of Boston, written sixty-eight years ago, states that all the printers in Boston had not type enough to print an edition of the Bible; and if they had, the needful paper could not be procured without sending to Europe.

The County of Monroe, in this State, has taxable property to the amount of $15,187,190, as returned by the Assessors, and it is confidently believed that is far below the real wealth of the County.

The value of trees imported from France in the ship Versailles, which arrived at Boston, on the 25th, was $4,414. We shall probably have some good pears, &c., by-and-by, from these foreign stocks.

The Boston Traveler says, the amount of duties paid on foreign merchandize by the British steamer Niagara, which arrived at that port, Jan. 26, 1850, was a trifle over $200,000, more by $50,000 than has ever been paid by any of her predecessors.

The New Haven Courier says that the farmers in that vicinity are now shoving off their stock of potatoes at 37½ cents per bushel, with a downward tendency. The stock of potatoes in the country is said to be very large, and the price will probably not range above 25 cents after spring sets in.

A few nights since, as the sexton of St. Paul's Methodist Episcopal Church, in Moyamensing, was attempting to eject two rowdies from the Church, he was severely stabbed by them. They were arrested and committed.

A copy of the first Newspaper printed in Western New York, has been placed in the Reading Room of the Athenæum in Rochester. It is one of the first numbers of the "Ontario Gazette and Western Chronicle," dated October 23, 1796.

A new box for railroad car wheels has recently been invented, which promises to make a great saving in oil and power. The box requires no oil at all, and never heats. The power gained is so great that a car on which these boxes were used, loaded with iron, was moved easily by one man, which required six men to move with the old boxes.

Wm. Elon Fellows, of Oswego, a young man about 25 years of age, who was arrested at the Windmill affair, and transported to Van Dieman's land for political offences, has just returned with $12,000 in gold dust. After being liberated from Her Majesty's Penal Colony, he went to Oregon and thence to California, where he met with a better vein of fortune's favors.

For every 1000 lbs. of green tea which are consumed in England or America, the consumers really eat more than half a pound of gypsum and indigo, put into it as coloring matter.

Tea is now successfully cultivated in Brazil, and large quantities, put up in boxes marked with Chinese characters, are now exported to Europe, and sold as Chinese tea.

A young lady afflicted with the spinal complaint in Cincinnati, was lately mesmerized, and suffered to remain in the mesmeric state two weeks.

Dr. Reese, of Ramapo, Rockland Co., a few days since, safely delivered an English woman of three children. This is the second time this threefold favor has been bestowed on the same lady.

DIED.

Near New Market, N. J., March 1st, after a lingering and painful illness, FELINA F. RANDOLPH, aged thirty-seven years. She had been for many years an exemplary member of the Seventh-day Baptist Church in New Market, and during her last illness she gave bright evidences of the reality of that religion she had in early life professed. It may be said of her, of a truth, that her house was set in order; her end was peaceful and happy.

At the same place, March 8th, HANNAH RANDOLPH, aged seventy-six years, aunt of the above. Many years ago, while attending a General Meeting at Rhode Island, she was converted and baptized. After returning home, she joined the Church, at New Market, and remained a worthy member until her death. For many years she has suffered under a heavy affliction, which she bore with Christian meekness, waiting patiently for the time of her departure to come.

In Verona, N. Y., February 13th, of inflammation on the lungs, JAMES, son of James and Charlott Williams, aged three months and fourteen days.

In Verona, N. Y., February 25th, of inflammation on the lungs, SALINA L., daughter of Reuben and Arminta West, aged three weeks. C. C.

Notice.

The regular meeting of the Board of Directors of the Seventh-day Baptist Publishing Society will take place in New York, on the evening of the 1st day of April next, a 7 o'clock. T. B. STILLMAN, Rec. Sec.

Medical Notice.

DR. T. A. MAXSON, Botanic Physician, takes this method to inform the friends of Medical Reform, that he is located in Watson, N. Y., one mile east from Beach's Landing. Believing that there are vegetable remedies adapted to the cure of all diseases, he consequently uses no other. Calls attended to without delay. [32m3.] JANUARY, 1850.

Christian Psalmody—Pocket Edition.

IN compliance with requests from various quarters the publisher of the New Hymn Book—Christian Psalmody—has issued a second edition, on lighter paper and with smaller margins, by which the bulk and weight of the books are reduced about one-third, rendering them much more convenient for carrying in the pocket. The price is also reduced 12½ cents per copy. Those wishing books, of either edition, can now be supplied. Price of the larger edition from 75 cents to $1 50, according to the style of binding. Price of the smaller edition from 62½ cents to $1 00. Orders should be addressed to Geo. B. Utter, No. 9 Spruce-st., New York.

Factory Establishment for Sale.

THE subscriber will sell the well-known Establishment, called the Bethel Mill, situated in Hopkinton, R. I., consisting of the factory, 60 by 28 feet, two and a half stories high, and a good stone basement room under the whole building; a cloth-house, 16 by 20, one and a half stories; a dye-house, 20 by 30, with suitable kettles; a wash-box, &c.; a small smith-shop for repairing; three dwelling-houses, a barn, and about six acres of land. The buildings are mostly new, the factory and dye-house having been erected in 1848, where one was burnt in that year. A good water privilege of about five feet fall, with a sufficient reservoir to supply the mill through all the drought of summer, being 114 acres, 12 feet deep, averaging from 8 to 10 feet the whole surface.

The present occupants run twenty looms on plaid linseys, and are entitled to its occupancy until the money loaned by them towards its erection (over 3,000 dollars) shall be paid, at a rent of about six hundred and eighty dollars per annum, or otherwise paid in money. It is pleasantly situated, in a good neighborhood, and help easily obtained. About half of the purchase money must be paid within the year, and the purchaser, if he chooses, can let the rest remain to be liquidated by the rent, which will take between six and seven years. It will be a good investment for any one desirous of obtaining such an establishment, or who has money to loan. JACOB D. BABCOCK.

History of Romanism.

In a large octavo volume of 750 pages, printed in large type, on the finest paper, and embellished with more than fifty engravings, chiefly from Original Designs, and bound in muslin, extra gilt. Price $3. THE HISTORY OF ROMANISM, from its earliest origin to the present time, by the Rev. John Dowling, D. D. A new and enlarged edition, with the Author's last additions, and a Supplement, containing a Sketch of the Life of Pope Pius IX., &c.

The best evidence of the intrinsic value of this remarkably popular work is to be seen in the fact that within the comparatively recent period of its first publication, the extraordinary number of 17,000 copies have been disposed of.

The following is an extract from a letter from the Rev. Dr. Giustiniani, the converted Roman Catholic priest, who is abundantly qualified by education, observation, and extensive study, to testify to the fidelity and value of a "History of Romanism."

"If the reader wishes to be acquainted with the errors of Romanism, he has only to open the pages of Dowling's History. If the reader is anxious to read an epitome of the history of the popes, their ambition; their intrigues; their avariciousness; their tyranny; their superstitions, and their mummeries, he can here find all proved and authenticated by the most accredited authors of the Church of Rome." L. GIUSTINIANI.

"It reflects much credit on the skill, patience, industry, and judgment of the author; he appears very justly to have conceived the idea of a work, which has long been regarded as a desideratum by a large portion of those interested in the great controversy with the Romanists."—Protestant Churchman.

"We think it an able work, comprising the results of extensive reading and research, and well adapted to fill an important chasm in our literature.—Lutheran Obs.

"We regard it as a most important addition to the historical and religious literature of the age. Its contents form a rich storehouse of historical instruction, which should be placed within the reach of every family."—N. Y. Christian Intelligencer.

"It presents a succienct, but sufficiently full, history of the rise, progress, errors, cruelties, and present condition of the Papacy, authenticated by reference to the most undoubted historic sources, related in a spirited, engaging, and impressive style, and arranged in the most lucid manner. It abounds in facts and incidents, and, with its beautiful illustrations, is better adapted to furnish a vivid and impressive portraiture of Romanism as it is, than any other book we know of."—N. Y. Evang.

"The detached portions of Romish history which were every where to be met with, needed to be brought together and presented in systematic order. The reading of one book thus becomes better and cheaper than the reading of many."—Boston Recorder.

"It is written with the ready, popular eloquence, for which the well-known author is distinguished, and cannot fail to arrest attention to the controversy of which it treats. It is a strongly Protestant work, and exhibits the deformities of Popery with great power."—N. Y. Recorder.

"The author appears to have brought to the execution of this great work, unwearied industry, genuine and thorough scholarship, and scrupulous fidelity."

RUFUS BABCOCK, late Pres. of Waterville College.

INTERESTING NARRATIVE.

From the New Bedford Mercury of the 6th.

We have been favored with the perusal of a letter from Capt. Benjamin F. Bourne, chief mate of the schooner John Allyne, (which sailed from this port on the 13th of February, 1849, for San Francisco,) from which we gather the following interesting particulars of his detention by the Indians at the Straits of Magellan, and subsequent escape from captivity.

The schooner John Allyne arrived at the Straits of Magellan on the 30th of April. On the following morning, at the request of Captain Brownell, who had seen a group of natives on the beach with a bullock, Mr. Bourne, accompanied by three men, armed, proceeded to the shore in a boat with a bag of bread, for the purpose of procuring a bullock in barter. Not liking the appearance of the natives, Mr. Bourne cautioned his men not to leave the boat. Another boat from the schooner in the mean time was engaged in procuring sea-fowl near the shore. Mr. B. succeeded in trading with the natives for some skins, while his companions, with the exception of one from the other boat, had suffered themselves to be coaxed by the natives away to a distance. Mr. Bourne then sent the man who had remained with him in pursuit of the boat's crew, with orders for their immediate return. After a prolonged absence the messenger returned to the boat and asked for leave for himself and the rest of the boat's crew to accompany the natives to their houses, where they had been assured they could procure refreshments, such as eggs, fowls, beef, potatoes, &c., in abundance. Mr. Bourne declined to accede to their request, and after a long parley, the messenger refused to return to the boat, but insisted upon communicating to the others of the crew Mr. Bourne's refusal of their request, promising to return with them immediately. A long interval here elapsed without their return, while in the mean time the beach became thronged with about 300 of the natives. The old chief, his wife, and two other natives, had taken possession of the boat, which, in consequence of the ebbing of the tide, remained aground upon the beach. Mr. Bourne endeavored to induce them to leave the boat, in order that he might shove her off to take water, addressing them in Spanish, and making signs to them, both of which they pretended not to understand, and entirely disregarded. Mr. Bourne perceived that their situation on shore was becoming perilous, but assuming an appearance of unconcern, he induced one of the natives to permit him to mount his horse, saying that he would "have a bit of a ride, and try to hunt up his men." After proceeding to some distance, he saw the men approaching the shore, one of them mounted alone, and the others riding behind the natives.

The men still importuned for leave to accompany the natives, until Mr. Bourne, at length realizing the danger to which they were exposed, being at the distance of a mile from the boat, put his horse into a run, and going up to the leader of his men, ordered them immediately to retrace their steps. The natives then caught the bridle of Mr. Bourne's horse, and refused to carry them back, and succeeded in wresting a two-barreled gun from the possession of one of the men. Mr. Bourne then jumped from his horse, telling his men to follow his example, and return to the boat on foot, and in case of being attacked to sell their lives as dearly as possible. The natives then gathered around them, obstructing their course, when Mr. B. drew a brace of pistols from his pockets, making ready to fire, and ordering the natives to be off. He was immediately seized and pinioned by three or four natives, who advanced behind him, which, however, did not prevent him from drawing the trigger of one of his pistols while the natives were trying to wrest it from his hands. Fortunately the pistol missed fire, or more serious consequences to the party must have ensued, from the utter disparity of numbers. And after the natives had succeeded in securing Mr. Bourne, the old chief came up and took him by the wrist with one hand, while he brandished his cutlass in the other in defending him from the savages who wished to kill him with their knives; the motive of the chief being to secure a supply of rum and tobacco, which Mr. B. had promised to him, and which he well knew he would lose in the event of Mr. B's death. Mr. B. was then mounted upon a horse, and the party proceeded to the boat. Stipulations were entered into for the release of the men upon the natives receiving five bottles of rum and five lbs. of tobacco, for each, and the boat returned from the vessel at about dark with the articles, according to the stipulation, which were delivered to the natives. The chief, however, refused to release Mr. B., demanding as a farther ransom a barrel of rum, to be delivered on shore in the morning, and in the mean time Mr. B. was closely guarded through the night at their wigwam. In the morning he was taken back to the shore, but as a heavy gale prevented the vessel's boat from landing, he was carried back to the wigwam; and on the following day was again returned to the beach, when it was discovered that the schooner had gone. The feelings of Mr. B. at this time may be imagined far better than can be described. He then endeavored to induce the natives to carry him to Port Famine, but as they had stolen horses in that vicinity they would not consent, promising, however, to carry him to Cape Holland, on the North coast of the Straits, on the condition of receiving a barrel of rum, 100 lbs. of tobacco, &c., &c. Accordingly Mr. B. was dispatched in charge of several of the natives, and after a tedious journey of 37 days reached the banks of the Santa Cruz River, a distance of about 300 miles. The party had the colors of the English brig Avon, which they had plundered from the vessel, after murdering the captain and two or three seamen, and taking two men prisoners, whom they subsequently killed, after getting a ransom for them. Mr. B. raised the colors reversed, which signal attracted a boat from Sea Lion Island, where a company of ten men were collecting guano. These men told him that it was impossible to take him from the Indians, but agreed to keep a look out for him in case he should contrive an opportunity to escape by himself. He then watched an opportunity while the natives were closely gathered around him, and under pretence of wanting to look at the boat, plunged into the river and swam off to the boat, and arrived at Sea Lion Island on the 7th of August, after being a prisoner with the natives ninety-seven days. Mr. B. adds: It was one of the coldest days of a Patagonian winter, the distance to the Island was about three miles, and my teeth chattered in my head all the way. On the 2d of October the whale ship Hudson, of Mystic, Conn., and her tender, schr. Washington, touched at Santa Cruz, and I went on board the ship and remained until the 24th, then went on board the Washington and went on a cruise for whales, when we boarded the schr. Hopewell, Capt. Morton, of Boston, from Antigua, bound to San Francisco. I took passage on board the Hopewell and entered the Straits on the 29th of October—was 50 days in getting through the Straits, and arrived at Callao on the 8th of January.

THE NORTH AND THE SOUTH CONTRASTED.

On the evening of 23d January, a very numerous audience assembled in one of the rooms adjoining the Surrey chapel, London, to hear an address from Pres. Mahan previous to his departure from England. The address occupied two hours in the delivery, and was very warmly received. From the report in the Nonconformist we copy a single paragraph, contrasting the intellectual difference between the North and the South:—

"If you visit our country, and pass through the length and breadth of the Northern States, you will find one aspect of the country that we delight to point the eye of the stranger to. Among the best specimens of architecture that you will witness are our school-houses, where the children of rich and poor are educated together. As you traverse these States, you cannot find a neighborhood without its school-house, where the children of all classes are educated free, in the best forms of instruction you can conceive, and under the best teachers attainable. But you may traverse the length and breadth of the Southern States, and I doubt whether you can find such a thing as a school-house. I have traveled myself over a large portion of North and South Carolina, into Georgia, Virginia, and Maryland, and I never saw such a thing as a common school-house—never heard of such a thing. The rich employ teachers, at their academies or at home; but the poor—that is, the masses of the population—are left uncared for. I have been informed by a minister, formerly located in North Carolina, that in his neighborhood were many families deemed wealthy—worth, say from ten to fifteen thousand dollars—whose daughters, grown up to a marriageable age, could neither read nor write. What then must be the mental condition of the masses—the poor, without any public provision for the education of the young? I might also refer, in elucidation of this part of the subject, to the intellectual development of the ministry in these communities. Here, again we must distinguish between the slaveholder and the masses of the population; for each has its own ministry. You will find the ministry of the former, in many cases, very intelligent; but I found, in the North Carolina Association, no less than sixty churches with whom this was the condition of membership and communion—total abstinence from all connection with anything like Tract, Bible, or Missionary Societies."

THE GREAT INDUSTRIAL EXHIBITION.

A meeting of the inhabitants of the City of Westminster was held on the 21st ult. in relation to the proposed exhibition of the products of all nations' industry. The Earl of Carlisle made a speech, and was followed by the American Minister, Hon. Abbot Lawrence, who spoke as follows:—

"He had watched this great enterprise from its conception, and he would say, that the mind that conceived this great project, and the individuals who had nearly completed the preliminary arrangements, deserved and commanded his profound admiration. [Cheers.] He appeared there as the representative of a youthful but a great nation. [Cheers.] He came there to offer his thanks to Prince Albert and the British people for the magnanimous proposal; and on the part of the people of the United States he came there to spread out the hand of good-fellowship to the British people. He looked upon this exhibition not as intended only to benefit industry and art, but as a great Peace Convention. All that now was wanted was intercommunications between nations. Let nations meet face to face in a great country like this, renowned in arms and famous in literature, and much good would come of it. It was a generous proposal—indeed, its generosity was as broad as the world itself, and he could promise them that the people of the United States would readily respond to it. [Hear.] He did not apprehend that in the arts and sciences the people of the United States could teach the old world much, but they would come here to learn, and he hoped, too, they would bring with them inventions and productions that would command universal admiration. He was not over-sanguine of the results of this undertaking, but when this great meeting took place he did think the world would recognize the dignity of labor and the advantages of commerce, that great civilizer of mankind. [Cheers.] It was for the interest of the world to secure peace, and the security of the nations of the world now depended on their meeting together to perpetuate it. [Cheers.] He closed his remarks by repeating his thanks, on the part of the people of the United States, for the proposal of this great international exhibition of industry." [Cheers.]

DEATH OF REV. JOHN LOWDER.

Drowned, on Monday, the 24th September, 1849, whilst bathing at the island of Pu-too, the Rev. John Lowder, late Chaplain of the British Church, Shanghai. Mr. and Mrs. Lowder went on a cruise among the islands, in Her Majesty's brig Mariner, principally for Mrs. Lowder's health. It would seem that, while lying off Pu-too, on Monday, the 24th ult., Mr. Lowder, with the Purser and Mr. Drake, went on shore for the purpose of an excursion. In the course of the day, they were met by Capt. Matheson and Mrs. Lowder, the latter of whom endeavored to persuade her husband to accompany her on board the vessel, but as he represented that Mr. Drake had taken some trouble to prepare refreshment for him, she did not insist. After dinner, while returning to their boat, a swim was proposed, to which the Purser objected, on the plea of the heavy surf. Mr. Lowder and Mr. Drake, however, undressed and entered the water. They did not go into deep water, but, while Mr. Lowder was standing with his back to the surf, a heavy roller came in and knocked him over, and the undertow carried him into deep water. He now called for assistance, and on Mr. Drake swimming towards him, caught the latter by the neck with both hands. Mr. Drake disengaged his hands, and, while seizing one, he urged Mr. Lowder to use the other in swimming. The unfortunate gentleman was observed, however, only to strike in the air for a short time, and then become senseless. Mr. Drake courageously endeavored to retain his hold of the body, till, finding himself in danger of being carried out to sea, he was necessitated to abandon his luckless burden, and only effected a landing after considerable exertions. It is only necessary to add, that all search was in vain, and that the body could not be recovered. Poor Mrs. Lowder has suffered dreadfully. On Sunday a funeral sermon was preached by the Rev. Mr. Hobson, who was officiating in Mr. Lowder's absence, and all the vessels in harbor had their flags half-mast. A greater number attended church than I can recollect to have seen since the opening of the building, and altogether a gloom seemed to hang over the community. Having ascertained that the widow and family (five children) are left almost destitute, a subscription was immediately set on foot, which, I am glad to say, has now (Oct. 6) reached between seven and eight thousand dollars. A subsequent letter mentions that the body was found after five days, and buried by one of our missionaries in the English burial ground at Ningpo. We are also glad to say that the subscription alluded to above amounted to $8,000. [Overland China Mail.

VIRGINIA.

Rev. Joshua Leavitt, writing to the Independent, says:—When I was on my way to Washington, I fell in with a company of men, a father and two sons, substantial farmers, from Montgomery county, N. Y., who were on their way to Virginia to look for land. They had come to dislike the long winters of the North. The cost of land was so high that they could not pay for new farms, or pay the interest on the cost. They thought the West too far from market; and they had seen in the newspapers accounts of the advantages afforded by Virginia to emigrants from the North. Their attention had been particularly arrested by a letter which appeared in the agricultural paper at Rochester, from a Mr. Griscom, a Quaker living at Petersburg, setting forth the attractions of many farms and tracts of land lying on James River, and between that and the line of North Carolina. I gave them some facts in regard to the lands in Fairfax and Loudon counties, and on the Northern Neck, as it is called, between the Potomac and the Rappahannoc; but their faces were set for Petersburg and the southern counties. A few days ago I met them in the street; they were on the return from their exploration, and informed me that they had purchased lands about three miles beyond Fairfax Court House, and not twenty-five miles from Washington City. They had found my suggestions well-founded, that the lower James River region and southern counties were too unhealthy for northern constitutions, and had therefore satisfied themselves with lands somewhat higher priced and perhaps naturally less fertile. They said they supposed a hundred farmers in and near the counties along the Mohawk would probably be influenced by their report, and would follow their lead. A gentleman of my acquaintance has just made a sort of circular visit to a number of gentlemen in Fairfax—not the northern settlers, now becoming numerous, but the Virginia stock—and he was much gratified at the liberal and patriotic tone of feeling expressed by them, and the indignation with which they repudiated the spirit evinced by Morton, their Representative, in his speech delivered a few weeks ago. My friend was also struck with the change for the better which has been produced in the appearance of the country by the settlement of northern men on the old worn-out farms in that county. The change is truly marvelous, and cannot but excite wonder, even among those southern planters who lack the energy to imitate the example set before them. Several years ago, I was informed by a gentleman of Alexandria, intimately conversant with the subject, that the price of real estate in that city had risen ten per cent., in consequence of these northern settlements in the surrounding country. Let this work of colonization go on. Mount Vernon is in Fairfax county; and in a few years the tomb of Washington will be surrounded by a population of enlightened, industrious, and patriotic citizens, who will help to realize for his beloved Virginia the fondest wish of his heart, a deliverance from the blight of slavery. So great already is the power of free labor in that State, that the Legislature is engaged in passing a bill for a revision of the Constitution, to meet the demand for an equality of representation, according to the voting population, and not according to the number of slaves. Whenever that shall be done, Virginia will have taken the first step in the work of emancipation.

HOMESTEAD EXEMPTION.

A bill is now before the California Legislature, securing from forced sale to the householder 80 acres of land in the country, dwelling and appurtenances. In any city or town, one lot 50 feet front and rear, and 50 Spanish varas deep. The exemption not to extend to any mechanic's or laborer's lien, nor to any mortgage of the same, signed by the wife, nor to any sale of the same for non-payment of taxes. 2. The householder must be a resident of this State to claim the benefits of the exemption. 3. All household goods, furniture, and utensils, in value not exceeding $750, twenty sheep and their fleeces and cloth manufactured from the same; two cows, five swine; all necessary pork, beef, fish, flour, corn, vegetables, and other provisions actually provided for family use, and fuel for six months; family Bible; family pictures, library, and school books; his arms and accoutrements. The tools, implements, materials, stock, team, &c., necessary to the carrying on of his trade, calling, or profession, and all necessary food for six months for the animals, exempted from sale by this bill. 4. No bill of sale, lien, or chattel mortgage, of any of the property exempted by this bill, (except the articles named in the 8th section of the bill relating to the tools, implements, &c., above alluded to,) to be valid, unless signed by the wife. Also exempts a church seat or pew, all spinning wheels, weaving looms, and stoves. 5. Act to take effect March 1, 1850.

THE EXTENT OF LONDON.

It is absolutely impossible to communicate to one who has not seen it, any idea of it. I have said to myself several times, "Well, now, I have seen the whole," yet I soon find out I have seen nothing. You can travel eighteen miles from Brentford to Strafford, through an uninterrupted succesion of thickly planted houses. I have walked until I have had to sit down on some doorsteps out of pure weakness, and yet have not got out of the rushing tide of population. I have rode on the driver's seat on omnibuses, and there has been a succession of squares, parks, terraces, and long lines of single houses for miles, and continuous blocks and single palaces in the very heart of London, occupying acres of ground. I do not speak, of course, of the large parks, which for their trees, their verdure, their neatness, their embellishments, their lakes and cascades, their waters swarming with fish, and covered with a great variety of water-fowl, which they have been able to domesticate, and their national monuments, and the multitudes of well-dressed pedestrians, and of elegantly mounted horsemen and horsewomen, of the carriages and equipages, as splendid as gold and silver can make them, are beautiful beyond my most romantic dreams. I do not exaggerate; I cannot go beyond the reality.

DEATH FROM DISAPPOINTMENT.

The Philadelphia Sun relates the following distressing case:—

A day or two since an accomplished young lady of this city, who was admired by a wide-spread circle of friends, died from rupture of a blood vessel, induced by circumstances almost indescribably painful. It appears that a young gentleman (a widower) had been paying his addresses to her for several months, and finally the day was set apart when the nuptial ceremony was to take place. It appears, however, that the widower had promised his first wife, on her death-bed, that he never would get married again; but when time had soothed his feelings consequent upon so painful an affliction as her death, he forgot his vow, fell in love with the young lady, and went so far as to agree upon a final engagement with her. On reflection, the death of his wife and the sacred vow he made, flashed on his memory. Accordingly, with feelings best known to himself, he wrote a letter setting forth the facts, and expressed his determination not to comply with the engagement which he had made with the young lady in question. She received the missive, carefully perused it, read it over and over again; horror chilled her frame, she suddenly became raving crazy, and after living a maniac for only three hours after the receipt of the letter, she burst a main blood vessel, and fell a corpse.

Snow Storm in Greece.—They have had a snow storm in Greece, during the past winter, unequaled in violence within the memory of man. It commenced on the night of Wednesday, and continued during part of Thursday, the 23d and 24th Jan. The thermometer fell in the town of Athens to 25° of Fahrenheit, the oranges were frozen to the core on the trees in the gardens, and the mandarins could be broken to pieces with a hammer. Thousands of sheep perished in Attica, so suddenly did the storm come on, and even the shepherds were surprised, and many were lost in the storm. The want of sheds, which the mildness of the climate renders generally unnecessary, has caused a great increase in point of loss. In Attica the loss is said to amount to a fourth of the total number of sheep in Attica alone; and in Northern Greece, it is to be presumed—for, as yet, we have no information—that the loss has been considerably greater; the Islands alone have escaped.

Dreadful Event at Naples.—A dreadful explosion and fire occurred at Naples, on the 6th ult., which threatened extensive destruction. The cellars of the Darsens, or closed port, extend from the water's edge to a considerable distance under the principal buildings of the city, including the magnificent palaces of the Princes of Salerno and Capua, and the King's palace. In these cellars were warehoused 277,000 cantara of coal, and on the morning of the 2d an explosion of fire damp took place underneath the palaces of the Princes of Salerno and Capua, which threw down large portions of the walls, and it was with great difficulty that the inhabitants escaped. It was ascertained that the coal had ignited, and there was every reason to fear that the King's palace and church of St. Francesca de Paula would be destroyed.

Poaching with Chloroform.—A few days since, says the Reading Mercury, one of the keepers in Windsor Great Park observed a man very busy, under suspicious circumstances, in the midst of some fern; being satisfied that all was not right, he made up to him, and on searching a bag he had in his possession, found it contained five rabbits not dead, but apparently stupified. His attention was then drawn to several pieces of fern, which had been cut and stuck upright in the ground, having pieces of paper attached to them, and which it was afterwards discovered had been steeped in chloroform, and been the means by which the fellow had secured his game. This is the first instance in which we have heard of the application of chloroform to the purposes of poaching.

Singular Collection.—A lady died recently at St. Omers, in France, who never, during the course of her protracted existence of eighty years, gave away, destroyed or sold an article of dress she had ever worn. When a fashion had passed away, she put away the article representing it into a wardrobe made for the purpose. It must be something curious to see the various gradations of dress which such a collection presents. She began with the reign of Louis XV., and from the hoops, powder, and high-heeled shoes of those days, she has descended into the times of Republicanism, and its more simple forms of costume. Her warbrobes have become a perfect museum of fashion.

Variety.

A patent has been lately issued to Wm. L. Thomas for an electric telegraph, which makes the marks on paper, by means of an attenuated platinum point, which is heated by the electric current, and becomes instantly cold when the circuit is broken. This dispenses with the magnet, and the decomposing salt, which are the main peculiarities of Morse's and Bain's patent, and seems to place the new invention beyond the reach of any permanent injunction by either.

The London Morning Chronicle records the total failure of the late attempts made in the Madras presidency to procure an article of cotton that would in some degree compete with the American. A similar experiment in Bengal was also abandoned a short time before, after an expenditure of about $500,000. The monopoly of this great staple will probably remain with the Southern States.

Gen. Alexander Smyth, of Virginia, in the course of a two days' speech before the Committee of the Whole, was called to order by Arthur Livermore, of New Hampshire, for irrelevancy. "Mr. Chairman," said Smyth, "I am not speaking for the member from New Hampshire, but for posterity." "The gentleman," rejoined Livermore, "is in a fair way, before he finishes, to have his audience before him."

The principle of a hay cutter, patented in 1848, has been applied to a machine for cutting up rags and junk for paper manufacturers. The machine has such power that junk 2 1-2 inches in diameter is readily cut asunder by it, and fitted for the engine better than by any other known machine. In one establishment it is said to save $5 per day.

It was a beautiful observation of the late Wm. Hazlit, that "there is room enough in human life to crowd almost every art and science in it. If we pass 'no day without a line'—visit no place without the company of a book—we may with ease fill libraries or empty them of their contents. The more we do, the more we can do; the more busy we are, the more leisure we have."

Hon. T. Butler King says that the only coal made use of in California, is that sent from England and the United States, and the demand, it is supposed, will be for the year 1850, two hundred thousand tons. Coal is delivered from England at $25 a ton. The coal at Vancouver, it costs $12 a ton to get out of the mines, owing to the expense of labor and the inconvenience of mining.

Marie Antoinette was the first white woman who Christianized feathers, and introduced the fashion so common among barbarians, of decorating their heads with them. The King declared, when he saw her dressed with them, that they were the prettiest ornaments he had ever seen. The Queen continued to wear them, and the fashion spread all over England and Europe.

Mrs. Hannah Richardson, who recently died in Dracut, was the mother of 13 children, (of whom the youngest is now 50 years old,) and had 72 grand-children, 90 great-grand-children, and 9 great-grand-children's children, and some of each generation attended her funeral. She was a member of the Congregationalist church in Dracut 60 years.

The Detroit journals are arguing the question, "Where is the American Wilderness?" The Advertiser says: At the opening of this century it was in Ohio and Indiana—twenty-five years afterward, it was in Michigan, Wisconsin, etc.—last year it was Minnesota. Now, where is it to be next year, except perhaps in Nebraska and around the Lake of the Woods!

Late advices from Yucatan report that the Government troops have had a battle with the Indians, near Lebanos, in which the latter were defeated, losing 400 as prisoners, 600 muskets, and a quantity of money and powder. The ring-leaders afterward implored pardon of the Governor, and offered an unconditional surrender of their forces. It is supposed that this will put an end to this long protracted war.

The entries of land at the public land offices, Green Bay, Milwaukie and Mineral Point, during 1849, were 795,649 acres, of which 592,693 acres were entered with land warrants. The cash received was $257,240. The amount of money paid into the above named offices since 1837, amounts to seven millions four hundred and two thousand dollars, and the aggregate amount of acres about six millions.

The expedition in search of Sir John Franklin will sail from this port in May, and will consist of two schooners suitable for the Arctic Seas, of 70 to 90 tons burden. The command of the expedition has been tendered to Lieut. De Haven, who was attached to the Exploring Expedition, who has accepted the trust. Passed Midshipman Griffin will be second in command.

A man named Gideon Williams, of Providence, R. I., was recently fined three dollars and costs, amounting to six dollars and fifty-five cents, for neglecting to return a borrowed umbrella when requested to do so. The Rhode Island Justice has taken a step in the advance of the age.

By a recent report of the Secretary of State, of this State, it appears that articles of association contemplating the construction of more than 2,000 miles of plank road, and involving the expenditure of about $3,000,000, have been filed in his office.

A vessel lately sailed from Providence, R. I., for Africa, with a number of missionaries as passengers, and 18,000 lbs. gunpowder, 14,989 gallons domestic spirits, and 400 muskets.

Over 1,000,000 pounds of butter were last year exported from Chautauque county—also 766,485 lbs. cheese, 213,390 lbs. wool, besides other products to the amount of 6,545 tons.

The whole number of vessels cleared from Boston for California, since the first discovery of gold, is 203. Probably these vessels have carried out some 2,500 passengers, and about $5,000,000 in freight.

DeRuyter Institute.

The Academic Year of this Institution for 1849-50 will commence the last Wednesday in August, and continue forty-three consecutive weeks, ending the last Wednesday of June, including a recess of ten days for Christmas and New Year holidays. The Year will be divided into three Terms:

The First, commencing August 29, of 14 weeks.
The Second, " December 5, of 15 "
The Third, " March 20, of 14 "

Encouraged by the success of the School under its present Instructors, the friends of the Institute have made liberal additions to its library, cabinet and apparatus, thus furnishing ample facilities for illustrating branches taught in the various departments.

The Literary Department is as heretofore under the supervision of Rev. JAMES R. IRISH, A. M., President, assisted by other able instructors. In this Department, especial attention is given to the lower English Branches. Students are also fitted in the Classics to enter the advanced classes in College.

The Department of Natural Science is conducted by Professor GURDON EVANS. In this, Natural Philosophy, Astronomy, Geology, Natural History, and Chemistry, are taught in a manner of unsurpassed interest. With it is connected the Department of Agricultura Science.

The Farmer's Course is thoroughly scientific; embracing the study of the best authors, with daily recitations. During the Winter Term two hours each day will be spent in the Analytical Laboratory, where students will be instructed in the constitution of soils and ashes of plants, with a minute examination of their constituent elements, and the various modes of testing for their presence.

A course of lectures is given during the Term on Practical Farming, explaining the relation of Geology to Agriculture, the Soil, the Plant, and the Animal, and their various relations, the Rotation of Crops, Feeding Animals, Manures, Draining Lands, &c., &c. For further information see Catalogue.

Besides Globes, Maps, &c., for the illustration of Astronomy, a Newtonian Telescope of high magnifying power has recently been added to the apparatus.

During the Summer Term, Botany and Geology receive special attention, illustrated by excursions to localities where these sciences may be studied as seen in nature. A Geological and Mineralogical Cabinet is accessible to the students.

The Mathematical Department is under the instruction of OLIVER B. IRISH, Tutor. It embraces thorough instruction in Arithmetic, and the higher pure and practical Mathematics, with field exercises in Engineering and Surveying.

Elocution, embracing Reading, Declamation, General Oratory, and Writing, receives the special attention of a competent teacher.

The Teacher's Department will, as formerly, be in operation during the Fall Term, and last half of the Winter Term. Particular attention to this is solicited from all who intend to teach district schools.

The Female Department is under the care of Miss SUSANNA M. COON, a graduate of Troy Female Seminary, a lady every way competent for this responsible station.

No efforts will be spared to render the young ladies of this Seminary truly accomplished, as well in the social relations of life, as in the substantial branches of learning and the higher refinements of education. Ample facilities are furnished for pursuing French, Italian, German, Drawing, Painting, Music on the Piano, and Vocal Music.

Information.

Good board in private families from $1 25 to $1 50. Parents from abroad should furnish their children with very little pocket money, as many temptations may thus be avoided. Those who wish may deposit money with either of the teachers, to be disbursed according to order, without extra charge.

Tuition, to be settled in advance, per term, from $3 00 to $5 00. Extras—For Drawing, $1 00; Monochromatic Painting, $3 00; Oil Painting, $5 00; Chemical Experiments, $1 00; Writing, including Stationery, 50c.; Tuition on Piano, $8 00; Use of Instrument, $2 00; in Agricultural Chemistry, including Chemicals, Apparatus, fires, &c., (breakage extra,) $12 00.

N. B. A daily stage leaves the railroad and canal at Chittenango for this place at 4 o'clock P. M.

For further information address the President, J. R. Irish, or Professor Gurdon Evans, DeRuyter, Madison Co., N. Y.

SHALL WE COMPROMISE?

BY REV. H. W. BEECHER.

Mr. Clay's Compromise has been violently resisted by the South, and but coldly looked upon in the North. It is not that both sides are infatuated, and refuse a reasonable settlement. But the skill of Mr. Clay has evidently not touched the seat of the disease. He either has not perceived, or has not thought it expedient to meet, the real issue now before the people of the United States. The struggle going on is a struggle whose depths lie in the organization of society, in the North and South respectively; whose causes were planted in the Constitution. There are two incompatible and mutually destructive principles wrought together in the government of this land. Hitherto, like Esau and Jacob, they have striven together in the womb. Now they are born, and that feud has begun which shall drive the one or the other to the wilderness. To attempt to settle a radical opposition of polity, by easing off the rub here and there, leaving the great principles in full vigor, is as if one should hang fenders and sand-bags along the side of hostile ships that come crushing together, instead of putting the helm about and going on another tack. 'Slavery is right,' and 'Slavery is wrong;' 'Slavery shall live,' 'Slavery shall die;' 'Slavery shall extend,' 'Slavery shall not extend;'—are these conflicts to be settled by any mode of parceling out certain territories? Now the battle rages at one point. By and by it will rage at another. These oppugnant elements, Slavery and Liberty, inherent in our political system, animating our Constitution, checkering our public policy, breeding in statesmen opposite principles of government, and making our whole wisdom of public legislation on many of the greatest questions cross-eyed and contradictory, these elements are seeking each other's life. One or the other must die.

We give Mr. Clay sincere praise for desiring peace. We think it worthy of his reputation to have declared, that he would never vote for the extension of Slavery. If his compromise had taken that determination at its starting point, he would then have come nearer to our ideas of the leader which our times and our difficulties demand. It is no sporting joust upon which our nation is gazing. The shield of the challenger hangs out for no blunted lance. Like Ivanhoe, we should have been glad had Mr. Clay struck the shield of Du Bois Gilbert with the sharp lance-head, importing earnest battle. One straight-forward speech against the extension of slavery, based, not upon political reasons, but on the great principles of humanity and justice; one glowing appeal to the whole nation to take the stand, which he has personally taken, never to vote for the extension of slavery on either side of any line; this would have been a noble statesmanship, and crowned the last years of the revered sage of Ashland with the brightest glory of his life!

Let no man suppose that the contentions which now agitate the land have sprung from the rash proceedure of a few men—the hot-heads either of the North or of the South. We are in the midst of a collision, not of men, but of principles and political institutions. The inevitable course of affairs has been developing the results for which provision was made, first in the organization of society, and then in the structure of the Constitution. No harvest ever answered more closely to the husbandman's seed, than do our difficulties to the original sowing.

The North, adopting the theory of democracy, organized all her civil and industrial institutions upon that basis. Every man, the lowest, the least, the highest and best, had one common platform of rights. The South, adopting the theory of aristocracy, made two platforms—the one for the governed, the other for the governors. The one and the other began at once to exhibit their results. In the North, labor was voluntary, honorable, and universal; in the South, it was compulsory, and made disreputable by being fastened upon an abject class. Of course, the laborer had different values. In the North, he was a citizen, capable of any honor, framing his own laws, making his own rule, and so an integral element of the State. In the South, he neither voted nor determined; he had no rights; he was a slave. Labor and Laborers are the foundations of a community. The strength, the virtue, the civilization of a community, must not be measured by the polish of its surface.

The whole structure of society conformed to these respective foundations.

The North put honor upon its laborers; they were trained in common schools; they became reading and reflecting men; shrewdness, penetration, forecast, personal independence, fertile resource, marked the industrial classes. Grow as rapidly as the educated and the wealthy might, the distance between them and the laborer constantly diminished. There never was a time when the bottom of society was so near the top as now.

The South, making labor a disgraceful necessity, denying it education, compelling it not by those motives which are ordained healthfully to develop the man, but by the overseer's eye and lash, and educating only her wealthy sons, has steadily widened the distance between the top and bottom of society. Nothing can be more dissimilar than the tone and sentiment of societies so diversely formed. Liberty is a universal right —it belongs to men on the one side; it is a privilege, and belongs to a class, on the other side. The North binds society together, identifies its interests, equalizes and kneads it, causing it to grow alike throughout, and makes it strong by the strength of its individuals, and gives to individuals the advantages of commonweal. There cannot be a commonwealth of slavery. It is class-weal and class-wealth. The South hopelessly divides society; puts her honors on one side of the cleft, her menial offices on the other. The North compacts, and the South stratifies. To educate the laborer is to do the whole State a benefit, in the North; to educate the laborer is to strike at the foundations of society, in the South. We send educators to the Governor's chair and to Congress. They of the South send them to the penitentiary and the gibbet.

Now, does any man doubt, that here are the real, vital, distinguishing elements of two radically different governments — an Aristocracy and a Democracy? Does any one believe it possible that these respective tendencies should be confined, in their respective fields, to civil affairs? Will they not determine the family institution, the usages of society, public opinion, yea, the whole and very nature of communities? Can the agriculture of slaves and slavery and the agriculture of freemen be the same? Can the commercial interests be the same?—the political economy and the politics? Can statesmen bred in such schools have common sympathies? That the North and South have many wants and many sympathies in common, is as true as that all men, the most opposite, oppressor and oppressed, deceiver and dupe, have great wants in common. But in their foundation-ideas, their political doctrines, their State policies, their conceptions of public measures, they are not only different, but for the most part opposite and oppugnant. States, so essentially different, would find harmony rather in separate existence, than in federation. Yet our Union is composed of these oppositions.

When the Constitution was in birth, these things were in the seed. Yet, even then, the repellencies were such that a common Constitution was adopted only by compromise. Now, if the compromises of the Constitution in the matter of Slavery were adopted, in the expectation that Slavery would soon be eradicated by the superior vitality of Liberty, we can understand the wisdom of the intention at least. But if it was designed that one instrument should inclose the spirit of two theories of government so totally adverse, it was the most extraordinary blindness, the most anomalous folly, which honest men were ever smitten with! We should as soon look for an agreement by which Christ and Belial should jointly undertake to govern this world! Was it thought possible to serve both Liberty and Slavery—God and Mammon? Could the same mouth breathe justice and injustice? Could a Constitution having any definite nature, have two hearts, one beating for Liberty, with vitalized blood, and the other beating for Slavery, with black blood? Could it organize courts empowered to establish justice and systematic oppression? courts, with one hand to lift up the wronged by speedy redress, and to beat down the wronged with the other by triple blows? We believe the compromises of the Constitution looked to the destruction of slavery, and not to its establishment.

The event justified the judgment. Although incidental causes conspired to give slavery a new growth, while our country was swelling and coming into manhood, yet it soon became apparent that both systems could not long co-exist.

There are good and easy souls, not perturbed by over deep meditations, who think that men make all this national uproar. They are guiltless of supposing that our institutions are the agitators, that our civil polity is the fanatic whose firebrands inflame the Union. This movement of the spirit of the age has made the men, not the men it. We are its children. While the North and the South inveigh against each other, and fanatics are loud-mouthed against fanatics, calmer and deeper men see that both the North and the South are drifting, and fighting as they drift, in a current whose secret springs lie deeper than men's volitions; whose force God both ordained and will augment, until old things are passed away, and he whose right it is shall reign. Why then should we try to stop the contest? It must come to an issue, which spirit shall animate our Constitution. The spirit of Bondage and the spirit of Liberty, when both are living spirits, cannot dwell together. Moses' rod must swallow the enchanter's, or the magician's rod must swallow the prophet's. The South have found out that slavery cannot live and stand still. Liberty grows the fastest; has the best roots; eats out the other; and if slavery is stationary, it will be speedily overrun and smothered by the rampant vine of freedom. It must thrust out its roots; it must borrow vigor from fresh soil. Southern men are perfectly consistent in rejecting a compromise which only confirms old rights, but positively grants no extension.

The South now demands room and right for extension. She asks the North to be a partner. For every Free State, she demands one State for Slavery. One dark orb must be swung into its orbit, to groan and travail in pain, for every new orb of liberty over which the stars shall sing for joy.

On that question we hold there can be no compromise. The Constitution has come to a period of final construction. Every year's delay will aggravate the difficulties; an earlier day had been better than this; but this is better than any future day. It is time for good men and true to gird up their loins, and stand for God and for Humanity. No Compromises can help us which dodge the question; certainly none which settle it for slavery. We are told that the question is momentous, and beset with the most serious difficulties. Neither in the affairs of individuals nor of nations is there any difficulty when men are willing to do right. It is when right is spun to so fine a thread that it floats like a gossamer, changing to every breath, that we lose sight of it, or find it entangled in our hands. There never was a plainer question for the North. It is her duty openly, firmly and forever, to refuse to Slavery another inch of territory, and to see to it that it never gets it by fraud. It is her duty to declare that she will, under no considerations, be a party to any further inhumanity and injustice. Then the path will be plain and straight. The path of Duty, though a steep one, and often toilsome, is always straight and plain. Those are the labyrinthine roads, which, winding through sloughs and thickets, or imbosked and dark, seek to find a way around the rocks and steeps, and come to the gate of Success, without climbing the hill of Difficulty.

Mr. Clay's compromise resolutions demand better provision for the recovery of fugitive slaves; and a bill is now pending in the United States Senate for this purpose. We cannot strongly enough express our profound regret at the remarks which Mr. Clay felt it his duty to make on this subject. On this matter, our feelings are so strong that we confess a liability to intemperance of expression.

If the compromises of the Constitution include requisitions which violate Humanity, I will not be bound by them. Not even the Constitution shall make me unjust. If my patriotic sires confederated in my behalf that I should maintain that instrument, so I will, to the utmost bounds of Right. But who, with power which even God denies to Himself, shall by compact foreordain me to the commission of inhumanity and injustice? I disown the act. I repudiate the obligation. Never while I have breath will I help any official miscreant in his base errand of recapturning a fellow man for bondage. And may my foot palsy, and my right hand forget her cunning, if I ever become so untrue to mercy and to religion as not, by all the means in my power, to give aid and succor to every man whose courageous flight tells me that he is worthy of liberty! If asked, what then becomes of the Constitution, I reply by asking what becomes of God's Constitution of Humanity, if you give back a slave to the remorseless maw of servitude? I put Constitution against Constitution—God's against man's. Where they differ, my reply to all questioners—but especially to all timid Christian scruples, is in the language of Peter: Whether it be right, in the sight of God, to hearken unto you, more than unto God, judge ye!

Ought not Christians, by all the means in their power, to preserve the Union? Yes, by all means that are right! But, dear as the Union is, and ought to be, whenever it comes between a Christian people and their integrity, it becomes a snare. The very value of our Union is to be found in those principles of justice, liberty and humanity, which inspire it. But if, by any infernal juggle, these principles must be yielded up to preserve the Union, then a corpse only will be left in our arms, deflowered, lifeless, worthless. A Union perpetuated by giving way to injustice—a Union maintained by obedience to the desires of Slavery—is but a compact of violence. We emphasize these things, because the long-continued cries of politicians have produced among sober Christian men an unquestioned and undisturbed conviction, that no evil can be so great as the dissolution of our Union. There are many evils infinitely greater. The loss of a national conscience is greater. The loss of public humanity is greater. An indifference to the condition of millions of miserable creatures, whose degradation, vices, ignorance and animalism plead with our conconscience in their behalf; this would be an unspeakably greater evil. So long as we can maintain the Union on terms which allow us to act with a free conscience, with humanity unviolated, we shall count no sacrifice dear to maintain it. But religion and humanity are a price too dear to pay even for the Union!

Our Southern brethren often complain that we don't understand their condition or sympathize with their real difficulties. Even so, too, we complain that they do not understand our situation and sympathize with our difficulties. There are hundreds of thousands of men to whom conscience is a law —law, notwithstanding the sneers of those who flout at the idea of a conscience party. But there is a conscience party! There is a stern and growing feeling in the Free States, not yet expressed by any distinctive organization, that the time has come for a stand against any further national inhumanity. We can bear much, but we cannot and will not bear the guilt of Slavery. We regard it as epitomizing every offense which man can commit against man. It takes liberty from those to whom God gave it as the right of all rights. It forbids all food, either for the understanding or the heart. It takes all honesty from the conscience. It takes its defense from virtue, and gives all authority into the hands of lustful or pecuniary cupidity. It scorns the family, and invades it whenever desire or the want of money prevail, with the same coolness with which a drover singles out a heifer, or a butcher strikes down a bullock. These are not the accidents of slavery. They are its legitimate fruits. They are its vitality. If you stop those evils, you will destroy the system. Let the slave be taught; let him have, not a filtered and adulterated gospel, but that gospel which angels heralded, strangely filling the air with the cry, Peace on earth and good will toward men—and it will make the slaves what it made the barbarous Briton and the rude Saxon—freemen and refined Christians. Take from slavery its rights of merchandise, forbid the disruption of families, the sale of slaves from the homestead where they were born, and the system will stink in the nostrils of Southern planters, as it now does in our own.

Now we declare, that into a fellowship with these monstrous evils, whose perpetration around our whole Southern coast is, enough to pre-occupy the heavenly tribunal of mercy, and to exhaust its patience on only this form of all the world-wide human suffering, we have been drawn unwittingly. We did not know, or did not think, that to swear fealty to the Constitution was to swear preservation to Slavery. We had always understood that the compromises of the Constitution were agreed upon in the North only that time might be given for slavery to die out. But if another construction be made, and becomes the settled reading of that instrument; if the North is to have the guilt and the South the profits of slavery; if we are henceforth to understand that slavery is federal and national, recognized in the all-embracing Constitution, then, but one course is left us. No earthly consideration shall make us partners in this monstrosity. We most solemnly declare, by our belief in humanity, by our hopes in religion, by our faith in Christ, that we will cut every cord of oppression whose force is derived from us. And if, in so doing, men choose to interpose the Constitution, upon their heads be the blame. Palsied be that hand, and blasted those lips, which shall make our Constitution, ordained for freedom, the instrument of bondage and cruelty!

"I AM SO HAPPY!"

I see the faded writing, dated oh! so long ago;
The clear, round text is fairly traced by childish figures slow;
'T is but a simple record of inconstant hopes and fears,
But one short sentence written there I blot with falling tears.

It is this—"I am so happy." But twenty years have flown
Since those pleasant words were writ to a loving playmate gone;
This is the hand that traced them, they were innocent and true;
This is the heart so buoyant then, as rosy moments flew.

I gaze upon the characters, I ponder o'er them yet;
The many intervening years I struggle to forget;
O, but to realize them now for one short fleeting hour,
The dark, dark shadows of this life ceasing awhile to lower!

"I am so happy"—well-a-day! those strange and thrilling words
Sound soft and sweetly as the song of wild and woodland birds,
In twilight glades, at evening fall, when, 'mid the shivering leaves,
A whispering of import sad our busy fancy weaves.

May I not be a child once more? My second birth must be
No day-dream of a sickly mind, but blest reality;
Then, then again those glorious words with truth I may indite—
"I am so happy"—traced within in characters of light.

ANNUAL REPORT

Of the Baptist Free Mission at Port-de-Paix, Hayti, for the year ending 12th Month, 31st, 1849.

To the Board of the Am. Baptist Free Mission Society:

DEAR BRETHREN,—One year ago last month, I visited this place, being on a tour to the north part of the island. After my return to Port-au-Prince, I decided to establish a mission here as soon as I could move my family. I was not able to obtain a passage by sea until the 11th of the 1st month of this year. We arrived here on the 18th of the same month. The first two months after we arrived we were very much incommoded for want of house-room. Since that time, although we have had what room would suffice for present purposes, it has not been ample enough for our health and comfort. We very much need a room or house for our school and meetings. I think $250 would build a house sufficient to seat 50 or 60 persons; such a building would answer for a time.

We commenced a day-school immediately after we came here. This has been in operation until the 17th inst., when it closed by a public examination, much to our satisfaction as well as that of the authorities and parents of the children who were present. Much has been done to break up the school altogether. Many of the children have been taken away, for fear of becoming Protestants, but under the pretence of not learning anything. The examination commenced at 10 A. M., and lasted till 4½ P. M., without intermission. The exercises were so interesting that all remained till the close. The Commission of Education presented me their thanks, and have reported favorably concerning the progress of the school to Government. A general satisfaction was manifest. Since that day, we have not heard any false reports against the school. For more than half of the year we labored under many disadvantages for want of a suitable teacher; several weeks, I was obliged to take charge of the school myself; the teacher I had employed having forfeited his liberty by an affair of smuggling coffee. He has been in prison about five months. At the beginning of the fall season, Miss. Howard commenced giving lessons in French. She had previously been instructing the children in English. The scholars have been taught five days in the week, commencing on 2d day and ending on 6th day. The greatest number of scholars has been 33. The number at the close of the school was sixteen. The entire expenses of the school have been $619,50 Haytien currency, which is about $60,00 American currency. Of this sum, the parents have paid $332,70, and I have paid $286,86. During three or four months past we have had the services of a young man in the school, who has given entire satisfaction. I have secured his services for the beginning of the coming year.

The public preaching of the word has been sustained once a week as the state of my health and other circumstances would permit. We have never wanted for some to come and hear the gospel. I have also preached in two different places in the neighborhood, and sometimes to sailors in the harbor. Tracts, Bibles, and Testaments, have been given away and sold to some extent, not only here, but at St. Louis, 8 miles east, at the Mole St. Nicholas, 50 miles west, and at Gros Morne, 30 or 40 miles south. I have visited and preached at St. Louis three times; once at Borgne, Limbe, Dondon, and Cape Haytien.

As to the effect of the truth on the people here, I have but little to report. I am not without some hope that some one or more will be converted before long. One individual, an American emigrant, has been reclaimed from gross sin into which she had fallen. She formerly belonged to a Baptist church in New York city. Living in this country 25 years, she had suffered herself to be led astray. Through the instrumentality of Mrs. J. she was led to renounce her way of living altogether. Others have acknowledged that they were convinced that the religion we preach is true, but hitherto they love the world. One, however, has given us some hope of being really convicted of sin. She evidently loves to read her Testament. She siad to-day to Mrs. J., "I thought, when you first came to this place, that I should have been a Christian before this time." Our prayer is that God would soon convert sinners and grant his unworthy servants the encouragement of seeing their labors more abundantly blessed. This is the first Christian Mission in this part of the island. Consequently all that appertains to vital godliness and the true service of Christ is new to the people.

Our health has suffered during the year. At one time we feared that Miss Howard's health would fail entirely. Mrs. Jones has not enjoyed good health since our return to the island. I have enjoyed better health than when I was located at Port-au-Prince. In the early part of the summer an attack of fever obliged me to cease from my labors about six weeks. But a more afflicting dispensation has been awaiting us. On the 23d inst., our little son, William Bingham, was called from earth to heaven, after a distressing illness of one week. The funeral took place on the 24th, attended by some 60 or 70 persons. I preached from Amos 4: 12, "Prepare to meet thy God." Never did I feel more the importance of the occasion than at that time. Many of these poor, deluded, careless, wicked idolators, wept. All was new to them; they had never seen a funeral conducted in that manner before. We buried our little one in a secluded spot on one side of the Catholic burying-ground of this place. "The Lord gave, and the Lord hath taken away, and blessed be the name of the Lord."

Your brother in the labor of the Gospel,
WM. M. JONES.

PREACHING CHRIST.

The following anecdote, drawn from Moravian missionary history, contains a volume of instruction for pulpit and parlor preachers. Tschoop, a Pennsylvanian, noted for his wickedness and cruelty before his conversion, gave this narrative of the manner of the change which made him a preacher of righteousness:—

"Brethren, I have been a heathen, and have grown old among them. Once a preacher came, and began to explain to us, that there is a God. We answered, 'Do you think us so ignorant as not to know that? Go back.' Then another came and said, 'You must not get drunk, nor steal, nor lie.' We answered, 'Fool, do you think we don't know this? Go, teach the people who sent you to leave off these things; for who steal, lie, or are more drunken, than the whites?' After some time Rauch came into my hut, sat down, and said, 'I come to you in the name of the Lord of heaven and earth. He sends to let you know, that he will make you happy, and deliver you from your present misery. For this end, he became a man; gave his life a ransom, and shed his blood for sinners.' When he had finished his discourse, he lay down, fatigued with his journey, and fell into a sound sleep. I thought, What kind of a man is this? There he lies and sleeps: I might kill him, and throw him into the woods, and who would know it? But this gives him no concern. I could not forget his words. Even when asleep I dreamed of the blood of Christ shed for us. It was good news. I interpreted it to the other Indians. Thus, through the grace of God, an awakening commenced among us. Brethren, preach Christ our Saviour, and his sufferings and death, if you wish your words to gain entrance among the heathen."

SOLITARY CONFINEMENT.

The dark cells of Millbank are fearful places, and sometimes fearful mistakes are made in committing persons to them. You descend about twenty steps from the ground floor into a very dark passage leading into a corridor, on one side of which the cells—small, ill-ventilated, and doubly barred—are ranged. No glimpse of day ever comes into this fearful place. The offender is locked up for three days, and fed on bread and water only. There is only a board to sleep on; and the only furniture of the cell is a water-closet. On a former visit to Millbank, some months ago, I was told there was a person in one of these cells.

"He is touched, poor fellow," said the warden, "in his intellects."

But his madness was very mild. He wished to fraternize with the other prioners; declared that all mankind are brethren; sang hymns when told to be silent; and when reprimanded for taking these unwarranted liberties, declared that he was the "Governor." They said he pretended to be mad; which, seeing that his vagaries subjected him to continual punishments, and procured him no advantages, was very likely! They put him into darkness to enlighten his understanding; and alone, to teach him how unbrotherly men are. Poor wretch! He was frightened with his solitude, and howled fearfully. I shall never forget his wail as we passed the door of his horrid dungeon. The tones were quite unearthly, and caused an involuntary shudder. On hearing footsteps, he evidently thought they were coming to release him. While we remained in the corridor, he did not cease to shout and implore most lamentably for freedom; when he heard us retreating, his voice rose into a yell; and when the fall of the heavy bolts told him that we were gone, he gave a shriek of horror, agony and despair, which rang through the pentagon, and can never be forgotten. God grant that I may never hear such sounds again! On coming again, after three or four months' absence, to this part of the prison, the inquiry naturally arose, "What has become of the man who pretended to be mad?" The answer was, "Oh, he went mad, and was sent off to Bedlam!"

"THE SIN OF CALIFORNIA."

San Francisco and Stockton, California, are probably the two worst places in the world for gambling. A letter written to the Rochester American has the following passage:—

"A hardy, industrious laborer, by chance has been successful in the mountains; he has triumphed over sickness, and endured the privations of his hard lot like a hero, until his well-filled buckskin admonishes him that it is time for him to start for his anxious family; to relieve them from the anxiety they feel on his account, and from the want they suffer; he gets as far as San Francisco; he follows the bustling crowd into the 'El Dorado;' he stares at the rich ornaments— at the richly attired harlot in a little gallery beating a piano; in another gallery a brass band chimes in with her song; he wonders at the piles of money and bags of dust on the table, and at the quiet that reigns in so large a crowd; and how men pocket their heavy gains, and still heavier losses, without a murmur, while the cold sweat that steals out on his face alone indicates that the man possesses any feeling at all; he wishes to enjoy the sport, and, in fun, he throws down a Mexican dollar, indifferent about the result, and to his surprise he wins; then both are thrown down, and they are instantly doubled; and do what he will he wins; then a miner-looking fellow proposes that they drink at the bar, and after a glass of mixed liquor is swallowed, the lucky game is resumed, for he does not know that now and then a false card is thrown out in his favor to amuse the crowd of old players standing around. He reasons with himself, 'This is an easy way to make money, and I might as well double my bag as to double an ounce.' He throws his bag upon 'an ace'—the bag that was to carry him home to his family, and to place him and them beyond the reach of want, and procure him the fee simple of the finest farm in his county, is now staked upon the drawing of a card; either he is now to be the owner of two farms, or he is to be a pauper for ever. The cold sweat now stands on his face, but no man regards it— the man of the cards has no muscles that can be moved, and he goes on drawing out from the bottom of his pack, card after card, and the banker jingles the coin as he adjusts the balances from card to card upon the table. Now the cold sweat increases as they approach our friend's card; at last, 'an ace' is drawn which covers his ace, and the banker with a heavy lift transfers the bag to the bank, while our friend quietly rises up and walks out of the door—cursing in his heart the gambler, and the honorable citizen who receives the half of his lost dust under the name of rent, and the town that fattens and prospers on the wages of iniquity. And he may even reason with himself, This whole city—this whole den of thieves, is built of pine boards, and the application of a coal of fire would be doing God service—such may have been the reasoning that governed the wretch who set the Exchange on fire, involving with it, the Parker House, the El Dorado, &c. I have known a boy of sixteen years of age to lose $6,000, but he was a gambler, and had won it at play. But I have known a digger from the mountains, who lost $14,000 in a night. So much for this sin of California."

SOMEBODY HAS BEEN PRAYING.

Several years since, in a town about one hundred miles from Boston, the two churches were in a very languid condition. None, for a long time, had been converted; none were known to be concerned for their spiritual welfare. As to religious matters, there was a general apathy. But Christian life was not wholly extinct. A few wept in secret places. Among these were four young men who were fitting for College, as candidates for the ministry. They met privately once a week, to pray for a revival. Their hearts were drawn out especially for a fellow student of great intellectual promise, whose opinions were sceptical, and whose influence upon the young people was manifestly pernicious. Earnestly did they wrestle at the throne of grace on his behalf, and eagerly did they look for the answer. He knew nothing of their solicitude. None but themselves and God were aware of their meeting for such a purpose.

After a few weeks, one of the four was invited by this very young friend to take a walk, and during that excursion, the disclosure was made that prayer had not been unavailing. The Spirit of God had convinced the sceptic of his errors, and awakened a desire to know and practice the truth. He soon became truly broken in heart, and found healing in the blood of Christ. A revival ensued, in which the churches were quickened, and many sinners converted.

The information that this young student, apparently the most hopeless case, had become a convert to Christ, fell upon the ears of the people with startling effect. Like thunder in a clear sky, it was an anomaly, and took even Christians by surprise. How could it be explained that a revival had commenced, when there had been, apparently, none of the usual antecedents of such an event?

An aged Christian, who had witnessed many seasons of gracious refreshing, spoke upon the subject in a prayer meeting, and said, "I have lived long, and seen many revivals, and never knew such a blessing to come but in answer to prayer. Brethren, I am very certain that somebody has been praying. I confess that I have been very delinquent, and probably many of you can make the same confession. But, when the books shall be opened, you will find that what we now see was in answer to somebody's prayers."

It was never known in that place who had offered these successful prayers. Three of the little group are now in heaven. The survivor is the pastor of a New England church. [Watchman and Reflector.

BAPTISM—ITS SUBJECTS.

Notwithstanding the great Commission limits the application of baptism to believers, it is maintained, with great pertinacity, that "the children of such as are members of the visible church," are entitled to the ordinance. That there is any direct command for infant baptism, has long since been given up; the proof that it is a divine institution, is made out in another way. It is argued, that the Christian Church is but a continuation of the Jewish, under a different dispensation; and that, as infants were made members of the Jewish Church by the rite of circumcision they are to be introduced into and made members of, the Christian Church by baptism. But it strikes us—

1. That the mere fact that the Jewish and Christian Churches are under different dispensations, is fatal to the argument for their identity. It is the dispensation which determines the character of the church; it determines what sort of members the church shall be composed of. By the Mosiac dispensation, the children of Abraham, according to the flesh, were constituted members. They were, therefore, circumcised, and permitted to eat the Passover, in token of their belonging to that body of people, whom God had redeemed from Egyptian bondage.

2. That, as we refer to the Mosaic dispensation to learn who were constituted members of the Jewish Church so we ought to refer to the Christian dispensation to ascertain who are constituted members of the Christian Church. We find that the church is composed of babes, it is true; but they are "babes in Christ"—"new born babes"—"born, not of blood, nor of the will of the flesh, but of God"—the "born again." Babes, such as these, are baptized, and are lawfully entitled to the ordinance. They are "converted," have become "as little children," and, as such, "receive the kingdom of heaven."

3. That the Christian Church is a continuation of the Jewish, about as much as Christ is a continuation of the Passover. The Jewish Church was a type of the Christian, and hence was called by the same inspired names, as the vine, the bride, the flock, &c. The whole manner of ordering the Church, under the Mosiac dispensation, was intended to typify the ordering of the church under Christ. Hence the introduction of babes, under that economy, was designed to show that the Church of Christ was to be composed of those who, by conversion, should become as little children. And, to teach the same thing still more emphatically, not even all the natural seed of Abraham were received, "but in Isaac shall thy seed be called." The Apostle expressly declares, that this type was designed to teach, that "they which are the children of the flesh, these are not the children of God; but the children of the promise are counted for the seed." Rom. 9: 8. These children of Abraham, in the line of Isaac, were all circumcised, (that is, the males,) foreshowing, typically, that, under the Christian dispensation, the church was to be composed of "the circumcised in heart." The Church, under the new dispensation, is, therefore, a continuation of the church under the old, only as the antitype is a continuation of the type.

4. That Baptism is no where said to have come in room of circumcision—that it is no where called the Christian circumcision. The text usually relied upon (Col. 2: 11, 12,) does not prove it. The circumcision there spoken of, is said to be "made without hands." Is baptism administered "without hands?" It is said to consist "in putting off the body of the sins of the flesh." Does baptism effect this?

5. That infants were circumcised, not to make them members of the Jewish Church, but because, by natural birth, they were members of it. That believers are baptized, not to make them members of the Christian Church, but because, by spiritual birth, they have already become members. Baptism is not "the door into the church," as some will have it; it is simply a declaration, on the part of the believer, that he has become "dead to sin, and alive to God through Jesus Christ." There is no "door" but Christ. Through faith in him, we go in.

6. That the idea of a "visible church," composed of all believers, and united in one great ecclesiastical organization, as the Jews were a "visible church" in one body politic, is not taught in the Scriptures. The New Testament use of the term "church" shows that it denotes, either (1.) the whole company of the redeemed, or (2.) a local congregation of believers, united together for the purpose of maintaining the worship of God and his ordinances. The idea of a door of entrance, therefore, either by baptism, or by any other external rite, is unwarranted.

Educational Statistics.—At a prayer-meeting for Colleges, held in Boston on the last Thursday in February, some interesting statistics of education were presented. It seems that there are in the United States 120 Colleges, with 917 teachers, and 10,672 students; 42 Theological Seminaries, with 118 teachers, and 3,315 students; 13 Law Schools, with 23 teachers, and 434 students; 35 Medical Schools, with 230 teachers, and 4,554 students. Reckoning the population at 24,000,000, there is one "professional" student for every 1,413 inhabitants. The schools in the United States are estimated at 50,000; scholars, 3,000,000; annual expense, $4,000,000. In Massachusetts, the local fund for the support of Academies is $363,464, yielding an income of $21,645. There are three Normal Schools supported by the State at an annual expense of $6,500. The value of public school-houses in the State is $2,750,000, of which $2,200,000 has been expended since 1838. The whole number of churches is estimated at 30,004; ministers, 26,416; communicants, 4,480,425.

FRUIT OF MISSIONARY EFFORT.

At the last annual meeting of the American Baptist Missionary Union, the Executive Committee were instructed "to gather, during the year, all the information in their power in relation to the amount of moneys contributed for benevolent objects, by the converts at the different stations now occupied by the missionarios of the Union." We learn from the Macedonian, that in answer to inquiries addressed to them, the missionaries have sent home some very animating and instructive facts. It seems that the Burmese Christians at Akyab have erected a house in which to worship God, and expressed their readiness to assume the support of the assistant at Cruda. Some forty of the Karen preachers connected with the mission at Sandoway, have agreed to rely upon their own native churches for support. And in nearly all of the Christian villages among the Karens of Arracan and Bassein, chapels, commodious and durable, in proportion to the numbers and ability of the converts, have been erected, and schools sustained, at the charges of the people themselves. Such facts, showing a disposition on the part of converts from heathenism, to build their own meeting-houses, support their own pastors, and use their substance to evangelize the millions by whom they are surrounded, give good evidence of the genuineness of the religion they have professed.

DEFEATED AGAIN.

To the Editors of the Sabbath Recorder:—

I have been waiting for a week past to receive the Report of the Committee on Vice and Immorality, in the House of Representatives of Pennsylvania, to announce to you the failure of the Bill for the Relief of Sabbath-keepers in the Keystone State.

To a proper understanding of the case, it may be well to premise, that at an early period of the last session of the Legislature of that State, the Senate passed a Bill to exempt Sabbath-keepers from the operation of the Sunday coërcion law of 1794; which, on being sent to the House, was referred to the Committee on Vice and Immorality, where it was stifled, at least not reported back to the House, until within a few days of the adjournment—too late to be reached—and was thus "choked off,"—an unmanly mode of "killing" a Bill—and that through the contemptible trickery of the Chairman of that Committee—a quasi Methodist minister—who fills the double office of demagogue and chaplain in an emergency, yet, withal, a cunning fox, who knows how to thwart a just proceeding, if he have not heart enough to succor an honorable one; for the Committee were willing, and had determined, to report favorably to the House, in good time; but, under the pretence of preparing a minority report, he succeeded in having it deferred until too late to be reached for action.

This contemptible proceeding was remembered, and our friends put on their guard, that when the Bill should be sent into the House, they might resist having it referred to the Committee on Vice and Immorality. Under these circumstances, an attempt was made to have it referred to a Select Committee; during the discussion of which, Mr. Meek, the Chairman of the Committee on Vice and Immorality, jesuitically intimated, that he was not opposed to the prayer of the petitioners, if, in granting it, the door was not too widely opened—upon which assurance it was referred.

The Editor of the Pennsylvania Telegraph has favored us with a sketch of the proceedings on that occasion; which will be interesting to your readers, as well as exhibit the estimation in which our people are held by the Representatives of that Commonwealth.

"The bill to relieve the Seventh-day Baptists from the penalties of the act of 1794, has passed the Senate, and been sent to the House for concurrence.

On its announcement by the Speaker of the House, Mr. Cessna moved that it be referred to a select committee of three, on the ground that the committee on Vice and Immorality, to which it would naturally go, were committed on the subject, and would therefore be unable to make the proper investigations.

On this motion an interesting debate arose, in which Messrs. David, Allison, Killinger, Cessna, Cornyn, Burden, Meek and Reid took part.

Mr. David preferred a select committee to the committee on Vice and Immorality, because of the necessity of giving this question an impartial investigation, and making an able and satisfactory report, which should go to the merits of the whole question. He said the Seventh-day Baptists were a moral and patriotic portion of the people, and were entitled, at the hands of the House, to a fair and impartial hearing. They were citizens worthy of the protection of the State, and their conscientious scruples ought to be well weighed.

Mr. Allison preferred the reference to the standing committee. It was not to be supposed that the mind of the able chairman, (Mr. Meek) was prejudiced, but, on the contrary, that it was strongly imbued with such sentiments as would make the entertainment, investigation and report upon this question, a matter of love.

Mr. Kellinger took the same side, from the fact that that committee had but little to do, and might well look into this question.

Mr. Cornyn did not care about the reference, but expressed himself as apprehensive that this movement would be found as an entering wedge to destroy the Christian Sabbath, so venerated for its antiquity, and its connection with the improvement and highest hopes of man.

Mr. Burden preferred a reference to the standing committee, if the venerable chairman would intimate his desire to make a report upon the subject. He was understood to hold, that no legislation should be had to bind the consciences of men. Conscience was not to be coërced; and those petitioners, so respectable in appearance, were entitled to a fair hearing, without an array of old prejudices to combat. He had no doubt of the competency of the Chairman of the committee on Vice and Immorality; indeed, that he was already posted on the question; for, being desirous, himself, to refresh his mind as to the theological features of the question, he had called at the Library and asked both for Clark's and Scott's Commentaries, and found that both were in possession of the member from Centre. [Mr. B. spoke of both these books as containing the highest kind of philosophy and wisdom.]

The speech of Mr. Burden, like all his speeches, and we have heard him in the legislative Halls for nearly twenty years, was full of learning, reasoning and sense, and sparkled with wit in every sentence. While it commanded the perfect attention of the House, we could not but draw, from the impression made, an inference highly favorable to the respectable petitioners, of whom many are now in Harrisburg awaiting the action of the Legislature.

Mr. Reid suggested an additional number of four, to be added to the committee on Vice and Immorality, and to them a reference. But the suggestion was adopted, and the bill was referred to the committee as it stands.

We may also say, that from some remarks made by Mr. Meek, we inferred that he is not opposed to the prayer of these petitioners, if in granting it the door is not too widely thrown open."

The next intimation we have of the affair, is in the proceedings of the House on the 15th inst.:—

"Prayer by Rev. Mr. Coit. Mr. Meek, Chairman of the Committee on Vice and Immorality, to whom the bill for the relief of the Seventh-day Baptists was referred, made a report at length, on the subject of the observance of the Sabbath, and against the passage of the Senate bill. Mr. Allison moved the printing of 5000 copies of the report, which was agreed to."

No one will fail to see the purport of the following movement, two days previously to making the report, as recorded in the Minutes of the 13th inst.:—

"Prayer again by Mr. Meek. The Speaker laid before the House a letter, signed Wm. R. De Witt, accompanied with certain publications of the American Tract Society, being a work entitled Home Evangelization, for the use of the members of the House."

Thus we behold the influences brought to bear to defeat our rights, and oppress our suffering brethren.

Before closing this note—for I forbear, at present, to make any farther remarks—I add a few editorial scraps, from the same paper above mentioned, to exhibit the character and standing of the heartless oppressor of our people.

"Yesterday the House was again opened with prayer by Mr. Meek, the member from Centre. We shall, in our next, publish the remarks of Mr. Stanley, in Congress, on the subject of the union of clerical duties with political functions. Mr. Hilliard of Alabama, it appears by Mr. Stanley's speech, and also by the speech of Mr. Stevens, is in the practice of speaking in Congress upon moral duties, among which he holds slavery to be one; and they are confused by not knowing whether he is speaking as a statesman, or in his assumed character as a heavenly instructor. The same kind of confusion exists in the Legislature; for, while many honest members desire to listen to Mr. Meek with docile ears, when he speaks clerically, they have first to ascertain in which position he is standing, before they can implicitly follow his lead It is becoming the opinion on 'the Hill,' that the Speaker and the majority should, for the balance of the session, desist from the use of the member from Centre, in any other capacity than as a common partizan.

"In Pagan and the more superstitious ages of Christianity, it would answer to use the priesthood in such characters as would enable them to impose most successfully upon the people; but we had hoped that day had passed, until we saw the uses to which Mr. Meek was put.

'To such vile uses may we come at last.'"

"Our Amos thinks it would be prudent for some gentleman of the House to offer a resolution, that when the resident minister, whose turn it is to open the House with prayer, is absent, the House dispense with prayer, as he has no idea of the propriety of exercising ministerial and political duties the same morning. Besides, it is embarrassing to the House in not knowing in which character to take the worthy father, as a saint or a politician. The worthy father should be consistent. As a politician he is understood to be in favor of individual liability and responsibility; but as a saint he treats the House in his implorations as jointly soulless. The Speaker and the House ought to revert to the old maxim, that all are equal before the law."

As soon as I receive the "Report" of the Committee, I will forward it. W. M. F.

Missionary Embarkation.—Mr. John A. Butler and his wife, of Chelsea, Mass., sailed from Boston on the 12th inst., in the barque Hamilton, for Cape Town, in the expectation of joining the South African Mission. Mr. Butler is a printer, and he will take charge of the press belonging to this mission, now in operation near Port Natal. The demand for books in the native language is very urgent.

ESCAPE OF DR. ACHILLI.

The London Correspondent of the National Intelligencer gives a graphic account of the circumstances connected with the escape of Dr. Achilli from imprisonment at Rome. It seems, that on the 29th of January, while a meeting of Christian friends was being held in Paris, at the house of the Rev. Adolph Monod, to decide on renewed and more bold efforts for the liberation of Achilli, to the joy and gratitude of all, the object of their anxiety and prayer knocked at the door, and the prisoner, whose release they scarcely ventured to anticipate, stood before them, and heartily united with them in their devout thanksgivings to God. The manner of his escape is set forth thus:—

"The French authorities at Rome sent a party of soldiers to escort him from the Castle of St. Angelo, under the pretext that his evidence was required at a court martial. On leaving the prison, he was immediately clothed in the uniform of a French soldier, and marched to Civita Vecchi, where he was put on board a war steamer, and at once conveyed to Toulon, from which place he proceeded to Paris. It will be evident, that private friendship could not have effected such an escape as this, and probably all the authorities concerned regarded it necessary to get out of a difficulty with as little appearance of formality as possible."

MR. ESTEE'S MISSIONARY REPORT.

[Somewhat abbreviated.]

On Third-day, January 29th, (the date of my last report,) I left Salem to visit the little church on the South Fork of Hughes' River. At several places on the route, I preached, and also left appointments to preach on my return. Reached the South Fork on Sixth-day, where I was cordially received, and preached on the Sabbath and First-day. The Church appeared to be revived and encouraged. The brethren and sisters confessed their past delinquency in the discharge of their religious duties, and expressed a desire to engage in the cause of God with greater earnestness. Several of the youth connected with the congregation also manifested an anxiety for the salvation of their souls. These favorable indications encouraged me to hope that my visit was not in vain; and, at their earnest solicitation, I promised to visit them again before leaving Virginia.

On Second-day, I left this neighborhood to return, preaching at the places where I had appointments. On Fourth-day, I preached at the house of Bro. Lewis Bond, and administered the ordinance of baptism, a daughter of Bro. Bond being the candidate. The followнig day, in compliance with a previous appointment, I preached in an adjoining neighborhood on the subject of the Sabbath, and had good evidence that the truth was not spoken in vain. The tracts which I circulated at the close of my discourse, were received with eagerness, and I trust read with profit. One woman, of the Methodist Connection, whose heart the Lord opened to attend unto the things which were spoken, informed me the next morning, that she had resolved not to work any more on the seventh day. The friends here requested that I should visit the neighborhood again, and I consented, making an engagement to return, with Divine permission, the week preceding the second Sabbath in April.

Leaving this neighborhood on Sixth-day morning, I journeyed about 14 miles, and reached West Union, the county seat of Doddridge County—a pleasant and newly-organized village. Bro. Nathan Davis, who resides in the village, had made the necessary arrangements for a meeting on the Sabbath and on First-day. I preached on the Sabbath, and also the evening after, in accordance with the appointments made. On each of these occasions, the congregation listened with attention and apparent seriousness. On First-day the congregation filled the house to overflowing, and I preached on the subject of the Sabbath. There are several families of professed Sabbath-keepers in and around this village, and I trust that the time is not far distant when a Seventh-day Baptist Church may be organized here. I occupied a few days in family visiting, and was much encouraged by what I witnessed. Parents manifested an anxiety for the salvation of their children, and appeared to realize in a good degree the responsibilities resting upon them. Some of the children expressed a desire to secure the salvation of their souls, giving evidence that the Spirit of the Lord was working effectually in their hearts.

I left West Union on Fourth-day, and in the evening preached at the house of a Bro. Jeffrie. Fifth-day evening, I preached at the school-house in the neighborhoods where Bro. Lodowick Davis resides.

The following day I went on to Salem, and met with the brethren in church meeting. At this meeting it was concluded to commence a protracted season of worship on the succeeding day, which was their usual communion season. During the public services on the Sabbath, it was evident that the Spirit of the Lord was working effectually in the hearts of many. On the part of the Church, there was a strong desire that deliverance might arise from some quarter. Difficulties existed, which had their origin more than twenty years ago. Efforts to adjust them had been made so often without success, that the hope of amicable settlement had almost, if not entirely, fled. The Church was disheartened, and knew not what to do. Gloom and despondency seemed to pervade every mind. As a consequence of this prolonged alienation of feeling, all knew, and seemed to realize, that many and great evils had been experienced, embarrassing the Church in all its movements, and most effectually preventing its prosperity. As God often surprises his people and rejoices their hearts by unexpected deliverances, so has he appeared for the deliverance of the Salem Church. In the progress of our meeting, these difficulties have been adjusted. This work of reconciliation consummated, we witnessed a scene of thrilling interest. Brethren and sisters, who had been separated for years, approached and extended to each other the hand of fellowship. Almost the entire congregation was in tears. Some were shouting and giving God the glory for conferring a blessing so unexpected, and which filled their souls with ecstasies. It was not enough for brethren to grasp each other by the hand—they embraced each other; and while their tears were fast flowing, pressed heart to heart. As might be expected under such circumstances, God's convicting Spirit was poured out; backsliders were made to tremble, and, like the prodigal son, resolve to return to their Father's house; and impenitent sinners were awakened, and led to seek with great earnestness the salvation of their souls. Our meeting continued through the week, and on the Sabbath I baptized six rejoicing converts. In the evening, five of these, and four others, who had been previously baptized, were received into the Church, making nine in all.

On First-day, I preached on the subject of the Sabbath at the school-house near Bro. Lodowick Davis'. In the evening I preached at West Union, to an attentive congregation. Returning from West Union, to Flint Run, I preached at the residence of Bro. Wm. Davis on Third-day evening. On Fourth-day I went to Green Brier Settlement, and preached in the evening at the house of Bro. Gideon Maxson. On the following day we had a very interesting prayer and conference meeting. God's convicting Spirit moved upon the hearts of many, and several that day were aroused to a sense of their danger, and manifested great anxiety. In the evening I preached on the subject of the Sabbath.

On Sixth-day morning I left Green Brier Settlement, and in the evening attended a prayer meeting with the brethren in Salem. On the Sabbath I preached, and baptized one rejoicing convert, who had but a few days previously obtained bright evidence that her sins were forgiven, and that she was accepted in the Beloved. In the evening this sister was received into the Church. On that occasion truly the Lord was with us. On First-day, agreeably to a previous notice, I preached on the subject of the Sabbath.

As a result of the meeting, ten have been added to the Church, and as many more in the society have expressed the hope that their sins have been forgiven.

Leaving Salem on Third-day, I proceeded to Lost Creek, in order to attend the quarterly meeting of the Church, which is the usual communion season. Azor Estee.

A Revival of the Right Stamp.—A correspondent of the Morning Star, speaking of a revival at Great Falls, Mass., says that "some two hundred have turned to the Lord, and still the work is progressing." He also mentions, as a peculiarity of this work, that it "commenced and has been carried forward without extraordinary means, such as protracted meetings, daily evening preaching, and the like." The following is his account of one meeting which he attended:—

"Many spoke of their own conversion, and the conversion of friends and relatives, with much power and freedom. It was affecting to hear a pious father say, My whole family is now converted to Christ. His family consists of himself, wife, and five children. Some spoke of a backslidden father, a prayerless mother, opposing relatives, and a scoffing, sneering world; but they seemed undaunted, and determined to meet every difficulty with firmness, and to overcome by the blood of the Lamb and the word of their testimony. One young lady remarked, that soon after her conversion, she wrote a letter to her friends at home, informing them what great things God had done for her soul. She farther remarked, that while writing that letter, she most fervently prayed that every line and letter of it might be sent home to their hearts. To-day, said she, I have received a letter in return; and what do you think are its contents? Oh, I am informed by it that my dear father is converted to Christ. Such a relation, you may well judge, produced a solemn effect upon the meeting."

A Model Church, in some respects.—The Christian Intelligencer says that the Congregational church at New Canaan, under the pastoral care of Rev. Theophilus Smith, is composed of one hundred and sixty-five members. For twenty-one years the collection for the American Bible Society has not failed in a single instance. The sum contributed for the circulation of the Bible during that time is $1774 31, of which $1427 17 have been remitted to the parent Society, and $334 14 has been expended in distributing the Scriptures within the limits of their own town. From the despository kept by the church, during the last seventeen years, they have distributed 652 Bibles and 967 Testaments, and they always keep on hand a sufficient quantity to supply all destitute families within their own borders.

Revivals in Allegany County.—A letter from Eld. Rowse Babcock informs us, that he has recently attended a protracted meeting at Richburg, Allegany Co., N. Y., which "has resulted in the revival of professors, the return of backsliders, and the conversion of sinners; thirteen additions have been made to the two churches in the place, and others will soon go forward in the ordinance of baptism." The same letter informs us, that a protracted meeting has been held in the Cooley Neighborhood, in the town of Wirt, which resulted in a general revival of professors of religion, and "the conversion of some thirteen or fourteen individuals."

Sunday Doings in Baltimore.—The Baltimore papers of a recent Monday, contained accounts of no less than four riots among the firemen of that city, one of which occurred on Sabbath night, and three on Sunday. Pistols, bricks, stones, &c., were freely used, and several persons were more or less injured, but none fatally—the most serious injury being the loss of an eye on the part of Lewis Essender.

Colonization in Missouri.—The colonization scheme, to get rid of the free blacks of the country, seems to be growing in popularity at the South. The Missouri Colonization Society held its annual meeting on the 6th inst., at which reports were presented by the various officers. The report of the Executive Committee gives a prominent place to the movement of the colored people of Missouri in favor of emigration to Liberia, as marking a new era in the history of the Society, and one from which the most important results are anticipated. Among the other doings at this meeting, the Society resolved, that in the present crisis of African colonization, the efforts of its friends should be directed—

1st. To the development of the resources of Liberia, and to the improvement of their literary and religious institutions, so as to make the Commonwealth a desirable home for the free man of color.

2d. To give facilities for emigration, and to encourage their emigration at their own expense.

3d. To diffuse information among all classes of our population on the advantages of African Colonization, by the Living Agent, through the press, and by all other judicious means.

A Monument to Bunyan.—The Baptists of Bedford, England, have just erected in that place a very appropriate monument to Bunyan, in the form of a substantial and much-admired chapel, capable of holding 1,150 persons. It is called Bunyan Chapel, and cost £3,700. They raised among themselves and their friends £2,500. The opening of the chapel was advertised to take place on the 20th ult. The religious society for whose accommodation Bunyan Chapel has been erected, was founded in 1650. Bunyan was connected with it for more than thirty years, either as a member, a deacon, or a minister.

Sailed for China.—The fine ship Tartar, which recently sailed from New York for Canton, China, took the following passengers:—Rev. Mr. Talmadge and wife, Missionaries of the American Board for Foreign Missions; Miss C. Tenney, Missionary of the Protestant Episcopal Board; Miss Sperry, Missionary of the Methodist Board; Miss Baker, Missionary of the Southern Baptist Board; Mr. Gilbert, of Utica, N. Y; Mr. L. N. Hitchcock, of New York; Mr. Bradley, of New Haven, Conn.; Mr. Beylard, of Philadelphia; and Chun, a Chinese.

Business-like.—We find in the Freeman's Journal and Catholic Register a notice of the death of Rev. W. E. Clark, of Kentucky, the closing sentence of which strikes us as somewhat noteworthy for its business-like tone, and we therefore copy it, as follows:—"The Rev. Mr. Clark, being a member of the Society the object of which is to pray for departed Priests, is entitled to five Masses to be offered up by each fellow Associate."

Trial of Prof. Webster.—The trial of Prof. John W. Webster for the murder of Dr. Geo. Parkman, commenced in Boston on Third-day of last week. Up to Sabbath afternoon, the Court was occupied in examining witnesses for the prosecution, the principal of whom were the dentist who identified the teeth found in the furnace as those of Dr. Parkman, and Mr. Littlefield, the janitor of the Medical College. The evidence thus far is very strong against the prisoner; but as no testimony on the other side has yet been taken, nor the plan of the defense made public, it is not possible to form an opinion of the result of the trial. A large number of witnesses are yet to be examined on both sides, and the case is likely to occupy the Court for many days to come.

"Christ Weeping over Jerusalem."—Mr. E. Anthony, of 205 Broadway, has just brought out an engraving from Eastlake's great painting of "Christ Weeping over Jerusalem." It represents Peter, James, John and Andrew, with Jesus, looking down upon Jerusalem from the Mount of Olives. The original picture has received the highest commendations from the acknowledged tribunals of criticism in England. The engraving is done in the best style of mezzotint and stipple, by A. H. Ritchie. Those desirous of obtaining a fine print on a Scripture subject, will find it here. Size of the work, 18 by 13 inches; price per copy, $2.

The North British Review for February is one of the best numbers of that always interesting Quarterly. It opens with an article on the picturesque beauty and social advantages of Edinburgh. A paper on "Southey's Life and Correspondence," furnishes many interesting reminiscences of that popular author and attractive man. A review of "Müller's Treatise on Sin," brings to light some instructive and important facts concerning German theology. The question of legalizing marriage with the sister of a deceased wife, which has been much discussed of late in the British Parliament, as well as among the theologians of this country, is argued by a very zealous advocate of the existing laws on the subject, who regards the changes proposed by Stuart Wortley's Marriage Bill as "refinements upon the homely morality of the Word of God." There are also articles on "Architecture," "Pope Joan," "Footprints of the Creator," "Scottish National Education," "The Army and its Officers," &c. Republished by L. Scott & Co., 79 Fulton-st., New York, at $3 a year, or $2 when taken in connection with the other three Reviews.

General Intelligence.

PROCEEDINGS IN CONGRESS LAST WEEK.

In Senate. SECOND-DAY, March 18.

A bill authorizing the payment of twelve thousand dollars to the Winnebago Indians was reported from the Judiciary Committee, considered, and passed.

After the transaction of routine business, of no general interest, the Senate resumed the consideration of Mr. Clay's Resolutions of Compromise. Mr. Badger having the floor, addressed the Senate. His remarks were designed mainly to show the value of the Union, the certainty that a dissolution of it would lead to war, and the duty of the North to aid in the recovery of fugitive slaves. Before concluding, he gave way in order to allow the Senate to go into executive session.

House of Representatives.

Mr. Boyd presented the memorial of the California Constitutional Delegation, the credentials of Representatives Wright and Gilbert, and the Constitution of that State, which were laid on the table, and ordered to be printed.

The House went into Committee of the Whole on the State of the Union, and resumed the consideration of the California Message. Messrs. Williams, of Tenn., Casey of Pa., Cromwell of Ohio, and Giddings, spoke upon the subject.

In Senate. THIRD-DAY, March 19.

The Slavery debate was continued by Messrs. Badger of North Carolina, and Hale of New-Hampshire.

House of Representatives.

Mr. Fuller, of Maine, made a report in favor of printing five thousand extra copies of the report of the Committee on Roads and Canals, setting apart certain lands for the Whitney Railroad. Mr. Bowlin of Mo., took the occasion to make a violent attack on Whitney's project for a Railroad to the Pacific. The subject was laid over without action.

The bill to supply deficiencies of appropriations for the present year, was considered in Committee of the Whole.

In Senate. FOURTH-DAY, March 20.

Mr. Hale resumed and concluded his speech on the subject of slavery, mostly devoted to a review of Mr. Calhoun's romance of History. He was interrupted, by way of variety, with some remarks in relation to his own participation in breaking up an Abolition meeting in New-Hampshire years ago, when it was even more popular to mob Abolitionists than it now is.

Mr. Cass also made some comments on Mr. Seward's Speech.

House of Representatives.

The House refused to print a report in favor of Mr. Whitney's Pacific Railroad, indicating a decided opposition to that measure—an opposition in good part sectional and Southern.

The remainder of the session was devoted to squabbling as to the paying or non-paying of certain Clerks in the Departments.

In Senate. FIFTH-DAY, March 21.

Mr. Seward presented a petition from the owner of British bark Sarah, asking compensation for losses incurred in rescuing the passengers and crew of the American ship Caleb Grimshaw, destroyed by fire at sea.

Mr. Foote presented certain resolutions of instruction, passed by the Legislature of Mississippi, in relation to removals from office by the present administration. Truman Smith was the principal speaker on the subject.

House of Representatives.

The bill to carry into effect the late treaty with Brazil was passed. The bill provides for the appointment of a Commissioner, (to hold his office for one year,) who shall consider and adjudicate the claims ot American citizens against Brazil.

The bill to supply deficiencies for the present year, was considered in Committee of the Whole, and several amendments were acted upon.

In Senate. SIXTH-DAY, March 22.

The Senate passed a bill granting a pension to the widow of the late Gen. Worth.

Mr. Bell's resolution, calling on the President for a copy of the instructions to the American agent who visited Hungary during the late war, was also adopted.

Mr. Foote's plan for a Special Committee on the Slavery question was taken up, and Mr. Dayton, of New-Jersey, made a strong speech in favor of the admission of California, and in defense of the North.

House of Representatives.

The House had the Deficiency Bill under consideration in Committee of the Whole. Several clauses and amendments were acted upon, but without disposing of the bill, the House adjourned till Second-day.

In Senate. SEVENTH-DAY, March 23, 1850.

The whole day was spent in considering a resolution relative to removals from office, Truman Smith being the principal speaker.

CONVENTION OF COLORED MEN IN OHIO.

The colored citizens of Ohio recently held a Convention at Columbus, which continued four days. There were delegates from twenty-five counties. The colored population of the State is estimated at 25,000. The convention organized an Association, entitled, "The Ohio Colored American League," to aid in the liberation of the slave, and the elevation of the free colored man. It is designed to assist fugitive slaves, employ lecturers to arouse the anti-slavery sentiment of the State, and to make special efforts for securing a change of that clause of the Constitution which in effect disfranchises colored citizens. It was resolved to employ six colored Lecturers to canvas the State until the Delegates to the Constitutional Convention shall be elected, with instructions to resist before the electors of the State, the proposition to submit, in a separate clause from the Constitution, the question of negro suffrage, to the people; and to urge the abolition of all distinction in that instrument between citizens on account of color. Wm. H. Day was appointed to address the Constitutional Convention, when it should assemble, in behalf of the colored citizens of the State, on the subject. A declaration of sentiments was adopted, resolving to give their earnest attention to the universal education of their people, to sustain and encourage the cause of Temperance and the formation of total-abstinence societies among them, and to induce them "to leave what are called menial occupations, and aspire to mechanical, agricultural and professional pursuits." Committees were appointed in each county of the State, to make arrangements for public meetings, and to circulate petitions to the Legislature for the appointment of a Superintendent of Colored Schools.

TWO WEEKS LATER FROM EUROPE.

The steamship Niagara arrived at Boston on Sabbath last, with European news to March 9th—two weeks later.

The advices are not favorable for American produce. Cotton was a little lower, and breadstuffs were heavy and inactive. For stocks the accounts are better than was anticipated.

From England, there is no political news of importance. The conduct of Lord Palmerston in continuing the Greek blockade is severely commented upon by all the English journals, and, were it not for a belief which exists that his Lordship has made a demonstration against Russia, his conduct would meet with general reprobation. The Russian Government has presented an energetic remonstrance against the proceedings of the English Government, and public opinion is general, that if necessary the Czar will give the Greeks efficient support.

Her Majesty has authorized a publication of the following liberal rewards for the recovery of Sir John Franklin, viz: £20,000 to any one who will effectually relieve the crews of the ships; £10,000 for relieving, or for such information as may lead to the relief, of any of the crew, and £10,000 to any one who shall first succeed in ascertaining their fate.

The Canadian annexation movement excites little attention. Public opinion appears to be favorable to acceding to any decided expression of the wishes of the Canadians.

The French news may be summed up in few words. The anniversary of the Republic passed off without disturbance. The Minister of Finance states that the revenues will be adequate for the public service this year, without a new loan or increased taxes. The Postmaster General opens all the letters passed to and from suspected persons. This conduct has given rise to warm debates in the Assembly. It is said that France and Russia are completely united upon the Greek question. Letters from Toulon state that the French fleet in the Levant had sailed for the Greek coast.

The extraordinary cold weather of the past winter in Europe has already been noticed. One hundred and fifty-eight persons were frozen to death within a few days, the greater number in their own houses, in Constantinople and its environs. At Gallipoli, twenty-three persons, and at Smyrna seventeen, shared the same fate. Fifteen persons were found frozen to death on board a Turkish vessel, and eight fishermen were found dead from the same cause in their boat on the Bosphorus. These fatal occurrences are explained by the very slight construction of the houses, the want of warm covering, as well as bad food. In the interior provinces the misery has been very great. The latter have been left uncared for, and the sufferings both of men and beasts have been very great.

RAILROAD ACCIDENTS ON THE SABBATH.

The following notices of railroad accidents which have occurred on the Sabbath within a short time are placed together for convenient reference. It would not be safe to say, perhaps, that they were intended by the Almighty to furnish a "powerful argument" in favor of keeping the seventh day, or a "solemn warning" against desecrating that day. But it may safely be said, without doubt, that they weigh as much in favor of the seventh day as the common run of Sunday accidents do in favor of the first day.

On Saturday, a dirt train was thrown off the track on the Middletown (Ct.) Railroad, near Berlin, by which one man was killed and another so badly hurt that he died on Monday morning.

On Saturday, near Meriden, Ct., a man was run over on the same Road, and very badly injured. His horse and wagon were both effectually demolished.

A lad about 12 years of age, son of W. Corcoran, who has charge of the Railroad Station at Canandaigua, was instantly killed at that place on Saturday afternoon by the cars running over him.

A Rochester paper says that a man was found dead on the Railroad track, on Saturday morning, a few miles this side of Auburn. He had been run over by the cars.

A serious collision took place between two freight trains on the New York and Erie Railroad on Saturday, says the Oswego Gazette, between the Cascade Ridge and the Starucca Viaduct. Two men were seriously (if not mortally) injured, and the locomotives and cars were damaged to the amount of $20,000.

The cars of a gravel train on the Hartford and New Haven Railroad, got off the track at the Berlin Station House, on Saturday, and Michael Cosgrove, one of the workmen, was instantly killed. Another Irishman was so badly hurt that his life was despaired of.

At Boston, on Saturday afternoon, as the freight train for Concord was being put in readiness to leave, Mr Cosme Lund, an active and energetic man connected with the freight train, as conductor, was caught between the two "bufflers" of the two freight cars, while attempting to fasten them together, and so pressed as to compress his body to the thickness only of three inches, breaking four or five of his ribs, driving one or more of them through his lungs, of which he died.

A serious accident occurred on the Troy and East Albany Railroad on Saturday morning. As the cars were coming from Troy to East Albany, when within a mile or two of the depot, a man was found walking on the track. The engineer blew the steam whistle and rang the bell, also endeavoring to stop the progress of the train, but did not succeed in time to warn the person of his peril. He was caught by the cow-catcher, and thrown some distance from the spot where it came in contact with him, injuring him very badly. His jaw was broken in two places, had a bad cut in the throat, one of his arms was broken, and he was badly bruised.

A DISGRACEFUL RIOT.—We learn from the Milwaukie Wisconsin, that on the 4th inst. a mob of some 300 rumsellers and rumsuckers paraded the streets of Milwaukie, and attacked the residence of Hon. John B. Smith, (a member of the Wisconsin Senate,) breaking the windows with bricks, stones, billets of wood, &c.; and, finally, not satisfied with venting their spite outside the house, several entered, turned over lamps, throwing oil on the carpet, tore down the curtains, and did some other injury. Mr. Smith was absent at the time, and no one at home, except his children, of four, six, eight, and eleven years of age, and a servant girl, who, through the efforts of two or three young men, were conveyed to a neighboring house. After remaining for some quarter of an hour, the rioters dispersed in different directions. The cause of this gross outrage upon Senator Smith is known to have been the Temperance Law, which he upheld during the last session of the Legislature.

THAWING OUT A FORTUNE—ALMOST.—A Dutch washerwoman in West Utica, cut a large piece of ice from the canal the other day, and took it home to melt into water for use. As she watched its gradual transformation from a solid to a fluid form, she was startled to find portions of paper resembling bank bills beginning to develop themselves, and, when the thawing was finished, she picked from the water three bank bills, one for $1,000, one for $10, and one for $5. Here was a streak of luck rather ahead of California, with no stockholders in the background to claim a share in the profits; $1,015, was pay for washing 2,030 doz. of pieces, without the work. But even as the ice had thawed into water, so did the fortune fished from the water vanish into air, for the bills proved to be counterfeit.

LARGE SALES OF HUMAN CHATTELS.—The New Orleans Crescent, of the 9th inst., has sundry advertisements, in French and English, of sheriffs' sales of property, among which are four lots of slaves, to wit: One lot containing 178 slaves, men, women and children, ranging from two years old to mature age; one of 114; one of 54, and one of 147. They are to be sold with the estates on which they work, without reserve, to the highest bidder—together with 493 persons, some of them infants, in New Orleans market.

FAST-DAY FOR FREEDOM.—At a meeting of the New York Pastoral Reform Association, held on the 20th of March, the following preamble and resolution were adopted:—

Whereas, A great struggle is now going on in this country between Liberty and Slavery, we therefore recommend that Friday, the 29th inst., be observed as a day of Fasting, Humiliation, and Prayer to Almighty God, by all the churches and friends of Liberty in this Union, wherever it is practicable, that the cause of Freedom may triumph.

SUMMARY.

Large quantities of ice are soon to be brought to New York from Hinckley Pond. An association, called the Croton Ice Company, has been formed, which is about to erect extensive houses for the storage of ice, adjacent to the Pond, and it is calculated that 100,000 tuns may be brought into the city from that source next season. The Pond is about 50 miles from New York, supplied directly from a copious spring, and capable of furnishing 300,000 tuns of ice a year.

On Fourth-day of last week, the New York Post Office dispatched to Europe, sixty-seven thousand seven hundred and fifty-three letters; of which 57,586 went per Canada to Liverpool, and 10,167 per Washington to Southampton and Bremen. If we add to this the usual daily average of domestic letters—50,000—we have about one hundred and eighteen thousand letters received, delivered, and mailed in a single day.

In New York, one night last week, the policemen of the Tenth Ward found sleeping in an ice-box, at the corner of Division and Attorney streets, six boys—Charles Williams, aged fourteen, father and mother dead; James McQuin, fourteen, no home; James G. Glazier, ten, Wm. McQuin, ten, Thos. Williams, eleven, James Conley, ten, all homeless and friendless, crawling into a great box on a cold winter night, and huddling together like a parcel of hogs.

A large building is now in progress of erection by Messrs. A. B. Taylor & Co., on the site of the late explosion, in the construction of which every precaution will be taken to prevent the occurrence of a similar calamity. It will be only four stories in height, and the front and rear portions of the building will be constructed entirely of iron. It is expected that operations will be commenced on their former scale by the first of May next.

Fifteen subscribers, all of them eastern merchants, have united to purchase the very best plain gold watch that can be got, to be attached to the heavy gold chain, already prepared, for presentation to Daniel Webster. The watch and chain will be the most splendid establishment of the kind ever got up.

Petitions continue to come in upon Congress asking both Houses to sweep away Slavery and the Slave Trade from the cities of Washington and Georgetown, and from Washington County, D. C., or else to remove the seat of government to a land of freedom.

The Phenix Bank, Westerly, R. I., having been robbed in December last of $16,000, has issued new bills dated Jan. 1, 1850, which will be redeemable as usual. The old notes, dated previous to 1850, will be redeemed only at its own counter.

Mrs. Sarah A. Nowell has received official notice of her appointment to the charge of the Post Office in Chelsea, Mass.

The value of the Cod-Fishery for the District of Salem and Beverly (Mass.) for the last season, according to the Salem Gazette, was $68,236.

In the Nova Scotian Assembly, a series of resolutions has been introduced by the Attorney-General, to authorize the Lieutenant Governor, through the Governor General, to treat with the American Government for reciprocity of trade, and, if necessary, to negotiate with the American Government for the right of free fishery upon the shores of Nova Scotia.

Wheat bran, as a fertilizer, has been tried by several persons in Delaware with great success. It is said that a handful to the hill will double the corn crop. Care must be taken to cover the bran before dropping the corn, or the formation will kill the seed if in direct contact with the bran. It is said to be equally valuable upon wheat.

Governor Dewey of Wisconsin has written to Gov. Ramsey of Minnesota, requesting that a small body of troops may be sent below, to prevent the Winnebagoes from committing depredations upon the settlers. We are unadvised, says the Chronicle, as to whether the request will be granted, but we suppose not. The few troops that could be spared could do little or nothing in controlling the indians in their scattered state.

Father Francis J. Huber, a German Catholic Priest of Cincinnati, who had a controversy and lawsuit with Bishop Purcell about some church property some months ago, has received orders from his ecclesiastical superior in Rome and Munich, which compel him to leave for Europe with expedition.

The Boston Journal has a letter giving an account of the loss of the ship Talisman, Capt. Bursley, from New-York (Dec. 15) for Calcutta, which was wrecked at Isle of Sal, Cape de Verd Islands, Jan. 6, during a heavy gale. Four of her crew were drowned in attempting to get ashore in a boat. Two thousand dollars in silver, which the Captain placed in the boat, was lost. The Captain and the remainder of the crew got ashore by means of a rope.

A destructive tornado recently passed over portions of Clarke and Champaign Counties, in the State of Ohio, doing great damage to timber, fences, buildings, &c. In Harmony Township, Clarke Co., several dwellings were razed to the ground—others were unroofed or otherwise injured. Several persons were seriously injured by the falling of buildings, &c.

A large meeting of the citizens of Mason Co., Kentucky, in favor of the Union, and opposed to the Nashville Convention, was held at the Court House in Maysville on the 11th inst. Hon. Walker Reid presided, and resolutions were passed strongly condemnatory of the treasonable Convention at Nashville.

The Legislature of Kentucky has passed a law authorizing a dissolution of the marriage tie, by the Chancellor of the State, on certain named conditions, one of which is the unnecessary publishing in a newspaper of one party by the other, for alledged abandonment.

The Small Pox is said to be prevailing with some degree of virulence in the neighborhood of Mintonsville, Gates County, North Carolina. Several respectable and valuable citizens have fallen victims to its ravages; and the pestilence is spreading among the slaves on the adjoining plantations.

The Lowell Vox Populi says that Rev. Mr. Hardy, formerly of that city, (Lowell) is now the successful proprietor of a monte table in San Francisco, and reputed to be worth a hundred thousand dollars.

Land Warrants are doing rather better, there being some little speculative purchasing. The price ranges from $125 to $130 for regular warrants. The supply coming on the market is not large, but there is little or no demand for location.

An enumeration of the inhabitants of the village of Little Falls, taken recently by direction of the village authorities, shows the following result:—There are in the village 744 families. The whole population is 4,237 persons, of whom 59 are colored.

Gov. Haines, of New Jersey, was considerably injured, on Thursday last, by the upsetting of a stage in which he was riding. He received a severe contusion on the head, but no danger is apprehended.

Mr. James Collins has recovered $11,000 damages of the Albany and Schenectady Railroad Company, for injuries sustained by him by a collision.

The Canal Commissioners have resolved to open all the Canals of the State of New-York, excepting Black River Canal, on the 22d of April. The Black River Canal, is to be opened May 1st.

The Georgia, from this port, touched at Charleston on the 17th inst., and received the mails for California, with 26 passengers—among whom, according to the Mercury, were three Slaves.

John Johnson has been convicted at Patterson, N. J. of the murder of Judge Van Winkle and his wife, and sentenced to be hanged on Tuesday, the 30th day of April next.

There is considerable gold in circulation of the coinage of the private mints in California. It is not worth the value represented. The $20 Mormon pieces are worth only from $16 90 to $17 53; the $10, from $8 50 to $8 70; the $5, about $4 30; the $2 50, about $2 25. The California $5 pieces range in value from $4 82 up as high as $4 96. The $10 pieces about $9 60.

A bill is before the Legislature of New York, with the entire sanction of the Canal Committee, which exempts from Canal tolls during the whole year, certain enumerated articles—such as horses, cattle, sheep, cheese, butter, poultry, fresh meats, &c. It also makes all articles free during the months of January, February, and March.

The U. S. Consul at Cape Haytien, Mr. Wilson, has written to Washington, urging the necessity of the presence of a man-of-war, to protect the large American interest there, greater than either that of Great Britain or France, both of which powers seem to fear that the Island will ultimately become annexed to the United States.

The increased population in St. Paul, Minnesota, last season, says the Chronicle, was as two to five, as near as we can estimate, and at St. Anthony about the same ratio. The present population of St. Paul is from 800 to 1,000. Town lots are on the rise, and can now be purchased at prices varying from $20 to $250, according to location.

The steamer New England, No. 2, bound for Pittsburg, while backing out from her landing about ten miles above Portsmouth, struck a snag, and soon after sunk to within a few feet of her hurricane deck. It is thought that some of the deck passengers were drowned.

DR. T. A. MAXSON, Botanic Physician, takes this method to inform the friends of Medical Reform, that he is located in Watson, N. Y., one mile east from Beach's Landing. Believing that there are vegetable remedies adapted to the cure of all diseases, he consequently uses no other. Calls attended to without delay. [32m3.] JANUARY, 1850.

Christian Psalmody—Pocket Edition.

IN compliance with requests from various quarters, the publisher of the New Hymn Book—Christian Psalmody—has issued a second edition, on lighter paper and with smaller margins, by which the bulk and weight of the books are reduced about one-third, rendering them much more convenient for carrying in the pocket. The price is also reduced 12½ cents per copy. Those wishing books, of either edition, can now be supplied. Price of the larger edition from 75 cents to $1 50, according to the style of binding. Price of the smaller edition from 62½ cents to $1 00. Orders should be addressed to Geo. B. Utter, No. 9 Spruce-st., New York.

Factory Establishment for Sale.

THE subscriber will sell the well-known Establishment, called the Bethel Mill, situated in Hopkinton, R. I., consisting of the factory, 60 by 28 feet, two and a half stories high, and a good stone basement room under the whole building; a cloth-house, 16 by 20, one and a half stories; a dye-house, 20 by 30, with suitable kettles; a wash-box, &c.; a small smith-shop for repairing; three dwelling-houses, a barn, and about six acres of land. The buildings are mostly new, the factory and dye-house having been erected in 1848, where one was burnt in that year. A good water privilege of about five feet fall, with a sufficient reservoir to supply the mill through all the drought of summer, being 114 acres, 12 feet deep, averaging from 8 to 10 feet the whole surface.

The present occupants run twenty looms on plaid linseys, and are entitled to its occupancy until the money loaned by them towards its erection (over 3,000 dollars) shall be paid, at a rent of about six hundred and eighty dollars per annum, or otherwise paid in money. It is pleasantly situated, in a good neighborhood, and help easily obtained. About half of the purchase money must be paid within the year, and the purchaser, if he chooses, can let the rest remain to be liquidated by the rent, which will take between six and seven years. It will be a good investment for any one desirous of obtaining such an establishment, or who has money to loan. JACOB D. BABCOCK.

No. 10—The True Sabbath Embraced and Observed. 16 pp.

No. 11—Religious Liberty Endangered by Legislative Enactments. 16 pp.

No. 12—Misuse of the Term Sabbath. 8 pp.

The Society has also published the following works, to which attention is invited:—

A Defense of the Sabbath, in reply to Ward on the Fourth Commandment. By George Carlow. First printed in London, in 1724; reprinted at Stonington, Ct., in 1802; now republished in a revised form. 168 pages.

The Royal Law Contended for. By Edward Stennet. First printed in London, in 1658. 60 pp.

An Appeal for the Restoration of the Lord's Sabbath, in an Address to the Baptists from the Seventh-day Baptist General Conference. 24 pp.

Vindication of the True Sabbath, by J. W. Morton, late Missionary of the Reformed Presbyterian Church. 64 pp.

These tracts will be furnished to those wishing them for distribution or sale, at the rate of 15 pages for one cent. Persons desiring them can have them forwarded by mail or otherwise, on sending their address, with a remittance, to GEORGE B. UTTER, Corresponding Secretary of the American Sabbath Tract Society, No 9 Spruce-st., New York.

History of Romanism.

In a large octavo volume of 750 pages, printed in large type, on the finest paper, and embellished with more than fifty engravings, chiefly from Original Designs, and bound in muslin, extra gilt. Price $3. THE HISTORY OF ROMANISM, from its earliest origin to the present time, by the Rev. John Dowling, D. D. A new and enlarged edition, with the Author's last additions, and a Supplement, containing a Sketch of the Life of Pope Pius IX., &c.

The best evidence of the intrinsic value of this remarkably popular work is to be seen in the fact that within the comparatively recent period of its first publication, the extraordinary number of 17,000 copies have been disposed of.

The following is an extract from a letter from the Rev. Dr. Giustiniani, the converted Roman Catholic priest, who is abundantly qualified by education, observation, and extensive study, to testify to the fidelity and value of a "History of Romanism."

"If the reader wishes to be acquainted with the errors of Romanism, he has only to open the pages of Dowling's History. If the reader is anxious to read an epitome of the history of the popes, their ambition; their intrigues; their avariciousness; their tyranny; their superstitions, and their mummeries, he can here find all proved and authenticated by the most accredited authors of the Church of Rome." L. GIUSTINIANI.

"It reflects much credit on the skill, patience, industry, and judgment of the author; he appears very justly to have conceived the idea of a work, which has long been regarded as a desideratum by a large portion of those interested in the great controversy with the Romanists."—Protestant Churchman.

"We think it an able work, comprising the results of extensive reading and research, and well adapted to fill an important chasm in our literature.—Lutheran Obs.

"We regard it as a most important addition to the historical and religious literature of the age. Its contents form a rich storehouse of historical instruction, which should be placed within the reach of every family."—N. Y. Christian Intelligencer.

"It presents a succienct, but sufficiently full, history of the rise, progress, errors, cruelties, and present condition of the Papacy, authenticated by reference to the most undoubted historic sources, related in a spirited, engaging, and impressive style, and arranged in the most lucid manner. It abounds in facts and incidents, and, with its beautiful illustrations, is better adapted to furnish a vivid and impressive portraiture of Romanism as it is, than any other book we know of."—N. Y. Evang.

"The detached portions of Romish history which were every where to be met with, needed to be brought together and presented in systematic order. The reading of one book thus becomes better and cheaper than the reading of many."—Boston Recorder.

"It is written with the ready, popular eloquence, for which the well-known author is distinguished, and cannot fail to arrest attention to the controversy of which it treats. It is a strongly Protestant work, and exhibits the deformities of Popery with great power."—N. Y. Recorder.

"The author appears to have brought to the execution of this great work, unwearied industry, genuine and thorough scholarship, and scrupulous fidelity."

THE CONVICT TO HIS MOTHER.*

I've wandered far from thee, mother,
Far from my happy home;
I've left the land that gave me birth,
In other climes to roam;
And time since then has rolled its years,
And marked them on my brow,
Yet I have often thought of thee—
I'm thinking of thee now.

I'm thinking of the day, mother,
When at thy tender side
You watched the dawning of my youth,
And kissed me in your pride;
Then brightly was my heart lit up
With hopes of future joy,
While your bright fancy honors wove
To deck thy darling boy.

I'm thinking of the day, mother,
When with such anxious care,
You lifted up your heart to Heaven—
Your hope, your trust was there.
Fond memory brings thy parting words,
While tears stole down your cheek;
Thy long, last, loving look told more
Than ever words could speak.

I'm far away from thee, mother;
No friend is near me now,
To soothe me with a tender word,
Or cool my burning brow;
The dearest ties affection wove
Are all now torn from me;
They left me when the trouble came—
They did not love like thee.

I'm lonely and forsaken now,
Unpitied and unblest;
Yet still I would not have thee know
How sorely I'm distressed;
I know you would not chide, mother,
You would not give me blame,
But soothe me with your tender word,
And bid me hope again.

I would not have thee know, mother,
How brightest hopes decay—
The tempter with his baneful cup
Has dashed them all away;
And shame has left its venom sting
To rack with anguish wild—
Yet still I would not have thee know
The sorrows of thy child.

O, I have wandered far, mother,
Since I deserted thee,
And left thy trusting heart to break,
Beyond the deep blue sea!
O, mother! still I love thee well,
And long to hear thee speak,
And feel again thy balmy breath
Upon my care-worn cheek.

But, ah! there is a thought, mother,
Pervades my beating breast,
That thy freed spirit may have flown
To its eternal rest;
And while I wipe the tear away,
There whispers in my ear
A voice that speaks of heaven and thee,
And bids me seek thee there. ALPHA.

THE CLIMATE OF CALIFORNIA.

Mr. Edward E. Powers, formerly a compositor on the New York Tribune, but now employed in the office of the Placer Times, writes in the following strain, under date of Sacramento City, Jan. 11, 1850:—

As for myself, things have not gone altogether with me as I could wish. I rushed matters for a week or two, and was in very good spirits—making from $60 to $70 a week; but the climate soon began to operate upon me. I have observed, that of those who come here, as a general thing, the men that have left home with a high reputation for general health and hardiness of constitution are the first to be taken sick—the first to wither under the baleful influences of this detestable climate; while, in many instances, those who have for years been in the habit, at home, of suffering from various bodily weaknesses, have here assumed a new and altogether desirable temperament and tone of health. I never knew what sickness was while in the States; here I have had a sip and a taste of that bitter cup, sufficient to open my eyes a little to the blessings of health. Some three weeks ago I took a severe cold, followed by a very spirited fever. I took quinine, &c., to allay the excitement, but all to no purpose—the fever gained on me.

* * Our office is a very little one-story frame building, about 16 by 20 feet. In this room we have a Ramage press, three stands, and a dozen or fifteen cases of various kinds of type; here, also, we spread our beds at night, and dream of home, and the ten thousand comforts and luxuries that we have left there, with a shadowy kind of hope that we may sometime be permitted to participate in them again. Well, as I was saying, the fever had got me, and I was unable to leave my bed, which was rather inconvenient, in a room where so much business had to be transacted during the day. So they called in a physician, who persuaded me to take lodgings in his hospital, at $8 per day, where I remained a couple of weeks. The hospital aforesaid was a canvass house, with the earth for a floor, and bunks or cots for the accommodation of about a dozen patients. My complaint was a slow remittent billious fever; but I recovered so fast as to be able to return to the office in a couple of weeks, which was much sooner than I at one time expected. My physician was Dr. Hazard, a very intelligent man, from Providence, R. I. He says this climate is compounded mainly of the worst ingredients of all the worst climates on the globe—especially during the summer months; and that all men that stop here, or anywhere else in the valley of the Sacramento, or other valleys of this country, run the risk of their lives far more than anywhere else, as a general thing. I am of the same opinion, from what I can learn, and from personal observation. The population of this town, in November last, was supposed to be from 5 to 7,000, though much less at present; and Dr. Hazard tells me that the graves that have been dug and filled within the year, in the various burying grounds near the town, number full 5,000.

You may be under the impression, from statements published in the California papers and elsewhere, that the climate of this country is of a very superior order; but the very reverse is the fact. You, I believe, have never suffered from a visitation of the California fever, and you have been lucky in that respect. Take my word for it, any man that is in anything like comfortable circumstances at home, doing a fair business, and enjoying reasonable health, is an unfortunate man to allow himself to be wheedled into the opinion that he may render himself better off in life by leaving the comforts of civilization, and inflicting upon himself the various horrors of this detestable country, for the meagre chance of getting a little more money here than he could at home in a given time. Tell all your friends that have 'the fever,' that if they know when they are well off, they will stay where they are, and not risk their lives in such an inhospitable climate as this. * * * The papers do not publish one in a thousand of the deaths that occur here. If any friend of the deceased will furnish the notice, and pay for its insertion, it is published; not otherwise. Hundreds—thousands, leave their bones to rot in the soil of California, leaving friends in the States, and elsewhere, to look for their return, who never learn their fate for many months—perhaps for years. If a man could be assured of good health while here, he might be excused for coming, because he may do well; but the chances are ten to one against him, in point of health, and he had better not venture it.

MANUFACTURE OF GLASS BEADS.

Besides the invention of mirrors, and reticulated glasses, for which we have to thank the Venitians, the art of making glass beads was also first discovered in the glass-houses of Murano, and is practiced there at the present day on a very extensive scale. The small glass beads are fragments cut from pieces of glass tubing, the sharp edges of which are rounded by fusion. Glass tubes of the proper size are first drawn from 100 to 200 feet in length, and of all possible colors, (in Venice they prepare 200 different shades,) and are broken into lengths of two feet. These are then cut by the aid of a knife into fragments of the same length as their diameters; they now present the form of beads, the edges of which, however, are so sharp, that they would cut the thread on which they have to be strung. The edges have consequently to be rounded by fusion; and as this operation must be performed upon a great number at once, and they must not be allowed to stick together, they are mixed with coal-dust and powdered clay previous to their being placed in the revolving cylinder in which they are heated. The finished beads are then passed through sieves, sorted to their size, and strung upon threads by women. Besides the ordinary knitting beads, another kind is manufactured, called perles à lalune, which are firmer and more expensive. These are prepared by twisting a small cord of glass softened by a glass-blower's lamp round an iron wire. The glass beads made in imitation of natural pearls for toilet ornaments, the invention of which dates from the year 1656, are very different from the preceding, both as regards their application, mode of production, and origin. These are small solid glass beads of the same size as native pearls, which they are made to resemble by a coating of varnish, and which gives them a peculiar pearly lustre and color. A maker of rosaries, by name Jaquin, was the first to discover that the scales of a species of fish, (Cyprinus alburnus,) or bleak, communicate a pearly hue to water. Based upon this observation, glass globules were first covered on the outside, but at a later period on the inside, with this aqueous essence. The costly essence, however, of which only a quarter of a pound could be obtained from the scales of 4000, was subject to one great evil, that of decay. After trying alcohol without success, in consequence of its destroying the lustre of the substance, sal-ammoniac was at length found to be the best medium in which to apply the essence; a little isinglass is also mixed with it, which causes it to adhere better. The pearls are blown singly at the lamp; a drop of the essence is then blown into them through a tin tube, spread out by rolling, and the dried varnish is then covered in a similar manner by a layer of wax. THE STRAWBERRY.

This is a most excellent fruit, though not generally enumerated among culinary ones. The varieties are almost innumerable, and new ones are annually being produced by cultivation and from seed. The Alpine varieties are usually propagated by seed. The following suggestions touching the modus operandi to be pursued in the propagation of these, are from the pen of a professional gardoner, whose extensive information, and great practical experience render them eminently deserving of regard.

"The seeds are separated from the pulp in Autumn, by careful washing; they are then thoroughly dried and retained in that state till the soil can be properly prepared in the Spring, when they are sowed. As soon as the seedling attain a size sufficient to admit of their being handled, they are pricked into a shady border, in beds, and where, if carefully irrigated, they will produce fruit in the following Autumn."

In reference to other sorts, our author observes:—

"All the other varieties of this fruit are propagated by their runners, which are generally very numerous, and having a creeping habit, and being extended along the soil, soon take root at every joint. This peculiarity is equally observable whether the vines be wild or cultivated The soil for the strawberry bed should be fine, warm, and rich. After setting the plants, it is advisable to cover the surface, especially in the vicinity of the roots, with a compost formed of old manure, rotten leaves, loam, ashes, and lime; but before the fruit has fairly set, this, in turn, must be covered with a stratum of straw, in order that the fruit may have the advantage of a clean bed on which to repose, and thus escape injury or ruin by contact with the dirt. As the lightness of most straw exposes it to the liability of being blown away or deranged by the winds, some expedient will be required to retain it in its place, which may be accomplished by means of forked sticks thrust deeply in the soil, or by weights."

After the third season, the fruit deteriorates in size, and it is thought somewhat in quality also; a circumstance which necessitates the formation of new beds or plantations, annually, in order to supply the place of those which have previously become unproductive, or "run out." Where the vines are permitted to run together in the beds, as is generally the mode of management pursued with the Alpine varieties, the plants, by means of their runners, annually renew themselves, and are consecutively fruitful, and so remain for years. Slugs are the greatest enemies the cultivators of this fruit are called to encounter, but even these pests are easily banished. A few copious drenchings of lime water, about the time the fruit is setting, will effectually expel them. About the period of inflorescence, it will be necessary, unless the season be moist, or showery, to irrigate freely, and for this purpose the best article that can be used is soap suds. The copious use of this energetic and salutary liquid connot fail of producing the most advantageous results, and should be constantly pursued till the fruit is full grown, and begins to turn or become ripe.

HOW DOES A FLY BUZ AND FEED?

How does a fly buz? is a question more easily asked than answered. "With its wings, to be sure," hastily replies one of our readers. "With its wings, as they vibrate upon the air," responds another, with a smile, half of contempt, half of complacency, of his own more than common measurement of natural philosophy. But how, then, let us ask, can the great dragon-fly, and other similar broad-pinioned, rapid-flying insects, cut through the air with silent swiftness, while others go on buzzing when not upon the wing at all? Rennie, who has already put this posing query, himself ascribes the sound partially to air, but to air as it plays on the "edges of their wings at their origin, as with an Æolian harp-string," or to the friction of some internal organ at the root of the wings or nerves. Lastly, how does the fly feed? the busy, curious, thirsty fly, that "drinks with me," but does not "drink as I," his sole instrument for eating or drinking being his trunk or suck; the narrow pipe, by means of which, when let down upon his dainties, he is able to imbibe as much as suits his capacity. This trunk might seem an instrument convenient enough when inserted into a saucer of syrup, or applied to the broken surface of an over-ripe blackberry, but we often see our sipper of sweets quite as busy on a solid lump of sugar, which we shall find, by close inspection, growing "small by degrees," under his attack. How, without grinders, does he accomplish the consumption of such crystal condiment? A magnifier will solve the difficulty, and show how the fly dissolves his rock. Hannibal fashion, by a diluent, a salivery fluid passing down the same pipe, which returns the sugar melted into syrup. [Episodes of Insect Life.

POTATOES.

Potatoes were first introduced into Moscow, by Mr. Rowland, about 16 years ago. At first the people would neither plant nor touch them, saying they were the Devil's fruit, given to him on his complaining to God that he had no fruit, when he was told to search in the earth for some, which he did, and found potatoes. A curious Berwickshire legend, which, however, is palpably anachronical, attributes the introduction of potatoes into Scotland to that famous wizard of the North, Michael Scott. The wizard and the Devil being in partnership, took a lease of a farm on the Mertoun estate, called the White-house. The wizard was to manage the farm, the Devil advanced the capital. The produce was to be divided as follows:—

The first year, Sir Michael was to have all that grew above the ground, and his partner all that grew below; the second year their shares were to be just the opposite way. His Satanic Majesty, as is usual in such cases, was fairly over-reached in his bargain; for the wizard cunningly sowed all the land the first year with wheat, and planted with potatoes the second; so that the Devil got nothing for his share but potatoe tops and stubble; this scouring rotation Sir Michael continued, until he beggared his partner, and exhausted the soil. In spite of this legend, however, we must continue to give credit to Sir Walter Raleigh, for having been the introducer of potatoes into Scotland. The first that ate them fell into the natural mistake of eating the apple and discarding the roots.

A CHILD'S INFLUENCE.

An English lady of respectability resided, for a few years after becoming a widow, with her little son, in one of the chief cities of Canada. The child had been faithfully instructed in the elements of the Christian faith. He was about four years of age, very lovely and promising, and greatly caressed by the fellow boarders. An elderly gentleman in the family, Mr. B., was exceedingly fond of him, and invited him, one day, upon the removal of the cloth after dinner, to remain upon his knee. The ladies had retired, and free conversation ensued. The gentleman alluded to was given to expressions which must ever shock a pious mind. "Well, Tommy," said one at the table in high glee, "what do you think of Mr. B.?" The child hesitated for a moment, and then replied, "I think he did not have a good mother, for if he had, he would not use such naughty words." The gentleman was a Scotchman; home and a pious mother rose, in all their freshness, to his mind. The effect upon him was overpowering; he rose from the table without speaking, retired, and was never afterward known to make use of similar expressions. [Mrs. Whittelsey's Magazine.

THE OYSTER TRADE.—Few people have any idea of the immensity of the oyster business done in the United States. The Chesapeake and Delaware bay oysters go all over the world, and we learn, from a late number of the Baltimore Sun, that one establishment in that city, during the oyster season, keeps twenty-five men constantly opening the shells, and they sometimes open five hundred gallons a day, which are all designed for exportation. The oysters are put up in cans, in their own liquor, which are made air-tight and hermetically sealed; they are warranted to keep fresh in any climate. Five men are kept constantly employed in making the cans. The oysters are sent principally to the Western States, but considerable quantities are sent to the West Indies, South America, and some have been even sent to China.

On the first day of the oyster-taking season in Fairhaven river, six or seven hundred boats were ready for operation with the sunrise. The striking of the bell in the brick church was the signal to begin, and soon all was stir and commotion amongst men and shell-fish. During the day between thirty and forty thousand bushels of oysters were taken, which, from the fact of their having been undisturbed for two years, were unusually large and very fine. Some boats took from seventy-five to one hundred bushels each, and some few went much above this quantity. Transient oystermen sold their products at the bank of the river, for 20 and 25 cents per bushel, while those who make "oystering" a regular business, preferred to hold on for a speculation.

MARCH.

BY HORACE SMITH.

The bud is in the bough,
And the leaf is in the bud,
And earth's beginning now
In her veins to feel the blood,
Which, warmed by summer's sun
In th' alembic of the vine,
From her founts shall overrun
In a ruddy gush of wine.

The juices that shall feed
Trees, vegetables, fruits,
Unerringly proceed
To their re-appointed roots;
And if this azure arch
Fills the poet's song with glee,
O thou genial eighth of March,
Be it dedicate to thee!

THE GULF STREAM.—The special correspondent of the Boston Traveler, who attended the recent Scientific Convention at Charleston, writes thus concerning a paper read by Lieut. Maury on the "Influence of the Gulf Stream on the Commerce of the Atlantic:"—

Lieut. Maury considers that the difference between New York and Charleston, S. C., in a commercial point of view, is to be ascribed entirely to the discovery of the increased temperature of the Gulf Stream over that of the adjacent waters, by Dr. Franklin. Formerly, before the influence of the Gulf Stream was known, vessels leaving England were accustomed to go so far south to take the trade winds upon the coast of Africa, as to bring them nearly up to Charleston on the route home. In fact, at that time Charleston was the half-way house between Liverpool and New York. Vessels in the winter, attempting to enter New York, frequently became covered with ice, and put back to Charleston or the West Indies to thaw, and remained until spring. Now, when such a case occurs, the vessel, instead of retreating to a southern latitude, puts back into the Gulf Stream, where the increased temperature of the water so far loosens her icy covering, as to permit a safe and comfortable continuation of the voyage to New York. From the examination of numerous log-books, kept by vessels sailing between New York and the West Indies 100 years ago, Lieut. Maury had ascertained that the average rate of sailing with a good breeze did not exceed one mile per hour, since the action of the currents was so powerful, and so little known, that the vessels were considerably carried backward. At the period referred to, ship masters never knew their longitude within five or ten degrees, and after the discovery of the Gulf Stream, it was proposed to ascertain in part the position of the vessel from the temperature of the water.

WASHING SHEEP IN ALCRUTH, IN HUNGARY.—The process of washing is done under a roof, and, accordingly, no sudden showers or rainy weather can interfere with it. Before the shower-bath is administered to the sheep, their dirt or pitch is dissolved or loosened. For this purpose, a soaking vat is put up, which is covered and tightly put together, of strong planks or boards. It is filled with hot water, equal to 83 degrees Fahrenheit; the sheep are then placed in two lines; and constantly handled until the yolk and dirt are dissolved, which ordinarily takes from fifteen to twenty minutes. The solvent effects of the hot water is increased by adding a few pounds of potash, and also by the lye arising from the naturally oily matter of the wool. The sheep, after being well soaked, are placed under shelter, where they have to wait for their turn of the shower-bath, in order that the animal, now too much heated, may not pass immediately from the hot, soaking vat into the shower-bath, this being sixty-one to sixty-three degrees Fahrenheit. The water is let upon the sheep through a hose with a strainer upon the end. It falls with considerable velocity, and is brought to bear upon all parts of the sheep until the wool is of a snowy whiteness. The sheep are then driven to a warm dry shelter, and shorn as soon as the wool is dry, which is generally about the sixth day. On an average, forty sheep are thus washed in an hour. [Maine Farmer.

TO MAKE GOOD COFFEE.—First procure the best coffee in the market, wash it very clean, and roast it to the color of a golden brown, but not of a deeper shade by any means. Then take the white of three eggs to each pound of coffee, mix very carefully with the coffee while warm, and immediately transfer to earthen vessels, tying them over with bladders to render them air-tight. Take from these vessels sufficient coffee for one making only at a time; grind it, place it in a fine muslin bag; suspend it about midway in the pot, turn on boiling water, and put on the cover to prevent the escape of steam. By this mode the coffee will be very strong, but it is best to reduce it by the addition of boiling hot milk, it will then form a most delicious beverage, very different indeed, from that which is produced by boiling ground coffee in water. By this process of simple infusion, all the virtues of the coffee will be obtained. [Farmer's Cabinet.

NAMES IN BOSTON TWO HUNDRED YEARS AGO.—A gentleman who was lately looking over the Record of Births in the Boston City Clerk's office, which occurred about the year 1650, was so struck with the singularity of some of the names he met with, that he sent a few specimens to the Transcript, for the amusement of its readers. They are as follows: Grace Beamsley, Dick Beamsley, Mercy Beamsley, Deliverance Beck, Strange Beck, Free Grace Bendall, Reform Bendall, Hoped-for Bendall, Seaborne Cotton, Father gone Dinley, Return Gridley, Hope Hawkins, Canstance Milney.

SCARCITY OF WELSH BEGGARS.—In a book recently published in England, under the title of "Tales about Wales," says the Troy Daily Whig, the following passage may be found:—

"A Welsh beggar is scarcely ever seen, even in these days, in any part of the kingdom; and it is a fact worthy of observation, that when an investigation took place of the beggars of London, a few years ago, not as much as one Welshman was found among them, though the number of beggars that followed their vocation in the metropolis at that time, according to the report laid before a committee of the House of Commons, was 15,549! And I can add," says the editor, "that I have traveled many times through some of the poor districts, but never have I met with a Welsh beggar."

SIMPLE CURE FOR CROUP.—We find in the journal of Health, the following simple remedy for that dangerous disease. Those who have passed nights of almost agony at the bedside of loved children, will treasure it up as an invaluable piece of information. If a child is taken with croup, instantly apply cold water, ice water, if possible, suddenly and freely to the neck and chest, with a sponge. The breathing will almost instantly be relieved. So soon as it is possible, let the sufferer drink as much as it can; then wipe it dry, cover it up warm, and soon a quiet slumber will relieve the parent's anxiety, and lead the heart in thankfulness to the Power which has given to the pure gushing fountain such medical qualities.

LOWELL OPERATIVES.—In the city of Lowell, a city not thirty years old yet, there are two Savings Institutions, which have five thousand two hundred and sixty-five depositors. The amount of money deposited, according to the returns just published by the Secretary of State, is eight hundred and sixty-eight thousand two hundred and sixty-two dollars and forty-one cents. Yes, $868,262 41. Aside from this, there is not a mill in Lowell in which the operatives at work therein do not own a part of the stock. In the Merrimac Mills alone, there are upwards of seventy thousand dollars of the stock owned by operatives. Then they own largely in the Lowell Railroad and other railroads, also bank and other stocks.

BURIED FOR TWO THOUSAND YEARS.—Lord Linsday, in his travels, writes, that while wandering amid the pyramids of Egypt, he stumbled on a mummy, proved, by its hyeroglyphics, to be at least two thousand years of age. In examining the mummy, after it was unwrapped, he found in one of its closed hands a tuberous or bulbous root. He was interested in the question, how long vegetable life could last, and he, therefore, took that tuberous root from the mummy's hand, planted it in a sunny soil, allowed the rains and dews of heaven to descend upon it, and in the course of a few weeks, to his astonishment and joy, the root burst forth and bloomed into a beautiful dahlia.

OATHS GRATIS.—Mr. Romaine hearing a man call on God to curse him, offered him half a crown if he would repeat the oath. The man started—

"What, sir, do you think I would curse my soul for half a crown?"

Mr. Romaine answered, "As you did it just now for nothing, I could not suppose that you would refuse to do it for a reward."

The poor fellow was struck with the reproof, and said—

"May God bless and reward you, sir, whoever you are; I believe you have saved my soul; I hope I shall never swear again."

NOVEL READING.—"No young, unmarried woman," says Jeremy Levis, "ought to be permitted to read a novel of any description. Had I a daughter with a heart of ice, and a face as grim as the lion's head on an antique knocker, she should never pore over a tale of love, to make that ice smoke, or induce her to believe that her face was as good as her neighbor's. Nature teaches us to sigh soon enough, in all conscience, without our needing the bellows of imagination to inflate the lungs prematurely."

COTTON IN AFRICA.—A treaty has just been signed, by which the Danish settlements on the African gold coast have been ceded to England, and the latter power is now debating the feasibility of raising a supply of cotton there. It is now produced there by the natives for their own use, and in the adjoining kingdom of Dahomey, the culture of cotton from American seed was attempted under the auspices of the late African traveler, John Duncan, in July last. He was furnished with the seed by the British Chamber of Commerce.

One of the best things in Fuller, is his Life of Mr. Perkins, preacher at St. Andrew's Parish, Cambridge, England:—"He had a capacious head," he says, "with angles winding and roomy enough to lodge all controversial intricacies," and "an excellent chirurgeon he was at jointing of a broken soul, and at stating of a doubtful conscience." Again, "he would pronounce the word damn with such an emphasis as left a doleful echo in his auditors' ears a good while after."

Knowledge, says Lord Bacon, is not a couch whereon to rest a searching and restless spirit, or a terrace for a wandering and variable mind to walk up and down with a fair prospect, or a tower of state for a proud mind to raise itself upon, or a sort of commanding ground for strife and contention, or a shop for profit or sale, but a rich storehouse for the glory of the Creator, and the relief of man's estate.

"If we could show to some objectors the delicate Elizabeth Barrett Browning—the minutest, most fragile, most ethereal creature the sun ever shone upon, with a voice like a ring-dove's, we might swear in vain to her identity as the author of some of the strongest and bravest poetry that has appeared in our day; so obstinate a conviction exists in some minds of the close connection between mental power and masculine coarseness."

The politicians of Europe, it is stated, are looking with some anxiety for the appearance of a work in four volumes, from the pen of Louis Philippe. It is to be entitled "Eighteen Years of Royalty," and will doubtless contain many new views of persons who have figured prominently on the political stage in the last generation.

A very celebrated Scotch divine says:—"The world we inhabit must have had an origin; that origin must have been intelligence; that intelligence must have been ultimate; that ultimate power must have been supreme; and that which always was, and is supreme, we know by the name of God."

The following observation from Fuller's sermon on the death of Mr. Perkins, affords excellent hints to preachers in all ages. "His sermons were not so plain but that the piously learned did admire them, nor so learned but that the plain did understand them."

Walking is the most wholesome exercise; water the best drink; and plain food is the most nourishing and healthy diet. Even in knowledge, the most useful is the easiest acquired.

DeRuyter Institute.

The Academic Year of this Institution for 1849–50 will commence the last Wednesday in August, and continue forty-three consecutive weeks, ending the last Wednesday of June, including a recess of ten days for Christmas and New Year holidays. The Year will be divided into three Terms:

The First, commencing August 29, of 14 weeks.
The Second, " December 5, of 15 "
The Third, " March 20, of 14 "

Encouraged by the success of the School under its present Instructors, the friends of the Institute have made liberal additions to its library, cabinet, and apparatus, thus furnishing ample facilities for illustrating branches taught in the various departments.

The Literary Department is as heretofore under the supervision of Rev. JAMES R. IRISH, A. M., President, assisted by other able instructors. In this Department, especial attention is given to the lower English Branches. Students are also fitted in the Classics to enter the advanced classes in College.

The Department of Natural Science is conducted by Professor GURDON EVANS. In this, Natural Philosophy, Astronomy, Geology, Natural History, and Chemistry, are taught in a manner of unsurpassed interest With it is connected the Department of Agricultura Science.

The Farmer's Course is thoroughly scientific; embracing the study of the best authors, with daily recitations. During the Winter Term two hours each day will be spent in the Analytical Laboratory, where students will be instructed in the constitution of soils and ashes of plants, with a minute examination of their constituent elements, and the various modes of testing for their presence.

A course of lectures is given during the Term on Practical Farming, explaining the relation of Geology to Agriculture, the Soil, the Plant, and the Animal, and their various relations, the Rotation of Crops, Feeding Animals, Manures, Draining Lands, &c., &c. For further information see Catalogue.

Besides Globes, Maps, &c., for the illustration of Astronomy, a Newtonian Telescope of high magnifying power has recently been added to the apparatus.

During the Summer Term, Botany and Geology receive special attention, illustrated by excursions to localities where these sciences may be studied as seen in nature. A Geological and Mineralogical Cabinet is accessible to the students.

The Mathematical Department is under the instruction of OLIVER B. IRISH, Tutor. It embraces thorough instruction in Arithmetic, and the higher pure and practical Mathematics, with field exercises in Engineering and Surveying.

Elocution, embracing Reading, Declamation, General Oratory, and Writing, receives the special attention of a competent teacher.

The Teacher's Department will, as formerly, be in operation during the Fall Term, and last half of the Winter Term. Particular attention to this is solicited from all who intend to teach district schools.

The Female Department is under the care of Miss SUSANNA M. COON, a graduate of Troy Female Seminary, a lady every way competent for this responsible station.

No efforts will be spared to render the young ladies of this Seminary truly accomplished, as well in the social relations of life, as in the substantial branches of learning and the higher refinements of education. Ample facilities are furnished for pursuing French, Italian, German, Drawing, Painting, Music on the Piano, and Vocal Music.

Information.

Good board in private families from $1 25 to $1 50. Parents from abroad should furnish their children with very little pocket money, as many temptations may thus be avoided. Those who wish may deposit money with either of the teachers, to be disbursed according to order, without extra charge.

Tuition, to be settled in advance, per term, from $3 00 to $5 00. Extras—For Drawing, $1 00; Monochromatic Painting, $3 00; Oil Painting, $5 00; Chemical Experiments, $1 00; Writing, including Stationery, 50c.; Tuition on Piano, $8 00; Use of Instrument, $2 00; in Agricultural Chemistry, including Chemicals, Apparatus, fires, &c., (breakage extra;) $12 00.

N. B. A daily stage leaves the railroad and canal at Chittenango for this place at 4 o'clock P. M.

For further information address the President, J. R. Irish, or Professor Gurdon Evans, DeRuyter, Madison Co., N. Y.

The Sabbath Recorder.

LETTER FROM THE MILL-YARD CHURCH.

The following letter was read before the General Conference, at its meeting in September last. Its publication was then ordered, but has been delayed through oversight.

To the Sabbath-keeping Churches of America, about to be assembled in their Triennial General Conference, at Hopkinton, Rhode Island,
The Sabbath-keeping Church in Mill-Yard, Goodman's Fields, London, sendeth greeting.

DEARLY BELOVED FRIENDS AND BRETHREN:—

While it hath pleased our Heavenly Father to grant much prosperity to you, increasing your numbers and usefulness, and bestowing his choicest gifts upon you, we rejoice, and will rejoice. For, although it is our lot yet to labor as it were in vain, and to witness in sackcloth, being the fewest of all religious professors in Europe, yet our joy is to see truth any where successful, because we know that it must at length overspread the whole earth, and shall triumph over every form of error and superstition.

The Church at Natton hath revived, under our beloved brother JOHN FRANCIS, its Elder, (from whom we lately had a visit,) and ISAAC PURSER, its Deacon. But that in Eldon Street, London, is reduced very low, having only three members, one of whom hath but a nominal connection with it, as he worshipeth with us when in London.

Our small Society consisteth of five female members, one male member in full communion, two transient members, and one elder.

To the extent of our slender abilities, we endeavor to propagate truth and defend it; to promote religion and humanity; and to cultivate friendship with our fellow Christians of every name, especially with those most allied to us in doctrine and practice—the Baptists and Old General Baptists; but we most of all desire to acknowledge those as our friends and brethren, "who keep the commandments of God and the faith of Jesus," for they are undoubtedly our fellow heirs of the heavenly inheritance. As it may be not uninteresting to you to peruse our last yearly letter to the General Baptists' Assembly, which will convey to you some particulars of our state and sentiments, a copy of it is annexed hereto.

Excepting through your esteemed publication, "The Sabbath Recorder," we receive little communication from you. Forget us not. Think what a work devolves on us few on this side of the Atlantic. We are sensible of our vast responsibility, as witnesses for God, and servants of Jesus Christ; and we earnestly desire your prayers and cheering counsel. Pray for us, write to us, and (if any of you should come to Europe) visit us. In our prosperity, we know, ye will rejoice, when the happy day shall arrive.

Though often weak, we are strong in the Lord—strong in confident hold of truth, and assurance that we are in the right way. We never despair. We cannot be so few as to be despised by our only Master, who regards "two or three" assembled in his name. May his presence, may the keeping also of the God of love and peace, be with you all. Farewell.

Given in our church meeting at Mill-Yard, on the ninth day of the eighth month, (called August,) 1849.

By order and on behalf of the Church,
WM. HENRY BLACK,
Elder and Pastor.

Letter to the General Baptists' Assembly.

To the Messengers, Elders, and Representatives, of the Baptized Churches holding the doctrine of General Redemption, in General Assembly, London,
The church in Mill-Yard, sendeth greeting.

DEAR BRETHREN:—

We have continued, since the last Assembly, to maintain a constant testimony for God and truth, in the maintenance of public worship, in exhorting and instructing our fellow creatures, and in endeavoring to arrest the progress of vice and misery, and the prevalence of ignorance and superstition, by which we are surrounded. It grieves us, often, to find so many around us, who are living, not only without God or hope of salvation, but in open violation of the common duties of morality, and the decencies of civilized life; so that we can almost say, that we are "where Satan's seat is." We feel ourselves often tried by grievous disappointments, obstructions, and vexations, and seem sometimes as though we "labored in vain, and spent our strength for naught." But we have long ago learnt, that patience and perseverance are indispensable parts of the character of the true servants of God; and therefore we are not discouraged by any of the trials that we have to bear. We rejoice in the hope that, though we are few in number, yet we are mighty in the truth; and we have the testimony of a good conscience, that we labor earnestly to be approved by our Lord and Master.

One addition hath been made to our number by baptism in the past year. Our Sabbath School is much increased, and our Loan Tract Distribution, which was at first confined to the Tenants of our Trust Estate, now extends to sixteen families, among whom the Christian Doctrines of Peace, Temperance, and Universal Love to God and Man, are thus made known from week to week.

The Evening Lectures during the past winter have not been so well attended as in former years, although the subjects were peculiarly important and interesting. The first course was on prophecy, as an evidence of revealed religion, and on the prophets and prophecies of both dispensations; the second, treated of the attributes and moral perfections of God, which lie at the bottom of all true religion, and ignorance of which hath occasioned the greatest mistakes in doctrine, worship and practice.

We have bestowed our best attention upon the subject recommended to the Churches in and by the fifteenth minute of last Assembly, and not only have used all the means in our own Society, which have appeared to us in any degree conducive to our own prosperity, but we also venture to make the following suggestions, for the purposes contemplated by the Assembly:—

1. Practical, earnest, and even pointed preaching, in our public assemblies; because the most instructive and beautiful teaching hath little effect, either in the conversion of sinners, or in the edification of saints, without close and faithful application to the conscience.
2. Regular Church Meetings, for the dispatch of business relative to the ecclesiastical and temporal concerns of the several Churches. If there be no business at hand, let us make some, or occupy the time with religious intercourse and prayer.
3. Prayer Meetings are indispensable, and Conferences are of inestimable value. For spiritual gifts are to be obtained only by prayer; and if they are received, how can they be exercised, if one person only monopolize (as it were) all the ministrations and exercises of the Church?
4. Plurality of Elders, as well as of Deacons, where the Church is numerous enough to find them within its own company.
5. No longer to neglect the laying on of hands and prayer, in the admission of Members and the ordination of Messengers, Elders, and Deacons. This ordinance was esteemed a fundamental principle among all the Churches, formerly, and is yet practiced by us, with a strict regard to the example of our Lord and his first disciples.
6. Diligent endeavors after the salvation of sinners, in the neighborhood of our Churches. Perhaps we have too little borne in mind our Lord's words, "I came not to call the righteous, but sinners, to repentance."
7. The opening of our doors, as often as it is possible to assemble a congregation, however small it may be. If our places of worship be shut, those families and individuals who are devoutly disposed will go elsewhere; and thus they are likely to be (as many young persons have been) led aside into other societies, and been ensnared with doctrines and practices which we hold to be inconsistent with the Word of God.
8. Daily worship in the families of all our church members. Let it be short, plain, and simple; but let it be be constant; and let inquiries and exhortations be made, in all our churches, on this point of Christian discipline.

The subjects of peace and the inviolability of human life, which were commended to the Churches at the last Assembly, we have continually brought before our fellow worshipers and the public; and our Elder hath taken part in the conferences and public meetings of the Friends of Peace, throughout the year. Within the last fortnight a man hath been slain in a drunken affray, in a house only a few yards distant from our Meeting-House; yet, while the public shedding of blood by military and judicial powers doth prevail, how can private murders be put a stop to? It is written in the immutable law of God, "Thou shalt not kill;" and until that law which convinces of sin be restored to its proper dignity among Christians, we can hardly expect the reformation of the world.

With respect to the Education Fund, we hope that, whatever other plan may be adopted for the aid of young Ministers in the country, an Institution will be always supported among us, in London, by means of which a learned and able ministry may be raised up, fit to uphold the reputation of our learned predecessors, to be ready scribes, well fitted to promote the kingdom of the heavens on earth, and workmen that need not to be ashamed in the presence of the Christian Ministers of other denominations.

Thus have we endeavored to contribute our mite to the heavenly treasure, intended for mutual edification in your Assembly; and we conclude with most earnest desires that the spirit of peace, and truth, and love, and a sound mind, may prevail in all your deliberations and proceedings. Farewell.

Given in our church meeting at Mill-Yard, on Sabbath day, the 26th of the fifth month, 1849.

In the name and on behalf of the Church,
(Signed) WM. HENRY BLACK,
Elder and Pastor.

"I AM A LOST MAN."

The newspapers inform us that these were the last words of Bugeaud, marshall of France, and Duke of Isly. When he uttered them, he was just closing a brilliant, many would say a useful life. He had led vast armies to battle. He had governed extensive States. He had been conspicuous in the councils of his nation. The President of France made anxious visits to his death-chamber. The stern Cavaignac wept as he looked upon the dissolving frame of his old comrade; and the convention was profoundly affected when the news of his death was announced. With all this accumulation of honor, he was, by his own confession, "a lost man." How mournful the contrast between the glory of his life, and the deep gloom of its close.

From the same source we learn that Bugeaud had a pious mother. In the history of his eventful life, this seems to have been the only quarter in which a good influence was exerted upon his heart. His mother's voice alone warned him of his danger, and spoke to him of eternity; all other influences led him astray. In the camp he heard of God only in blasphemy. In civil life he saw nothing but a desperate struggle for earthly place and power. In the saloons of Paris he heard wit mocking and philosophy denouncing the religion of his youth. The quiet voice that had warned him and prayed with him was, alas for him, overborne and lost in the midst of these babbling voices of the world.

In the hour of death, however, these voices die away and are forgotten. The acclamations of a world could not have made the failing pulse of Bugeaud beat faster. Other tones were in his ears; for the accents we will not listen to when they admonish us, we are often forced to listen to when they accuse. The dying moments are often the time of resurrection for abused privileges and neglected gifts. They stalk forth from the "burial places of memory," to foreshadow our doom, and convince us of its undeniable justice.

Thus we explain that fearful expression which fell from the dying warrior. He heeded a voice which he had long neglected and forgotten. Across the waste of years and through the storm of battle it comes, clear and distinct, upon the failing ear. It asks for the fruit of early counsel. It seeks for the result of pious care and zeal. One comprehensive glance over his life satisfies the man that he has wasted it. His own conscience condemns him. In this he knows that he but anticipates the sentence of God, and sinks into death "a lost man."

The lesson of this sad incident is easily read. It is only another instance of the ease with which carelessness can turn our blessings into curses. A mother's love and a God's mercy. Indifference and impenitence can make them causes of our deeper damnation, and so change the soft voice that sung our infancy to sleep, that it will haunt our dying pillow with accusations that we can neither gainsay nor resist. [Am. Mess.

PLAIN PREACHING.

It is cheering to find a statesman whose mind is pervaded with a sense of his responsibility to God, and who openly takes his stand upon the principles of God's word. Mr. Seward, in his late speech before the Senate, acknowledges himself and his fellow Senators to be but stewards in the matter of government, responsible to the people, but responsible also to a Higher Power. But the most thoroughly religious speech yet made upon the floor of Congress is that of the Hon. Thaddeus Stevens, of Pennsylvania. It puts the question of Slavery upon its true moral ground, and deals directly with the consciences of all who are concerned with that system of iniquity. The closing paragraph contains a thrilling exhortation which we hope has reached the ear of the Executive. We know of nothing in the range of pulpit oratory that surpasses it in solemnity, pungency and power.

"The eloquent gentleman from Virginia, (Mr. Seddon,) the other day, in his beautiful peroration, personated the great States of Virginia, Kentucky and Louisiana, and in their name apostrophized the good, and, I will add, the great man, who now occupies the executive chair; and besought him, as he loved the place of his birth, the place of his nurture, and the place of his residence, not to forsake his southern brethren in this emergency, but to stand by them in the defense of human bondage. How much more effective, enduring, and hallowed, would that eloquence have been, had the orator's lips been touched with a coal from the Altar of Freedom!

"Then could he have gone with friendly anxiety to that noble, benevolent, and heroic man, and admonished him, that although he had gathered all the earthly laurels that can be reaped by the sickle of death, yet if he would have his name descend to posterity with increasing luster, he must, by one great, just and patriotic example, wipe out the only spot that obscures the sun of his glory. He might with propriety have taken wih him the learned gentleman from Alabama, (Mr. Hilliard,) and together they might have pointed him to that solemn hour, which to him, and to all of us who are treading the down-hill of life, must soon arrive, when the visions of ambition and of earthly wealth shall have passed before his eyes, and left him nothing but a gaping grave, and an eternal judgment.

"The accomplished gentleman from Alabama, (Rev. Mr. Hilliard,) might, with peculiar propriety, do what with profane lips I dare not; go to his illustrious friend, and with fervid piety, and eloquence more thrilling than that which made Felix tremble, implore him, by a love deeper than that of birth-place, of nurture, and of residence, by the love of his own immortal soul, to be warned in time by the awful, the inexorable doom—'Accursed is the man-stealer.' He might, perhaps, have pointed him to the gloomy journey that leads through the dark shadow, and shown him how ineffably brighter are the glories of that kingdom where all are free. Perchance, too, he would have noticed the thronging thousands traveling to that same dread tribunal, summoned to give evidence of deeds done in the body; some of them were bondmen and slaves on earth, but whose disembodied spirits were then disenthralled, erect, tall as the proudest of earth's oppressors; and asked him to inquire of his own conscience, who was the most likely to meet a hearty welcome there—he, whose cause was advocated by the supplicating voices of thousands with whom he had dealt justly on earth, and made free indeed, or he whose admission should be withstood by myriads of crushed and lacerated souls, showing their chains, their stripes, and their wounds, to their Father, and to his Father; to their God, and to his Judge."

NEVER HOLD MALICE.

Oh! never 'hold malice;' it poisons our life
With the gall-drop of hate and the night-shade of strife;
Let us scorn where we must, and despise where we may,
But let anger, like sunlight, go down with the day.
Our spirits in clashing may bear the hot spark,
But no smouldering flame to break out in the dark;
'T is the narrowest heart that creation can make,
Where our passion folds up like the coils of a snake.

Oh! never 'hold malice;' it cannot be good,
For 'tis nobler to strike in the rush of hot blood,
Than to bitterly cherish the name of the foe,
Wait to sharpen a weapon, and measure the blow.
The wild dog in hunger—the wolf in its spring—
The shark of the waters—the asp with its sting—
Are less to be feared than the vengeance of man,
When it lieth in secret to wound when it can.

Oh! never 'hold malice;' dislike if you will,
Yet remember, Humanity linketh us still;
We are all of us human, and all of us erring,
And mercy within us should ever be stirring.
Shall we dare to look up to the Father above,
With petitions for pardon, or pleading for love;
Shall we dare, while we pant for revenge on another,
To ask from a God, yet deny to a brother?
[Eliza Cook's Journal.

HAVEN'T THE CHANGE.

It was house-cleaning time, and I had an old colored woman at work scrubbing and cleaning paint.

"Polly is going," said one of my domestics, as the twilight began to fall.

"Very well. Tell her that I shall want her to-morrow."

"I think she would like to have her money for to-day's work," said the girl.

I took out my purse, and found that I had nothing in it less than a three dollar bill.

"How much does she have a day?"

"Six shillings."

"I haven't the change this evening. Tell her that I'll pay her for both days to-morrow."

The girl left the room, and I thought no more of Polly for an hour. Tea-time had come and passed, when one of my domestics, who was rather communicative in her habits, said to me:

"I don't think Polly liked your not paying her this evening."

"She must be very unreasonble, then," said I, without reflection. "I sent her word that I had no change. How did she expect that I could pay?"

"Some people are queer, you know," remarked the girl who had made the communication, more for the pleasure of telling it than any thing else.

I kept thinking over what the girl had said, until other suggestions came into my mind.

"I wish I had sent and got the bill changed," said I, as the idea that Polly might be really in want of the money intruded itself. "It would have been very little trouble."

This was the beginning of a new train of reflections, which did not make me very happy. To avoid a little trouble, I had sent the poor old woman away, after a hard day's work, without her money. That she stood in need of it was evident from the fact that she had asked for it.

"How very thoughtless in me," said I, as I dwelt longer and longer on the subject.

"What's the matter?" inquired my husband, seeing me look so serious.

"Nothing to be very much troubled at," I replied.

"Yet you are troubled."

"I am; and cannot help it. You will perhaps smile at me, but small causes sometimes produce much pain. Old Polly has been at work all day, scrubbing and cleaning. When night came, she asked for her wages, and I, instead of taking the trouble to get the money for her, sent her word that I had n't the change. There was nothing less than a three dollar bill in my purse. I didn't reflect that a poor woman, who has to go out to daily work, must need her money as soon as it is earned. I'm very sorry."

My husband did not reply for some time. My words appeared to have made considerable impression on his mind.

"Do you know where Polly lives?" he inquired at length.

"No; but I will ask the girl." And immediately ringing the bell, I made inquiries as to where Polly lived; but no one in the house knew.

"It can't be helped now," said my husband in a tone of regret. "But I would be more thoughtful in future. The poor always have need of their money. Their daily labor rarely does more than supply their daily wants. I can never forget a circumstance that occurred when I was a boy. My mother was left a widow when I was but nine years old—and she was poor. It was by the labor of her hands that she obtained shelter and food for herself and three little ones. Once, I remember the occurrence as if it had taken place yesterday, we were out of money and food. At breakfast time our last morsel was eaten, and we went through the long day without a mouthful of bread. We all grew very hungry by night; but our mother encouraged us to be patient a little and a little while longer, until she finished the garment she was making, when she would take that and some other work home to a lady, who would pay her for the work. Then she said we would have a nice supper. At last the work was finished, and I went with my mother to help carry it home, for she was weak and sickly, and even a light burden fatigued her. The lady for whom she had made the garment was in good circumstances, and had no want unmet that money could supply. When we came into her presence, she took the work, and after glancing at it carelessly, said:

"'It will do very well.'

"My mother lingered; perceiving which, the lady said, rather rudely:

"'You want your money, I suppose. How much does the work come to?'

"'Two dollars,' replied my mother. The lady took out her purse; and, after looking through a small parcel of bills, said:

"'I haven't the change this evening. Call over any time, and you shall have it.'

"And without giving my mother time more earnestly to urge her request, turned from us and left the room.

"I never shall forget the night that followed. My mother's feelings were sensitive and independent. She could not make known her want. An hour after our return home, she sat weeping, with her children around her, when a neighbor came in, and learning our situation, supplied our present need."

This relation did not make me feel any the more comfortable. Anxiously I awaited, on the next morning, the arrival of Polly. As soon as she came, I sent for her, and handing her the money she had earned the day before, said:

"I'm sorry I hadn't the change for you last night, Polly. I hope you didn't want it very badly."

Polly hesitated a little, and then replied:

"Well, ma'am, I did want it very much, or I wouldn't have asked for it. My poor daughter Hetty is sick, and I wanted to get her something nice to eat."

"I'm very sorry," said I with sincere regret. "How is Hetty this morning?"

"She isn't so well ma'am. And I feel very bad about her."

"Come up to me in half an hour, Polly," said I.

The old woman went down stairs. When she appeared again, according to my desire, I had a basket for her, in which were some wine, sugar, fruit, and various little matters that I thought her daughter would relish, and told her to go at once and take them to the sick girl. Her expressions of gratitude touched my feelings deeply. Never, since, have I omitted, under any pretence, to pay the poor their wages as soon as earned.

FUGITIVE SLAVES.

The Independent, in an Editorial on the late Speeches in the Senate, thus touches the question of Slave Reclamation:—

"Does Mr. Webster believe that he is the Exponent of Massachusetts, or of New-England, in this monstrous inhumanity? Pass enactments enough to fill all the archives of the Senate, and your slave-catcher shall not budge an inch faster or further than he now does in the North. Every village will spurn him. Every yeoman along the valleys will run the slave and trip the shameless hunter. Bread and shelter, protection and direction, will be the slave's portion north of Mason and Dixon's line, with more certainty and effect every year that elapses, until the day of Emancipation. It will be so, not from any special liking to the blacks, for they are not favorites; not from any hostility to the South, for on every other question than Slavery the South will find no truer friends than in the North. It will be so, because since the world began the sympathies of common men have been with the weak and oppressed. In that sympathy they have conformed to a fundamental law of humanity, which lies deeper in the consciousness of honest men, than any national compact can ever go. Man cannot plant parchments as deep as God plants principles. The Senate of the United States is august; and such men as lead her counsels are men of might. But no man, and no senate of men, when once the eyes of a community are open to a question of humanity, can reason and enact them back again to a state of indifference, and still less can they enlist them along with the remorseless hunters of human flesh. And of all the very men who will justify Mr. Webster's adhesion to the South, if a trembling woman, far spent with travel and want, holding her babe to her dry bosom, true in her utmost misery to motherhood, should timidly beg a morsel of bread, a place to sleep, or a night's hiding place from a swift pursuer—is there one of them all who would hesitate what to do? Is there a New-England village that would not vomit out the wretch that should dare harm that slave-mother? There are thousands of merchants who will say Mr. Webster is right, who the next moment will give a fugitive slave a dollar to speed on with! There are thousands who will say we ought to stick to the Constitution, who, when the case comes, would sooner cut their right hand off than be a party to a slave's recovery.

"A few weeks ago, a lad of fifteen years of age, escaped in a schooner from Norfolk. Arrived in New-York, in the dead of winter, with only a slave's clothing, he lay hid in the hold of the craft for a week, actually freezing and starving, but enduring both rather than moan or show himself. He would die by inches rather than go back. He was discovered, and is safe enough now. Is there a consignee, is there an overseer, is there a merchant to be found, that would have discovered this wretched, heroic fugitive, to his owners?

"Mr. Calhoun, who is seldom at fault in his facts and judgments, though in his principles he is crazy enough, declared the truth, that no enactments would be of any use if the people of the North were indisposed to arrest fugitive slaves. The people ARE opposed to slave-catching on free soil! No enactments will be of any use! Ten thousand pulpits are every week pouring light upon the public mind. Every religious paper (save a few whose subscribers are in the valley of vision, a great army of dry bones,) is standing for the right. Some few there be that dare not speak for the oppressed; but they are equally too cowardly to speak against the public sentiment of humanity which lives in the North. And Daniel Webster might as well pour oil on Niagara to calm it, as honeyed words on the true conscience and outbursting humanity of Northern freemen and Christians, to quiet them. It is because Mr. Seward has done what Daniel Webster ought to have done, and did not do—represented the sentiments of the yeomen, the merchants, the religious men of the North; it is because he has tried the great question in dispute by tests of justice; it is because he has spoken manfully and right, that we commend his speech to our readers. If Mr. Seward has adopted for his policy evermore the simple policy of Right; if disowning self-seeking he will seek the public good, he will have ere long brought to him those honors which others have stripped themselves bare to race after; and who, having lost their moral principles, for the sake of the prize, lost the prize also."

WEALTH IN CHINA.

Property appears to be as unequally divided in China as in other countries, riches concentrating in the hands of a few. The wealthiest individual of modern times, probably, was a Chinese named Hokwan, who flourished towards the close of the last century, during the reign of Keenlong, the present emperor's grandfather. He was originally a private citizen, but having attracted the emperor's notice by his appearance and address, was appointed to some important office. From this, owing to his ability and zeal, he rose rapidly until he became prime minister, and virtually emperor. He gradually filled the most important posts in the government with his friends, who became so numerous throughout China, that there was an apprehension of a rising in his favor on the death of Keenlong. The succeeding emperor Kinglong, after taking the most active measures for his removal for several years, at last brought specific charges against him, for which he was tried by a special tribunal, condemned, and allowed to be his own executioner. In the schedule of his property, which was confiscated, it was mentioned that, besides houses, lands, and other immovable property of amazing value, not less than one hundred and fifty millions of dollars in gold and silver and precious stones were found in his treasury. The real cause of his fall was evidently his enormous riches. His power was no doubt too vast for his own security, even had he been innocent.

PREACHING AN EASY BUSINESS.

A minister had a deacon in his congregation who was rather disposed to undervalue the duties discharged by the minister. "What an easy life our minister has! He has little else to do besides preaching! And preaching is a very easy thing to do! In fact, any one could preach that tried!"

These and such like remarks, having often come to the minister's ears, he called on the deacon one Saturday, and thus addressed him:—

"Well, deacon, they tell me you think that preaching is very easy."

"Yes, so it seems to me!"

"Would you have any objections to try to-morrow?"

"None in the world."

Accordingly the next day the congregation was surprised to behold the deacon occupying the pulpit. And all anticipated a rich treat from one who regarded preaching as a very easy performance. But sadly were they disappointed. A very small trial convinced [illegible] bungling and stumbling for a short time, he abruptly finished his discourse with the following honest and eloquent peroration:

"Well, my friends, I thought until now, that preaching was a very easy thing! All I have to say is, that if any of you think so, just come up and try it!"
